HISTORY
OF K.
EDWARD
THE 3D

1229/b

EX BIBLIOTHECA

CAR. I. TABORIS.

60700

THE HISTORY

OF THAT

Most Victorious Monarch

EDWARD IIId.

KING of ENGLAND and FRANCE, and LORD of IRELAND.

AND

First Founder of the Most Noble

Order of the GARTER:

Being a Full and Exact Account

Of the LIFE and DEATH of the said KING,

Together with That of His Most Renowned SON

EDWARD, Prince of WALES and of AQUITAIN,

Sirnamed the

BLACK-PRINCE

Faithfully and Carefully Collected from the Best and most Antient Authors DOMESTICK and FOREIGN, Printed Books, Manuscripts and Records.

By JOSHUA BARNES Batchelor of Divinity, and One of the Senior Fellows of Emmanuel College in Cambridge.

Licensed by Authority.

Pulchrum imprimis videtur, Non pati occidere, Quibus Æternitas debeatur.
C. Plin. Cæc. Secundi Epist. l. 5. Ep. 8. p. 210.

CAMBRIDGE,
Printed by John Hayes for the Author.
MDCLXXXVIII.

1688
1736

THE

HISTORY

OF THAT

Moſt Victorious Monarch

EDWARD III.

KING of ENGLAND and FRANCE, and Lord of IRELAND.

AND

Firſt Founder of the Moſt Noble

Order of the GARTER:

Being a Full and Exact Account

Of the LIFE and DEATH of the ſaid KING,

Together with That of His Moſt Renowned SON

EDWARD, Prince of WALES and of AQUITAIN

Sirnamed the

BLACK-PRINCE

Faithfully and Carefully Collected from the Beſt and moſt Antient Authors DOMESTICK and FOREIGN, Printed Books, Manuſcripts and Records.

By JOSHUA BARNES Batchelor of Divinity, and One of the Senior Fellows of Emmanuel College in Cambridge.

Licenſed by Authority.

Publicum imprimis videtur, Non pati occidere, Quibus Æternitas debetur.
C. Plin. Cæc. Secundi Epiſt. l. 5. Ep. 8. p. 210.

CAMBRIDGE,

Printed by John Hayes for the Author.

MDCLXXXVIII.

TO

The Most Serene Majesty

OF

JAMES the Second,

KING of ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, FRANCE and IRELAND, &c.

AND

SOVERAIGN

OF

The most Noble Order

OF THE GARTER.

GREAT SIR,

HAving, under the Happy Influence of Your Majesty's Gracious Government, had the leisure to write the History of the Life of One of the most Glorious of Your Royal Predecessors, King EDWARD the Third, to whom should I dedicate the same, but to Your Majesty; who are the Inheritor of those Realms which He governed; the Soveraign of that most Noble ORDER which he Founded; and the lively Resemblance of all those Vertues which He so eminently possessed. Whose Immense Goodness to all Your Subjects in general, whose Heroick

Inclinations to Military Honour, and whose Princely Love and Respect to Learning, do render You as Gracious at Home, and as Terrible abroad, as King EDWARD was in his Days.

It is Your Majesty's Delight and Glory Graciously to accept of the well-intended Endeavours of the meanest of Your Subjects, particularly of those, which are employed in Recollecting the Glorious Memoires of Your Renowned Ancestors, Monarchs of this Isle. And no doubt succeeding Generations will rise up to the Memory of that Prince, by whose Favour and Liberality the Remembrance of former Ages hath been brought to Light.

Wherefore heartily wishing unto Your Sacred Majesty a Fruitfull Consort, a Flourishing Family, a Long Life, a Quiet and Secure Government, Victorious Armies, Obedient Subjects, and Wise and Loyal Parliaments, besides Eternal Felicities, I humbly Dedicate this Work to Your Great Name, as being

GREAT SIR,

Your Majesty's

Most

Humble

and

Loyal Subject

JOSHUA BARNES.

THE PREFACE.

I Undertake a Work of ſo much Difficulty, that nothing but a Senſe of the Honour and real advantage thereof could animate me to it. For the Obſcurity of our Hiſtories being ſo great, and the Miſtakes and Oppoſition of them one with another being ſo frequent, it muſt needs ſeem a Labour not ſmall, to go about to give a Juſt account of the whole Series of all Publique Actions for the continuance of Fifty Years and upwards, at ſuch a long diſtance of Time, as more than Three Centuries.

But my Reſolution hath been to ſhew ſo much diligence in the Collecting, and ſo much integrity in the Compoſing; that if I cannot obtain to know all the moſt Momentous Truths, yet I ſhall purpoſely decline all Fabulous Narrations, all Groundleſs Opinions, all Popular Errors, Partiality and Prejudice, and ſeriouſly conform my ſelf to thoſe Rules and decencies, which belong to a Faithfull Hiſtorian.

The Subject Matter of my Diſcourſe is the Honour of my Country, the Life and Actions of one of the Greateſt Kings, that perhaps the World ever ſaw; the Rights of the Engliſh Crown, and how well our Anceſtors were able to vindicate them.

Nor ſhall I confine my ſelf wholly to the Relation of King Edward's Exploits, or to thoſe of his Invincible Son the Black-Prince, and the reſt of his Noble and Victorious Children; but whatever Name I find memorable of his Subjects in either of his Kingdoms, whether they were fam'd for Arts of War or Peace, I ſhall endeavour to pay them that juſt duty, which it ſhall ſeem to me they deſerve: Becauſe I think it altogether fit, that thoſe, who then ſhared with their Sovereign in his Grand affairs of War or Government, ſhould by no means now be deprived of a Participation with Him in his Glorious Memoires. Eſpecially ſince not a Few are ſtill remaining, derived from thoſe Famous Anceſtors, whoſe Minds may be more ſtrongly affected with due Incentives of Honour, when they ſhall underſtand by what Methods their Forefathers attain'd ſuch Eſtates or Titles, which They now as worthily enjoy.

It is an old Obſervation; That Subjects uſually conform themſelves to their Prince: And here certainly, if ever any Great and Martial Monarch was Lord of any like Himſelf, We ſhall find this King to have been ſo; Many Great and Renowned Heroes and Captains, Bold in Attempts, Wiſe in Conduct, and Fortunate in Succeſs, being Thick almoſt in every Page of this Hiſtory. Wherein will appear the greateſt Variety of Adventures, the moſt hazardous Enterpriſes of War, the moſt exact Counſels and Politick Negotiations, and the moſt frequent Inſtances of Courage, Piety, Generoſity and Princely Conduct, with the most Wholsom Laws and Rules of Government, that perhaps the whole World can furnish us withall in so short a Period of Time.

the

Of which Work I shall say no more, than that if it suffer not for the sake of the Authors Meanness, it is like to Live, and to prove not unpleasing to those, who have any Love or Veneration for England or English Heroes; or who indeed delight either to do Bravely themselves, or to read the Account of Noble Actions faithfully, painfully and accurately recorded to Posterity.

From Emmanuel College, Easter-Monday, i. e. 16 April 1688.

The

The CONTENTS.

BOOK I.

CHAP. I.

EDWARD the Son of Edward the Second is born: Made Prince of Wales: His Father's Depoſition and his Coronation: He gives a General Pardon: Has 12 Guardians appointed him. Is defied by the King of Scotland. Makes an Expedition into Scotland. His Father is murder'd. The Death of ſundry other great Perſonages. From p. 1. to p. 26.

Chap. II. King Edward the Third takes a Wife: Makes a diſhonourable Peace with the Scots. Mortimer's Inſolence provokes the Lords of England to Arms. Matters reconcil'd. Mortimer made Earl of March. The Lord Beaumont of England's Pedigree. Mortimer entertains the King. From p. 26. to p. 33.

Chap. III. King Edward does Homage to the King of France for Aquitain. Queen Philippa in great danger at a Tourneament. The Queen Mother and Mortimer compaſs the Death of Edmund Earl of Kent the King's Uncle. King Edward goes privately into France. The Birth of Edward the Black-Prince. Mortimer taken and executed. A Parliament. From p. 34. to p. 54.

Chap. IV. Henry Earl of Lancaſter founds an Hoſpital at Leiceſter. The Pope's Opinion about the Souls of the Departed. The Lord Douglas dies in Spain. Edward Bailiol claims the Crown of Scotland. Hector and Buchanan found tardy. King Edward repreſſes certain Outlaws. A Parliament. The Earl of Oxford dies. John of Luxemburgh King of Bohemia conquers in Italy. From p. 55. to p. 65.

Chap. V. A Parliament. The true Grounds of the Scotch War. A Recapitulation of the Scotch Affairs. The Scots Preparations againſt the War from England. King Edward's preparations againſt Scotland. A Parliament at York. The Earl of Gueldre marries King Edward's Siſter. Edmund the young Earl of Kent dies. Queen Philippa deliver'd of a Daughter. From p. 65. to p. 70.

Chap. VI. The Lord Robert of Artois flies into England. King Edward ſummons the Scotch King to his Homage, and on his refuſal defies him, and lays ſiege to Barwick. The Anceſtry of James Cecil, the preſent Earl of Salisbury. A Combat. The Battle of HALIDOUN, where King Edward obtains a mighty Victory: King Bailiol proſecutes the War in Scotland: King David flies into France. King Bailiol plays the King in his Abſence. The Death of an Archbiſhop, a Biſhop and a Lord. From p. 70. to p. 83.

Chap. VII. A Parliament at York. King Bailiol does Homage to King Edward; as likewiſe the Duke of Bretagne. A Council at Nottingham: A Parliament at Weſtminſter. King Edward deſigning for the Holy Land ſends Ambaſſadors to the French King. King Bailiol diſpleaſes his Friends, and growing weak thereupon, reconciles them and recovers. King Edward goes towards Scotland. The Lord Edward Bohun drown'd. From p. 83. to p. 88.

Chap. VIII. King Philip of Valois undertakes the Croiſade, but doubting King Edward ſifts Him firſt. He rejects K. Edward's Conditions. The firſt Seeds of the French War. Hugh Courtney made Earl of Devonſhire. A Parliament at York. King Edward's Scotch Expedition: The Earl of Namur taken by the Scots, and the Earl of Murray by the Engliſh. John Earl of Cornwall's Succeſs in Scotland. King Philip of Valois tryes King Edward again. The Scotch Nobles ſubmit to King Edward. King Philip makes fruſtrate their Agreement. David Earl of Athol ſlain. Two Prodigies, with the Death of two great Barons. From p. 89. to p. 101.

Chap. IX. Certain Engliſh Lords beſiege Dunbar, but in vain: King Edward orders King Bailiol to take the Field, and ſoon after joyns him. King Philip ſends a Fleet againſt England: King Edward commiſſions his Admirals to defend the Engliſh Seas. He heaps up Money for the War; but makes fair Overtures for Peace. His Conſiderations on the French War, and the Opinion of his Council thereon. His Embaſſy to the Earl of Hainalt. The two Kings put themſelves in a Poſture. John Earl of Cornwall dies. A Scotch Tale of his death refuted. The Earl of Lincoln dies. The Queen of England deliver'd of her Second Son, William of Hatfield. A Comet with other Prodigies. From p. 101. to p. 108.

Chap. X. King Edward's ſecond Embaſſy to the Earl of Hainalt. Five hundred Engliſh Volunteers under a Vow. King Edward's Methods to reduce the Flemings. The Riſe and Power of Jacob van Arteveld. King Edward makes his Son, the Black-Prince, Duke of Cornwall, and creates ſeven Earls. A Parliament. Affairs of Ireland. All Aliens Lands ſeiſed into the Kings Hands and let to Farm. The Earl of Hainalt dies. King Edward challenges the Crown of France, and makes Friends in the Empire. King Philip attempts the Flemings in vain. He ſets a Garriſon in Cadſant, which King Edward beats out. King Edward treats with King Philip, but finding no good there, treats with his Allies. The Pope interceeds. From p. 108. to p. 120.

Chap. XI. A Parliament. The Cardinals with King Edward's Commiſſioners return into France. Their Overtures rejected. King Edward at Antwerp ſummons his Allies, with whom he holds a Parliament, and another at Halle. He ſends to the Emperour, and invites his Queen over. She is deliver'd at Antwerp of her Third Son, Prince Lionel. Thomas of Brotherton the King's Uncle dies. Naturalization. An Enterview between the Emperour and King Edward, who is made Lieutenant of the Empire. King Edward holds a Parliament in Brabant. A Day limited for the Confederate Lords to joyn King Edward, who keeps his Court at Antwerp. The Duke of Brabant makes fair with the French King. The Black-Prince holds two Parliaments in his Father's Name; and obtains a mighty Aid for him. The Engliſh Navy reinforced. From p. 120. to p. 125.

Chap. XII. King Edward prepares to open the Campaign. His Letters to the Pope and Cardinals, ſetting forth his Right to the Crown of France. The Pope's Anſwer thereto. From p. 126. to p. 133.

Chap. XIII. King Edward ſummons the German Lords

The CONTENTS.

Lords to meet at Mechlin. They altogether ſend their Defiances to King Philip. The Lord Walter Manny begins the War. The Earl of Salisbury makes an Incurſion into the Biſhoprick of Liege. The French King's Preparations. The French burn Southampton. K. Edward lays ſiege to Cambray. And on King Philip's approach riſes to meet him. The two Kings face one another at Vironfoſs. A Day appointed for a Deciſive Battle. King Philip ſteals away. King Edward returns to Antwerp; ſends for his Eldeſt Son and keeps Chriſtmaſs there. The Pope's Letters to King Edward. The King's Anſwer. Two Parliaments at Weſtminſter. From p. 134. to p. 153.

Chap. XIV. King Edward holds a Parliament at Bruſſels; where he aſſumes the Arms and Style of France. The Reaſons why he did ſo. The Queen of England deliver'd of her Fourth Son at Gaunt. King James the Second his Pedigree from him by the Mothers Side. A Copy of King Edward's Letters Monitory to his French Subjects. He returns into England; informs the Pope of his Reaſons for uſing the Style and Arms of France. The Pope's Anſwer. From p. 154. to p. 162.

Chap. XV. The Lord Oliver Ingham routs a French Army. King Philip reinforces his Navy, and ſends to waſt the Lord John of Hainalt's Lands. The Lord Walter Manny's Brother ſlain. The French King orders an Invaſion upon the Lands of the Earl of Hainalt, who therefore ſends him a Defiance, and having revenged himſelf on the French, makes an Allyance with King Edward. John Duke of Normandy invades Hainalt. King Philip procures the Pope to interdict Flanders. Jacob van Arteveld invites the Earl of Salisbury to joyn him before Tournay, the ſaid Earl and the Earl of Suffolk's Eldeſt Son, taken Priſoners, ſent to the French King, their Lives ſaved by the Old King of Bohemia. The Duke of Normandy's Succeſs in Hainalt, he returns to Cambray. Mutual Inroads into France and Hainalt. The Duke lays ſiege to the Caſtle of Thine l' Eveſque. The Earl of Hainalt goes to raiſe the Siege. From p. 162. to p. 177.

Chap. XVI. A Parliament. King Edward being inform'd of the ſtrength of the French Navy makes himſelf ſtrong, takes the Sea and engages the French Fleet. His Victory at SCLUCE. Neale Loring Knighted for his Valour. King Edward's Letters to his Clergy. How. King Philip heard firſt of this Loſs. Arrows prefer'd to Guns. The Armies of France and Hainalt break up from before Thine l' Eveſque. King Robert of Sicily procures the Pope to write to King Edward to move him to Peace. From p. 177. to p. 186.

Chap. XVII. King Edward in a Council of his Foreign Allies reſolves to beſiege Tournay and St. Omers. He ſends a Challenge to King Philip, with Philip's Anſwer. He ſits down before Tournay, where he is joyn'd by his Allies. The Earl of Hainalt's Exploits, and an Aſſault of the Flemings upon Tournay. King Philip prepares to raiſe the Siege, and encamps near the Town. The various Rencounters during the Siege. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. Scotland recovers Breath. The Engliſh Allies before St. Omers poſſeſt with a Panick Fear. The Difficulties of both the Kings. The Pope, and the Lady Jane de Valois procure a Treaty, and that a Truce. Both Armies break up. The Truce prolonged for 2 Years. The Death of ſundry Great Perſonages. The King of Spain's Victory over the Moors. Queen Philippa deliver'd of a Daughter. From p. 187. to p. 211.

Chap. XVIII. King Edward comes over in great diſpleaſure into England; where he diſplaces and impriſons ſeveral of his Chief Miniſters of State. The ſtate of his Quarrel with the Archbiſhop. The Archbiſhops Letters to the King, and to the Lord Chancellor. His Remonſtrance to the King and Council. His Letter to the Biſhop of London. His Articles of Excommunication. The King juſtifies his Proceedings in a Letter to the Biſhop of London. The Archbiſhop makes his Defence to the King. The King's Reply to the Archbiſhop's Defence. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. The Archbiſhop pardon'd. The Revocation of a Statute. From p. 212. to p. 235.

Chap. XIX. King Philip brings over the Emperour to his ſide. The Emperours Letters of Revocation to King Edward. His Anſwer. The Duke of Bretagne dying without Iſſue, John of Monford and Charles of Blois lay claim to the Dutchy. Earl Monford ſeiſes his Fathers Treaſure, calls a Parliament, and takes in many places. He goes into England and makes Homage to King Edward, thereby to gain his Protection. Being ſummon'd to appear in the Chamber of France, he comes to Paris, but ſteals away again. The Dukedom adjudged to Charles of Blois. King Philip confiſcates the Earldom of Monford, which King Edward requites with the Earldom of Richmond. Charles of Blois takes his Rival and ſends him to Paris. The Counteſs of Monford renews the War. Queen Philippa deliver'd of her Fifth Son, Edmund of Langley. Francis Petrarch crown'd Laureat Poet. The Lord Douglas takes Striveling. King Edward marches into Scotland, brings the Scots to Conditions. King David of Scotland returns home, invades England, lays ſiege to Newcaſtle, but riſes. King Edward prepares to oppoſe him. Durham deſtroy'd, King David lies before the Caſtle of Werk: The Story of King Edward's Love with the Counteſs of Salisbury exploded. The Captain of the Caſtle paſſes by night thrô the Scotch Hoſt, to acquaint King Edward with the matter: On knowledge whereof the Scots retire. King Edward comes before Werk, and follows the Scots. A Truce between the two Kings: The Earls of Murray and Salisbury acquitted. From p. 236. to p. 255.

Chap. XX. Charles of Blois lays ſiege to Rennes. The Counteſs of Monford ſends to King Edward for Succour. Charles takes Rennes, and beſieges the Counteſs in Hennebond. A famous Exploit done by the Counteſs. Charles leaves half his Army with Don Lewis before Hennebond, and goes with the other half to Auray. Sr. Reynald of Dinant's Succeſs againſt thoſe of Roſternan. Juſt as Hennebond is upon the point of Yielding, the Lord Walter Manny arrives with the Engliſh Succours. The Biſhop of Leon falls off from the Counteſs. The Lord Manny breaks the Enemies biggeſt Engine, and beats up their Quarters. Don Lewis riſes in deſpair and goes to Charles of Blois, who ſends him to Dinant: He takes Comper in his way. The Lord Manny having retaken Comper returns to Hennebond. The Men of Dinant having murder'd their Captain Sr. Reynald of Dinant yield to Don Lewis, who takes and ſacks Guerande. Auray taken by Charles of Blois. He takes Vannes, and beſieges Karhais. The Lord Manny routs Don Lewis. He attacks attacks Rosternan, the Captain of Favoet carries away two Englisn Knights, whom the Lord Manny follows, but cannot recover: He takes Gony en la Forest, and returns to Hennebond. The Countess sends to England for a Reinforcement. Karhais yields to Charles of Blois, who renews his siege before Hennebond. Don Lewis vows to cut off the Heads of the two Englisn Knights, who were taken by the Captain of Favoet: But the Lord Manny rescues them. Charles leaves the Siege in despair, but takes Jugon. A Truce being taken between Charles and the Countess, the latter comes with her Son into England. The Earl of Salisbury is made King of Man by King Edward. Pope Benedict XII. dies, Clement VI. succeeds. From p. 256. to p. 267.

Chap. XXI. King Edward provides for the Campaign. Sends the Lord Robert of Artois along with the Countess of Monford: And resolves himself to pull down the Scots. He enjoyns his Clergy to pray for the Success of his Arms. A Biennial Truce between England and Scotland. The Lord Robert of Artois engages with Don Lewis of Spain, but a storm parts them. The Lord Robert of Artois lands in Bretagne, and takes Vannes by stratagem. The Englisn lay Siege to Rennes. The Bloisian Lords retake Vannes by storm. The Lord Robert of Artois dies of his Wounds. King Edward vows to revenge his Death. A Parliament. King Edward creates his Eldest Son Prince of Wales. The Commons in Parliament complain of the Pope's Reservations: The two Houses Address to the Pope. The Pope writes to the King and his Council. The King's Notable Answer. King Edward goes into Bretagne, lays siege to Vannes. Charles of Blois prepares to oppose him. The King besieges him in Nantes, and takes in divers Towns. The Lords of Clisson and Leon taken by the Englisn before Vannes. Don Lewis distresses King Edward's Navy. John Duke of Normandy comes with an Army against King Edward. The two Armies confront. A Truce taken. King Edward returns into England. The Treaty fully ratified. The Death of King Robert of Sicily, of King Philip of Navarre, and others. The Foundation of Trinity-Hall, Pembroke-Hall, and Gonvill and Caius College in Cambridge. From p. 267. to p. 287.

Chap. XXII. The Agents of France and England meet at Avignon: Some Heads of the two Kings several Pleas (which yet are more fully handled in the Fourth Book, the fifth Chapter, Paragraphs the VI, VII, VIII, IX. a p. 747. ad p. 758.) but nothing done. The Pope gains ground in the matter of Provisions. King Edward begins his Round Table at Windsor. With the Description, Antiquity, and gradual Encrease of that Castle. King Philip sets up another Round Table at Paris. But King Edward's Round Table being the Seminary of the Order of the Garter (which was instituted Anno 23. Ed. 3.) The said Order is here enquired into, its Original as vulgarly given exploded, and one more Antient and Mystical asserted. The time of this First Round Table; with the manner of its Solemnity. William Montagu Earl of Salisbury dies, his Praise, Pedigree & Issue. King Edwards Buildings at Windsor, his Institution of the Most Noble Order of the GARTER: The Names of the XXVI Founders. A short View of the said most Noble Order; and how many Foreign Princes, &c. have been thereof. King Edward hears, how King Philip had put to death sundry Lords of Bretagne his Friends. King Philip's Cruelty to the Messenger of these News. King Edward's Raillery on his Tax upon Salt. King Edward sends a Defiance to Philip: But is alarm'd from all Parts to look to himself. The Pope makes Don Lewis of Spain Prince of the Fortunate Islands. King Edward sends Forces into Gascogne, Bretagne, and the Frontiers of Scotland. He makes his Remonstrance to the Pope, who endeavours to pacifie him. A Parliament at Westminster. The Earl of Darby lands in Gascogne. His Acts. His Return to Bourdeaux. He takes King Philip's Lieutenant before Auberoche. Queen Philippa deliver'd of a Daughter, named Mary. John Earl of Monford acquitted his Prison. The Lord Oliver Ingham dies, his Issue. From p. 287. to p. 312.

Chap. XXIII. King Edward tells the Pope, that unless King Philip gives him Satisfaction, he will renounce the Truce. The Earl of Northampton commissioned to defie the French King. King Edward's Manifesto touching the Dissolution of the Truce. His New Commission to the Earl of Darby. An account of his Actions in Gascogne this Year. The Lord Walter Manny finds his Fathers Bones in Reole. The Castle of Reole yielded. The Earl of Darby's Victorious Progress and Return to Bourdeaux. From p. 312. to p. 320.

Chap. XXIV. Henry Earl of Lancaster dies. The motives and manner of Jacob van Arteveld's Fall. The Flemings appease King Edward. The young Earl of Hainalt slain. The Lord John of Beaumont brought over to the French side. The Lord Godfry of Harcourt revolts to England. John of Monford amidst his Victories in Bretagne dies. The Earl of Northampton combats Charles of Blois and routs his Army. The Scots discomfited by the Englisn, whereon ensues a Truce. The Death of one Lord and two Bishops. From p. 321. to p. 330.

BOOK II.

CHAP. I.

King Philip sends the Duke of Normandy against the Earl of Darby, alias the Earl of Lancaster. Duke John sits down before Angoulesme; the Earl of Lancaster new Garrisons Ville-Franche, and reinforces Aiguillon. The Seneschal of Beaucaire wins Ancenis. Sr. John Norwich escapes the Duke of Normandy by a quaint device. The Duke of Normandy comes before Aiguillon; with the Particulars of that Siege. The French King's Seneschal of Guienne beaten by the Earl of Lancaster, which Earl holds the Duke of Normandy short. From p. 331. to p. 337.

Chap. II. King Edward resolves to succour his Friends in Aiguillon, calls a Parliament, settles the Realm, sets Sail for Gascogne, but lands in Normandy, and Knights his Eldest Son Prince Edward, &c. King Philip strengthens Caën against him. A Cruel Execution done at Paris upon a Frenchman, for Asserting King Edward's Right to France. King Edward marches thrô Normandy. King Philip prepares to encounter him. King Edward takes St. Lo and Caën: Rejects the Cardinals Endeavours for Peace, stays at Poissy Poiſſy to repair the Bridge, and ſends a Defiance to King Philip; who goes to his Army. King Edward gets over the Seyne, receives, and replies to, an Anſwer of King Philips to his Challenge: His Progreſs thrô France. His Princely Carriage to two Fair Ladies, that were taken at Poix. The Inhabitants of Poix being found treacherous are put to the Sword. King Edward endeavours to get over the Somme: A French Priſoner ſhews him the Paſſage at Blanchetteaque; which yet he finds guarded, but goes over and diſcomfits Godmar du Fay, who kept the Paſſage. King Philip reſts at Abbeville. King Edward encamps in the Fields of Creſſy, and prepares to receive him. From p. 338. to p. 353.

Chap. III. The Number and Order of King Edward's Forces, the Names of his Chief Captains; He creates 50 Knights. King Philip goes out of Abbeville againſt him: The Order of the French. King Philip advances his Oriflambe, and King Edward his Burning Dragon. The Battle of CRESSY. The Earl of Warwick ſends to the King for Succour, with the King's Anſwer. The Prince of Wales having overcome ſeveral Bodies of the French, marches forward againſt their Main Force, routs the Marqueſs of Moravia, kills the Old King of Bohemia, and wins his Banner of the Oſtrich Feathers. King Philip flies, and leaves the Victory to the Engliſh. The Number of the ſlain on both ſides. An Enquiry into the Antiquity of Guns. King Philip retires to Broye, thence to Amiens, and ſo to Paris. The Behaviour of the Engliſh after the Victory. Two Bodies of the French defeated. The Conquerour takes the Spoil of the Field, and care for the burial of the Dead. King Edward marches from Creſſy and lies down before Calais. From p. 354. to p. 365.

Chap. IV. The Deſcription of Calais: The ſtrength of King Edward's Navy: He lays a formal Siege to the Place: Plenty of Proviſion in his Camp. The Earl of Warwick takes Teroüenne. The Flemings beſiege St. Omers. Seventeen Hundred poor People being thruſt out of Calais, are relieved by King Edward. The Copies of two Letters containing the ſumme of this Expedition, from the Winning of Caën to the Siege of Calais. The Duke of Normandy makes another attempt upon Aiguillon, but to his Loſs. King Philip commands his Son to riſe from before Aiguillon, and perſwades the King of Scotland to invade England. The Duke of Normandy leaves the Siege of Aiguillon, the Lord Manny cuts him off at the Reer: His Agreement with a Priſoner of Quality. The Priſoner brings him a ſafe Conduct, and is ſet free. The Lord Manny riding towards Calais in Confidence of this Conduct, is ſeiſed by King Philip's Order. But the Duke of Normandy ſaves his Life. The Earl of Lancaſter, upon the Duke of Normandy's Departure, takes the Field, and Conquers in Sainctogne, Rochellois, and Poictou. An Inſtance of this Earls Liberality and Munificence. He wins Poictiers, leaves it Deſolate, and Returns to Bourdeaux. An Army of Poictevins diſcomfited by the Engliſh Garriſon of Luſignan. From p. 365. to p. 375.

Chap. V. King Philip by his Ambaſſadors perſwades the King of Scots to break with England. King David reſolves on a War: Raiſes an Army, and begins to march. His Cruelty to an Engliſh Knight in cold blood: He encamps near Durham. Queen Philippa makes her Muſters at York, and ſends an Expoſtulation to King David: The Order and Number of the Scotch Army: Alſo of the Engliſh, with the Names of their Chief Leaders. Queen Philippa encourages her Men. She beats Douglas and Graham before the Battle. Robert Stuart Prince of Scotland begins the Fight, but is obliged to Retreat. King David is taken Priſoner by John Copland, an Eſquire of Northumberland. The Third and laſt Battalia of the Scots diſcomfited. The time and place of this Battle certainly Aſſign'd. A Groſs Miſtake of Hector Boëtius, the Scotch Hiſtorian. How long the Fight laſted, the Loſs on both ſides: The Names of the Scotch Nobility ſlain and taken. John Copland bears away the King of Scotland; the Queen ſends to him for the King: She returns to York, and King Bailiol and the Engliſh invade Scotland. John Copland being ſent for to Calais by King Edward, is Knighted and Royally rewarded. King David ſecur'd in the Tower of London. The Earls of Menteith and Fife executed. The Earl of Lancaſter returns into England, and the Queen goes over to the Siege at Calais. The Pope endeavours for Peace in vain. From p. 376. to p. 385.

Chap. VI. A Parliament at Paris. Another at Weſtminſter. The Pope writes to King Edward to perſwade him to Peace: King Edward's anſwer. Odoricus Rainaldus refuted. King Philip ſeeks to bring over the Flemings, but miſſes his Aim. The Earl of Flanders confin'd by his Subjects, becauſe he will not match with a Daughter of England. King Edward reinforces the Siege of Calais. The Earl of Flanders eſcapes into France. Two Frenchmen put to Death for favouring King Edward's Right. The Duke of Normandy receives a Foil before Caſſel. The frequent Attempts to relieve Calais fruſtrated. The Loſſes and Difficulties of the Engliſh Camp. Sr. Robert of Namur enters King Edward's ſervice before Calais. An account of the Scotch Affairs ſince the Battle of DURHAM. An account of the Affairs of Bretagne. Sr. Charles of Blois taken Priſoner at the Battle of ROCHE D' ARIEN by Sr. Thomas Dagworth. Roche d' Arien taken by the French; and the Engliſh Garriſon murder'd by the Commons of the Country. The French Navy defeated. Five hundred more poor People thruſt out of Calais. The Caliſians ſend an Account of their Caſe to King Philip. The Earl of Lancaſter leading a Detachment towards Amiens upon News of King Philip's March, returns to Calais. The French Kings ſtrength; he deſires leave of the Flemings to paſs thrô their Country, but is refuſed. The Flemings Beſiege Aire, but upon King Philip's approach, riſe. King Philip comes to Sangate, and demands Battle of King Edward, with the Anſwer. Two Cardinals obtain a Treaty, which comes to nothing. King Philip goes off in Deſpair. The manner how Calais was yielded. Calais ſettled by King Edward. A Truce between the two Kings. King Edward returns for England. A Bruſh between the Engliſh and Scots of the Borders. Lewis the Emperour dies. King Edward choſen Emperour, refuſes. Charles King of Bohemia ſucceeds. The Death of William Occam and Walter Hemingford. A Law-Caſe. From p. 385. to p. 415.

Chap. VII. The Glory and Proſperity of King Edward's ward's Reign corrupts the Nation. A Parliament. Juſts and Turneaments. How Avignon came to belong to the See of Rome. Philip of Valois and Edward of England could cure the Kings Evil. An Order concerning the Kings Purveyors. The Truce between England and France prorogued for another Year. King Edward ſolemniſes the Tranſlation of St. Thomas, &c. The Earl of Flanders does Homage to King Edward, but afterwards rebelling, is beaten. King Edward being inform'd of a Deſign to betray Calais, goes over privately, and beats the Frenchmen. He preſents a Rich Chaplet to the Lord Euſtace de Ribemont, and ſets him free: Having ſettled Calais, he returns for England. The Death of the Queen of France and of the Dutcheſs of Normandy. The two Royal Widowers Marry again. From p. 416. to p. 428.

Chap. VIII. Treats of the Great Plague that happen'd in the Year 1348. From p. 428. to p. 442.

Chap. IX. King Edward Founds the Chappel of St. George at WINDSOR, with the Copy of his Letters for that purpoſe. The Pope furthers the Matter by two Bulls. The Progreſs in Building, Enlarging, and Beautifying the Caſtle of WINDSOR. The Inſtitution of the moſt Noble Order of the GARTER. Henry Earl of Lancaſter, Leiceſter and Darby, made Earl of Lincoln, and ſent into Gaſcogne. The Lord Thomas Dagworth ſlain in Bretagne. Earl Henry's Exploits in Gaſcogne. He brings the French to Terms. A Famous Combat between 30 Engliſh and 30 French. Of certain, who arrived to Great Wealth and Splendour by the Wars. Of Sr. Thomas Rokeby, Deputy Lieutenant of Ireland, and of Sr. Robert Savage and his Son Henry Savage, who lived in Ulſter. A Grant of the Black-Prince's to the Lord Henry Eam of Flanders, confirmed at this time by the King, he being then newly choſen one of the Firſt Knights of the GARTER. From p. 442. to p. 448.

Chap. X. Pope Clement reduces the Bonifacian Jubilee from the 100th to the 50th Year. The Original of Jubilees. King Edward forbids his Subjects to go to Rome on that occaſion; with his Anſwer to the Pope's Expoſtulation thereon. The Sect of Whippers riſes, and is ſuppreſt. King Edward's Victory over the Spaniards at Sea. King Philip of France dies; King John ſucceeds. A Duel fought before King Edward, between a Knight of Cyprus and the Baſtard of France. King John puts the Baſtard of France and the Earl of Eu and Guiſnes to Death. Some ſteps towards a Peace with Scotland, in Order to King David's Redemption. From p. 449. to p. 455.

Chap. XI. A Parliament, wherein King Edward advances ſundry of his Grandees to Honour. The Lord John Beauchamp Captain of Calais, being taken Priſoner, is ſucceeded by Sr. Robert Herle: Sr. Robert's Acts. A Truce with France. Another with Spain. The Lord Guy de Neſle taken Priſoner. Twenty four Chriſtians Martyr'd by the Governour of Damaſcus, who is therefore put to Death by the Soldan of Babylon. King John of France renews the Order of the STAR. The Caſtle of Guiſnes taken by the Engliſh. King John ſeeks to recover it in vain. Sr. Charles of Blois ſet at Liberty upon his Parole. The Lord Guy de Neſle ſlain by Sr. Walter Bentley. The Earl of Stafford, Lieutenant of Gaſcogne, beats the French. The Death of Sr. Thomas Wale, Knight of the GARTER. King Edward provides for the Defence of the Seas. William Earl of Hainalt Marries Mathilda Daughter of the Duke of Lancaſter. The Duke of Lancaſter gets Honour of the Duke of Brunſwick. King Edward prepares againſt the French. Pope Clement dies, and the Earl of Kent. Two Malefactors beheaded at London. From p. 455. to p. 467.

Chap. XII. An Hard Winter, Storms, Drought and Dearth. A Riot at Cheſter. The Black Prince's Munificence. King Edward Founds a College at Weſtminſter. A Treaty with Scotland. A Treaty and Truce with France. A Parliament. The Names of the Lords ſummon'd thereto. Another Parliament. A Treaty at Avignon, which begets a ſhort Truce. The Foundation of Trinity-Hall in Cambridge. A Quarrel between the Town and Univerſity of Oxford. Two Fryars burnt at Avignon: And a Third recants at Paris. From p. 468. to p. 477.

Chap. XIII. The King of Navarre Murders the Conſtable of France, and Invites the Duke of Lancaſter to his Aſſiſtance; but is reconciled to the French King. The War breaks out again between England and France. The Black Prince his Exploits in Gaſcogne. The Lord John Liſle Knight of the GARTER, ſlain. Two Letters of Sr. John Wingfields relating the Prince's Exploits. King Edward goes into France, obtains a Truce, and returns into England. Barwick taken by the Scots. Queen Philippa deliver'd of her Seventh Son Thomas of Woodſtock. Nantes taken and Recover'd. A ſtrange Malady of Averſion. The Death of Peter Lord Mauley. From p. 478. to p. 489.

Chap. XIV. King Edward recovers Barwick. King Bailiol reſigns his Right and Title to Scotland into King Edward's Hands. King Edward waſts Scotland; but loſing a great part of his Navy, is obliged to return. He brings Bailiol into England with him. A Parliament at Paris. A Sedition at Arras ſuppreſt. King John of France ſeiſes the King of Navarre, confines him, and executes ſeveral of his Friends. The King of Navarre's Brother Philip obtains Aſſiſtance from England; and being reinforced by the Duke of Lancaſter makes hot War in Normandy. King John goes againſt him; but upon News of the Black-Prince's being in France, turns back to oppoſe him. The Duke of Lancaſter having ſettled Affairs in Normandy, goes into Bretagne to the Dutcheſs. From p. 489. to p. 494.

BOOK III.

CHAP. I.

KING John prepares to go againſt the Black-Prince. The ſaid Prince's Victorious Progreſs thrô Quercy, Auvergne, Berry, and Touraine. The French King follows him. Two Cardinals haſte after him in hopes to reconcile Matters. Some French Troops cut off by the Prince. King John having Order'd his Battails, a Cardinal perſwades him to deſiſt a while, till he had try'd to compoſe Matters. But the French K. demands more than the Prince would grant. A Quarrel between the Marſhal of France and the Lord Chandos. The Cardinal deſpairing of Peace leaves the Field. Prince Edward encourages his Men. The Names of his Chief Leaders. His ſpeech to them. His New Device againſt the Enemy. The Lord James Audley and Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt begin the Fight. The Famous Battle of POICTIERS, wherein King John is made Priſoner. The Prince of Wales his Bounty to the Lord Audley; his Obliging Deportment to the French King. He returns to Bourdeaux. King Edward's Moderation at the News of his Sons Succeſs. The Pope applauds the Prince of Wales for his Humanity to the Captive King. The ſeveral claims concerning the taking of the French King adjuſted. The Duke of Lancaſter's proceedings in Normandy and Bretagne after the Battle of Poictiers. The Troubles of France freſhly fomented by a Seditious Parliament. The Lord Godfry of Harcourt ſlain. The Pope ſtirs up the Emperour to endeavour to compoſe Matters between the two Kings. A Diet at Metz in Lorraine. Seals changed in England. From p. 495. to p. 525.

Chap. II. The Black-Prince brings King John of France into England. King Edward receives the Captive King with much Humanity. Henry Duke of Lancaſter holds a Siege before Rennes. The Cardinals obtaine a Truce between the two Kings. King David is redeem'd, and returns to Scotland. The Duke of Lancaſter takes Rennes by Compoſition. Sr. Robert Knolles beats the Marſhal of France in Normandy. The Lord of Granville takes the Caſtle of Eureux by a ſlight. The Riſe of Sr. John Hawkwood and Sr. Robert Knolles. The Original of a ſort of Freebooters call'd Companions in France. The Inſolence of the Pariſiens and their Provoſt toward the Dauphin. King Charles of Navarre gets at Liberty and grows Popular. From p. 525. to p. 535.

Chap. III. King Edward holds St. GEORGE'S day with great Solemnity. A Friendly Treaty held between King Edward and King John; but 'tis daſh'd. The Jaquerie in France, with their Cruelty and Extirpation. Quarrels between the King of Navarre and the Dauphin, and between the Dauphin and the Provoſt of Paris. The King and Duke reconcil'd, but the Provoſt continues Plotting. The Engliſh Navarrois revenge the Death of their Countrymen on the Pariſiens. The Provoſt deſigning to betray Paris, is diſcover'd and ſlain. The King of Navarre breaks again with the Dauphin. His ſeveral Garriſons, the Dauphin's Difficulties. The Confuſion and Miſeries of France. The Conſtable beſieges St. Valery. The Captal of Buſche comes to the King of Navarre's Aſſiſtance. The ſeveral Garriſons of the Navarrois. The Lord Canon Robſart diſcomfits a Party of them. The happy Eſtate of England. Two Kings keep Chriſtmas with King Edward. The Death of the Queen Mother of England, of the Queen Conſort of Scotland, and of Orcanes the Great Turk. A Quarrel between the Biſhop of Ely and Blanche Lady Wake. And another between the Four Orders of Predicants, and the two Univerſities of Cambridge and Oxford. From p. 536. to p. 552.

Chap. IV. A Method of Agreement pitch'd upon by the two Kings, but rejected by the French Parliament: Whereupon King Edward reſolves for War. St. Valery yielded up to the French. Sr. Peter Audley fails in his Deſign upon Châlons. The Earl of Roucy taken Priſoner a ſecond time. Melun beſieged; but the Dauphin and Navarre are reconciled. The Lord Euſtace Dambreticourt taken Priſoner by the French. A Judgment on a Sacrilegious Souldier. The Navarrois decline ſuddenly. Upon Sr. Peter Audley's Death, Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt is redeem'd by the Navarrois, and made their Captain. Sr. Robert Knolles his Expedition: He retires, being overmatch'd. Submits to the King and obtains his Pardon. The Flemings revolt from King Edward. King Edward with his Four Sons and others, holds a Solemn Juſts in the Name of the Mayor and Aldermen of London. John of Gaunt Earl of Richmond, Marries the Duke of Lancaſter's Daughter. King Edward chooſes the Place of his Sepulture in Weſtminſter Abbey. From p. 552. to p. 564.

Chap. V. King Edward ſends the Duke of Lancaſter to Calais, and follows himſelf with an Army of an Hundred Thouſand Men. The Names of his Chief Captains, with the Order of his Army. The King Marches from Calais toward Rheims in Champaigne. An adventure between the Lord Galahaut de Ribemont and the Lord Van Boulant. The Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh takes the French Maſter of the Croſsbows Priſoner. King Edward lays Siege to Rheims. The Lord Euſtace Dambreticourt ſends relief to the Engliſh Army. Several Places taken by Detachments from the Camp before Rheims. The King of Navarre breaks with the Dauphin again. The Lord of Gomegines taken Priſoner by the French. The Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh takes Cormicy, and raſes it. From p. 565. to p. 574.

Chap. VI. The Duke of Normandy's Methods to reſiſt King Edward. The French take Land at Winchelſea; and having done much harm are beaten off. Order taken to prevent the like for the future. King Edward riſing from before Rheims Marches thrô Champaigne. Roger Mortimer Earl of March dies. The Great Pomp and Order of the Engliſh Army. King Edward is bought off from deſtroying Burgundy; and turns toward Paris. He ſits down before Paris. Two Treaties offer'd at in vain. The King Challenges the Dauphin forth to Battle. The Lord Manny Skirmiſhes at the Barriers. A Remark on Mr. Stow. The King reſolves for Bretagne, intending to return to the Siege before Paris at a better ſeaſon. The Great Miſeries of France, whereby the Dauphin finds himſelf obliged to make certain Offers to King Edward for Peace: The King being moved by a ſtrange Tempeſt accepts the French Offers. A Treaty enſues. A Copy of the Famous Peace made at Bretigny. The two Eldeſt Sons of England and France ſworn to uphold the Peace. King Edward returns for England, and ſends King John over to Calais. The Pope quickens him to finiſh the Peace, which he does. The Copies of both the Kings Letters. The Names of the Grandees ſworn on both ſides. Other things relating to the Conſummation of the Peace. Endeavours to reconcile the two Pretenders to Bretagne. The Mutual Friendſhip of the two Kings. King John goes to Boulogne. King Edward returns to England. The Death of the Earl of Oxford, of the Earl of Northampton, alſo of the Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, of the Earl of Kent, of the Earl of Warwick's Brother, and of the King of Cyprus. From p. 575. to p. 607.

Chap.

The CONTENTS.

Chap. VII. The Methods of the two Kings to eſtabliſh the Peace. King John's Reception at Paris. The unwillingneſs of the Frenchmen to admit of the Engliſh Government. King Edward makes the Lord John Chandos his Lieutenant in Aquitaine. The ſaid Lord's Praiſe and Character. The Disbanded Souldiers turn Robbers, and overthrow the Lord James of Bourbon. The Pope gets them to be drawn off into Italy. A ſecond Plague in England. The Death of the Good Duke of Lancaſter, of the Lord John Moubray, and others; with ſix Biſhops and the Archbiſhop of Armagh. The Black-Prince Marries the Counteſs of Kent. Prince Lionel made Lieutenant of Ireland, with his behaviour there. King Edward reſtores unto the Priors Aliens, what he took from them in the Eleventh Year of his Reign. From p. 608. to p. 619.

Chap. VIII. Ambaſſadors from the Kings of Armenia and Cyprus entertain'd by the King with Juſts and Tourneaments. King Edward Creates his Son, the Black-Prince, Prince of Aquitaine. The Copy of his Charter. The Prince prepares to go over with his Family. An occaſional Propheſie concerning King Edward's immediate Succeſſor. The Prince his Reception in Aquitaine. He ſettles his Court at Bourdeaux. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. The Jubilee of King Edward's Age. He Creates his Son Lionel Duke of Clarence, John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, and Edmund Earl of Cambridge: His Acts of Grace to all his Subjects. He holds a Solemn Hunting. The Lord Fauconberg dies. Sr. John Copland Murther'd. From p. 620. to p. 626.

Chap. IX. King John of France, on the Death of the Duke of Burgundy without Iſſue, takes Poſſeſſion of that County, and goes to viſit the Pope at Avignon. Pope Innocent VI dies: Urban V ſucceeds. The King of Cyprus comes to Avignon. A Combat fought there. A Croiſade proclaimed: The King of France being the Head thereof. The King of Cyprus viſits the Emperour. The Emperours Opinion concerning the Holy War. The King of Cyprus goes to other Chriſtian Princes. The Duke of Anjou being one of the French Hoſtages, makes an Eſcape. The Kings of Cyprus and Denmark and the Duke of Bavaria come into England. King Edward's anſwer to the King of Cyprus, when he ask'd his Company to the Holy War. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. A Convocation, which retrenches the Exceſſive Number of Holy Days. The Death of the Dutcheſs of Clarence, of Edward Bailiol once King of Scotland, and of the Biſhop of Bath and Wells. A Man, who after Execution at the Gallows, recover'd, is pardon'd by the King. The King of Cyprus rob'd. King David of Scotland comes into England. A long and hard Froſt. From p. 626. to p. 633.

Chap. X. King John comes into England. King Edward welcomes Him. An Alderman of London entertains Five Kings at once. The King of Cyprus returns into France, and viſits the Black-Prince, then Prince of Aquitaine. King John ſickens and dies in England. The King of Navarre ſtirs again. Sr. Bertram of Clequin ſent for to oppoſe him. A Story of his Original. He takes Mante and Meulan by ſtratagem. The King of Navarre ſends the Captal of Buſche againſt Him. Sr. Bertram reinforced. The Lord Beaumont de la Val taken Priſoner by Sr. Guy of Granville. King John's Funeral Rights performed in England; His Body buried in France. A Day appointed for the Coronation of the Duke of Normandy. The Famous Battle of COCHEREL, wherein the Captal of Buſche is overthrown, and taken Priſoner by Sr. Bertram of Clequin. Sr. Guy of Granville redeems his Father by Exchange for the Lord Beaumont de la Val. Charles Duke of Normandy Crown'd King of France at Rheims: He makes his Brother Philip Duke of Burgundy. Sr. Bertram of Clequin buys the Caſtle of Rolebois. The Duke of Burgundy ſent to reduce the reſt: The Army divided Acts ſeparately. Prince Lewis of Navarre grows ſtrong about Bourbonnois: A Party of his ſurpriſes la Charité. The Duke takes in ſeveral Places. Prince Lewis and his Garriſon of la Charité do as they pleaſe. The Duke of Burgundy goes to oppoſe the Earl of Monbelliard. La Charité beſieged and taken. From p. 634. to p. 650.

Chap. XI. The King of France helps Charles of Blois, and the King of England John of Monford; both who prepare for Battle. The French Order their Men. The Lord John Chandos orders the Engliſh and gives a Reſerve to Sr. Hugh Calverley. The Lord of Beaumanoir obtains a ſhort Truce in order to an Agreement. The Lord Chandos breaks off the Treaty. The Famous Battle of AURAY in Bretagne, with the Death of Charles of Blois, and the Number of the ſlain, and Priſoners on both ſides. Earl Monford weeps over Charles his Body; the Character and Praiſe of the ſaid Charles. Earl Monford gives a Truce to the Country, and returns to the Siege of Auray; which he ſoon takes. A Treaty for a Match between the Daughter and Heireſs of Lewis of Flanders, and Edmund Earl of Cambridge, is daſh'd by the French King's ſubtlety. The Chriſtians obtain a Cadmæan Victory againſt the Turks. From p. 651. to p. 661.

Chap. XII. John of Monford reduces all Bretagne. With King Edward's leave he holds the Dukedom of the French King. Peace made between the French King and the King of Navarre: The Captal of Buſche ſet at Liberty: Is tempted to renounce the Engliſh Intereſt in vain. The Death of the Lord Lewis of Navarre. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. King Edward's Buildings, and Foundation of Kings-Hall in Cambridge, now called Trinity-College. The Pope demands King John's Fee-Farm Rent. King Edward refers the Matter to his Parliament. The Lady Iſabella, Daughter to the King, given in Marriage to the Lord Ingleram de Coucy. The King puniſhes ſundry of his Judges for Male-Adminiſtration. The King of Cyprus takes Alexandria in Egypt; but leaves it again. Dr. Thoroton twice corrected. The Earl of Warwick returns into England with the King of Lithuania's Son, to whom he is Godfather. From p. 662. to p. 669.

Chap. XIII. A Parliament at Weſtminſter, wherein notice is taken of the Pope's foremention'd Demand of the King: Peter-Pence forbid to be paid. The Quarrel between the Fryars Mendicants and the two Univerſities, taken up by the King. The Lord of Coucy made Earl of Bedford. A Treaty of Marriage between Prince Lionel and the Lady Violantis, Daughter to Galeas leas Duke of Milain. Archbiſhop Iſlip dies; his Foundation of Canterbury College in Oxford, now called Chriſt-Church. Dr. Langham Biſhop of Ely tranſlated to Canterbury. On the French King's Complaint of the Companions, King Edward prepares an Army againſt them: But on the French King's being jealous, deſiſts. The French King and the Pope endeavour to draw off the Companions into Hungary, but it will not do. From p. 669. to p. 672.

The CONTENTS.

BOOK IV.

CHAP. I.

DON Pedro's Character. The Pope excommunicates him, and legitimates his Baſtard Brother. The Companions joyn Sr. Bertram of Clequin, and march againſt Don Pedro, who being forſaken of all, flies from place to place, and abſconds in Galizia. Don Henry the Baſtard is made King of Spain. Don Pedro implores the Protection of the Black-Prince, and arrives at Bayonne. Prince Edward receives him with much Humanity. The Reaſons Pro and Con, why the Prince ſhould, or ſhould not, aſſiſt him. The Prince has his Fathers leave to undertake his Quarrel. The King of Navarre is won. The Copy of a Famous Grant of Don Pedro to King Edward, and to the Prince and the Kings of England, and their Eldeſt Sons for Ever. Prince Edward ſends for his Captains, who were then in the Baſtards Service. The Baſtard's ſurpriſe at the News of the Prince's Deſign. Sr. Bertram goes back into France to raiſe Friends. Divers Opinions touching this undertaking of the Prince's. The Baſtard renews his Alliance with the King of Aragon, &c. The Prince's Zeal for this War. The Lord of Albret engages to bring a 1000 Spears. The Companions, being beſieged in Montauban, beat the French. James, King of Majorica comes to Bourdeaux to implore the Prince's Aid againſt the King of Aragon. The Prince by Advice of his Council countermands 800 of the Lord Albret's 1000 Spears. From p. 674. to p. 694.

Chap. II. A ſecond Son Born to the Black-Prince, named Richard. The Prince begins his March, is joyn'd by the Duke of Lancaſter. He paſſes the Pirenæan Mountains, the Order of his Army, the Names of his Chief Captains. Don Henry ſends his Expoſtulation and Defiance to him. The Lord Thomas Felton takes Navaret. Salvatierra yields to the Prince. The Lord Thomas Felton beats up the Baſtard's Quarters, and ſends Intelligence to the Prince. Don Henry goes forward, but halts at St. Miguel. The Prince expects him at Victoria. The Earl of Sancelloni beats up the Prince's Quarters, and takes the Lord Thomas Felton and all his Company. The Diſcourſe thereupon had in the Spaniſh Camp. The Prince paſſes the Ebro, and anſwers Don Henry's Letters. Don Henry's Reſolution. The two Armies move forward. The Order and Number of the Spaniards. The Lord Chandos made a Banneret. The Prince's Prayer before the Fight. The Famous Battle of NAJARA in Spain; where the Baſtard receives a Mighty overthrow. The City of Najara taken. The time and place of the Battle. The Number of the ſlain on both ſides. The Prince obliges Don Pedro to grant a General Pardon. All Spain comes in and ſubmits to Don Pedro and the Prince. The Prince demands his Souldiers pay of the King, who goes to Seville, but ſends none. The Great Renown of the Black-Prince after this Victory. The Black-Prince returns home without his Money. The firſt Change of King Edward's Fortune. The Daniſh Fleet beaten by the Engliſh. The Death of Don Pedro King of Portugal, ſirnamed the Juſticeer. From p. 695. to p. 718.

Chap. III. Prince Lionel is Married to the Lady Violantis. He falls ſick and dies. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury made Cardinal. A Sea-Woman taken in the Zuyder-zea. Sr. Bertram by a Fineneſs obtains to be ranſom'd. The Companions wanting their Pay, prove troubleſome to the Principality. But at the Prince's Command they go away, and do much Miſchief in France. The Prince taxes his Subjects, which occaſions a Revolt. From p. 718. to p. 725.

Chap. IV. Don Henry the Baſtard finding the Prince of Wales embroyl'd, returns into Spain, ſurpriſes the King Don Pedro, beats him, takes him and kills him with his own Hands. The King of France, being urged by the Diſcontented Gaſcogne Lords, Summons the Prince of Wales to appear before him. William of Wickham made Biſhop of Wincheſter, &c. The Prince of Wales falls ſick of an incurable Diſeaſe. He ſends the Lord Chandos againſt the Gaſcogne Lords. The French King ſurpriſes Ponthieu; and defies King Edward: Who in Parliament reſumes his Title to France, and obtains a Mighty Aid for his Wars. The Black-Prince makes the Captal of Buſche Earl of Bigorre, which Creation is confirm'd by the King, his Father. From p. 725. to p. 742.

Chap. V. The War begins in the Principality. Mutual Loſſes and Gains. The two Kings ſet forth an Account of their ſeveral Cauſes; their Rights argued. The Pedigree of the Kings of France. King Edward's Reaſons for his Right and Title to France. From p. 743. to p. 758.

Chap. VI. The Duke of Burgundy Marries the Earl of Flanders his Daughter. Mutual Loſſes and Gains. The Earl of Pembroke's Danger. The Death of Queen Philippa. The Duke of Lancaſters Expedition. The Earl of Warwick dies. The Duke of Lancaſter a Widower. The Death of the Earl of Suffolk and of the Biſhop of Exceſter. The French King raiſes a Tax. From p. 759. to p. 782.

Chap. VII. The Death of the Lord John Chandos. The War hot in Gaſcogne. The Death of David Bruce, King of Scotland. The Genealogy of his Succeſſor Robert STUART. An Old Error concerning King Robert's Children confuted. Sr. Robert Knolles his Expedition into France. The Black-Prince ſacks Limoges, and Sr. Bertram of Clequin made Conſtable of France. Pope Urban dies. Maximus Planudes flouriſhes. From p. 783. to p. 812.

Chap. VIII. The Death of the Lord Euſtace Dambreticourt. The Danger and Eſcape of the Lord Raimond of Marvejols. The Black-Prince his Eldeſt Son dies. He returns into England ſick. The War in Gaſcogne. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. King Edward beats the Flemings at Sea. James King of Majorica dies. The Duke of Lancaſter and the Earl of Cambridge Marry the Two Daughters of Don Pedro late King of Spain. The Pope's endeavours for Peace. The

Duke

The CONTENTS.

Duke of Lancaſter and the Earl his Brother return with their Ladies into England. From p. 812. to p. 826.

Chap. IX. The Death of the Earl of Northampton and the Lord Walter Manny. The War hot in Gaſcogne. The Earl of Pembroke taken by the Spaniards. Poictiers and Rochelle yielded to the French. Thoüars beſieged. King Edward ſets ſail to raiſe the Siege; but the Wind will not ſerve, ſo Thoüars is loſt. The Duke of Bretagne made Earl of Richmond. The Black-Prince growing worſe and worſe, reſigns Aquitaine to his father. The Death of the Earl of Stafford, Sr. William Molineux, and Sr. John Mandeville the Famous Traveller. From p. 827. to p. 848.

Chap. X. The Conſtable of France beats the Engliſh before Sivray, and Conquers about in Poictou. The War hot in Bretagne. The Duke of Lancaſter's Expedition and March thrô France. A Treaty at Bruges. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. A Prodigious Malady. The Death of ſeveral Great Men. From p. 849. to p. 864.

Chap. XI. King Edward enquires into the Livings then in the hands of Aliens. A Treaty at Bruges. The Earl of Pembroke is redeem'd, and dies. The Death of Francis Petrarch the Italian Poet, and others. An account of Madam Alice Perrers ſaid to have been King Edward's Concubine. From p. 865. to p. 873.

Chap. XII. St. Saviour le Vicount yields to the French by Compoſition. Edmund Earl of Cambridge and the Duke of Bretagne, Conquer about in that Dukedom: But are hindred by an unſeaſonable Truce from proſecuting their Advantage. The Lord Edward Spencer dies. A Treaty between King Edward and the King of Scotland. Eſquire Katrington, being challenged of Treaſon for yielding St. Saviour le Vicount, loſes the day. Some Engliſh Veſſels taken by the Spaniards. The Death of two Earls. Two Acts of Charity. From p. 873. to p. 877.

Chap. XIII. The Lord of Coucy's Expedition into Auſtria. A Treaty at Bruges which begets a Truce, and that, another. King Edward offers largely for the Redemption of the Captal of Buſche, but cannot obtain it. The JUBILEE of King Edward's Reign. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. The Black-Prince dies. His Will, Character, Burial, and Epitaph. The Captal of Buſche takes it to heart, and dies. The Black-Prince's Praiſe and Children. The ſaid Parliament continued. A Cenſure thereof: Who the Firſt Speaker of the Houſe of Commons. The Death of an Engliſh Cardinal; and of the Lord John Peche. Pope Gregory returns the Papal Chair to Rome. From p. 878. to p. 895.

Chap. XIV. King Edward Creates his Grandſon, Richard of Bourdeaux, Prince of Wales. The Londoners entertain the Young Prince. John of Gaunt aſſociated to the King in the Government. A Parliament at Weſtminſter, with a Copy of the King's Writ. An exact Account of John Wickliff and his Doctrine. The Duke of Lancaſter for his ſake falls out with the Biſhop of London. The Londoners in a Sedition affront the Duke. The Biſhop hardly reſtrains the People. The Princeſs-Mother of Wales puts the City in Mind of their Duty. They make their excuſe to the King. They and the Duke reconciled. Sr. John Menſtreworth executed for Treaſon. The Lord of Coucy falls off to the French. King Edward Creates Prince Richard Knight of the GARTER. The War open. Sr. Hugh Calverley Captain of Calais. Outwick batter'd with Cannon, yields to the French. Sr. Hugh Calverley's Acts. The Engliſh Commiſſioners returning for England, find the King on his Death-Bed. He dies. A Story of the Manner of his Death refuted. The French King commends him. His Burial, Epitaph, Tomb, and Character. From p. 895. to the End.

THE

Errata

Errata sunt sic Emendanda.

PAG. 22. lin. 5. read fast-asleep. p. 54. l. 44. r. Nobles. p. 58. l. 2. r. Turne-tabard. p. 76. l. 2. r. tell for call. p. 89. for Innocent r. John. p. 177. dele Parag. VIII & IX. in the Contents. p. 270. l. 17. r. nock'd. p. 276. l. 35. r. Chancellor of the Church of York. p. 286. l. 37. r. strange. p. 295. l. penult. r. Father was named. p. 302. l. 2. dele and. p. 303. l. 32. dele and. p. 354. l. 31. r. 16 years, &c. p. 356. l. 27. r. 20 in depth, &c. p. 373. l. 22. for Paragraph r. Chapter. p. 402. l. 22. r. Vicount of Rohan, & sic semper. p. 439. l. 46. r. Simon de Burchester. p. 466. l. 14. r. no Charms about them took horse and so began, &c. p. 470. l. 13. r. Peter Lord Mauley the Fifth. p. 484. l. 49. r. On the second of November, being All-Souls day, the King began, &c. p. 485. l. 12. r. for he could not have been, &c. ibid. l. 34. r. after his setting forth, according to the Records, which affirm, how he marched forth of Calais on All-Souls day. p. 502. l. 34. r. Blew-Silk. p. 531. l. 22. r. July. p. 707. l. 18. r. keep it. p. 721. l. 21. r. William. p. 748. l. ult. r. and bearing. p. 750. l. 45. r. Inno. p. 751. l. penult. be accounted the Off-spring. p. 761. l. 45. r. having done a pious, &c. p. 806. l. 49. r. best word, &c. p. 814. l. 57. r. the Prince and Princess, &c.

THE

THE HISTORY OF King Edward IIId.

BOOK THE FIRST.

CHAPTER the First.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Circumstances of the Birth of King Edward the Third, with his Education and Character. II. He is made Prince of Wales, and Duke of Aquitain, beside the Titles of Earl of Chester, Ponthieu, and Monstroile; He goes into France, with the manner of his coming to the Crown of England. III. He is excus'd from being Guilty of his Fathers Deposition, his peace is proclaim'd and a General Pardon. IV. Twelve Guardians appointed him: Mortimer's Greatness and the Queens excessive Dowry. V. The Present State of Scotland, the King whereof Robert Bruce sends a Defiance to King Edward. VI. King Edward's Expedition against the Scots. VII. The Particulars of the Murder of King Edward the Second. VIII. King Edward the Third's Return to London: the first Year of his Reign concludes with the Death of sundry great Persons, Princes and Prelates.

I. KING Edward, the Third of that Name from the Conquest, was the first Son of King Edward the Second of England (firnamed Caernarvon) by his Queen Isabella the Daughter of Philip the Fair, King of France, [a] accounted in her time one of the most Beautifull Ladies in the world. He was born at the Castle of Windsor, whence he had his firname (after the manner of that Age) on the [b] thirteenth day of November, at [c] fourty Minutes past Five in the Morning, being the [d] Monday next after the Feast of S[t] Martin the Bishop, and the very day [e] after the day of S[t] Brice Bishop, and Disciple of S[t] Martin, in the sixth year of his Fathers Reign, and the year of our Lord God MCCCXII. Prince [f] Lewis, eldest Son to the King of France, and Brother to the Queen of England, being then with many of the French Nobility at the English Court, labour'd earnestly, that this Princely Infant might be named after King Philip; but against this motion the English Nobility prevail'd, and so on the Thursday after, he was Baptised by the Name of Edward, after his Father and Grandfather, the Ceremony being performed by the hands of [g] Arnold, [h] Priest-Cardinal titulo Sanctæ Priscæ, in the old Chappel, then of St Edward, in the said Castle of Windsor, his Godfathers being [i] Richard Bishop of Poictiers, John Bishop of Bath and Wells, William Bishop of Worcester, Lewis Earl of Eureux the Queens Brother, John Duke of Bretagne and Earl of Richmond, Emery of Valence Earl of Pembroke, and Hugh le Despencer, alias Spencer, a Great Man in those Days.

The News of his Birth was [k] an occasion of great Rejoycing over all England, and the

AN. DOM. 1312.

[a] Froiss. c. 3. fol. 2.
[b] Sandford p. 158.
[c] Ashmole p. 644.
[d] Claus. 6. Ed. 2. m. 22. Dorso. Lit. Dom. B. A.
[e] H. Knighton p. 2533. n. 10.
[f] Walsingh. hist. p. 77.
[g] Victorellus p. 839. ad hunc annum.
[h] Claus. 6. Ed. 2.
[i] Ibid. & Ashmole p. 644.
[k] Walsingh. ibid.

the

An. Dom. 1312. the only thing [l] able to cheer up the mind of his Royal Father from that exceſſive ſorrow, which the late Death of his Favourite Piers Gaveſton had flung upon it, and from that Day the King forgot by Degrees his former loſs, rejoycing in his preſent Happineſs. For [m] ſo pleaſing to his Father was the Birth of this Hopefull Prince, that on the Sixteenth of December following, he gave to John Launge, Valet to the Queen, and to Iſabel his Wife, and to the longer liver of them, for bringing to him ſo deſireable News, twenty four pounds per annum, to be paid out of the Farm of London.

[l] Speed p. 556.

[m] Pat. 6. Ed 2.

Within [n] few days after this Prince's Birth, the King his Father granted him the County of Cheſter, except the Mannors of Mecklesfield and Shotwike, to hold to him and his Heirs, Kings of England, for ever: And likewiſe the County of Flint and Rothelan, to hold, as before; except the Mannor of Overton, the Lands of Mailor, Seyſnoke, and the Caſtle and Mannor of Holt; after which he was thus ſtiled by the King, Edvardus Comes Ceſtriæ filius noſter Chariſſimus.

[n] Pat. ibid. Par. 2. m. 5. & Aſhmole ibid.

But leaving his Infancy, we will now proceed to his Youth, and the occurrences that attended his Ripening years; when we ſhall firſt have given ſome ſmall taſte of his Character, the fulneſs thereof being purpoſely remitted, till the end of his Life and this our Work; becauſe then it may better be conſider'd from the whole tenour of his Hiſtory. From his Birth he was carefully bred up in all things, that ſeem'd neceſſary or proper for Princes to excell in; ſo that, thrô the Vigour of his Parts, being rendred very apt to imbibe the beſt Principles, he made a ſpeedy and extraordinary improvement in all Noble Qualities: For he was of a very [o] pierceing Judgment, Sweet-nature and Good Diſcretion, and conſidering the many weighty affairs, that employ'd his whole Life, not only kind to the Muſes, but much befriended by them, as appears by thoſe Learned Writings, of which Pitſæus ſays he was the Author. When he was capable of receiving more ingenuous Education, a Man of Great Reading, Erudition and Honour, was provided from Oxford to be his Tutor, who thô commonly called [p] Richard Bury, from the place of his Birth, was indeed Son to one Sr Richard Aungervile Knight, but was afterwards by this his Royal Pupil, made Privy-ſeal, and [q] Treaſurer of England, then Dean of Wells, and laſtly, Lord Chancellour of England and Biſhop of Durham.

[o] Pitſæus de Illuſtr. Angl. ſcript. p. 517.

[p] Godwin Catal. Biſhops p. 661.

[q] Philipot's Catal. Chancellors and Treaſurers p. 32.

1322. II. In a Parliament holden at York in the Sixteenth of the King his Father, He was by him created [r] Prince of Wales, as ſome ſay; thô he is no where found to have uſed that Title: The occaſion perhaps being, becauſe he was not long after inveſted with a Greater. King Edward his Father [s] being often ſummon'd to the Court of France, to do homage for the Dukedom of Aquitain, and ſtill upon ſome account or other delaying, till the French King had ſiezed thereon, it was at length concluded that he ſhould give unto this Prince, his Son, the ſaid Dukedom, for which he doing Homage ſhould enjoy the Lands: Whereupon preparation was made for his paſſing into France. But before he went, being then at Langedon Abbey, near Dover, the King his Father, [t] on the ſecond of September, in the nineteenth year of his Reign, gave unto him, his Heirs and Succeſſours Kings of England, jure hæreditario in perpetuum, the Counties of Ponthieu and Mutterel, or Monſtroile, and on the tenth of the ſame Moneth, he being then at Dover, granted unto him the Dukedom of Aquitain, and all the Lands he had, or ought to have in the Kingdom of France, Habendum, as before: Two [u] days after which our new Duke took ſhipping at Dover, thence paſſed into France and performed his Homage to King Charles of France, his Uncle. In this his Journey, it was thought fit, that the Queen his Mother ſhould bear him company, in regard her Lands in that Kingdom had alſo been ſeized on: From which Sr Roger Mortimer, Lord of Wigmore, who having been clap'd into the Tower for Treaſon, had made his eſcape into France, as he was a moſt Politick and Vindicative Perſon, took occaſion to inſinuate himſelf into the Queens Favour, and by pretending to take her part againſt the Spencers (the great Favourites of her Husband, whom ſhe extreamly hated) involved her, before ſhe was aware, into a Rebellion, from which ſhe could never extricate her ſelf, till ſhe had ruin'd the King her Husband. It is no way pleaſant to me to relate the whole progreſs of that execrable Treaſon, nor how the King of France, being warned by King Edward, durſt not entertain any longer within his Dominions, the Queen his Siſter, with this her Son Edward; ſo that ſhe was forced to flee to ſtrangers for ſuccour; who, being won by her charming tears, adventur'd, thô but a Few, into this Kingdom; where quickly encreaſing their Numbers by a raſh defection of the Giddy multitude, they proceeded to the utmoſt Violations of Faith and Honour. In ſhort the old King at laſt was violently and illegally

[r] Speed p. 564. Holinſhead p. 869. Catal. Honor. p. 315. by Tho. Milles.

[s] Aſhmole p. 644.

[t] Pat. 19. Ed. 2. p. 1. m. 25. Aſhmole ibid.

[u] Clauſ. 19. Ed. 2. m. 28. Dorſo.

gally Depos'd and impriſon'd, thô with promiſe of ſecurity to himſelf, and the allowance of an Honourable Penſion during life: And our young Edward, his eldeſt Son (thô he could never be [x] perſwaded even to a Crown, till he was made to believe his Father had deſired it) being at laſt won by the ſight of his Father's ſeeming-voluntary Reſignation (which yet was extorted by fraudulent Promiſes and ſevere menaces) took upon him the Crown and Government of this Kingdom. AN. DOM. 1325.

[x] Walſing. hiſt. p. 105. Holinſhead p. 881.

III. Before this, while the Realm was yet unſetled, and the old King lay as then conceal'd in Wales, [y] He was by an Uſurped Authority in an Aſſembly [z] of Lords met at Hereford, (the Queen and S[r] Roger Mortimer being preſent) made Cuſtos, or Lord Warden of the Kingdom by a common Decree bearing date the 20 of October, whereupon all the Lords made him Homage and took an Oath of Allegiance to be Loyal to him, as Lord Warden of England: And on the twenty ſixth of November following, the Great Seal ſent from the King his Father, was deliver'd unto him at Martley.

[y] Sandford p. 158.
[z] Speed p. 564. Aſhmole p. 644.

Whereupon a [a] Parliament was ſummon'd to meet at Weſtminſter about the Feaſt of Epiphany, being called indeed in the old King's Name, but the Briefs of Citation were ſigned by the Prince, as Lord Warden of England. In this Parliament, thus called, by his own Authority, was the old King illegally depos'd; when they had extorted his own conſent to it, by fair and foul means, making ſo the young Prince believe, that his Father had freely and willingly reſign'd the Government; of which matter we ſhall ſpeak more largely when we come to relate the Murther of the ſaid King Edward the Second. 1326.

[a] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 106. S[r] Thc. de la More p. 8. l. 41.

But becauſe many of our Hiſtorians lay ſome imputation upon the Name of King Edward the Third, as if he was not wholly innocent of theſe Proceedings againſt his Father; we are to conſider the tenderneſs of his Age, he being not then fourteen years old; whereby he might very eaſily be impos'd upon by the treacherous ſubtlety of Mortimer and his Complices, who were always about him; alſo we ſhould caſt our eyes upon the ſeverity he ſhew'd this ſame Mortimer, when he underſtood the whole Treaſon; nor is it a ſmall ſign of his innocence, as to this point, that he himſelf lived long and Reigned happily, being bleſt with many Dutifull Children, and that no other circumſtance of his whole life can furniſh us with any thing, from whence we may ſuſpect, that he could be capable of ſo black and unnatural a Treaſon.

However [b] now the old King having reſign'd the Crown, great Preparations were made for this young Prince's Coronation, he being on the 25 of January, or the Converſion of S[t] Paul, and a [c] Sunday, proclaimed King of England by Order and Conſent of Parliament; and Proclamations [d] were iſſued out in his Name, declaring to the People, that his Father the late King had made a Voluntary and free Reſignation of his Regal Dignity to him, as being his Eldeſt Son. And a week after, by the direction of thoſe who were Contrivers of this Revolution, he was advis'd to Publiſh his Peace to the whole Kingdom, which was done in theſe words.

[b] Aſhmole p. 644
[c] Lit. Dom. D.
[d] Dugd. Warw. p. 165. a.

"Edward [e] by the grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland and Duke of "Aquitain to N. Sheriff of S. Greeting: Whereas the Lord Edward, our Father, late "King of England, by Common Council and Aſſent of the Prelates, Earls, Barons "and other Lords, as well as that of the whole Commonalty of the Realm, did volun- "tarily reſign the Government thereof; willing and granting, that We, as his Eldeſt Son "and Heir, ſhould take upon Us the Rule and Government of the Kingdom: And We "by the conſent and advice of the Prelates, Earls and Barons aforeſaid, yeelding herein to "our Fathers good Pleaſure, have taken upon Us the Government of the ſaid Realm, "and received, as the manner is, the Fealties and Homages of the ſaid Prelates and Ba- "rons: Deſiring therefore, that our Peace ſhould be inviolably kept, to the quiet and "benefit of our Liege People, We will and command; that preſently upon ſight of theſe "Preſents, you cauſe our Peace to be Proclaim'd thrô all your Bailywick, charging all "and every one in our Name, under pain and peril of Diſheriſon and loſs of life and "limb, not to preſume to infringe or violate our ſaid Peace, but every one to proſecute "his Actions and Cauſes without any outrage whatſoever, according to the laws and "cuſtoms of our Kingdom. For We are ready and ever ſhall be to exhibit and afford "to all and ſingular Plaintiffs, as well poor as rich, full Juſtice in our Courts according "to due Courſe of Law. Witneſs Our Self at Weſtminſter, 1mo Februarii, Annóque Regni noſtri Primo.

[e] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 105. Speed p. 565. Clauſ. 1. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 28.

On the [f] ſame day being Sunday, and the Vigil of the Purification, was the young King by the hands of his Cozen Henry Earl of Lancaſter, firſt girded with the Sword of Knighthood, at which time the King himſelf Knighted many others; among whom were three [g] Sons of the Lord Mortimer. That day he was Crowned at Weſtminſter by [f] Sandford p. 158. H. Knighton p. 2550. Pat. 1. Ed. 3. p. 2. n. 13.

[g] Sandford p. 109. Catal. Hono. p. 575. Dugd. 1. Vol. p. 145. & 147.

An. Dom. 1326. the hands of [h] Walter Reginald Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and thereupon, as an Earneſt of the many Advantages his People were to reap from his proſperous Reign, a General Pardon is Proclaim'd; which gave occaſion to Succeeding Kings to grant a General Pardon at their firſt Coming to the Crown, after the example of ſo great a Precedent.

[h] Aſhmole calls him William by miſtake. vid. Godw. Catal. Bps. &c.

I do not think it neceſſary to make any exact Narration of the Coronation of this Young Monarch; becauſe ſuch things are ſo well known in general; and others, who delight in matters of leſs moment, have not omitted a full Deſcription thereof: but I ſhall not forget to mention * one Medal, which, with many other of ſeveral devices, was upon the Coronation Day flung among the People; becauſe we may thence make a gueſs at the ingenuity of that Age: On the Pile was the Young Prince Crowned, laying a Scepter on a heap of Hearts, with this Motto --POPULO DAT JURA VOLENTI. And on the Reverſe, an Hand held forth, as it were ſaving a Crown falling from on high with theſe words --NON RAPIT SED RECIPIT.

* Penes Thom. Goldſmith ex Graii Hoſpitio.

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

IV. Now becauſe of the Kings Tender Age (for he was at that time but Fourteen Years, two Months and eighteen Days old) there were Twelve[i] Guardians appointed Him; to wit, Five Biſhops, Two Earls, and Five Barons; the Names of them were theſe, Walter Reginald Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Melton Archbiſhop of York, John Stratford Biſhop of Wincheſter, Thomas Cobham Biſhop of Worceſter, and Adam Orleton Biſhop of Hereford; the two Earls were Thomas of Brotherton Earl Marſhal, and Edmund of Woodſtock Earl of Kent, both the Kings Uncles: the Barons were John Lord Warren, Thomas Lord Wake, Henry Lord Percy, Oliver Lord Ingham and John Lord Ros. But [k] over and above all in eſpecial manner, by conſent of the Lords in Parliament, and the Twelve Guardians themſelves, the Thrice Noble Henry de Torto Collo, Earl of Lancaſter, Lincoln, Leiceſter and Derby, the Kings own Cozen was deputed to have the chief Care of the Kings Perſon; upon [l] Whom alſo and his Heirs, as Earls of Leiceſter, was ſettled at the ſame time the Stewardſhip of England: Nor let it be wondred, that this Earl the Kings Cozen ſhould be prefer'd to either of his Uncles in this matter; ſince, thô of great Nobility and Honour, they were both of leſs experience, being young men; nor was it ſo agreeable to Policy to give them the Greateſt Power, who were neareſt of Blood, as was afterwards ſufficiently experienced in the Protectorſhip of Richard Duke of Gloceſter, who made away his two Royal Nephews to obtain the Crown.

[i] H. Knighton p. 2556. Leland Collect. 1. vol. p. 685. Sr Rich. Baker.

[k] Walſing. hiſt. p. 109.

[l] Sandford p. 109.

All theſe were able Men and firm to the Kings Perſon and Intereſt, but little more than Shadows in this Station, Roger Lord Mortimer overtopping all by his great Power, derived from the influence he had with the Queen Mother. By his means it was, that the ſaid Queen had ſo [m] exceſſive a Dowry now aſſigned her; that the King her Son had ſcarce one Third part of his Crown Lands remaining to Himſelf; of which yet Mortimer made good uſe to advance his Friends and eſtabliſh his own Authority and Greatneſs: The impriſon'd King this while being allow'd but one hundred Marks by the Month, nor was he long permitted to enjoy that neither: But we ſhall refer the proſecution of this to its proper place.

[m] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 108. & hypod. p. 110.

V. And now immediately there ariſes matter to exerciſe the Genius of the Young King, whoſe Inclinations tend all to Glory, and we ſhall ſee, how eagerly He ſnatches at the firſt opportunity to obtain it. But here, before we enter upon the Scotch War, it will not be amiſs to ſet down a brief Account of the State of Scotland at that time. In the Year of our Lord [n] 1285. King Alexander the Third, dying ſuddenly without Iſſue, there aroſe ſeveral conſiderable Perſons, who being ſome way allied to the Royal Family, claim'd a Right to the Crown of that Kingdom. But all their Pretences were ſwallowed up in thoſe of the Lord John Baliol and of the Lord Robert Bruce, who had by far the Clearer Title. King Edward the Firſt of England, Grandfather to our Edward, by right of Superiority, which he claimed, became Umpire of the Cauſe, and he adjudged the Realm of Scotland to the Lord John Baliol, not only becauſe his Title was the beſt, he claiming in Right of his Wife Dornagill, eldeſt Daughter to the Lady Margaret, eldeſt Daughter to David Earl of Huntington, younger Brother to William King of Scots and Great Uncle to Alexander the Third; but alſo becauſe he offer'd to hold the Crown of Scotland of King Edward, as Superior Lord, which Robert Bruce abſolutely refuſed to do.

[n] Buchan. p. 240. ſee Hect. Boet. f. 291. An. Dom. 1286.

But the Scots were ſo diſguſted at Baliol for this his abjectneſs of mind; that they began to rebell againſt him and threatned to chooſe Robert Bruce for their King; whereby he being terrifi'd, renounced his Allegiance to Edward the Firſt and defi'd him: but he was too weak to make good his Defiance; both he and his ſon Edward Baliol, and ſhortly after the Lord Robert Bruce, being ſeized on, were put in cuſtody, and the Kingdom of Scotland lapſed to King Edwards hands.

But

But not long after this, the Scots being miraculouſly excited by the extraordinary courage of the famous William Wallace, and at laſt Robert Bruce [o] Earl of Carrick eſcaping from London, he was made King: thô he prov'd unable to do any great feat, but rather ſculked about, ſeeking advantages till the Days of King Edward the Second, a Prince of far leſs Fortune and Conduct in the War, than his Father Long-ſhanks. Againſt him he obtained the Memorable Battle at Bannocksborn near Striveling, where periſhed no leſs than 50000 Engliſh (if Hector Boetius may be credited) among whom fell [q] 42 Lords and Barons, and 67 Knights and Banerets, beſides 22 Great men, whom the Scots took priſoners. Upon which ſucceſs, as the Engliſh of the Borders were without meaſure dejected, ſo the Scots were inflamed with pride and diſdain; as may appear from this Rhyme (which among others) was ſang about their ſtreets,

Maidens of England, ſore may you mourn;
For your Lemans, ye have loſt at Bannocksborn,
With Heve a low!
What ho! weneth the King of England
So ſoon to have won all Scotland,
With a Rumby low.

AN. DOM. 1327. An. Regni I.

[o] Dugd. 1. Vol. p. 451.

[q] Fabian p. 167

From this time Scotland gather'd ſtrength and reputation, and eaſily obtain'd a Peace with England on very good Terms: King Robert hereby was more firmly ſettled in his Throne, being a Father of one Son, named David, a Prince of great hope, and of two Daughters, the Lady Margaret wife to the Lord Walter Stuart, and by him Mother to the young Lord Robert Stuart, a perſon of rare endowments and expectation; beſides that, the other Lady, her younger Siſter, had then or ſhortly after a Son too by her Husband, the Earl of Southerland. As for the former King, John Baliol, he liv'd at this time a retired life in France, having only two Sons, the Lord Edward and Henry, who as yet had no Iſſue, and therefore their Father had on certain conſiderations reſigned and quitted and given over to King Robert his Right and Title to the Crown of Scotland; ſo that Robert was now quit of all fear on that part, and otherwiſe very ſtrong in the affections of his People, who were then a great and flouriſhing Nation: And this was the ſtate of Scotland, when King Edward the Third of England came to the Crown: wherefore encouraged with their former ſucceſs, and deſpiſing King Edwards Youth, [r] on the very night of that day, whereon King Edward was Crowned, the Scots had intended to take the Caſtle of Norham, [ſ] between the Marches of England and Scotland, by ſurprize, and ſo well they managed their deſign, that about [t] ſixteen of them had already mounted the Walls: but the Captain S[r] Robert Manners being warned of the Matter before-hand, by one of his Garriſon, who was a Scotchman, had ſo well provided to receive them, that of thoſe, who had mounted, he took five or ſix, and put the reſt to the ſword; their Companions below upon this diſappointment retiring. This ſeem'd a good Omen of King Edward's future Victories over the Scots by occaſion of the Lord Edward Baliol, who was himſelf a Scotchman. Preſently after King Robert Bruce, ſuppoſing it now a very fit ſeaſon to take ſome advantage againſt his old Enemies the Engliſh, during this their Kings Minority, ſends about [u] Eaſter a ſhort and brisk Defiance to King Edward and all his Realm, "telling them that he would ſhortly with his "Power invade the Realm of England with Fire and Sword, and there do, as he had done "before in his Fathers Reign at the Battle of Bannocksborn near Striveling (or Ster-"ling) where the Engliſh received that mighty Overthrow we ſpake of, by reaſon of thoſe [x] Pits, into which the Scots had intrapt them unawares. I muſt not omit, that the Scotch Writers attribute the occaſion of this Defiance to ſome fraud or other, wherewith the Engliſh had lately endeavour'd to enſnare them by foul Colluſion of their Ambaſſadours; but neither can it be imagin'd, what neceſſity the King of England ſhould have, either by fraud or force to attempt to injure the King of Scots, (with whom he ſtood on no ill Terms) before his own Affairs were in any poſture of Settlement; nor do any of their own Hiſtorians aſſign, what this fraud or injury was; nor indeed was ever the Engliſh Nation noted ſo much for fineneſs or ſubtlety, as for down-right Honeſty and blunt valour. Nor is the conſideration of King Robert's Age and ſickneſs ſufficient to conclude; that of neceſſity there muſt be ſome great Cauſe given, that could provoke ſo decrepit a Man to begin a War, toward the End of his Life: ſince, thô his Perſon was weak, his Mind was ſtrong and vigorous, and Scotland was never in better caſe, than at that time: and the Generals he intended to employ, were Barons of great Fidelity, Conduct and Reſolution; and he might reaſonably hope

[r] Rich. Southwell.

[ſ] Grafton p. 173.

[t] Holinſhead Hiſt. Scot. p. 225

[u] Froiſ. c. 15. Grafton p. 218.

[x] Sr Tho. de la More Ed. 2. p. 2. Holingſhead hiſt. Scotl. p. 217. Hector and Buchan.

to

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

to have (at leaſt) as much advantage over this Young King, as he had over his Father, in his Full Age, when attended with a moſt flouriſhing Army. Nor is any great Captain, thô never ſo ſatiate with Lawrels, ſo unambitious after all, but that in his weakeſt condition, he would lay hold on any occaſion of ſo probable ſucceſs againſt a profeſſed Enemy. 'Tis ſweet to an old Warrior to end his days among Triumphs and Victories. This is certain, King Edward the Third neither did, nor could ſend any Ambaſſadors to him before his Coronation: yet even then we ſhew'd before, that the Scots began to break the Peace by attempting to ſurprize a Caſtle, thô no leſs than [y] Nine years were to come of the laſt Thirteen years Truce, ſtruck up between this Kings Father, and King Robert of Scotland, four years before. And beſides we find, that there had been, ſince the Coronation of this Young King, an Agreement for a further Treaty of Peace (to be held in the Marches) on the Sunday next before Aſcenſion Day then enſuing. But, as I ſaid before, King Robert imagining to make an eaſie prey of the young Monarch, neither much valued the old Truce, not yet ended, nor the new Agreement, not yet perfected, but reſolves upon War. Hereupon ſoon after he invades the North Borders, with an [z] Army of Twenty five thouſand Men, [a] all Horſe, that they might do miſchief more ſpeedily, and retire with more expedition, if by any neceſſity they ſhould be ſo obliged.

[y] Holinſhead hiſt. Scot. p. 224. Aſhmole p. 645. ex Clauſ. 1. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 2. Dorſ.

[z] Hector p. 307 b. n. 60.

[a] Buchan. p. 273

VI. The mean while King Edward conceives an high indignation at this unprovoked Defiance, and to ſecure himſelf for the future from the like Contempt, immediately with all his Power addreſſes himſelf to defend his Reputation. And firſt he [b] ſends his Uncle Thomas of Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk and Marſhal of England, with a choice number of Soldiers to Newcaſtle upon Tine, who there made his Muſters (as he was appointed) on the [c] Monday next before the Aſcenſion; in like manner the Lord Robert Hufford and the Lord John Moubray, were commanded away to the Reinforcement of the Lord Anthony Lucy of Cockermouth, then [d] Governour of the Caſtle and Town of Carlile. At the ſame time the King iſſued out his General ſummons to his own People, and moreover by kind letters invited his noble Friend, John Lord of Beaumont in Heinalt, and brother to William Earl of Heinalt, (by whoſe aid chiefly the Queen had depoſed her Husband, and who was but newly return'd home again) to come over to his aſſiſtance about the time of the Aſcenſion. Sr John Lord Beaumont hereupon came over to the King to the City of York (the place appointed for the general Rendezvous, thô Newcaſtle alſo was pitch'd upon for the aſſembly of other Forces a week before) within three days of Whitſuntide, accompanied with more than fourty Lords and Knights of Heinalt, Flanders and Bohemia, with other Knights from Cambray and Artois, to the number of Five hundred Men of Arms, all well Arm'd and gallantly Mounted. Soon after Whitſuntide follow'd (for the ſake of this John of Heinalt) the Lord William Son to the Duke of Juliers (or Gulick) and Sr Henry Thyrry, afterwards Earl of Lewis, and with them another goodly Company, all expecting to purchaſe much honour under this hopefull Young King, and no leſs profit, as well from his Royal bounty, as from the Spoil of the Field, which they accounted their own. The whole number of the Strangers was about [e] two Thouſand Men of Arms; beſides the great Numbers of Engliſh, that came in as Voluntiers, above the appointed Muſters, ſuch hopes had they conceived of their Prince's Conduct and Fortune.

[b] Froiſ. c. 17.

[c] Aſhmole p. 645.

[d] Dugd. Baron. 1 Vol. 565. a.

[e] H. Knighton p. 2551.

[f] Froiſ. c. 16. Grafton p. 219.

The King [f] aſſigned the Strangers convenient lodgings in the Suburbs of York, but to Sr John himſelf and his Servants he allotted an Abby of White Monks in the ſaid City, He himſelf and the Queen his Mother, being lodged in the ſtately Building, called the Fryers, where each of them kept houſe apart.

[g] Froiſ. ibid.

This [g] S John of Heinalt was one of the moſt Gallant Knights in the World, and he had firſt undertaken to defend the Queen and her Son againſt the Perſecutions of the two Spencers, even when her own Brother, the King of France, had deſerted her quarrel: ſo that he was very dear to the young King and his Mother, and they reſolv'd to entertain him in moſt Royal Manner.

Wherefore the King held all along a Great Court to do theſe Strangers Honour, and there was every where much Plenty of Proviſion, Good and Cheap, for the City and Country were Rich and flouriſh'd with abundance. For full ſix weeks did the King lie there with more than 60000 men, yet all that while the price of Proviſion was nothing enhanced, but every thing was ſold as reaſonable, as before the Army came thither. There was plenty of Rheniſh, Gaſcoign and Anjovan Wines, with Pullen and other Proviſion at very ordinary Rates, and Hay, Oats and other neceſſaries for Horſes were daily brought to the Strangers lodgings, ſo that they were all extreamly ſatisfied with their entertainment.

But

AN. DOM. 1327. An. Regni I.

But yet even this their Prosperity had like to have proved more fatal unto them then a Rout in Battel might have done: For [h] presuming much hereby on the King's favour, they carried themselves too Magisterially toward his Subjects, whence arose such Contention, as brought forth many sad effects, and was not at last stinted without much bloodshed on both sides.

[h] Knighton p. 2551.

On Trinity [i] Sunday, the King for the sake of these Lords Strangers held a Solemn and Magnificent Feast at the Fryers aforesaid, himself being attended with 500 of his Knights (to which he then added 15 more) and the Queen, his Mother, having more than threescore Fair Ladies, of the greatest Nobility and Beauty in England, about her Person, to pleasure the young Lord of Beaumont and his Company. There was that day a most Splendid Entertainment and a truly Royal shew of whatsoever was choice and excellent. And now the Ladies themselves, with many Noble Virgins, were meditating the various Measures their skilfull Feet were to make, the pleasant Aires their sweet Voices should warble, and those soft Divisions their tender Fingers should strike on the yielding strings; when suddenly, as soon as ever the Feast was ended, a strange and hideous noise confounded the Minds of the whole Court. For the Servants and Pages of these Foreign Auxiliaries, had by their [k] insolence so exasperated the minds of some English Archers, who lodged among them in the Suburbs, that immediately a great Fray began among them, which continually rose higher, new abettors successively flowing in on each side; till near 3000 of the Archers being gather'd together, many of the poor Heinalders were slain, and the rest betaking themselves to flight, were fain to enter their lodgings and there to fortifie them in the best manner they could, against the Fury of their enemies. Most part of the Knights their Commanders were then at Court, but on the first noise of the Fray, they hasted to their lodgings to defend themselves and their People. Some part of the City of York in the Hurlyburly was fired, many of the Heinalders slain, and more hurt, nor less on the English side, than [l] 80 Archers, most of them Lincolnshire men, fell that day, who were all buried in St Clement's Churchyard in Fosegate. But at last by the Authority of the King, with the earnest endeavours of the Queen Mother, who loved the Heinalders dearly, and by the ready assistance of the Great Men, who charitably took the Strangers parts, the Archers thirst of blood was slaked, and the quarrel ceased for that time. But that Night the Strangers who had suffer'd most, not so [m] much thinking of sleep, as revenge, being now headed by Commanders, rose privately, and joyning all together, set suddenly upon the Archers of Lincolnshire and Northampton (for the Men of each County were Marshall'd and lodged together by themselves) where they slew about 300 of them. Nor in the Morning had they paid cheaply for that desperate action (for more than [n] 6000 Archers had combined together to burn or kill them every man in their lodgings, or without, by Night or by Day, when ever they should obtain an Opportunity) But that the King to secure the Strangers from their Fury, had set strong Guards about them, displacing the Archers from their former Quarters, they themselves hardly ever daring to sleep without good Watch, their Horses ready saddled, and their Arms always near at hand, or upon their Backs: so well they knew it behoved them to look to themselves after such a Provocation of the Common Soldiers of England.

[i] Froiss. c. 16. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. Cantabr. c. 213.

[k] Knighton p. 2551.

[l] Stow p. 228. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. ibid.

[m] Knighton p. 2551.

[n] Froiss. c. 16. fol. 7, 8.

Now had King [o] Edward lain at York with all this Great Army in and about the City, for the space of three Weeks, and when, in about three Weeks more after this sedition, no final agreement could be made between the King's Council and the Scotch Ambassadors, [p] who came thither after Trinity Sunday to treat of a Peace; the Marshals of the Host by the King's Command Proclaimed thrô all the Army, that by the next Week every Man should be ready to March against the Enemy: and that such, to whom the Care was left, should provide Carts and Wagons for Carriages, and Tents and Pavilions to lie in the field, with all other matters, necessary for the King's journey toward Scotland. All things therefore being by the said time provided accordingly, the King and all his Barons began their March from the City of York in good Order, and gallantly armed with Trumpets sounding, and Banners waving in the wind. In this Expedition (besides those at Newcastle and Carlile, already sent thither to defend the Frontiers) we have made shift to recover the Names of these Worthies, [q] Edmund of Woodstock Earl of Kent, the King's Uncle, John [r] Bohune Earl of Hereford and Essex, and Constable of England, Roger [s] Mortimer Lord of Wigmore, William [t] Lord Montagu, Robert [u] Lord Morley, John [x] Lord Warren Earl of Surrey, John Lord Ros, younger Brother to William Lord Ros of Hamlake in Yorkshire, with his other Brother Thomas Ros, the Lord William Clinton, afterwards Earl of Huntington, the Lord Roger le Strange and Sr Ebulo le Strange, his Kinsman, the Lord Hugh Audeley junior

[o] Froiss. c. 16 & 17.

[p] Caxton.

[q] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 93.

[r] Id. 1 Vol. p. 184.

[s] Id. ibid. p. 145.

[t] Id. p. 633.

[u] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 26.

[x] Id. 1 Vol. p. 81.

quem vid. ad singula hæc nomina.

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

junior, and Sr James Audeley, his younger Brother, Thomas Lord Braoſe, the Lord Fulk Fitz-Warine, the Lord John St Philibert, the Lord Peter de Malolacu, or Mauley, the Lord Ralph Stafford, the Lord Ralph Baſſet of Drayton, the Lord Thomas Haſtang, the Lord Robert Pierpoint, the Lord Thomas Furnival, the Lord Robert Fitz-Walter, Sr Walter Beauchamp of Alceſter in Warwickſhire, with his Brother William Beauchamp, Sr Nicolas Cantilupe and many other Barons of England.

[y] Froiſ. c. 17. S^r [y] John of Heinalt and all the Lords Strangers with their troops, both in their March and when they took up their Lodgings, were always placed immediately next the King's own Guards, as well to ſecure them from the Archers, who ſtill breathed after Revenge, as for their greater Honour, and to let the whole Army know, that whoever ſought their damage, would at the ſame time highly treſpaſs upon the King himſelf.

The firſt Night the Hoſt reached ſixteen mile onward of their way, and there the King tarried two Days and three Nights, partly to expect, till the whole Army was come up, but chiefly to examine by himſelf and his Officers, whether any thing neceſſary for ſuch an Expedition was wanting, before they ſhould be brought to a Pinch. Early on the fourth day they began their March toward Durham, which was diſtant in all from York about fourty eight or fifty Miles, but from Topcliffe, whereabout they had lodged, little more than Thirty. The ſecond Night after they reach'd the City of Durham, encamping thereabout, till further notice of the Enemy: of whom they had heard no News, as yet.

The King had before this, as we remembred, to hinder their Progreſs in the Borders, ſent the Earl of Norfolk, Marſhal of England, to Newcaſtle, and the Lords Hufford and Mowbray to Carlile, with conſiderable Forces. They for their part ſlack'd nothing of their Duty, for they were Perſons of great Worth and Honour: But the ſubtle Scot, e're the King could reach Newcaſtle, which was but about [z] twelve or fourteen Miles beyond Durham, had paſs'd the River of Tine ſo privately, that they were neither perciev'd by the Garriſons of New-caſtle, nor Carlile; and ſo for a while they waſted and robb'd the Country wherever they came, and yet could never be overtaken or found by thoſe who ſought to encounter them; but only [a] once at Darlington, where being met by a diſorder'd number of the Country Militia, who came to oppoſe them, they ſoon overcame them, putting many to the ſword and the reſt to flight. Their King Robert himſelf was not there at that time, thô he was the moſt Valiant and moſt Succeſsfull Prince, that had reign'd in Scotland of many years: For being now oppreſſed with age and ſickneſs, he was forced to ſend in his ſtead two the moſt Famous and Expert of his Captains, the Lord Thomas Randulph, Earl of Murray, and the Lord James Douglas, the latter greatly in thoſe days Renowned for Hardineſs above all the Scotchmen, as the former was for Wiſdom and Conduct. Their Forces were [b] twenty or twenty five thouſand Men, all nimble and expedite for ſuddain Invaſion or quick Retreat; for they were all mounted, [c] the Better Sort on good ſtrong Courſers, and the Common Soldiers on little, but approved Hackneys and Geldings. They brought with them no Carts nor Wagons, becauſe of the inequality of the Mountainous Countries, thrô which they ſhould paſs: nor had they with them much purveyance of Bread or Wine; for in thoſe days the Scots were ſo abſtemious and patient in time of War, that for a good while they could endure with fleſh half-boiled, and drink out of the Rivers: Nor yet had they any Pans or Cauldrons to dreſs their meat in; for what Beaſts they found (as they always did good ſtore in thoſe Northern parts) they would ſeeth them in their own skins, ſtretch'd out bellying on ſtakes, in the manner of Cauldrons: And having thus ſod their meat, they would take a little Plate of Metal, which they us'd to truſs ſomewhere in, or under their ſaddles, and laying it on the fire, take forth ſome Oatmeal (which they carried in little bags behind them for that purpoſe) and having kneaded and temper'd it with water, ſpread that thereon: This, being thus baked, they us'd for Bread, to comfort and ſtrengthen their ſtomachs a little, when they eat fleſh.

[z] Ferrar. in Orrhea.

[a] Holinſhead Hiſt. Scotl. p. 225

[b] Hector & Buchan.

[c] Froiſ. c. 17 f. 8.

That ſuch hard Farers ſhould prove good Souldiers, is no wonder, and that ſometimes they ſhould be able to baffle a great Army, more encombred than themſelves, may very lightly be granted. And now had the Engliſh been ſeveral days in thoſe Parts, before they had any knowledge where their Enemies were, thô they dayly ſaw the effects of their cruelty, and met with many of the Borderers, who fled before them to avoid it. But at laſt they ſaw great ſmokes and fires about the Country, which plainly enough declared where they were, and what was their Employment.

[d] Froiſ. c. 18. fol. 8.

Immediately hereupon [d] the Alarum is given and a March ſounded, every Man being com-commanded to diſlodge, and in the Order before appointed, to follow the Marſhals Battail. There were three great Battalions on Foot, and to each Battail two Wings of 500 Men of Arms, Knights and Eſquires; and 20000 others, well-arm'd and provided, the one half on little Hackneys, and the other ranged on Foot, who fought for Wages, to be paid by thoſe Towns, Cities and Corporations, that ſent them to the Kings Service. The Scotch Writers make the whole number of the Engliſh Forces to be more than an Hundred Thouſand Men effective; and Froiſard himſelf, beſides thoſe three Battails mention'd, ſpeaks of 24000 Archers, (if the figures are not miſtaken) and Graſton and Speed reckon up 30000 Archers in All: Thô I believe, if there were ſuch a Number, they were diſtributed proportionably among the foreſaid Battalions, according to the Uſual Method of the Captains of thoſe days, and that there was no ſuch great Battail of Archers diſtinct from all the reſt: And this Opinion agrees better with our Hiſtorians and Froiſard's own Account of the Number in another place, where he reckons the Whole, but to ſomething more than [e] 60000 Men of War: Thô [f] others (whoſe Authority I ſhall not here examin) make them no more than 54000 Men; which were thus diſpoſed, in the Main Battail with the King were two and twenty Thouſand, that is, 10000 Foot, 4000 Men of Arms, and 8000 Archers and Dragoons on Horſeback; in the other two Battails, were to each 10000 Foot, 1000 Men of Arms, (500 on each Wing) and 3000 others on Horſeback, and the Marſhals Battail conſiſting of 4000 Horſe, Men of Arms and Others well mounted, rod on before the Army.

AN. DOM. 1327. An. Regni I.

[e] Froiſ. c. 16 fol 7. b.

[f] R. Burtons Engl. Monarchs p. 104.

In this Order they marched after the [g] Scots, as the ſmoak directed them all that day, till almoſt night; when by good Advice they took up their lodging in a Wood by the ſide of a little River, as well to refreſh themſelves, as to give time for their Carriages to come up, which drove after them more heavily. By this time had the Scots waſted and burnt and plundered all before them, within five Miles of the Engliſh Army, but as yet they could by no means be overtaken. The next morning they marched again with Banner diſplai'd, every one in his Order as before, thrô mountains and Valleys all day long without any Diſorder; and yet they overtook not the Enemy, who ſped on before, leaving nothing but ruine and deſolation behind. The Country was ſo full of Mariſhes and wild Deſerts, Mountains and Dales, that the Engliſh could by no means equal the Pace of the Scots, who were better us'd to that kind of making War, and were not ſo encumbred with Carriages, and had beſide a great ſtart before them. Moreover the King and his Council conſidering the ſubtlety of the Enemy, and that the Country favour'd any deſign of Ambuſcade, commanded on pain of death, that none ſhould ride before the Marſhals Banners: For otherwiſe many would have follow'd upon the ſpur, to detain the Scots by light Skirmiſhes, till the Main Body of the Army might reach them. Toward the declining of the day therefore, the Men of Arms with their Horſes, and all the horſes of Carriage, but eſpecially the Foot grew ſo weary, the Men with the weight of their Armour, and all in general with the length of their March; that they could by no means endure any further Travail the remainder of that day.

[g] Froiſ. c. 18. fol. 8.

The King and his Lords well conſider'd the Fatigues of the Army; for they themſelves were almoſt tir'd out of all patience at this unaccuſtomed way of Chaſing. They plainly ſaw their labour in purſuit was all in vain, and they aſſur'd themſelves, that if the Enemy did ſtay for them, it would be in a place which ſhould make to their own advantage. Hereupon at the Kings Command, the Marſhals of the Hoſt proclaim'd, that there they ſhould reſt for that night, where now they were, which was in a Wood alſo, and by a river ſide. The King was lodged in a little poor Abby hard by, whither the chief of his Council came to him, to advize what was beſt to be done in this exigence. Their Conſiderations were theſe, "That 'twas not poſſible, while things continued thus, to overtake the Enemy; that if they could, 'twas too hazardous to engage them thereabouts, ſince they were by the uſe of their own Country rendred more expert and accuſtomed to ſuch mountainous and hilly Places: That they could not go far into the Land without dangerous oppoſition; and that they had no way of returning, but over the river Tyne: The Reſult therefore was, That it was beſt to March directly that way, either to oblige the Scots to come after them (if they deſired to preſerve their own Country) or at leaſt to make full Amends by putting Scotland to the ſame ſufferance of Fire and Sword. It was alſo here ordain'd, That all their leſs neceſſary Carriages ſhould be left behind them there in the wood, with all their looſe Harneſs, and moſt of their Proviſion, but what was abſolutely neceſſary for a few Days: for they expected within a day or two to have Battle, whatever

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

"might happen, and they resolved to have it, if they might, despair and vexation "making them desirous to win or loose all at once. This Resolution was published to the Army before supper, every Man being warned to rise from sleep at the first sound of the Trumpet, at the second, to Arm without delay; and at the third, to take horse in his due place under his Colours.

About midnight they arose, and by break of day, they were all ready ranged in Battail; so vigorous in their Resolution, that with a nimble pace (thô not without a world of difficulty) they travail'd that Day twenty four, or as [h] One saies twenty eight Miles; many being forced to lag behind, thrô wearines, others falling among the Marishes and dangerous places, thrô which the Army was forced to go, were held there, till they could get out of themselves, or else they were like to be lost. For all that could, hasted forward with all speed, not caring for Father, Brother, or Friend, because hearing great noise of Shouting from the main Host, they imagin'd the Armies were joyning, and so clapping on their Helmets, rode forth with Spear and Shield, as fast as they might toward the First Battail, so great was their desire to fight; but when with much labour they were come, they found themselves deceived, for all the Noise was made only at the raising of Stags, Harts, and Hinds, that were first seen by those in the Front. Thus the King rode that day, till toward the evening he came to the same part of the river Tyne, where the Scots had passed upon their Invasion, and where, it was thought, they must needs repass upon their Return. And on that side the [i] Tyne, they found it more commodious to give or receive Battle upon occasion, as being more plain and open Ground, and so fitter for a Champaign. Wherefore to be beforehand with the Enemy, or at least by entring Scotland, to draw them back out of England, King Edward now resolv'd to pass the Tine. But here all the Troubles of the English were not ended: For that River is full of great, round and slippery Stones, which much offended the Horse in their passage over: However (thô with much ado) they had all got over by Sun set, but the Foot could not pass that Night, nor were they all there in any good time, many not appearing till the Morning, and some few never after seen. As for those that had passed with the King and the Lords, 'twas but here and there, that any of them had a Hatchet to cut down Wood; so that they could neither make Stakes to fasten their Horses too, nor Arbours to shrowd themselves withall (their Tents being left behind among the Carriages) nor had they, or their horses any great matter to eat, either the day past, or the night now coming on; except that every Man brought a loaf or so, behind him, which yet was almost spoil'd with dust and the sweat of their Horses. Drink they had little or none, but what the River afforded them, and that not so clear as it should be, having been disturbed with the passage of so many over it: Only some of the better Sort had their bottles of Wine, or other good liquors with them. Nor had they any thing to give them light, except a few Torches, which the Lords Servants had brought with them. As for their Tents and Pavilions, they, as we said before, were most of them left among the Baggage. Wherefore they were fain to lie on the bare ground in their Armour, with their Horses ready sadled in their hands. The next Morning came slowly on, to men in their Condition, but upon the appearance of Day, they put on vigorous hopes, that they should find some better means of Refreshment.

[h] Buchan. p. 275

[i] Buchan. p. 274.

Had it rain'd in the Night, they must have endured much more misery; but however in the Morning it rain'd so plentifully, that before noon the River was risen too high to admit of any repassing. Which, thô bad to them, who were already over, proved better for the Foot, who otherwise must have had a difficult Passage among the stones in so strong a Current. It was a great terror to all, that were of either side the River, to see and hear, how the Stream, which is naturally violent, (being rendred more impetuous by the large accession of Rain) ran swooping down, hurrying along in its course huge Flints, and other stones, precipitantly rowling down with an hideous noise and roaring.

The valourous Young King was extreamly perplex'd at all these casual impediments; but bold and full of hope, (as he was) he assured himself, that the Scots must needs shortly return that way: Thereabout therefore he resolv'd to remain, till he might understand what further course was taken by his Enemies. They yet knew of no other Town or Place near, that might afford them shelter or comfort, and far they could not travel, both They and their Horses being in such evil case. So for one day and night more both They and their Beasts were in a manner fain to fast, but for some little bread for themselves, and a few leaves of trees for their horses; but now they had time to cut down boughs with their swords for Stakes to tie their Horses too, and to make little ſheds for themſelves. They knew not yet whereabouts they were, nor how far off from any Town, becauſe they had left the beaten Roads, when firſt they began to follow the Scots, and had not ſince return'd into them. But about Noon the next day, they found ſome poor People, who told them that they were about twenty [k] ſix Miles from Newcaſtle, and twenty two from Carlile, and that no conſiderable Town was nearer, to furniſh them with any thing they wanted. The King and his Council having heard this good News, ſent immediately Horſes and Sumpters to both Towns, and Proclamation therewith, that whoever would bring Bread, Wine, or other Victuals with Fodder and Litter for Horſes, ſhould receive abundant ſatisfaction with thanks of the King. For it had been openly declared, that for all this the King would not ſtir a foot, till he heard what was become of his Enemies. Some Proviſion was brought next day by Noon (but that not overmuch) by the Kings ſutlers; many alſo of the Country People thereabout came with little Nags, laden with Bread in Panniers, and ſmall Perry Wine, with other Victuals to ſell in the Army; which pretty well refreſhed them for a time.

tle

AN. DOM. 1327. AN. Regni I.

[k] Holinſhead hiſt. Scotl. p. 225.

Thus they continued the ſpace of five or ſix days in all, expecting ever the Return of the Scots, who had fortifi'd themſelves the mean while upon a Hill, waiting for them alſo; but neither party knew where the other was. The Engliſh were but very indifferently purvey'd, for when the Country came in to them with Proviſion, [l] a loaf of Bread, worth but a penny, was ſold for ſixpence, and a gallon of Wine, which was worth but ſixpence, as money then went, was ſold for two ſhillings; and yet there was ſuch ſcarcity, that they were ready to fight with one another for what they had. And beſides all this, for near a week together, it hardly ever ceaſed raining; ſo that much hurt was done to their Beaſts, their girts being broken, their backs ſore, and their feet unſhod; againſt which there was no remedy in that place. All theſe things conſider'd, the King began to change his mind, and at laſt reſolved to part thence, leaving the more barren Country of Northumberland, and repaſſing the River about ſeven Miles lower, where the paſſage might be more eaſie, to re-enter the Biſhoprick of Durham. It was alſo proclaim'd thrô the Hoſt, that whoever could bring the King certain knowledge where the Scots were encamped (for that they were not then ſtirring abroad, was known) ſhould be rewarded with an hundred pounds per annum for him and his heirs for ever, and himſelf receive the honour of Knighthood from the Kings own hands. Upon this encouragement about fifteen or ſixteen Knights and Eſquires (theſe for the Money alone, thoſe for the Title and the Money too) undertook the Adventure, and immediately paſſed the River in great danger, and rode abroad all ſeverally to ſeek their Fortune. The next Morning the King and all the Horſe with him diſlodg'd and rode on fair and ſoftly (the Foot on the other ſide the River keeping pace with them) till they came to a place more ſhallow and eaſie, and there they ventur'd to repaſs the Tyne, which notwithſtanding gave them much trouble; for many were fain to ſwim (the water was ſtill ſo deep with the late fall of ſo much rain) and ſome few were drowned. Thus was this Council of the Engliſh ſadly diſappointed; otherwiſe it could not but have proved fatal to the Scots, who had then no other Forces in readineſs at home, ſufficient to receive ſo well formed an Army; and thoſe in England, if they had been forced to a Battel, muſt in all probability have paid dearly for their Robberies. But God, in Mercy to the Scots, or in Judgement to the Engliſh for their late Rebellion, or with deſign by Adverſity to form our young Edward for a perfect Captain, or leſt Robert Bruce, their only Fortunate King, ſhould juſt before his Death be deprived of that Name, order'd, that all this Council and Courage of the Kings ſhould thus be fruſtrate.

[l] Froiſ. ibid.

Now when the Horſe had all paſſed the River, they took up their Quarters in the Neighbouring Meadows, for there was good Paſturage and fruitfull Fields about a little Village: But the Village it ſelf had felt the fury of the Scots, being by them burnt down to the ground, as they paſſed that way. The next day they marched thence over Hills and Dales, till Noon; at which time they found ſeveral Villages newly burnt to the ground by the Scots, about which there lay a good Champaigne Country with Corn fields and Meadows, which the Enemy had not deſtroy'd for their own ſakes chiefly, leſt they ſhould loſe the benefit thereof upon their Return. There therefore they reſolv'd to ſtay that Night, for their Horſes wanted refreſhment ſtill, they had been ſo haraſſed. But the next day and part of the day following they rode on, ſtill ignorant where the Scots were, till at laſt there came up haſtily an Eſquire of Yorkſhire, named [m] Thomas Rokeby, riding toward the King, who doing his Obeiſance, ſaid theſe Words, "May it pleaſe your Majeſty, I have now brought certain tidings "of

[m] Holinſhead hiſt. Scotl. p. 225

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

" of the Scots your Enemies: They are not above [n] three Miles from hence, lodged ſtrongly " on a great Hill in Weredale, beyond the River Were, where they have been theſe Eight " days, expecting our coming. Dread S[r], what I ſay, I'll maintain for Truth, for I ventur'd " ſo near to take the better view of them, that falling into their hands, I was carried be- " fore their Leaders; where being queſtion'd, I declared how deſirous your Majeſty has " been all along to find them out; but when I mention'd the Eſtate your Majeſty had pro- " miſed, beſide the Honour of Knighthood, as a Reward to him that ſhould firſt bring ti- " dings of them to your Majeſty, the Lords that command their Army, having made me " promiſe to diſcover, where they were to your Majeſty, freely quitted me my Ranſome, " and gave me full Liberty. For they ſaid they were every whit as deſirous to fight with " you, and if it pleaſe your Majeſty, I ſhall ſhew you the Faces of them preſently.

[n] *Hector p.*308. & Froiſ. ibid.

The King having received this exact account, immediately aſſign'd unto the Eſquire an hundred pound ſterling for him and his heirs in perpetuum, and therewith Knighted him with his own Sword before the whole Army. And this S[r] Thomas Rokeby by his Valiant and Noble carriage in time following, ſhew'd how well he deſerved this good Fortune; as will appear in the Proceſs of this Hiſtory. After this the King drew out all his Men into a fair Meadow, where, while their Beaſts refreſhed themſelves, the [o] King and thoſe that were piouſly diſpos'd, went to a Neighbouring Abbey (which the Scots had burnt) to Confeſſion, as expecting without fail to have Battel now. This done, they all made themſelves ready, and having taken a little Reſt and convenient Repaſt, the Trumpets ſounded to Horſe, and the Marſhals Banners follow'd the New-made Knight Sr Thomas Rokeby; after whom came every Battail by it ſelf in good cloſe Order (becauſe of the nearneſs of the Enemy) thrô Mountains and Valleys with ſome difficulty; yet they made ſuch good ſpeed, that about Noon they came ſo near the Scots, that each Hoſt might plainly ſee the other. The Scots beholding their Reſolute approach, as readily iſſued out of their Trenches, and ranged themſelves in three Bat-tails on foot [p] at the deſcent of the Mountain.

[o] *Froiſ. c.*18. fol. 9. b.

[p] *Hector p.*308.

A little beneath the [q] foot of this Hill, there ran a great River, called Were, full of huge flints and other ſtones, like the Tyne, ſo that it was very hazardous to paſs over, even had there been no Enemy oppos'd to impeach the Paſſage. And yet, had the Scots permitted the Engliſh to come over quietly, they had found no ſufficient room to draw themſelves up in, between the River and this Mountain: But they muſt have been fain to come in Parties, and all diſorder'd upon a compleat Army, well and regularly ranged. This made the Engliſh lay by all hopes of forcing them from that advanta-gious Station; but yet to try, whether they might not be provoked to break their pre-ſent Order, the King commanded all men to alight from their Horſes, and pull off their Spurs, preſenting themſelves in three Great Battails before the Enemy; at which time he made ſome new Knights, and then to give courage to his Soldiers, rode leiſurely be-fore the [r] Battails, praying and exhorting them all with much ſweetneſs, to be carefull that day of his Crown and Dignity, and of the Honour of their Country. After which it was commanded on pain of Death, that none ſhould go before the Marſhals Banners, nor by any means break their array without particular Order. And now fair and ſoftly they all advance forward, till they came ſo near to the Enemy, that the Front of either Hoſt might perfectly view each others Arms and Cognizance.

[q] *Froiſ. c.*18. &c.

[r] Froiſ. ibid.

Here the Engliſh perceived that their Adverſaries, as ſecure in their preſent condi-tion, were fully reſolv'd no way to alter it, either by moving forward to meet them, or by retiring back to give them ſpace to approach, wherefore here they made an Halt to adviſe further. In the mean time ſome of the ſtout Barons and Knights of the Hoſt, mounting their great Courſers, reſolv'd to skirmiſh with the Scots, and to view well the paſſage of the River, as alſo to behold the Face of the Enemy nearer, if by any means they might find a way to join Battel. The King having this while been at Council, ſent Heralds to the Scots, to aſſure them " That if they were willing to come " and paſs the River, towards obtaining a Battel, he would freely retire back, till he " had left them ſufficient ſpace to range themſelves in; either then, or if they pleaſed, " the next day; or elſe let them allow the ſame to England, and the King would with-" out fail come over to them. Upon this the Scots took Council, and there, thô the Lord James Douglas with equal Courage approved of the Propoſal, and was ready to embrace the offer, yet the Prudent Lord Thomas Randulph overſway'd his Heat by good and weighty Reaſons; and ſo they ſent this [s] Anſwer by the Heralds, " The Scotch " Lords are better adviſ'd, than to follow the Counſel of an Enemy: Your King and " his Barons are not ignorant, where now we are, and what we have done in coming " hither: If they are diſpleaſed, let them correct us, when they can; For here we are [s] *Froiſ. c.*18. fol. 10.

" reſol-

"reſolved to maintain our Poſt, as long as we ſhall think fitting, and when we ſee oc- AN. DOM.
"caſion, we may give them Battel to their Coſt: But as for the Offers, we reject 1327.
"them both. After the delivery of this Anſwer, it was by Order from the King pro- AN. REGNI claim'd, that all men ſhould there take up their reſt for that Night, without retiring I.
to the Camp: and ſo there they lay all Night on the hard ground with their armour on, having neither ſtakes to tie their Horſes to, nor much Forage to give them, nor fuel to make any fire. But the Scots on the other hand, leaving good Watch in the place where they ſtood ranged before, went every one elſe to their former encampment, where they made ſo many and ſo great Fires of Engliſh wood, as if they deſign'd thereby to provoke their Enemies, by waſting ſo prodigally that fuel, of which they themſelves had ſo little. But from Midnight, till Morning, they made ſuch a noiſe, with perpetual and univerſal ſhoutings, and cries, and winding of Horns and Clarions, as if they deſign'd not only to daunt their Enemies, but to rend Heaven it ſelf: Thus were both the Hoſts lodged that Night, which was in the beginning of Auguſt, a full Month after the Engliſh had firſt ſet out from York. The next Morning both Armies faced each other, as before, till Noon; but neither Party ſeem'd yet diſpos'd to move forward, there was ſuch apparent diſadvantage in the attempt. However ſeveral Engliſh Youth ventur'd to paſs the River on Horſeback, and ſome alſo on Foot to skirmiſh, againſt whom came certain Scots iſſuing out of their Battails: ſo that divers were ſlain, wounded and taken Priſoners on both ſides. But for all this, neither Army brake their Order; till afternoon it was proclaim'd, that all men ſhould draw back to their Camp: For now it appear'd for certain, that the Scots would by no means come to a pitch'd Battel.

Thus for three Days they faced each other, but neither would move firſt to paſs the River, there was ſuch hazard in the matter. The King of England was yet too young to undertake of himſelf ſo great an Enterpriſe, as afterwards he did many far greater with ſucceſs; and the Engliſh Lords, however gallant they were, durſt not be the Authors unto him of ſuch Counſel, which for ought they knew, by its doubtfull Event might hazard their Heads. Yet not a day paſſed without ſundry adventures on either ſide, and ſeveral were interchangeably ſlain, wounded or taken Priſoners. And ſtill the Scots kept their barbarous Cuſtom every Night of Crying, ſhouting and winding of Horns moſt diſmally, keeping all the while rouſing Fires thrô all the Hoſt, but eſpecially between themſelves and the Enemy, that the Engliſh might not be able from far to obſerve their Behaviour.

King Edward's intent was to hold the Scots thus after the manner of a ſiege; for if they came over, they were apparently loſt, and if they fled, his Horſe was to purſue and entertain them till the Groſs of his Army might come up, and ſo force them to an Engagement. One of theſe things they muſt do, or be famiſhed: For he underſtood by Priſoners that had been taken, that they had neither Bread, Wine, nor ſalt left, nor any thing elſe, but Fleſh; of which they had enough; for thoſe Parts abounded with Cattel; but now their Oatmeal, of which they made their Cakes, being ſpent, Fleſh alone was not good Diet. The Scots on the other ſide hoped, that this Carriage of theirs would ſoon weary the young King out; but they were miſtaken: for as for him, his Reſolution was much greater than might be expected from his Age; and for his Army, that was now well enough furniſhed with Victuals by the Purveyers, which he continually ſent out over all the Northern Parts, as well as by others his Friends and Subjects. Now on the fourth day, as ſoon as it was light, the Engliſh directing their Eyes towards the Camp of their Enemies, beheld the Mountain whereon they had Poſted themſelves, quite void and naked: For about Midnight they had retreated thence to another more ſtrong Mountain by the ſame River ſide, which was alſo advantaged by a great Wood on the one ſide, thrô which they might paſs and repaſs ſecretly, when they pleaſed, this place alſo being in Weredale, near Stanhop-Park in the Biſhoprick of Durham.

This account of the Scots was brought back to the King about Noon, by certain Horſemen who had been ſent to ſcout after them. Hereupon the Army began to diſlodge and march after them in Battel array: Being come over againſt them, they found another Mountain, where they alſo encamped, as the Scots had done on the other, oppoſite to them. But the way to come to handy ſtroaks, was ſtill as difficult to either Part, as before: Only this advantage the Scots had; that they were ſomething the nearer on their way homeward, and the Wood by them was very fit to lay an Ambuſcado, or to favour a Retreat. Thus here they faced each other after the old manner, for [y] fifteen days together more, to the great vexation of the Engliſh, but much more

to

[t] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 108.
[u] Knighton p. 2551.
[x] Tinemouth Aur. hiſt. fol. 229.
[y] Knighton p. 2551. & M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 214.

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

to the trouble and misery of the Scots, who knew not well what to do in this condition: The English so well watched them both by Night and by Day, ever since that Desperate attempt of Earl Douglas, one of the first Nights, after they had come to this second Mountain; which, thô the action of an Enemy, must not by any means be forgotten by Us, who resolve to write impartially and rob no man of his just Honour.

[z] Knighton p. 2552. [a] Froiss. c. 18. fol. 10. [b] Hector p. 308

Whether by Treason of some English or no, I will not affirm, thô [z] that has been said, and the Lord Mortimer was afterwards question'd for such matters, but the [a] first night that the Scots were come to the second Mountain, Earl Douglas understanding the English kept but slender watch, either, as being over-wearied with this troublesome Journey, or as the nature of man is, [b] contemning their Numbers, and growing secure upon this their late Flight, understanding this, I say, the adventerous Lord passes over the River far beyond the English Camp with 200 Men of Arms well mounted, and marches with great caution and silence toward the English Host. The Scotch Writers and Froisard also affirms, that just as he came to the first Watches, he and his men with great fury and outcries dashing their spurs to their Horses, rushed into the midst of their Camp, still crying a Douglas, a Douglas, Ye shall all die, ye Thieves of England! And that so he slew 300 e're he ceased, some in their beds, and others ill prepared for Resistance, by reason of the sudden surprize. That thus he proceeded even to the Kings Tent, always crying a Douglas; that he strake in sunder two or three Cords of the Royal Pavilion, and so got off safe; only in the Retreat some few of his Men were lost, as Froisard confesses, [c] Hector p. 308 who lived about that time, but not one saies honest [c] Hector and his sworn Friend [d] Buchan. p. 276 [d] Buchanan, the former whereof lived about two hundred, and the other almost three hundred Years after. I profess to be desirous of telling the Truth, but can by no means admit this Action to have been done in this manner; because the Undertaking is utterly improbable, and the Success much more incredible, and Authorities are not wanting to prove the Relation erroneous. For who will believe, that so well-formed an Army should be thus openly despised by a Man who knew their Strength very well, but could not be suppos'd to know the Avenues of the Camp so well? Besides the choicest Knights and Barons of the Army lay most of them about the Kings Person, not to mention his ordinary Guards, nor to insist on the Heinalders, near two Thousand in number, whose place we shew'd to be near the Kings Person, and who were all valiant Men and could not be surpris'd; because they durst not yet take their rest without very good Watch and a strong Guard, as well for doubt of the Common Enemy, as for fear of the English Archers, whom they had so incens'd as we shew'd before. Let any man of Reason consider, whether it be possible, for such a Company of Horsemen to pass even to the heart of such an Army, and repass again with little or no dammage, being all the while attended with such Noise and Tumult. What? no Trenches to hinder their Progress? No Troops appointed to secure the Watch, and to walk the Rounds? None ready to draw a Sword, or to let an Arrow slip from a Bow? If not one was slain, what made Douglas go off with so small an Execution; when Leonidas and his three hundred Spartans made shift to kill twenty thousand Persians in one night? Or why did he not come with the whole strength of his Army; then as Hector saies, he might have slain them every Mothers Son? But having made this Tryal, which succeeded better than he could imagin, and finding the Army began to be Roused, he sav'd his own Men and went off! Why? Even the Womanlike Army of [e] Herod. l. 7. Justin. l. 2. Orosius l. 2. c. 9. [e] Xerxes (to which an enemy cannot compare the English) could make a shift to stop the return of as noble a General as Douglas, thô attended with three hundred Spartans and seven hundred Others (as brave Fellows, no doubt, as those Scotchmen) who yet fell silently upon the Persians without any noise or warning at all. It cannot be, that the English should then be either so effeminate, or so negligent, or so overcome with surfits at that time, that they could not with half this Noise be allarm'd, so as to rouze up and rally together, and intercept these bold Intruders. I rather therefore believe, that Earl Douglas intended a crafty and more probable, and no less honourable Undertaking of destroying the Kings own Person, whose Tent he might easily have observed by some Penon or Cognisance, and so hoped to put the English Army to the rout upon loss of their General, as the Assyrians fled upon the Death of Holofernes: That he intended to secure his Retreat by these select and fleet Horses, which were sufficient to skirmish with any Troop that should suddenly pursue after him. And it [f] Knighton p. 2552. [g] Id. p. 2627. is [f] said by a diligent Historian of those very Days, who had seen and known, and [g] heard King Edward discourse, that Douglas came into the Camp by stealth, aiming to find out the Kings Pavilion, and that being descried by some of the Watch, he said always in Engliſh, as if he had been one of the Rounds, "No Ward? Ha! St. George. And ſo not being queſtion'd, he came at laſt to the Tent Royal, where he ſlew the Kings [i] Chamberlain, and after that a ſtout loyal Soul his Chaplain, who ran toward the King to wake him, but was ſlain in the endeavour; as he alſo interpos'd his own Body to prevent the blow aim'd at the King. With this rude ſhock the Valourous Young King awakes, and immediatly ſnatches his good Sword, which hung ready-naked at his Beds head, and leaps out on the other ſide the Bed to oppoſe this bold Adventurer: who ſeeing now his work not likely to be clearly performed, and doubting there had been too great noiſe already, retires; but juſt before, the Kings Tent was filled with his faithfull Subjects: by many of whom he is ſtrait perſu'd on all hands. But whether by ſome connivance of Mortimers, or that himſelf had well conſider'd all the Avenues of the Camp, being a moſt expert Commander, or that his readineſs in Engliſh made him not perceived, or that Fortune loves to be propitious to them that court her gallantly; Douglas himſelf eſcapes clear off, thô very [k] hardly, but many of his Men were left behind. Either of theſe ways in my opinion makes equally for the honour of that valiant Scotch Lord; but this latter, as it wants not good and ancient Atteſtors, ſo to me it ſeems upon many accounts much more probable than the other.

in

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

[i] Tinemouth Aur. Hiſtor. in ædibus Lambeth f. 229.

[k] Tinemouth ibid. Knighton p. 2552. n. 10.

However the Action of this night, taught the Engliſh to keep more ſure Watch and Ward for the future, and ſome certain Troops held their appointed Poſts, ſtanding in Harneſs all night by turns; but every day they skirmiſhed, each Part dividing their loſſes and gains almoſt equally. For the Scots never came over to the Engliſh, otherwiſe they had been ſurrounded with good Bands of Men, and ſo all taken or ſlain, but the Engliſh ever ventur'd over with Gallantry enough, and generally they had the better, but when the Scots ſent out more numerous Detachments from their Main Body, which becauſe they were fewer in number than the Engliſh, they did not often, for they doubted, if too much they broke their Array, that the whole Engliſh Forces would follow the Skirmiſhers. This was the manner of both Armies for about twenty four [l] days in all, when it chanced a Scotch Knight of ſome quality was taken priſoner, and brought before the King and his Barons, where being roughly menaced, and ſtrictly examin'd, he at laſt with much ado, confeſſed in what evil Condition the Scots at that time were, and being preſt yet further, he told them how their Generals had ordain'd, that the ſame night every one ſhould be ready arm'd and follow the Banners of the Lord Douglas, but what to doe, as it was by the Council kept ſecret, ſo the Knight ingenuouſly proteſted that he was wholly ignorant. Upon this the King withdrawing to Council, it was concluded by all, becauſe the Lord Douglas was now the Leader of this Enterprize, that they certainly intended to give them a general Onſet as that night on each Flank of the Army, as expecting to find Succeſs anſwerable to the late Undertaking; their Diſpair thrô ſo long a ſiege attended with ſuch difficulties, making them reſolve at one Blow to hazard all: For the Knight had confeſſed a great Famine among them. Then three great Battails were ordain'd, the One to ſtand before the Camp, toward the Enemy, the other Two, facing about on each ſide to receive them both on right and left, if occaſion ſhould be: Great Fires alſo were appointed to be kindled on all Parts, that they might avoid confuſion or ſurprize the better, and the Watches were placed at ſeveral diſtances, and Scouts ſent out to inform the Hoſt of the Enemies motions; the Watch-word was given, and the Servants and Pages were order'd the while to keep their Maſters Lodgings, with their Horſes ready Sadled in their hands. And thus accordingly they ſtood all Night in Battle Array, till the firſt approach of Morning, when two Scotch Trumpeters being taken by the Scout-watch, and by them brought to the King and Council, ſpake freely (for they were taken voluntarily) in this manner, "Ye Lords of England, why do you ſtand thus to your Arms watching here to no purpoſe? For on peril of our heads your Enemies are marched clear off: Before Midnight "they began ſilently to leave their Camp, being not deſcried by you, by reaſon of the "dark Moonleſs night, advantaged with the Covert of a Wood. So that by this, we believe them no leſs than three or four Miles onward of their way; only they left us "two behind to ſhew you what courſe they had taken.

[l] Aſhmole p. 645

Upon this it was concluded but folly to think of purſuing them any farther, ſince they had got ſuch a Start, and were much more expedite for Travail, but chiefly becauſe they underſtood that the Scots were in ſuch want, that of neceſſity they muſt haſten back into their own Country, and that by reaſon of the approach of Winter, (for Harveſt was done even in thoſe Parts) they could not make another Expedition that year. Nor was it the leaſt conſideration, that their former Troubles had coſt them more [m] Men, and [m] Buchan. p. 277.

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

and Horſes, than ſome juſt Battels might have done; beſides their late continual Watchings, and other hardſhips had rendred them all unfit to purſue ſuch [n] Vagabonds. To theſe Reaſons all agreed, but for fear of any deceit, they ſtill detain'd the two Trumpeters, and held on their former Order, till near Prime. But when it plainly appeared, that the Scots were indeed eſcaped, then every Man had leave to retire to his Lodgings, while the Lords went to counſel with the King, there to adviſe how to proceed further.

[n] Prædones vagos Buch.

In the mean time many of the Engliſh out of curioſity or hopes of Prey mounted their Horſes, and paſſing the River, came and view'd the Scotch Camp: Thoſe who expected prey, were much deceived, but they who came out of curioſity, were well ſatisfied. For there they found more than [o] five hundred Oxen and Deer ready kill'd, becauſe they themſelves could not drive them before the Hoſt at that rate, as their Flight required, and that they might do little good to the Engliſh. There were alſo ready ſtretch'd on ſtakes over fire-places three hundred Caldrons made after their way, of skins, with the hair ſtill on them, all full of Water and Fleſh, ready to be boiled, and more than a thouſand Spits with meat, ready to be roaſted on them; there were alſo found ten thouſand Pair of old Shoes in this rich Camp, all made of raw Leather, with hair on them, which the Scots in their haſt had left behind. Among the reſt there were [p] five poor Engliſh Priſoners (thô Buchanan after his qualifying manner ſays but two) faſt bound to Trees with their Legs broken, but yet alive, of whom now their Countrymen took charitable care.

[o] Froiſ. c. 18. *fol.*10.b. *Hector p.*308 *lin.*42. *Buchan.p.*277.

[p] Froiſ. ibid. & Hector ibid.

John [q] Harding agrees with many, and ſays, that the Scots were held in manner of a Siege by the Engliſh; but in the way of their Eſcape he is more particular, and tells us, that on one Part there lay a broad and wide mooriſh Ground, ſo deep with mire, and ſo broad, that the Engliſh (whether by the management of ſome, or overſight of all) wholly neglected to guard that Place, as accounting it impaſſable. That the wily Scots provided ſecretly Planks laid upon Faggots, and joyn'd cloſe, over which they went in the Night, ſtill drawing them up as they paſſed, and thoſe that follow'd, laying down freſh ones, and then in like manner drawing them after, that the Engliſh might not purſue them by the ſame means; ſo that according to the French Proverb, [r] Ils ſe ſont ſauvé par les Marets, with much ado they came off thrô the Mariſhes. I determin not, how they ſhould be ſo well provided of ſo much matter, or how ſo great a Work could be done in ſo ſmall a Time (thô no Man can tell, how long before this Deſign might be reſolv'd on) becauſe the Author we follow in this, underſtood the nature of thoſe Northern Parts as perfectly as any Man living, and ſo his Authority herein is no way contemptible.

[q] Harding c. 177. *fol.*176.

[r] Cotgrave in Marets.

The [s] Scots, that very day after a great journey of two and twenty Miles, thrô a wild Country, without any ſtay or reſt for fear of an Encounter, repaſſed the River of Tyne near Carlile, and the next day leaving Northumberland on their Right hand, they rode thrô a ſmall part of Cumberland, into their own Country, where they preſently disbanded.

[s] Froiſ. c. 20. *fol.*11. b.

Thus befell of this Expedition, with all the vaſt expence, and theſe great and formidable Preparations. Our Hiſtorians (as many of them following the vain opinions of the Vulgar, betray much weakneſs and paſſion) are angry with this bad ſucceſs, and find ſome diſhonour hereby to reflect on the King, wholly attributing all to the Treaſon of Mortimer, and others. But whoever ſeriouſly reflects upon this account of it here given, which is the moſt exact and full that I could any ways diſcover, may rather ſee it was the Hand of God, and the ſubtlety of the Enemy, created all this trouble. Nor can I imagine, how by any means, Mortimer could hold intelligence with the Scots, unleſs he truſted many of thoſe who kept watch, which was too hazardous a matter for any man in his right ſenſes to do; ſince if but one or two of many had diſcover'd it, notwithſtanding his great Credit with the Queen Mother and the King, he muſt needs have been torn in pieces. But becauſe [t] Walſingham and others among other Articles lay this to his Charge that he was an Impediment to the Kings Honour at Stanhop-Park, in reſtraining the Engliſh from falling on the Scots; I ſhall not omit ſuch circumſtances as I have met with, that ſeem to make againſt him as to that point. And firſt it is ſaid, that he the [u] ſaid Roger Mortimer, with Queen Iſabel and Edmund Earl of Kent, being then in France, upon certain Conditions, made ſome certain Covenant with the Scotch Miniſters there then reſiding; upon which encouragement the Scots proceeded to this War; and that Earl Douglas perform'd that bold action by Night in the Engliſh Camp, by the [x] connivance and underhand aſſiſtance of certain in the Kings army, of whom Mortimer ought to be accounted Chief; and that

[t] *Wolſing. hiſt. p.*112. *n.*30. & MS. C.C.C. Dug. 1. *vol. p.*146. b.

[u] Knighton p. 2551. *n.*40.

[x] *Id. p.*2552. n. 16.

the

the Scots escaped away not without the Treason of certain of the English Army; and lastly, in the [y] Eleventh Article laid afterwards to his Charge in Parliament; 'tis said that he converted the whole sum of Money, which the Scots gave afterwards upon the Establishment of a Peace, to his own use, the King not enjoying any part thereof. [z] Others add to this, that a little before their flight, the King resolving to send two considerable Detachments from his Army to intercept the passage of the Scots on each Flank, himself intending to pass over against them by that time the rest might be up with the Enemy, certain (from the Lord Mortimer be like) gave them a sign of their Danger, which might have been privately agreed on before, whereupon they escaped, as we have declared. However King Edward had such good Advice, and such Success, even in this unhappy Journey, as to be able to rid the Land of its Enemy without any considerable Loss; but what no humane Industry or Wisdom could foresee or prevent.

AN. DOM. 1327. An. Regni I.

[y] Id. p. 2558. n. 10. ex Rot. 4. Ed. 3. &c.

[z] Polyd. Virg. l. 19. p. 360. n. 10.

I confess (to use the words of Mr [a] Ashmole) that the first Actions of Princes are Generally look'd upon by all Eyes, and not seldom by many Critical Observators, taken as the Radix, whence to calculate their future, either Successes or Miscarriages. Now (as he goes on) if a full age entitle them to the sole management of Affairs, we are enclin'd to think, that a judicious Eye may partly discern the strength of their Fortune from such their beginnings. But while they remain under Tutorage, and their Designs are carried on by the Conduct of others, the Event of things will manifest a dependency upon the strength or weakness of the genius of those Persons, who are the Chief Managers of their Concerns. And this was fully made out in this Prince, whose Martial undertakings succeeded little or nothing, while the Government of the Kingdom remain'd in other Hands, (and sometimes after also, when he was tyed up and hamper'd by his Allies in Flanders) but He no sooner arrived at full Age, and had the Dispose of publique Affairs in his own Hands, but all things shew'd themselves as disposed by his own Happy Genius: And the first remarkable Experiment hereof was verified even upon the Scots themselves, from whom before He had received some affronts and indignities, as we shall see hereafter.

[a] p. 645.

Thus (this Expedition ended as it was) the [b] next day the English Army return'd homeward, and about noon they came to a great Abby within two miles of Durham, where the King lodged with all his Host about him in the Field. Here they found good forage for their Horses, and refreshment for Themselves. Next day the King (leaving the Gross of the Army there still) went to Durham to visit the famous Church of St. Cuthbert and to offer at his Shrine. In this City were found all the Carriages, which were left by the Army about a Month ago in the Wood one Morning, when they marched towards the Tyne, to intercept the Scots, as we [c] shew'd before. For the Mayor and Burgesses of Durham having found them, order'd them for their better security to be brought into the City at their own costs and charges, where they were placed safe in empty Barnes and Granges, the Name, or Arms, or other Cognisance of each Owner, being before left on every Man's Carriage, that the several Proprietors might be known. It extreamly satisfied the Lords and Gentlemen, when thus unexpectedly they had recover'd what they lately looked on as no better than lost. Here, and about the City the whole Army refreshed themselves well for two days, all the Horses were new shod, and what was amiss corrected. The third day they marched towards the City of York, which they easily reached in three days after; and there the King found his Lady-Mother, who received him with great joy, with all her Ladies and the whole City. Here, after great thanks given to all the Barons and Knights that had attended the King, for their prompt Advice and loyal Assistance in this Expedition, he dismist the greater part of the Army; but Sr. John of Heinalt with his Company was still retained, because they had not as yet their promised Wages.

[b] Froiss. c. 18. fol. 10.

[c] p. 9.

After some time spent in Jollity and Feasting (for the Queen and her Ladies made them very good Cheer) the Lords and Captains of Sr. Johns Retinue drew up Bills of what was due unto them, reckoning in also the Horses and other Stuff they had lost or spoiled in this Journey, and deliver'd them in to the Kings Council. But then the noble John Lord Beaumont, out of the Trust he reposed in the Kings Promise, bound himself freely to all his Followers, undertaking to content them as to all their particulars within a certain time, for all their Losses and Charges, contained in the said Bills, besides their promised Wages; For he well saw, that the King could not possibly at that time spare so much Mony: Thô with much ado he made shift to allow them for their present Charges, and what might be sufficient to carry them handsomly into their own several Countries: Yet before the Year was quite ended, they were all satisfied in full.

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regn. I.

Then they provided little Naggs for their Lacquies and Pages to ride on, and two Ships were lent them by the King to convey their Servants and Stuff to Sluce in Flanders: After which the Lord John of Heinalt and his Warlike Company took their leave of the King and the Queen his Mother, of the Earls of Norfolk, and of Kent the Kings Uncles, and of the Earl of Lancaster his Cozen, with the Lord Mortimer and the rest of the Barons, all whom he found very courteous and honourable to Him and his Followers; especially the Queen and her Confident, Roger Lord Mortimer; for these, besides their open Gratuities, privately heaped upon Sr. John and his Retinue, [d] such and so many rich Presents, as proved much to the detriment of the King, and the impoverishing of his Kingdom. But upon their parting (for fear of the English Archers, whom they had in this War so highly incensed,) the King appointed the [e] Lord William Clinton and eleven other Knights with two [f] hundred Men of Arms, to bear them company thrô Lincolnshire Thus at last they all came safe to Dover, where they found Vessels ready provided for them and theirs, whereby they were carried with a prosperous wind to the place they were bound for.

[d] Knighton p. 2552. n. 40.

[e] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 530.
[f] Froiss. c. 18. fol. 11.

VII. But now 'tis time to look nearer home, and enquire what becomes of the Old King, whom we left deposed and imprison'd, with the promise of an honourable Pension during life. He was not so unhappy in the want of his Subjects affections as some imagine, and indeed almost all Writers seem to averr: For in very truth he was rather depos'd, by the deep contrivances of a few subtle Enemies; and the despair, to which their trayterous Demeanour had already reduc'd them, together with his own oversight, than thrô any Ill-will, that the Generality of his People had to his Person or Government. And therefore his Queen and her partakers to gain Popularity upon their first coming into England, [g] revok'd all Fugitives and Exuls, setting at Liberty all Prisoners and Malefactours thrô the Realm, who themselves and their Friends flocking to London, made no small addition to her Forces. Moreover the Politick Queen [h] gave out, that the Pope had curst all her Enemies and their Abettors, and for that end, there were then with her in her Camp two Cardinals, his Legates; thô in truth there was no such matter: But however this Report served to amuse those who were to be aw'd by Devotion; and as for others, whom terrour might dismay, her Numbers were made formidable, and her [i] Forces excessively enhanced by Rumour; beside, 'twas given out, that the King of France was ready to follow with innumerable Forces to his Sisters aid. And after all this, (which is the usual Method of Treason) only Reformation and the publique Good was pretended: For the Queen caused to be proclaim'd, that none should fear the least harm or injury; but only those who were known to be the Common Enemies of the King or Kingdom, to wit, the two Spencers, Father and Son; Robert Baldock, [k] then Bishop of Norwich, and the King's Chancellour, Walter Stapleton Bishop of Exceter, with their Favourers; who were called the Authours of these present Troubles. And to take away all fear or jealousie from those who were willing to be quiet, it was further proclaim'd, that none of all her Army should presume to touch [l] to the Value of three pence, without the Owners leave, on pain of loosing a Finger; nor to the Value of six pence, on pain of loosing a Hand; nor to the Value of twelve pence, on Peril of his Head. By these and the like fair Pretences, the King's Friends were either wholly lull'd asleep, or durst not shew their Heads for fear; nor indeed could any (not concern'd in the Plot) imagine at that time, that the Queen and the King's Son should ever prove so dangerous to the King's own Person. Wherefore not being able to provide for any probable Resistance (after a few vain attempts to escape, and to lye conceal'd) he was taken and secur'd in Kenelworth Castle, where he remain'd that Winter, without knowing what would happen to him. But in the Parliament met at Westminster in January, he was depos'd, as we shew'd before, and his Son, as his next Heir, by the Consent of the Lords and Commons, admitted to the Crown; the Disloyal and ungratefull [m] Archbishop of Canterbury thereupon preaching to the Assembly from these Words, Vox Populi, Vox Dei, which Text hath since in our Days been resum'd to the same ungodly Purpose. But yet even this Assembly, which consisted mostly of such as had offended beyond hopes of Mercy, ([n] the few Honest not daring to contradict them) Publiquely and Solemnly protested, that the Depos'd King should no ways be violated or injur'd in his Person; but attended as a Prince all his Days, with an Honourable and Sufficient allowance. And thus indeed he lived for a while with good Comfort, saving that he wanted the Company of his Queen, whom he intirely loved, but [o] all his sweet Invitations by Letter were frustrated by the Vigilance of Mortimer, who perswaded the Queen, that his intent was only to Murther her, if once he could get her

[g] Speed ex M.S. p. 562. §. 60. & Sr Tho. de la More p. 7. l. 28.
[h] Sr Th. de la More p. 6. l. 44. Speed ibid. §. 59.

[i] Sr Tho. de la More p. 6. l. 40. Speed ibid.

[k] Ità Philipot's Catal. Chancel. p. 34. Speed p. 562. Bp. Godwin dubitat, sed non negat. Catal. Bps. p. 425.
[l] Walsingh. hist. p. 101. Fox Acts &c. p. 486.

[m] Walsingh. hist. p. 107. n. 10. Churchill's Divi Britan. 38. Holinshead Engl. Chron. p. 881.
[n] Holinshead ibid.

[o] Sr Tho. de la More. vid. Article 9. contra Mortimer. Rot. 4. Ed. 3. &c.

her into his power. And oftentimes the Old King [p] would say to his Keepers, "Where- "in have I offended Isabella my Wife, or Edward my Son, whom they have now made "King; that neither of them will let me speak with them, or so much as see their Fa- "ces? And still those who waited on him, [q] (being then Persons of Honour and good Fashion) answered him, "Most worthy Lord, be not displeased, if we declare the "Truth unto your Highness; it is because they are Both made to beleeve, that You "intend to stabb or strangle, or some other way to destroy the Queen your Lady, and "your Son, if you can get them into your hands. "Alas, Alas! reply'd the King, "Am not I here as a Prisoner, and not in my own power, but at your disposal? God "is my Witness, I never had so bad a thought; but I would to God, I might leave "this World, that so I might end all my Fears and Troubles together. This was the greatest of his Miseries, and which he laid most to heart; that he was never visited either by his Wife or any of his Children: But even this Affliction the Distressed Prince bore with Christian Courage and Equanimity; and by accustoming his Mind to Patience and Contemplation, he began now to be in love with that easie and retired Life, the Sweets whereof he ne're before had tasted.

AN. DOM. 1327. An. Regni I.

[p] Grafton p. 217. & M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 215.
[q] Id. p. 213. & M. S. id. ibid.

The very Verses, which he is [r] said to have composed himself in this his Confinement (for honour of that Princes both Learning and Piety, and to satisfie the Curious) I have hereunto annexed, faithfully Translated from his Own, which were Latine, and in Rhyme, after the manner of that Age.

[r] Daniels Hist. p. 218. & Ant. Wood Antiqu. Ox. l. 1. p. 101. & l. 2. p. 103. & Catal. Hono. p. 158. & Fabian p. 185. sic incipiunt,

What time rough Winters blasts the Earth did tame,
Storms of ill Fortune shook my Glorious Frame!
There's none so wise, so mercifull and fair,
Prudent and shining with all Vertues rare;
But he's by abject Wretches trampled down,
If Fortune once on his Endeavours frown.
That Hand, that once did Grace to all dispence,
Can move no Heart to a Remorsefull Sense:
That Royal Face, whose Smiles afforded Bliss,
With Clouds of dark Dishonour blackned is:
My Vassals-once, do spurn me now: And those,
Whom I esteem'd my Friends, do prove my Foes.
Oh! who, that heard how once they prais'd my Name,
Would think that from those Tongues these Slanders came?
But sinfull Soul, why dost thou thus repine,
When justly humbled by the Hand Divine?
A Father's scourge is for our profit meant:
I see thy Rod, and Lord, I am content.
Chide me, my Father, till thou wilt give o're;
Afflict, till thou art pleased to restore:
Thy Son submits and doth thy Will obey;
But grieves, thus long he did this Work delay.
Now then, my Father, view my wretched Case;
And shine upon me with a smiling Face.
Forgive what's past: For what's to come assist;
Then I'le take gladly, what my Murd'rers list:
I've lost my Kingdome; yet I sha'nt repine,
If (after all) I gain but that of Thine.
To thee, sweet Jesus, humbly here I bend:
I loath my sins, do thou thy Pardon send:
Fountain of Love, allow my hearty Prayers;
Remember thine own Blood, thô not my Tears.
When Man afflicts, then, Lord, do thou forgive:
And when I die, grant, that my Soul may live.

Damnum mihi contulit tempore Brumali
Fortuna satis aspera vehementis mali!
Nullus est tam sapiens, mitis, aut formosus,
Tam prudens, Virtutibúsque cæteris famosus,
Quin stultus reputabitur, satis & despectus,
Si Fortuna prosperos avertat effectus. &c.

Thus did this poor King [s] repent all his former Vanities most heartily, no way repining at this punishment and heavy stroak of Gods Hand; but made so good use of these Afflictions; that 'tis more than hoped, he fitted himself for a Kingdom more durable: to which his Enemies long'd to send him.

[s] Fabian ibid. & p. 194. Speed p. 566. Fox Acts &c. p. 486.

For now, when the first Heats were over, and the vizard taken off from all these fair Pretences, the embers of Loyalty, that seem'd before extinct, began to kindle a great great flame in the Hearts of his abuſed Subjects: the late Proceedings of Parliament were look'd upon as traiterous, and contrary to the Laws of God and the Land, and the Young King was murmur'd againſt, as too ſoon invading his Fathers Throne. And ſundry [t] great Perſons and others, particularly the whole Order of Fryars Preachers, began to take pity of his Unworthy captivity, and to conſult, how beſt they might work his Deliverance. But his watchfull Enemies having ſome way or other intimation of theſe matters, ſince they ſaw in his Recovery their own Downfall, reſolv'd rather by deſtroying him to ſecure themſelves. Eſpecially the Queen was perpetually alarm'd with fears of being call'd ſhortly to an account by her Husband, whom ſhe had ſo wronged, and whoſe Reſtoration ſhe now greatly dreaded. Mortimer had all along put it into her head, that if e're the King ſhould get at liberty, he would be ſure to burn her to death; and that neither ſhe nor they could be ſecure, while Revenge from him was poſſible. And ſhe her ſelf being extreamly terrified with theſe thoughts [u] complain'd of diſmall and frightfull Dreams to her Counſellor, the traiterous and crafty Biſhop of Hereford, Adam Orleton, who cunningly took occaſion thence to urge her on to that, which by this time, ſhe her ſelf, 'tis thought too much deſired. In ſhort, his Death is reſolv'd on, but the Execution put off till this Scotch Expedition, which we have related, that the Authors might not lie ſo obnoxious to ſuſpicion, being ſo far off, at York, and about the Borders.

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

[t] Speed p. 564. a. §. 4. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 213.

[u] Sr. Th. de la More.

But now Henry Earl of Lancaſter, his Cozen, who was a Man of much Honour, and began alſo greatly to commiſerate his Royal Kinſmans Condition, is therefore thought too good a Keeper for him: wherefore on [x] Palm-Sunday, which was then the [y] fifth of April, he was by Indentures deliver'd to the Cuſtody of Sr. John Maltravers ſenior, and Sr. John Gournay (two blemiſhes of Knighthood) but the worſe Men, the better for their Purpoſe. Theſe two ungracious Villains with their Attendants [z] had Commiſſion to enter at any time into any Caſtle or Fortreſs within the Kingdom, and there to abide during their pleaſure, commanding all within the place. By them therefore he is ſoon after removed from Kenelworth Caſtle in Warwickſhire, and hurried about in the night from one Place to another, that no body might know certainly of his aboad. Firſt they brought him with all ſecrecy imaginable to the Caſtle of Corfe in Dorſetſhire; thence a while after to Briſtow-Caſtle; where they kept him privately in hardſhip and fear enough: Till it being [a] ſcented by ſome of the chief Citizens, out of a due Commiſeration of his undeſerved Troubles, and a juſt ſenſe of the Duty they ow'd him, putting their lives in their hands, they ſecretly combin'd to deliver him from theſe his inhumane Keepers, and ſo to convey him to ſome place of ſafety beyond the Seas, which was the utmoſt the diſtreſſed King did deſire. But his hard Deſtiny permitted this Counſel to take wind, or however cauſed ſuch a Suſpition to enter the minds of theſe Ungracious Wretches, his Keepers; in ſo much, that on that very night, wherein his Deliverance was to be effected, they very ſecretly remov'd him from Briſtow and convey'd him to [b] Barkley Caſtle in Gloceſterſhire.

[x] Dugd. Warw. p. 165. a.

[y] D. Lit. Dom. Paſcha 12. Apr. Labbe.

[z] Sr. Th. de la More.

[a] Sr. Tho. de la More.

[b] Dugd. Warw. p. 165.

And here they ſhew'd the Baſeneſs and Barbarity of their Mungrel Minds, by inhumanly inſulting over that Majeſty in adverſity, which lately by all Men was honour'd next to Adoration. They made him ride on an ill-favour'd Beaſt, thô nimble and ſtrong enough for their purpoſe, very meanly clad, who of late was Lord of a great Kingdom, Bare-headed, in whoſe preſence Princes were uſed to ſtand ſo; and ſtill they [c] took by-ways, croſſing the Country, leſt he ſhould be met by any and reſcued.

[c] Sr. Tho. de la More.

In this paſſage to Barkley-Caſtle, as they went by ſome Granges, near Briſtow, the Villain Gournay (for I will not diſgrace Knighthood by giving him the honourable title of Sr. Thomas) clapt on the Head of his Maſter, the Lords Anointed, a Crown made of a wiſp of Hay, adding this bitter and ſarcaſticall Jeer, [d] "Fare forth, Sr. King. Nor did the inſolent Indignities they put upon him end here; for having a mind by and by to cut off the Hair of his Head and Beard, that he might be more diſguis'd from the knowledge of any they ſhould chance to meet; they made him alight at a certain Ditch in their way, whence an inſolent Barber fetch'd him cold and dirty Water in an old ruſty Helmet, as he ſat on a Mole-hill to be Trimm'd, ſaying, as others alſo did, "That cold Water ſhould ſerve him for that time, to which the abuſed Prince reply'd [e] meekly, "But whether you will allow it or no, I will have warm "Water for my Beard; and therewith he let fall a ſhowre of warm Tears, that overflow'd his Face and Beard. This Story was atteſted to Sr. Thomas de la More, who liv'd in his Days, and wrote his Life and Death, by William Biſhop, one of the Ac-

[d] Sr. Tho. de la More. The words are old Engl. and are as much as; Set forward Sr. King.

[e] Sr. Tho. de la More p. penult. lin. 34. &c.

complices,

complices, who was preſent at the doing thereof, and afterwards heartily repented that ever he had a hand in ſo wicked a Concern. AN. DOM. 1327. AN. REGNI I.

And thus at laſt they brought him to Barkley-Caſtle, where they would create horrid noiſes to interrupt his Natural Repoſe, either make him faſt, or give him meats, not ſuch as he deſired, but quite Contrary; often unſavoury; always unwholeſome; and ſometimes temper'd with loathſome Sauces, and even Poiſon it ſelf: But the ſtrength of his Excellent Conſtitution preſerv'd him vigorous, healthy and entire among all theſe Attempts and Difficulties: For it is the Opinion of Galen, that ſome ſtrong Bodies may by the courſe of Nature evacuate ſuch poiſons, as uſually deſtroy thoſe of a leſs firm and ſolid Vigour and contexture. Howbeit we had rather attribute this to the Goodneſs of God, leſt had he died thrô exceſs of Grief and Melancholy, or by theſe ſecret and lingring Poiſons, their Cruel Treaſon had not been ſo apparent to humane Notice. Beſides all this, that they might the ſooner provoke him to deſpair, or impatience (for theſe Devils incarnate, not content to put him to a ſimple Death, delighted alſo to torment his Soul) whatever he ſaid, they would contradict, or deride and ſcoff at, telling him that he was a doting Fool and [f] diſtracted; which might well have been true in theſe his Vexatious Sufferings, but that the Divine Grace gave him Strength and Patience proportionable to his Miſeries.

[f] St Tho. de la More.

When therefore 'twas underſtood at Court; that his Health was not impair'd by all theſe hard Uſages, and that what was already done, ſecluded the Authors from Mercy, if by any means he ſhould ever recover Liberty; they ſend very ſmart Letters to his Keepers, blaming them for giving him too much freedom, and for allowing him too coſtly and delicate Fare, adding ſome ſlight intimations; "that how-"ever he ſhould be taken off, it would not be unacceptable to thoſe, whoſe Lives "were not ſafe; till his Death was certain: But, who were of Power ſufficient to "requite any conſiderable Service. And here that ſubtle Biſhop of Hereford, the ungracious Adam Orleton, made uſe of that Famous Sophiſtical Sentence, [g] Kill Edward never fear 'tis Good.

Which being pointed thus-- Kill Edward; never fear: 'tis Good.--Commands his Death;
But if thus------- Kill Edward never; fear: 'tis Good.--It Deterrs them from it.

[g] St Tho. de la More. Edvardum occidere nolite timere bonum eſt. Quâ tamen eandem ſententiam contra Johannam Philippi Pulchri uxorem ante hæc tempora uſurpatam memorat Gaguin. l. 7 p. 125. Reginam occidere nolite timere bonum eſt.

For by this ambiguous, while unpointed, Phraſe he hop'd, as indeed he did, to give ſufficient Confidence to theſe Impolitick Villains to work his Death; but yet to leave Room for his own Defence, if ever he ſhould be call'd in queſtion. Without this Sentence to intimate what they were to do, and an Epiſtle from [h] Mortimer himſelf, who directed them how and in what manner they ſhould diſpatch him, together with broad Intimations from the Queen, Hereford and other Grandees (whoſe concern it was to haſten the impriſon'd King's Death) with all their Seals annexed thereto, they durſt never have undertaken violently to have rid him of his Life; ſince it was his Son that now Reign'd; and that very Parliament that depos'd him, had Enacted, that no Violence ſhould be offer'd to his Perſon. But when his Keepers had theſe Authentick Abettors on their ſide, they imagin'd all was ſafe, and are preſently poſſeſs'd with Diabolical Reſolutions. Firſt they command the Lord Barkley to withdraw from his own Caſtle with all his Servants, and whomſoever they were not well aſſured of. Then they remove the poor Prince (who was now well aware of his End, and 'tis reaſonably preſum'd by his Patience and Chriſtianlike Deportment, as well prepared for it) into an high Turret of the ſaid Caſtle: This [i] Room they ſurrounded with all ſorts of Carrion and ſtinking Carcaſes, piled upon the Leads and round about his Windows, and on the Battlements, either ſo by corrupting the Air, (he drew in) to diſpatch him, or at leaſt, to keep their hands in by theſe Deviliſh Exercitations, till they had pitch'd on ſome more exquiſite way to deſtroy him. Nor was this a poor Invention neither, but argues the wicked Ingenuity of his Murderers, who ſaw that nothing could be more loathſome to one of ſo refined and delicate a ſenſe and Education: And accordingly ſeveral Workmen, who were labouring about the Caſtle, heard him often with moſt paſſionate bewailings complain of this, as the moſt inſupportable affliction he ever yet had met with in all his Life. But when the Tormentors ſaw, that none of theſe Methods had any power to impair his Health, or break his Patience, much leſs to take him off, they now ſet about the work in good Earneſt. On the 11 Calends of October, that is, after our Account, the 21 of September, and St. Matthews day, when they had the moſt barbarous Deſign in the World againſt against his Life, they put on the best Countenance, that ever they had yet shew'd him before: They not only, as on a Festival, treated him well at Dinner, but also [k] made very good cheer with him at Supper, to make him less apprehensive of their intended Treason. But at midnight they came softly into his Chamber, where they found the Innocent Prince lying half asleep in his Bed. Here no less than fifteen sturdy fellows suddenly clap an huge Table upon his upper parts, at the first apprehension whereof the affrighted King awaking, turned his body, so that then he lay groveling, being in this manner held forcibly down by these wretches. The mean while others raised the Bedcloaths from the Feetward up to his Body, when they go about such an Execrable Fact, that I am both sorry and asham'd to declare, that ever this Nation could produce such Monsters. For [l] first they force a certain smooth hollow Pipe or Horn into his Secret Parts, thrô which they immediately thrust a long red-hot Instrument of Iron, which they turned and rowled about to his most inexpressible torment, as his loud and bitter groanings, which were heard by many, did testifie, till they had in this manner forced his Royal Soul to seek for quiet in another World. This they did, to the intent, that no wound should appear outwardly in the Princely Body, whereby they, or those who set them on, might be lyable to any question. And indeed none, as yet appeared, thô they had the Impudence to expose the Royal Corps to publique View; many [n] Abbots, Priors, Knights and Burgesses of Bristow and Gloceſter being sent for to see the same: Such confidence had they in this their new-contrived Art of Murder. But thô the Ordinary sort, who saw the skin all over whole and unbroke, concluded his Death to be no other, than Natural; yet Wise men could not but observe by the Colour of his Face, that his Death was not without many violent struglings; and several that heard his dying Groans, did easily guess how things were Acted. But it was not then time to mutter any thing; and indeed it should seem but vain to attempt to Revenge him, when Dead, whom they durst do no more than pitty, while alive.

[h] M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 215.

[i] St Tho. de la More. p. ult. l. 22.

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

[k] Grafton p.218 & M.S. Vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. in Cantab. c. 215

[l] M.S. ibid. c. 215. John Harding c. 177. Sr Tho. de la More & omnes.

[n] Speed p. 566. b

He had done many Worthy things in his Time, and might have done more, had he not been so miserably interrupted: He founded [o] Oriel College in Oxford, whereof Adam Broom his Almoner was the first Provost; together with * St Mary-Hall in the said University, whereof Mr. [p] Richard Barnes, Vice-president of Magdalene College, was first Principal; besides the House which he gave there for twenty four Carmelite Fryers, Divines, according to a Vow he had made in his Escape from the defeat at Sterling. At his Mannor also at Langley in Hertfordshire, he built a Church called the Fryers-Preachers; where he Ordain'd, that the Soul of his Friend Gaveston should be for ever pray'd for. And where since hath been laid (beside many other Princes) the Body of Edmund Plantaginet, Sirnamed of this Langley, the place also of his Birth; which Edmund, was Fifth Son to our King Edward the Third, and in his Time [q] Duke of York, Earl of Cambridge, Lord of Tividale; together with his Lady Isabell, Second Daughter to Don Pedro King of Castille & Leon, from whom proceeded Edward the Fourth. But this Murder'd Prince, having been exposed to publique View, was Buried [r] without any Funeral Pomp, by the Benedictine Monks, in their Abbey of S Peter in Gloceſter: Where [s] afterwards (when the manner of his Death was found out, and the Principal Actors thereof had been brought to Condign Punishment) his Son King Edward the Third erected to his Memory a Fair Monument of White Stone, with his Portraiture thereon of Alabaster, in the second Arch, and on the Northside the Altar, betwixt two Pillars of the Tuscan Order: About which (near to the Capitals) are several Figures of Stags; with which they report, his Corps was drawn thither from Berkley-Castle. He lies there in his Robes, with his Crown on his Head (however in his Life it was taken from him) his Scepter in his Right Hand, and his Globe with a Cross thereon in his Left; An Angel sitting on each side at his Head, and a Lion at his Feet.

[o] Antiqu. Oxon. l. 2. p. 103.
* Daniel p. 218.
[p] Antiqu. Oxon. p. 370. Sandford Geneal. Hist. p. 153. & Antiqu. Oxon. l. 1. p. 100 & 101.

[q] Dugd. 2 Vol. Bar. p. 155.

[r] Speed p. 566. Polyd. Virgil. Baker, &c.
[s] Sandford's Geneal. Hist. p. 152, &c.

After this Manner about the end of the forementioned Scotch Expedition was this Miserable King more than barbarously Murder'd in the Midst of his Age; for he was hardly Fourty three Years old: A Man, that surely deserv'd a better end; but that he had the Unhappiness to trust too much in Prosperity, and to fix his Love on those, who were least Worthy of it; while he too rashly quarrel'd with his nearest Relations, before he had made any provision against them. His own Nature was very good; but Evil men made a bad Use of it: Mortimer and Adam Orleton, that Bishop of Hereford, were the Chief Causers of his Downfall; for having both been guilty of High Treason against him before, they were resolv'd now by any means to build build their own ſecurity upon his Ruine: ſo under the pretence of befriending the Queen, they wrought her to be as much concern'd in the Treaſon, as themſelves. AN. DOM. 1327. AN. REGNI I.

He was of a [t] very Elegant Compoſure of Body, of a goodly Stature, of a firm and healthy Conſtitution; of great Strength and Activity; Devout, Noble, and full of Natural good Propenſions; Liberal and Magnificent, Merciſull and Generous; Witty and Learned for that Age, as the Verſes he wrote, teſtifie; but not ſo ſoft as 'tis imagin'd; for no Man was more Stern and High-ſpirited to the Obſtinate: Yet we muſt allow him to have been more weak, then wicked; for he always deſign'd well, but was deceived by Appearances. He was a firm and conſtant Friend, and a flexible Enemy; a [u] ſtrict Obſerver of his Conjugal Faith; however ill requited. In War he was not Fortunate, by reaſon of the Envy among his Courtiers: ſome evil he did, but he ſuffer'd much more: No King ever had fewer Taxes, yet none found his People more Ungratefull: ſo that as one well obſerves, [x] how far he wrong'd his Subjects, doth not appear; but how rude and unjuſt they were toward him, is but too Manifeſt. He was a Man every way Worthy to be a King, had his Counſellours been Men of Integrity; but their ill Actions made him Odious; which becauſe he would not puniſh in their Perſons, he was fain to pay Dearly for it in his own: So little avails the Sacred Majeſty of a King, when the Multitude is too much exaſperated. He left behind him [y] Four Children, Edward his Eldeſt Son, that then Reign'd; John ſirnamed of Eltham, afterwards Earl of Cornwall; the Lady Joan of the Tower, in time Queen of Scotland; and the Lady Eleanora, who was given in Marriage to Reginald Earl of Guelders. His Death was ſoon greatly pittied, and at laſt ſeverely Revenged: But eſpecially the Welch [z] Nation (who in Regard of his Birth among them, had always held him for one of their own) as in his Life time they expreſſed a Wonderfull Love and Loyal Affection to him, ſo now they proſecuted his Unfortunate Death with Dolefull Elegies, which neither the fear of his Murderers, nor length of time could ever make them to forget. The Young King, his Son, firſt heard that he was Dead at Lincoln, being then upon his Return from York after the Scotch Expedition; but the Manner was not yet known, till his own Riper judgement diſcover'd the Myſtery. He [a] mourn'd at the News with more ſincerity than his Mother, who notwithſtanding bore a very troubled Countenance: And ſhe and Adam Orleton and Mortimer did ſo terrifie his Murderers, for all their producing the Letters of Commiſſion, that they were fain to fly the Land. Which many were willing they ſhould do, rather then be brought to a Tryal, where they might talk more, than ſome were willing to hear. Sr Thomas Gourney three years after, being taken at Marſeilles in France, and deliver'd up to be brought over for England, in order to his Tryal, was beheaded on the Sea (before he came hither) by private Inſtructions, as was thought, from ſome Grandees at Court, whoſe Intereſt it was that he ſhould not be brought to Examination. Sr John Maltravers had the Grace to ſee his ſin, and repent heartily of it: Howbeit, as he lived long after, he lived but Miſerably: The Principal Authors in due Seaſon we ſhall ſee brought to Condign Puniſhment.

[t] Catal. Honor. p. 158. & Knighton p. 2531. & Speed p. 560.

[u] Sr Tho. de la More p. 9. l. 43.

[x] Churchill p. 239.

[y] Speed p. 564. &c.

[z] Speed p. 549. a. § 40.

[a] Knighton p. 2552.

VIII. The young [b] King in his return to London was heartily welcomed by the Mayor and Aldermen, and the whole City: For he was a Prince of great hope, and had much vivacity in his Countenance, and courage in his Breaſt; upon which account all his Subjects lov'd him entirely. The gratefull Prince to ſet a Mark of his Royal favour upon that famous Metropolis, in a Parliament held at Weſtminſter, [c] which began on St. Brices Day, of his own accord, confirmed unto them their former Liberties, and granted new ones, which they never had before: Ordaining, that the Mayor of London for the time being, ſhould ſit in all Places within the Liberties, as the Kings Chief Juſtice; and that every Alderman, who had been Mayor, ſhould, while he continued true to the King and his Laws, be always Juſtice of the Peace within his own Ward. He alſo granted unto the Citizens the Fee Farm of London for three hundred Pounds per annum: And that the lawfull Franchiſes of the City ſhould not be ſeized into the Kings Hands, but only on Occaſion [d] of Abuſe or Miſuſe, or for Treaſon or Rebellion countenanced, or done, by the whole City. Further he ordain'd, that Southwark ſhould be under the government of the City; and that the Mayor of London as Bailiff of Southwark, ſhould depute after his own pleaſure, the Bailiff of that Burrough, under him. About the ſame time alſo he made the Company of Skinners in London, a Corporation; as they have ever ſince honourably continued even to this day: Himſelf for their greater Honour vouchſafing to be of their Brotherhood, as afterwards other Kings did in imitation of ſo great a Precedent; namely Richard

[b] Walſing. hiſt. p. 109. n. 20. & Fox Acts and Monuments p. 345.

[c] Joh. Tinemouth Aur. hiſt. p. 229. a. in Bibl. Lambeth.

[d] Inſt. par. 2. f. 20. Mirror c. 5. § 2 Fleta l. 2. c. 48. Plowd. com. fol. 40. Inſtit. par. 4. f. 253 Rich. Grafton p. 217.

[e] Stow's Survey London p. 248. & p. 604.

An. Dom. 1327. An. Regni I.

chard the Second, Henry the Fifth, Henry the Sixth, and Edward the Fourth: Nor hath this Honourable and Ancient Company been ungratefull to the Memory of this their Glorious Founder, but take all occaſions to teſtifie their Reſpect to his Name, and to preſerve his Glory to Poſterity. Particularly of late, they have at their own proper coſts and charges erected his Statue among the Kings of this Land in the Royal Exchange in London.

To accompany the late unhappy King of England to his Grave, there died about this time many other Potentates, Princes and Prelates, thô none ſo unfortunately, and by ſuch treacherous Cruelty, as our Edward of Caernarvon. And firſt there died Charles Earl of Valois, younger Brother to Philip the Fair, late King of France, and Uncle to Charles the Fair, then King of France, and Father to Philip of Valois afterwards in Oppoſition to King Edward the Third, made King of France. He had been all his time a right Frenchman, that is, an inveterate Enemy to the Engliſh Nation.

Nor did his Nephew, Charles King of France, himſelf long ſurvive him: But departed this life without Iſſue, being then about 32 years of Age, on the Kalends of February, Anno Dom. MCCCXXVIII, when he had Reigned ſix Years and one Month, leaving his Queen big with Child; which notwithſtanding died ſhortly after the Birth. So that the Right to the Crown devolved thereupon to our King Edward, the Eldeſt Son and Heir of Iſabella, the ſaid Charles his only Siſter ſurviving, and the Daughter of Philip the Fair. But the French Nation either deſpiſing King Edwards Youth, or moved by their own evil Genius (for it was afterwards the occaſion of unſpeakable Calamities to that Kingdom) prefer'd Philip of Valois, the Nephew of Philip the Fair, before King Edward the Son of Philip's Daughter, to the Throne of France. Accordingly on the 29 day of May following, * being then Trinity-Sunday, he was Crowned at Rheimes, [f] where the Holy Oyl, (wherewith Cloüis their Firſt Chriſtian King was anointed) is ſtill kept with great Veneration: But the ill conſequences of this his Coronation will abundantly appear hereafter.

* Lit. Dom. CB. Paſcha 3 April

[f] D' Avila l. 2. ad An. 1561.

There died alſo this Year the Lord [g] Walter Stuart of Scotland, Son in Law to King Robert Bruce and by the Lady Margaret, Father to Robert Stuart, who was afterwards King of Scotland, the Firſt of that Glorious Family: From whom is deſcended our Preſent Gracious Soveraign, King James the Second, whom God grant long and happily to Reign. About the ſame time Elizabeth, Queen of Scotland deceaſed, and not [h] long after there departed this life the King himſelf, Robert Bruce, that valiant Captain, very old and (as was ſaid) infected with the Leproſie, leaving behind him David his only Son and Heir, a young Prince of about Eight Years old, of whom we ſhall ſay much in the Proceſs of this Hiſtory.

[g] Buchan. p. 277.

[h] Id. Junii, An. 1328.

This King [i] Robert Bruce, was by birth an Engliſh Baron (as was alſo John [k] Baliol, his Competitor) thô by Marriages of their Houſes with the Royal Line of Scotland, they Both at laſt had a Title to the Crown of that Kingdom. King Robert (beſide his Brother [l] Edward, who was ſlain in battle by the Engliſh in Ireland) had a younger Brother, named Bernard Bruce, from whom deſcended the Noble Edward Bruce of Kinloſſe in Scotland, a Perſon of great eſteem and Merit in the Court of our Engliſh Solomon, King James the Firſt. His Son [m] Thomas Lord Bruce was by Letters Patents dated the 21 of June in the Ninth of the ſaid King James, created Earl of Elgin in Scotland, and on the Firſt of Auguſt, the Seventeenth of King Charles the Firſt, advanced to the Degree of a Baron of this Realm (as his Anceſtors for many Ages before had been) by the Title of Lord Bruce of Wharlton in the County of York: Whoſe Son and Heir Robert Lord Bruce was a Perſon of ſuch eminent merits, as well for his ſignall Loyalty in the late unhappy Defection, as ſince the Happy Reſtoration of Monarchy, that for a further addition of Honour, King Charles the Second of Bleſſed Memory, by Letters Patents bearing Date the 18 of March in the Sixteenth Year of his Reign, advanced him to the Titles of Lord Bruce of Skelton in the County of York, Vicount Bruce of Ampthill in Bedfordſhire, and Earl of Aylesbury in the County of Buckingham: And being alſo Hereditary High-Steward of the Honour of Ampthill, Lord Lieutenant of the Counties of Bedford, Huntington and Cambridge, Lord Chamberlain of the Kings Houſhold, and One of the Lords of His Majeſties moſt Honourable Privy Council, he lately departed this life to the infinite regret of all good and Loyal Men, and particularly of the whole Clergy of England, and all other Sons of Learning. But the Memory of him and his vertues is again revived in his Noble Heir and Succeſſor, Thomas now Earl of Aylesbury and Elgine: Who together with the Honours his Father enjoy'd is now Lord Lieutenant of Bedford and Huntington, and Gentleman of

[i] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 447.
[k] Id. ibid. p. 523.
[l] Speed p. 558. §. 33.
[m] Wright's Hiſt. of the Antiq. of Rutlandſhire p. 50. &c.

of the Bedchamber to the most Prudent and Heroick Monarch King James the Second: His two younger Brothers, Robert and James, whom I have had the honour to know here in Queens College in Cambridge, being most towardly Branches of that Ancient and Flourishing Family. AN. DOM. 1327. An. Regni I.

Nor is it altogether unworthy to mention the Great Ottomans Death, which [n] happen'd this year, being the 727th of the Turkish Hegira, after he had been rearing that vast Monarchy on the ruines of Christian Princes, for about 27 Years together. This Man was the first Founder of the Glorious Family of the Ottomans, which has ever since continued a Plague and Terrour to all Christendom: Orchanes his Son succeeded him in the Turkish Empire.

[n] Labbei Chronologia Technica ad hunc annum.

Also this Year departed three famous Prelates of this Nation, the one Dr. James Barkley, descended from the Noble House of the Lord Barkley, * who was consecrated Bishop of Exceter on the 15th of March 1327. by Walter Reginald Archbishop of Canterbury, at the Commandment of Queen Isabell, being reputed a very holy and discreet Person: But he enjoyed the Title not long, for about the 24 of June following he deceased, and was succeeded by one of equal wisdom and Nobility, Dr. John Grandesson, of whom, as also of his Family, more hereafter.

* Bp. Godw. Catal. Bpp. p. 406.

Dr. Thomas Cobham also, Bishop of Worcester died about the 20 of August; he was a very learned Man and a great Author, [o] as his Works declare; and by his wonderfull Meekness, Bounty, Sobriety and Modesty, obtain'd an universall love and respect, insomuch that he was commonly called the Good-Clerk: When he was Canon and Subdean of Salisbury, he was first, upon the vacancy of that See, elected Archbishop of Canterbury; but King Edward the Second in favour of Dr. Walter Reginald, vacating that Election, he was glad in the end to accept the Bishoprick of Worcester. He was now buried in the North Isle of the Body of Worcester Cathedral, which Isle he had Vaulted over at his own Expence. The Bloody Bishop of Hereford succeeded him; of whom, more in another place.

[o] Pits. de illust. Angl. script. An. 1316. Bp. Godwin Catal. p. 443.

Another that went off this Year was [p] Dr. Walter Reginald Archbishop of Canterbury, of whom something must be said for the Instruction of others. He had been Chaplain to King Edward the First, by whom he was made Parson of Wimberton, and after that, Schoolmaster to his Son, Edward the Second; who in the first Year of his Reign, Anno MCCCVII, advanced him to the place [q] of Lord Treasurer of England, and in the year following to the Bishoprick of Worcester, and two years after he made him Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, and Chancellor of England. After this King Edward was so good a Master to him, that upon the Death of the good and learned Dr. Robert Winchelsey Archbishop of Canterbury, he vacated the Election of Dr. Cobham (as we shew'd before) and caused this Man to be prefer'd to that eminent Dignity. And accordingly he was with great Pomp and Solemnity [r] Installed on the 19 of April Anno MCCCXIII, the King himself with the Queen and many Nobles honouring him with their Presence. He is indeed [s] by some commended for his love to Learning and Vertue; I am sure, he wanted these three no mean Qualities, Loyalty, Constancy and Gratitude. For upon the Return of Queen Isabell into England in such Hostile manner, as was shew'd before, against her Lord and Husband; this Man at that time manifested himself to be indeed a good Politician, but (as Bishop Godwin too mildly phrases it) a very [t] weak Man. For thô a while he seem'd outwardly to adhere to the King his Master, yet even then privately he assisted the Queen with vast Sums of Mony, as resolving to play his own Game, whatever Conscience might perswade, or Religion teach to the contrary: But when the Kings downfall was now no longer doubtfull, then he openly play'd the Traitor, forsaking his Lawfull Prince, his good Lord and Patron, who had gradually advanced him from a mean Condition to the highest Titles of Honour. For which, thô he scap'd the publique censure of the Law, yet did he enjoy the fruits of this double-hearted Dealing but for one Year: For on the [u] 16 of November following, this first Year of King Edwards Reign, he died of grief and horror of mind at Mortlack, after he had held that Seat 13 years and about seaven Months from his Instalment. But here he shall stand mark'd out to Posterity for an Example and terror to all Traitors, whom neither the Sacred Function it self, nor any other either Dignity or Merit, ought (in my Opinion) to defend from deserved Infamy: Since Treason cannot proceed, but from the most unworthy and ignoble Minds in the World, or however it renders them so. Ingratitude of it self is the basest, most unjust, and ungenerous thing in Nature, but Ingratitude to our Natural Prince most abominable beyond all Expression; since to his Service we are most strictly obliged by Laws Divine and Humane: How much more then when he is unto us a Good and

[p] Godwin Catal. p. 129.

[q] Philpot's Catal. Treas. and Chancel. p. 24. & p. 37.

[r] Godwin p 129. Walsingh. hist. p. 78.

[s] Pits. p. 419.

[t] Godw. p. 130.

[u] Godw. p. 130. &c. Thornes Chron. p. 2039. n. 30.

An. Dom. 1327. Gracious Lord, and heapeth upon our Heads many ſignall and perſonal Favours? He was ſucceeded by a very Worthy and Learned Doctor in Divinity, [x] Simon Mepham, an Oxford Man by Education; by Birth of Kent, and Canon at that time of Chicheſter.

[x] Thornes Chro. p.2039. Walſin. hiſt. p. 109. Godwin p. 131. & Pitſæ. p.429.

This Year were ſeen [y] two Moons in the Firmament, the one was clear, and the other dark, as at times might be ſeen over all the World; and now the Quarrel was high between Pope John XXII. who kept his Court at Avignon in Provence, and Lewis of Bavaria, Emperour of Germany; who in revenge of his being Excommunicated by the ſaid Pope, went to Rome, being invited thither [z] by the Faction of the Gibellines, where he ſet up an Antipope againſt Pope John, by whom he was crowned Emperour: But this new Pope was ſoon laid aſide; thô the Diſſention between the Emperour and the Pope was never fully made up. And becauſe of the foreſaid Prodigy, and others that happen'd about the ſame time, it was commonly ſaid, "That the World was nigh at an End."

[y] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. Cantab. c.214. ad fin.

[z] Labb. Chron. Techn. ad hunc ann.

In thoſe days one [a] Cichus Aſculanus, Dr. in Phyſick, a Philoſopher and publique Profeſſor of Aſtronomy at Bologna in Italy, being accuſed for a Necromancer, was burnt alive at Florence, in the Seaventieth year of his Age: Whoſe Learning in Judicial Aſtrology, meeting with an ignorant Age, might paſs for Conjuration, as a little after Petrarch himſelf was looked on for a Wizard, even by a Pope of Rome. Thô [b] indeed it was laid among other things to his Charge, that in a Treatiſe called de Sphæra, which he ſet forth at Bologna, he affirmed, that Spirits were generated in the Superior Orbes, which by Incantation could be compelled to wonderfull Operations; and that the Stars had Influence upon the Wills of men, and could enforce and determine them: And which ſeems moſt horrible, that our Saviour Chriſt being born under ſuch a Poſition, was thereby neceſſitated to live Meanly, and to die Miſerably: But that Antichriſt being to be born under a quite different Poſition, ſhould obtain immenſe Riches, Power, and Dominion. But we are not here to inquire, how true or untrue this Charge was; wherefore we ſhall end this firſt Year and Chapter together.

[a] Sherburn. on Manilius his Spher. in Catal. Aſtron. p.35.

[b] Odoric. Rain. Anno Chr. 1327 §.46. & Joh. Villani l.10. c.41.

CHAPTER the Second.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward takes to Wife the Lady Philippa, Youngeſt Daughter to William the Good Earl of Heinalt. II. The ſhamefull Peace ſtruck up with the Scots at Northampton, at which time all the Evidences, which Recorded the Subjection of that Nation to the Crown of England, are deliver'd up again. III. King Edward looſes hereby in the Opinion of his Neighbours, eſpecially, the French and Scots. IV. The Inſolence and Power of Mortimer, whereby he provokes certain Peers to Arms: A Parliament at Salisbury, the Lords reconcil'd to the King, Mortimer made Earl of March. V. The Pedigree of Henry Lord Beaumont. VI. Mortimer entertains the King.

An. Regni II. I. A While [a] after the Scotch Expedition, King Edward by Advice of the Queen his Mother, with the Conſent of his Uncles, the Earl of Lancaſter, the Lord of Wigmore, and all the Barons of the Realm, ſent Dr [b] Roger Northborough Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, with two Knights Banerets, and two Men Learned in the Laws, to the Lord John of Heinalt, to requeſt of him in way of Friendſhip, that he would join with them to require of his Brother the Earl of Heinalt, one of his Daughters in Marriage for the Young King of England, their Maſter. For the King and the Queen his Mother, had ſuch a kindneſs for that Family, that at this time no Lady in the World could have ſtood in Competition with one of Sr John's Neices, for King Edwards Affections. That ſome ſuch Motion had been formerly made, I will not abſolutely deny; thô it ſhould ſeem partly by this manner of requeſting, and partly by what follows, that as yet no bargain, or mutual affiance had been made, (as many ſuppoſe) perhaps not mention'd:

[a] Froiſ. c.19.

[b] Aſhmoles Garter p. 669. ex Pat. 1. Ed. 3. p. 3. m. 15. Dat. 8. Octob.

tion'd: since now they were fain to apply themselves to Sr John's Mediation, who seem'd hitherto ignorant of any such matter, thô himself so lately had left England. When the Ambassadors with an Honourable Equipage were come to Valenciennes, the chief City of Heinalt, the Earl William and his Lady Jane de Valois received them very gladly, and entertain'd them during their stay with great Splendour and Magnificence, 'Tis reported, that one day, [c] when the Earl brought forth all his Five Daughters to their View, while the others being amazed with the Beauties and delicate Shape of them all, stood in deep suspence, not knowing which to prefer; the piersing Eye of the Bishop, observing with good heed the Lady Philippa to be the best built about the Hips, and of a good Sanguine Complexion agreeing with the Kings, he secretly advis'd his Colleagues, that she was the Lady among them all that was most likely with her sweet Disposition to please the King, their Master, and also to bring forth a numerous and Hopefull Progeny. This, coming thus from a Bishop, whose Order was not then allow'd to Marry, gave occasion of much Diversion and Mirth to the Company: But however the Judgement prevail'd, and Madam Philippa (who was the very [d] youngest of the Ladies, and hardly fourteen years of age) was pitch'd upon to be their Queen. This Story, however unfit it may seem to some for the lightness of it, to appear in this place, I thought good to set down; not only because it bears some Reason with it, but because to those who consider the Event, it may rather seem a Work of Providence, the Bishop by Chance, or by some Impulse, or by his Skill in Nature, happening on what prov'd really a Truth.

AN. DOM. 1328. An. Regni II.

[c] John Harding c. 178. fol. 177. Stanza 2, 3, 4, & c. 182. fol. 184.

[d] Sic in illius Epitaphio Guilielmi Hannonis soboles postrema Philippa, Hic roseo quondam Pulchra decore jacet. Stows Survey London p. 505.

Upon this Conclusion, the Earl, who knew the Quality of the Ambassadors, and their full Instructions in the Affair; after many thanks, acknowledging the great Honours done to his House by the King of England, his Mother and his Council, said, "He was ready to allow the Consummation of the Business, provided his Holiness "the Pope would consent to give them a Dispensation: For indeed the Lady Philippa's Mother, Jane de Valois, was Daughter to Charles Earl of Valois, which Charles was Uncle to Isabella, King Edward's Mother. The Ambassadors were well content with this Answer, and immediately dispatch'd away the two Knights, and the two Learned in the Law to Avignon (where at that time and long after the Popes resided) to obtain a Dispensation. The Pope at that time was John XXII, who having well consider'd the Equity of the Cause, with the Consent of the whole College of the Cardinals, granted their desire, and after a Splendid Entertainment dismist them. For these were fit Servants for a King: They dispatch'd their Masters business with great Discretion and Expedition, minding nothing, but how to finish this great Affair thoroughly and speedily. Upon this all the rest was concluded and agreed on between the Parties, and, while Preparations were making to Convey the young Lady into England, according to the Dignity of the House whence she came, and the weight of that Title she was going to receive, the Marriage [e] was first solemnized by a sufficient Proxy, sent to Valenciennes by the King of England.

[e] Ashmole p. 669.

Hereupon after some few enforced Delays of Feastings and Princely Entertainments among her Parents and Relations, the Ambassadors with their new Queen, her Uncle Sr. John & other honourable Company, in great satisfaction took the Sea at Whitsan near Calais, and so came all safe with a merry Gale to Dover.

In their Approach to London, [f] the Mayor and Aldermen went forth in their Habits well attended to meet their New Queen, and to do her honour: 'Twas about Christmas, when she came to London, and the whole City enlarged their Joys and Feastings in honour of so welcome a Guest. From London they all went to York, where the Court then was, and there [g] on the twenty fourth Day of January, being a Sunday, and the Eve of St. Pauls Conversion, the Marriage was Solemnized, at which Dr. [h] William Melton Archbishop of York, and Dr. John Hotham Bishop of Ely, sang the Mass: And afterward [i] on the first Sunday in Lent following was the Young Queen crown'd at Westminster with much Pomp and Glory. Upon these happy Nuptials there was great Joy over all England, but especially at Court, where there was nothing but Justs and Turnaments in the Day-time, Maskings, Revels and Interludes with Songs and Dances in the Evenings, and continual Feasting with great Magnificence for three Weeks together.

[f] Knighton p. 2552.

[g] Id. Ibid. & Froiss. c. 19. & Fabian p. 195. Lit. Dom. C. B.

[h] M. S. Vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 216.

[i] Sandford Geneal. hist. p. 159.

Soon after the Queens Coronation; all, except a very few of her Attendants, Relations, and Countrymen, departed with her Uncle the Lord John of Beaumont, into their own Country, highly satisfied with their Entertainment, and well rewarded by the King of England. Among those few necessary Servants that stay'd here with her, there there was one a very proper and well-shap'd young Gentleman, of strong Limbs and exalted Courage, named Sr. Walter Manny, [k] Lord of the Town of Manny in the Diocess of Cambray; who was then Carver to the Queen, but after that became for his exceeding Valour, Generosity, and Eminence in all Vertue, One of the most Renowned and Gallant Knights in the whole World, as the Sequel of this History will abundantly declare.

An. Dom. 1328. An. Regni II.

[k] Froiss. c.19.
[l] Ashmole p.669

Now [l] there had been before in this King's Father's Days several other Matches proposed for him; thô none of them took but this last: And first his Father had design'd him for the Lady Margaret, Eldest Daughter to William the Good Earl of Heinalt, and Sister to this Queen Philippa, who was afterwards Married to Lewis the Emperour: Another time for Sibylla, a Kinswoman of the said Earls; and thirdly for Iolant, the Daughter of James King of Aragon; fourthly for the Lady Eleanora, Sister to Alphonso King of Spain; and while this Match was in Treaty, another Alphonso King of Portugal, propos'd his Daughter to the Prince; but neither this nor that came to any effect, because all former measures were broken by that great and sudden Alteration of Affairs in England.

II. And thus was King Edward a Married Man at the age of Fifteen; but not fully Lord of himself, being kept from the true Knowledge of Affairs by the Queen Dowager and her Minion, the Lord Mortimer; who by his great Power with her, so Lorded it over his Betters, that he began to grow insupportable to the Kings Uncles, and Henry Earl of Lancaster, which ill-will of their's was encreased by this Occasion.

[m] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 216.

In [m] Whitsunday Week, being the latter end of May, there was a Parliament held at Northampton, in which first King Edward began to stir about his Title to France: For Charles the Fair, King of France, and Brother to his Mother Isabella, Queen Dowager of England, being lately dead without Issue-Male; notwithstanding, that King Edward acknowledged their Salic Law, whereby an Infant Daughter of the said Charles was excluded, (wherefore neither did He claim the Crown for his Mother) yet he maintain'd this Point, [n] That the Sons of the Daughters, having no such Imbecillity of Sex, were not at all uncapable, and that so the Peers of France ought to prefer him, who was a Male, and Grandchild to King Philip the Fair, before Philip of Valois (another Pretender to that Crown) who was but a Nephew. These things [o] being discussed in Parliament, it was thereupon Ordained; That Adam Orleton Bishop of Worcester, and Roger Northborough Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield should go into France, and there in the Name of King Edward their Master, claim that Kingdom, and as much as in them lay, hinder the Coronation of the said Philip of Valois. But of this matter we shall say no more, till we are called to enter upon the Wars of France, which King Edward in his Riper Years undertook upon this Occasion. Now we must look upon him as influenced by others counsels, and so neither Formidable abroad, nor Powerfull at home; and one notable Instance thereof appeared in this very Parliament at Northampton; where not so much the Honour and Profit of the King and his Realm was respected, as the enriching, security and advancement of the Lord Mortimer.

[n] Mezeray ad an. 1328.
[o] Antiq. Brit. p.228. n. 50.

Here the two Spencers, Father and Son, Edmund late Earl of Arundel (who had been executed by the Queen Mothers Party without any legal Process made against them.) And Walter Stapleton late Bishop of Excester (whom for firmly adhering to his Master, King Edward the Second, against Queen Isabell's Pretensions, the Commons of London had in a seditious tumult illegally beheaded, together with his brother [p] Sr. Richard Stapleton, a valiant and loyal Knight, who died in the same manner at the same time;) all these now, thô dead, * were in this Parliament attainted of High Treason by the directions and influence of the Queen Mother, and the Lord Mortimer. Whether it proceeded of implacable Malice, which recked not to pursue them even into their Graves; or whether by this means they meant to cover their former unjustifiable Proceedings against those Persons by a subsequent countenancing of the Action in Parliament: Such pittifull shifts are Men put to, when once they deviate from the straight way of Justice and Vertue; thô at last all disguises must fall off, and Wickedness appear open in all its natural Turpitudes. From the same Influence also at this time, by very subtle dealing and precontrived Overtures (which the Scots were underhand dealt withall to propose) a base and dishonourable Peace was struck up with that Nation, profitable indeed to Mortimer and the Old Queen (who with Adam Orleton Bishop of Worcester, were the chief contrivers of it) but utterly inconsistent with the Honour of the Young King, or Profit of his Realm and People. The Reason that moved the Scots to part with so much Money, as was given by them upon the Establishing this Peace, was, because they were beforehand assured, that they should have a good Return

[p] Godw. Catal. Bishops p. 405.
* Martin Ed. 3. p. 104. M.S. Record. p. 12. & Sr Rob. Cottons Abridgm. p. 8.

turn made them in consideration thereof; beside they were sure to loose much more by the War next Year, if continued; because their King Robert lay now on his Death-bed and almost in his Grave; and his Young Son David was but little more than out of the Cradle: Their General the Lord Randulph began to be very sickly, and the other famous Captain the Lord James Douglas had undertaken a journey to Palestine, as soon as ever his Lord King Robert should depart this Life, to present his Heart in the Holy Land to the Sepulchre of his Saviour; as the King had adjur'd him on his Death-bed to do. AN. DOM. 1328. An. Regni II.

On all these Reasons, and because they had already sounded those who sway'd most in the Government of England (lest the Young King should this year revenge the Injuries of the last) the Scots with much seeming humility came to the foresaid Parliament at Northampton, desiring a lasting Peace between the two Kingdoms; which that they never meant in good earnest, this is an undoubted Argument; because their King Robert was ever of the mind and so declared on [q] his Death-bed, "That no perpetual Peace ought ever to be made with England; lest for want of use the Scots "should forget their skill in Arms; and that only sometimes to get an Advantage, "or to avoid an apparent Disadvantage, they might strike up a Temporary Peace, to "endure but for two or three Years at the farthest. But however, that the Scots now required Peace in so humble a manner, and by no less a Man than the Lord Douglas himself, this was wonderfully pleasing to those, who could not penetrate into the Design. And there it was demanded by the English, and with small adoe agreed unto by the Scots, that they should pay unto the King of England (thô it was meant to Mortimer) for the Dammages done by them last year in the North, [r] 20000 Marks, thô Others say 30000 Marks, and some as many Pounds. Upon which pretended large Allowance, the Scots cunningly proposed, That for their better Security, and to make the Amity more lasting, their Young Prince of Scotland might have the King's Sister, the Lady Joan of the Tower, in Marriage. Then with a pretended Zeal, it was put home to the Scots, that least new Quarrels should arise about Limits, they would now renounce all claim to the Counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, or any other Place or Places, which any of that Nation hath at any time held in England; which was readily by the Scots granted, as had before been privily agreed: But then again it was humbly motion'd by them at the same time, that all English Men should be prohibited from holding any Lands in Scotland, unless only those who should there personally reside. This was by the Contrivers acknowledged to be but just, in equivalence to those Pretensions the Scots had so readily relinquished in England: Only the Lord [s] Henry Piercy (who was one of the Twelve appointed to advise and guide the young King,) was utterly against that Clause; but he was born down by Mortimer's Party, and so this also was granted.

[q] Hector p. 399. lin. 60.

[r] Knighton p. 2558. n. 10. in Artic.

[s] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. 273.

Whereupon the Encroachment grew higher; so that now his Majesty himself was humbly requested to lay down his claim to all Superiority over that Crown and Kingdom; else how could they be secure, his Subjects would lay by their Pretensions? And also it must needs raise Heart-burnings between the two Realms, so long as One could shew Evidences and Trophies of the Others slavery. This, without much consideration, was look'd upon but as a consequence of the former; and so many ancient Deeds and Evidences of the Scotch Dependance on England, with all the Instruments of their former Homages and Fealties from the most Ancient Times, till the Days of Edward the First, this King's Grandfather, (to whom John [t] Baliol resign'd his Right to that Kingdom) as they are reckon'd up by [u] Walsingham, [x] Grafton and others, are all now rendred back again to Scotland: And besides this, many ancient Jewels and Muniments, among which the Sacred Black Cross of Scotland, with the famous Evidence, called the Ragman Roll, containing all the Homages and Fealties of the King of Scotland, and of all the Prelates, Earls and Barons of that Realm, with all their Seals [y] appendant thereto, and other Charters and Remembrances, that King Edward the First had of his Right to the Realm of Scotland; besides the Evidences of what his Barons held in that Kingdom: All these were now deliver'd up again. In consideration of all which Grants, the King of Scotland agrees to pay to King Edward the foresaid summ of 30000 Marks; of which be sure the Authors of this contrivance had their share.

[t] Harding fol. 232. c. 240. & 241.

[u] Walsing. Hist. p. 17. &c. item p. 49. &c.

[x] Grafton p. 172. &c. item p. 186. &c.

[y] M. S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 217.

And yet however either of the Kings reserved to himself liberty (after a Truce of four Years) to refuse the Peace, if then he should not like the Conditions: To which the Councils of both Nations were willing to agree; for as much as the One expected the return of their great Commander James Douglas from the Holy Land by that time;

and

An. Dom. 1328. An. Regni II.

and the Other were cautious of confirming the Peace for a longer time than the King's Minority; since they all perceived him very desirous already to get Honour on the Scottish Nation. This is that Famous (or rather Infamous) Peace, justly accounted so dishonourable to England, that the Scots themselves afterward by way of Triumph, Nick-named their Queen, Joan Make-Peace; as if the Realm of England had made that Match out of fear, to rid their hands of the War: However the Lady Joan of the Tower, King Edward's Sister, was accordingly on the [z] Twelfth of July, or as [a] others, on the 20, being the Festival of St. Mary Magdalen, taken in Marriage by David Bruce the Young King of Scotland, his Father being dead but the Month before.

[z] Joh. Tinemouth aur. hist. p. 229. ex æd. Lambeth.
[a] Fabian p. 196. & M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. Cantabr. c. 217.

III. When these things were noised abroad, King Edward began to appear Contemptible in the eyes of his Neighbours; who did not at all consider, what Arts were used to mislead his Youth, by those who hop'd always to stand at the Helm. The Scots made many insulting Rhymes in derision of our Nation, one whereof is chiefly remembred, viz. [b]

[b] Fabian p. 196. & M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 213.

Long Beards Heartless, Painted Hoods Witless,
Gay Coats Graceless, Make England Thriftless.

Even Philip of Valois, the French King, who held that Crown but by Injustice from our King Edward, is so far now from doubting to be called to any Account for it by him; that he begins to meditate a Resolution of summoning him to come and render him Homage, for his Lands in France, held of that Crown. But this matter he was forced for a while to delay, by reason of a War with the Flemmings, which about this time he undertook on the behalf of the Earl of Flanders, their Lord, whom they had seditiously expell'd. And indeed he found such [c] Success at Cassell; that he slew 16000 of them, and reduc'd all Flanders to his Obedience, obliging them by Bond, never to bear Arms against the King of France, and so having restored the Earl to his former Authority, being elevated with the conceit of this Success; he began to look at Higher things.

[c] Froiss. c. 21. & 22. & Fabian p. 264, &c.

But we are not yet called to Foreign Affairs: Wherefore for a while we shall be content to speak of matters at home, Inglorious truly for the most part, and therefore Ungratefull; but such, as may bring Profit to the Observant Reader, and are by no means to be omitted; being necessary for the making out the Series of this Story, and also very Usefull to inform Persons of High Condition, how to bear themselves, by the Example of others, who went before them in the like Honours.

IV. Roger Lord Mortimer [d] now does all, Influences all, and Personates all: He only places and displaces Great Officers, and wholly Assumes the King's Authority, and solely possesses his Ear. The [e] Earl of Lancaster himself cannot be permitted to approach his Lord and Master, to inform or advise him; nor any, either Uncle, or other Baron, how Great soever, unless of Mortimer's Opinion; and even then, whatever they said, was watch'd by such as he had planted about the King for that purpose. Among other instances of his Towring Spirit, he presum'd to hold a [f] Round Table at Bedford, in imitation of King Arthur, that Famous Breton. Others confounding this Mortimer with a Former of the same Name; place this Round Table at Kenelworth Castle in Warwickshire, where they reckon up an hundred Knights, and as many Fair Ladies, besides other Guests and Spectators: Many other Knights and Gentlemen repairing thither from Foreign parts, for the Exercise of Arms, by Tiltings and Martial Tournements: While the Ladies sported themselves, and delighted the Presence, with the more feminine Diversion of Dancing; being all richly clad in silken Mantles, and other Ornaments agreeable to their Sex and Quality. But here the Lord Mortimer appeared, as the occasion, so the Chief of all that were there, both in the Ladies Eyes, and the Opinion of the Knights themselves. These Sports were begun on the Eve of St. Matthew the Apostle (Mortimer perhaps out of a vain and cruel Pride, insulting over the Ashes of the Dead King, whom he had caused a year before to be murder'd on that Festival) and so continued till the Morrow after St. Michael, being the space of 11 days. Let none conclude this last Reflection to be Malicious, since not only the Day seems to warrant my Opinion, but the place also of the Solemnity, being that very Castle, where that poor King first lost both his Crown and Liberty. But in very deed, this Round-Table at Kenelworth, was [g] another thing at another time, and held by another, Roger Lord Mortimer in the days of King Edward the First: For thô a [h] Great Man calls that Roger,

[d] Knighton p. 2553.
[e] John Tinemouth Aur. hist. ex Æd. Lamb. p. 229.
[f] Knighton p. 2553. n. 50.
[g] Monastic. Ang. p. 223. a.
[h] Dugd. Warw. p. 164. b.

ger, Earl of March; 'tis done only by inadvertency; for even this Roger was not yet Earl of March, thô he was the * First of that name ever so called. But because the Round-Table is not only here mention'd, but must hereafter be much more spoken of, I shall here once for all observe, [i] that the Round-Table was devised to avoid Contention, about Precedency, and Athenæus observes it to have been Customary among the Ancient Gauls to sit at their Round Tables, their Esquires waiting behind with their Targets in their hands.

AN. DOM. 1328. An. Regni II.

* Catal. Honor. p. 574.

[i] Cambden in Hantshire f. 191 & Dugd. Warw. p. 164.

But to return to Mortimer, this his High Carriage was so greatly stomacked by the King's Uncles, and the Earl of Lancaster, that they resolv'd to pull down the Pride of this Man, or to die in the Undertaking: But as yet there could none of them come to the private Speech of the Young King, to lay before him the true State of Affairs, they were so well watched by Mortimer.

On the Quindene [k] of St Michael, a Parliament was called at Salisbury; whither (thô it had been Decreed, that no Person whatsoever should presume to come Armed) the Lord of Wigmore notwithstanding came with a great Rout of Armed Men at his Heels; so that the Earl of Lancaster durst not come; but for his own Defence put himself in Arms, and then sent to the King his Reasons, both of taking Arms, and absenting from Parliament: And it seems his Design was so apparently for the King's Honour, that it was countenanced with the Presence of the King's two Uncles, Thomas Earl of Norfolk, and Edmund Earl of Kent, Stephen Gravesend Bishop of London, and John Stratford Bishop of Winchester (who was afterwards Arch-bishop of Canterbury) Thomas Lord Wake, Governour of Hertford Castle, Henry Vicount Beaumont, Sr. Thomas Rosselin, Sr. Hugh Audley and others, several whereof were of the twelve, appointed to be the King's Guardians, and the rest all Persons of Worth and Nobility.

[k] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 541. & Catal. Honor. p. 574. Thô the year there is said to be 1327. by Mistake.

The first occasion of this breach, besides the Insupportable Pride and Avarice of the Lord Mortimer, was this: The Lord [l] Robert Holland, who had in the days of King Edward the Second occasion'd the Death of Thomas Earl of Lancaster, however he had thereby incurr'd the indignation of the people, upon Queen Isabella's return into England, was not only deliver'd from Prison, but became very Gracious with the said Queen, and was of her Council, and of Mortimer's: But for all that, being, about the Sessions of this Parliament, taken [m] in a Wood, near Henley-Park, as he was riding to Queen Isabell, then at London, by Sr. Thomas Withers; the said Sr. Thomas smote off his Head, and sent it to his Master Henry Earl of Lancaster, then at Waltham-Cross in Essex, as an acceptable present. This was not so well receiv'd by the said Earl of Lancaster, whose Brother had been betray'd by Sr. Robert Holland, as it was resented by the Queen Mother, who had a great Favour for him; and therefore she instantly urged the King her Son, to take vengeance of his Murtherers, especially of Sr. Thomas Withers. But him the Earl of Lancaster had concealed; till being therefore threatned by the Queen Mother, and also stirr'd up by the Publick Clamours of the People, who were extreamly oppress't by her and Mortimer (whereof the King bare all the blame, thô he was but young and of tender Age) as a Man zealous for his Masters Honour, of whom the Chief Care had been committed to him by Parliament, he began to Assemble his Friends and Retinue, unto whom he spake of the King's Honour, which was now expos'd to obloquy; and it seems the matter was so manifest, that the King's two Uncles, and many others of the Highest Quality, and the Chief Citizens of London, swore unto him, to stand by him in Opposition to Mortimer. And this was the substance of their Design, [n] 1. That the King should hold his Houshold, and his Meny, "according to the Dignity of a King, having all his Royalties entire to himself; "and that the Queen Mother should deliver up into the King's hands all manner of "Lordships, Rents, Towns and Castles, that pertained to the Crown of England; "and that she should live on the Third part of the Rents of England, as other "Queens before her had done, and on nothing else. 2. Also that Sr. Roger Morti-"mer, should live upon his own Lands, for which yet he had already disinherited many; "so that the Commons might not be destroyed thrô his wrongfull encroachments. "3. Also to make inquisition, how and by whom the King was betrayed and falsly "deceived at Stanhop, and thrô whose Counsel the Scots were suffer'd to escape by "Night out of the King's hands. 4. Also how, and by whose Counsel the Ordi-"nance that was made at the King's Coronation, was put down, viz. that the King "for the good of the Realm, and safety of his Person and Honour, should be Go-"verned and Ruled by Twelve the Greatest and Wisest Peers of the Realm, with-"out whom nothing should be Granted, nor done; which Order being neglected; "many

[l] M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 218.

[m] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 73.

[n] M.S. ibidem.

An. Dom. 1328. An. Regni II.

"many Harms, Grievances, and Scandals have happen'd unto the King, and to his "Realm: And that is to understand, Forasmuch as Edward, sometime King of En- "gland, was ordained by consent of the Community in full Parliament, to remain un- "der the Custody and Governance of Henry Earl of Lancaster, his Cozen, for safe- "ty of his Person, he was taken out of the Castle of Kenelworth, where he was in "Custody, and thrô Counsel of the Queen Mother and Mortimer, without consent "of any Parliament, they took and lead him, where none of his Kindred might come "to the speech or sight of him: And after traitrously took and murd'red him; for whose "Death a foul Slander arose thrô all Christendom. 5. Also all the Treasure, that "Edward of Carnarvon had left any where, either in England, or Wales, was wast- "ed and carried away without the Will or Knowledge of King Edward his Son, to "the great Detriment of him and his People. 6. Also, thrô whose Counsel it "was, that the King gave up the Kingdom of Scotland; for the which Realm the "King's Ancestors had full sore travailed, and so did many a Noble Man for their "Rights: But now all was deliver'd up unto David, the Son of Robert Bruce, "who had no Right unto that Realm, as all the World knows. 7. Also by whom "the Charters and Remembrances, that the King had of his Right to Scotland, were "taken out of the Treasury, and given to the Scots, the King's Enemies, to the "Disherison of him, and of his Successours, and to the great Loss of his Liege Peo- "ple, and the Reproof of all English men for evermore. 8. And lastly, wherefore "the Lady Joan of the Tower, the King's Sister, was disparag'd and Married unto "David, the Son of Robert Bruce, that was a Traytour, and Enemy unto England; "and through whose Counsel she was given into our Enemies hands out of England. While the Earl of Lancaster, the Earl of Norfolk, and the Earl of Kent, with their Council, were contriving how to pursue this matter, the Parliament sat at Salisbury, to which they refus'd to come, because of Mortimer's formidable Retinue, and put themselves in a Posture of Defence against the Queen Mother and Mortimer, being enforced with 600 men of Arms from London.

But certainly 'tis good for Great Men at Court (when they see a Favourite solely to possess their King) not therefore to be carried away with unjust and causless Envy, if they can perceive the Person to be notwithstanding blameless, or usefull to the King's Affairs: For Envy is a fierce, unbridled, and devouring Evil, always ungenerous and void of Equity, and withall, often thrô Precipitancy more hurtfull to its Owner, then its Object. But if the Favourite appears really Haughty beyond Sufferance, and dangerous to the Publique; a Man truly Loyal and Brave, ought by any means to consult the Interest of his Master: Yet this he must not think to perform well, by flying out first, for that makes his own Cause seem the worst; but rather by wisely concealing his Resentments, till a fit Occasion offers it self: For otherwise we do but rashly declare, we are Enemies to One, who is better provided than We our selves, and will be sure to make use of his present Advantage to our Ruine. The truth of this Aphorism, appears from the sequel of this Story; for by this publique Breach, which the Earls of Kent and Lancaster, with their Associates, seem'd first to make; Mortimer held the better appearance, and so lightly perswaded the young King, that these Men sought no less, then his Life and Kingdom: Whereupon he obliged him to ride out against them in Person, about [o] 24 miles in one Night, towards [p] Bedford, where they were assembled in Arms, thô only resolv'd to stand on the Defensive part: But by Mediation of Dr. Simon Mepham [q] Archbishop of Canterbury and others; upon their submission, Mortimer also cunningly pretending to befriend them therein, a formal Peace was huddled up, and all taken to Mercy; thô not without severe Fines imposed on them all, which for the most part were converted to the profit of Mortimer: And particularly the Earl [r] of Lancaster was then Fined at no less then 11000 pounds, thô that summe was never paid. We shall see notwithstanding shortly, by what subtle contrivances this aspiring Great One could find Occasion to destroy the Noble Earl of Kent, and perhaps he would have done as much to the Earl of Lancaster, had he not despis'd his Age, which by that time rendred him almost decrepit. On the contrary, he himself at this very Parliament, attain'd to greater Honour; for here the King's own Brother, John of Eltham, being made Earl of Cornwall, and Sr. James [s] Butler of Ireland, Earl of Ormond; this Roger Mortimer Lord of Wigmore (against the liking of many Great Men) was at the same time Created Earl of March, in the Marches of Wales. Thus did this notable Politician overreach all his Enemies, the King's Uncles and the Bishops being indeed taken to Favour, and seemingly pardon'd; but the Lord Henry Beaumont, [o] An non Bradford, legend. quod est in Wiltoniâ 24. Mill. à Sarisberiâ. Bedford immane quantum distat.

[p] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 145. ex Leland. Collect. 1 Vol. p. 685.

[q] John Tinemouth p. 229.

[r] M.S. Vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 215.

[s] Dugd. Warw. p. 445. a.

Beaumont, Sr. Thomas Roſſelin, Sr. William Truſſel, and Sr. Thomas Withers, as not being included in this Pardon, or not daring to truſt to it, were fain to fly the Land, till the Death of Mortimer. For to theſe Men he was implacable, they being the firſt Perſons, who began boldly to challenge him for the Death of the Old King, (thô ſome of them had been concern'd in his Depoſal) for which this new Earl of March would gladly have had a full Revenge upon them: But however upon this their flight, he got many good parcels of their Lands and Poſſeſſions to be ſieſed on for the King's Uſe, in name; but for his own, in reality. AN. DOM. 1328. An. Regni II.

V. Here, becauſe the foreſaid Henry Lord Beaumont is not only mention'd on theſe great Accounts already, but muſt challenge much more to be ſaid of him hereafter; as alſo that it may be ſeen, what kind of Men this proud Mortimer levell'd his aim at, and that I may at the ſame time do right to the Poſterity of that Noble Perſonage, I ſhall not here think it amiſs briefly to touch at his Original. Moſt of thoſe that mention his Pedigree, bring his Deſcent from Lewis, Son to Charles Earl of Anjou, a younger Son to Lewis the Eighth, King of France: which Lewis Son of Charles, being Lord of Beaumont in France, begot of his Lady Agnes de Beaumont, this valiant Lord Henry Beaumont and his Siſter Iſabell, who was wife to John Lord Veſci of Alnwick in Northumberland, and is called Kinſwoman to Queen Eleanor, that vertuous Conſort of King Edward the Firſt. This Lord Henry married the Lady Alice, one of the Cozens and Coheirs to John Cumin, Earl of Boghan or Bucquain, and Conſtable of Scotland; in whoſe Title he afterwards obtained that Honour. But whereas there are ſome, who by miſtake bring this Worthy much later into England, in the company of Queen Iſabella, King Edward the Third's Mother; this their error aroſe, we preſume, from thoſe paſſages of Froiſard, which make ſuch frequent mention of the Lord Beaumonts aſſiſting that Queen: when it is plain, that he means there the Lord John of Heinalt, who was alſo called Lord Beaumont, from another place of that name in Heinalt, and beſides this Lord was [u] confin'd in England upon Suſpicion at the time of Queen Iſabell's Arrival. And yet * others derive this noble Vicount Beaumont from Lewis de Brenne, ſecond Son to John de Brenne, (or rather Bremen) the laſt King of Jeruſalem.

[t] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 50. a.

[u] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 51. Clauſ. 20. Ed. 2. m. 12.

* Dugd. ibid. p. 50.

VI. But now this Noble Lord, with othes of Mortimers Enemies, was fain to yield to the iniquity of the Times, and to retreat into France, till the Storm ſhould be blown over. Mortimer in the mean while ſecurely basking in the ſun-ſhine of his Proſperity; as great as Heart could wiſh, if Ambition knew any Limits to its Deſires. Soon after the Young King to do him further honour, [x] takes a progreſs toward the Marches of Wales, where he gives this new Earl a viſit. He for his part, as he was indeed deſcended of a very ancient and Noble Family, from [y] Hugh de Mortimer, a Norman Baron, who came into England with William the Conqueror, and received of him in reward of his good Services, the Caſtle and Lands of Wigmore, was beſides his natural Ambition, very glorious and ſingularly magnificent in all his Publique Appearances: But now upon this Viſit, 'tis incredible, what ſumptuous Entertainments he gave his Royal Maſter in his Caſtles of Ludlow and Wigmore; what Sports and Diverſions in his Parks and Foreſts; what Gallantry and Expence he exhibited in his Tiltings, Tournaments, and other Military Paſtimes: much whereof, thô it might proceed from an honourable Diſpoſition, and a ſenſe of Gratitude and dutifull Reſpect to his Soveraign; yet, as was thought, not a little was upon the account of the Queen Mothers preſence, and that all of it in general ſmelt rank of a Popular Air and a vain-glorious Humour: Whether it was really ſo, or that Pride is ſo loathſom to all who are at a diſtance from it, that it cauſes even our beſt Actions to be miſrepreſented, and be view'd from the wrong Proſpect.

[x] Monaſt. Angl. 2 Vol. p. 225.

[y] Catal. Honor. p. 574.

CHAPTER the THIRD.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward ſummon'd to do Homage to the King of France for his Dukedom of Aquitain, and the Lands of Ponthieu and Monſtroile. II. A ſolemn Juſt held in

An. Dom. 1329. An. Regni III.

London for three Days together, with the Queen's danger by the Falling of a Scaffold. III. The Old Queen and Mortimer compaſs the death of Edmund Earl of Kent, the King's Uncle, with the Manner and other Circumſtances. IV. King Edward goes privately into France. V. Soon after his Return, a Son born unto him, called Edward, afterwards ſirnamed the Black-Prince. VI. Mortimer taken and executed; a Parliament.

I. NOW was [a] Philip of Valois, the French King, well ſettled in his new-acquired Throne, having received all the Homages and Fealties of his Subjects and Others, who held under him, as Peers of France or otherwiſe; except only of the Young King of England, his Cozen; who by right had ow'd him homage for his Dukedom of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Ponthieu and Monſtroile, had not himſelf been Heir to the Crown of France, and ſo Supream Lord not only of thoſe Parts, but of the Whole. But King Philip being too much elevated with his good Fortune, never conſider'd any ſuch thing, or at leaſt had no great apprehenſions of King Edward's Courage or Conduct, and therefore finding himſelf now in full and quiet Poſſeſſion of ſo flouriſhing a Kingdom, by the advice and conſent of his whole Council, he reſolves to ſummon our King Edward to make his Perſonal Appearance before him in France, there to do Homage unto him (as to his Supream Lord) for the Lands which he held of that Crown.

[a] Froiſ. c. 24. M.S. Ang. C.C.C. ibid. c. 219.

He therefore ſoon after diſpatches into England the Lord of Ancenis, and the Lord of Beauſalt, with Monſieur Peter of Orleans, and Monſieur Peter of Maſſieres, two famous Civilians; which Four with all their Retinue, after proviſion made, departed from Paris directly for Whitſant, where they took the Sea, and arrived ſafely at Dover. Here having tarried one day, as well to refreſh themſelves, as to unſhip their Horſes and Baggage, they rode the next day toward the Court, which they heard to be as then at Windſor. Being at laſt come thither, in reſpect to their Maſter that ſent them, they were ſoon admitted to the Royal Preſence, where they gave the King a full account of their Errand. His Majeſty anſwer'd with good Deliberation, "That the Matter required advice, that as for his Part, very few of the Lords "of his Council were then about him; but if they would withdraw to London, he "would there ſhortly return them ſuch an Anſwer as ſhould appear reaſonable. After this Anſwer, having been firſt entertain'd with a Dinner in the Kings Chamber, they departed from Windſor, took up their lodging for that night at Colbrook, and the next day went for London. A few days after the King return'd to his Palace at Weſtminſter, and a certain Day was prefix'd to all his Council to attend him there. The Council being ſat, the Embaſſadors of France were called in, who again told the ſubſtance of their Meſſage, and withall deliver'd to the King their Maſters Letters, which he had refuſed to meddle with before. They were thereupon order'd to withdraw, while the Buſineſs was brought under Debate. Some of the Lords alledged, That in right of Queen Iſabell his Mother, the Crown of France belonged unto him, and that therefore he ought not only not to acknowledge any Fealty at all, but alſo openly to put forth his Claim, to what was ſo evidently his Due: But however pleaſingly this ſtruck upon the Spirit of King Edward, yet the Major part of his Council were of the mind; "That it was too early for the King to embarque himſelf "in ſo hazardous an Affair, the Enemy being at that time ſo potent, the Realm at "home in a manner unſettled, and the King himſelf under Age. However, that hereby his Right and future Claim might not be prejudiced, the King immediately [b] conſtituted one of his Council, his Procurator in that Part, by whom before all his Council, he proteſted openly and expreſly, That for any Homage whatſoever to be made to the Lord Philip of Valois, then bearing himſelf as King of France, by King Edward of England, for the Dukedom of Aquitain and the Earldom of Ponthieu, he did not, nor would intend to Renounce his Hereditary Right which he had to the Realm of France, or any way from the ſame Right to derogate; even althô thereupon Letters ſhould afterward be ſigned with either of his Seals. And he did proteſt, that he made not any Homage to the ſaid Lord Philip of his own Free will, but only he ſhould do it for the juſt fear he had of Looſing the ſaid Dukedom and Earldom; and becauſe he feared, that unleſs he ſhould do Homage unto the ſaid Philip, he could not avoid other great Dangers and irreparable Loſſes. And to the confirmation of the Premiſes, King Edward cauſed his ſaid Procurator to take an Oath upon his Soul, by laying hands on the Holy Goſpell, before all thoſe of his Council preſent. This Caution being made, it was agreed, "That Doctor Stephen Graveſend Biſhop of London, a well-ſpoken Man, "ſhould anſwer theſe Ambaſſadors for the King; That He was ready in all Points to "do [b] Ex Informatione per R. Edvardi nuntios Papæ exhibita in Bened. Tom. 6. poſt Epiſt. ſecr. 302. in Bibl. Vatican. & apud Odoric. Rainald. ad an. 1340. §. 9. vid. hujus Hiſt. l. 1. c. 14.

"do as the Kings his Predeceſſors had done. Then the Frenchmen being call'd in, the Biſhop ſpake in this manner, "Lords and Gentlemen, Ambaſſadors from the Crown of "France, the Kings Majeſty, my Soveraign Lord, hath heard your Meſſage, and read "your Letters: My Lords and Gentlemen, our Maſter here preſent, hath by Advice "of his Council, conſented to go perſonally into France, to viſit the King your Ma- "ſter, his Dear Cozen, who hath ſo kindly invited him. And you are required to "ſhew unto the King your Maſter, that as to the Faith and Homage demanded, "he will do his Devoir in all that ſhall concern him: And that he intends the "firſt Opportunity to paſs over into France, to perform what ſhall appear equi- "table.

AN. DOM. 1329. An. Regni III.

[c] Froiſ. c. 24.

So having been well entertain'd and rewarded by the King with many gifts and Jewels of great value, they left England, returning with this Anſwer to their Lord at Paris. King Philip was well pleas'd with the News, not only becauſe he ſaw ſo conſiderable a Monarch ſo ready to ſubmit to him, but becauſe he had a great curioſity to ſee him, whom he had heard to be a Prince of ſingular Majeſty and Beauty. That himſelf therefore might appear in more Pomp, or to the intent to have more notable Witneſſes of this Homage, thus to be done to his own Perſon, or to dazzle and awe the mind of the Young King with the number and greatneſs of his Friends and Allies: He immediately directs his Letters to John of Luxemburgh King of Bohemia his Cozen, and to the Kings of Navarre and Majorica, certifying them of the time and place, where and when the King of England was to do him Homage, and deſiring them by no means to fail of giving him the Honour of their company: To which Letters they all ſeverally agreed, and came into France accordingly, attended with an honourable Equipage. Beſides, all the Peers, Earls, Barons and chief Lords of France, (as if to out-rival the Engliſh Nation) reſolv'd to be preſent at this Solemnity in the moſt gallant and ſplendid manner. The place appointed for the performance of this Action, was the great City of Amiens in Picardy, wherein there was Extraordinary proviſion made for this Auguſt Appearance. For the ſeveral Kings were made ready great Chambers, Halls, and Dining-Rooms: The Inns and other of the beſt Lodgings were order'd to entertain the Dukes of Burgundy, Burbon and Lorrain, and the Lord Robert of Artois, a mighty Favourite of King Philip's, with the reſt of the Peers of France, and Princes of the Blood. There was alſo proviſion made for a thouſand Horſe-ſtrangers, beſides ſix hundred Horſe, which they expected would come over with the King of England. But He for his part exceeded herein their Expectation, for He came attended with Dr. Stephen Graveſend Biſhop of London, Dr. John Stratford Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Dr. Henry Burwaſh Biſhop of Lincoln; all right politick Prelates: There were alſo four Earls, Thomas of Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk and Lord Marſhal, and Edmund of Woodſtock Earl of Kent, the Kings Uncles; Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, [d] not then of full Age, and John Bohun Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, with the Lord Henry Plantaginet afterwards Earl of Derby, the Kings Cozen, the Lord William Montagu, afterwards Earl of Salisbury, Reginald Lord Cobham, Thomas Lord Wake, Henry Lord Piercy, Ralph Lord Nevil, the Lord Walter Manny, and the Lord John Moubray, beſide more than fourty other Knights, and a thouſand Horſe of War. And thus (having appointed his Brother the Lord John ſirnamed of Eltham, and now Earl of Cornwall, his Lieutenant and Cuſtos of the Realm, during his Abſence) He took the ſea at Dover with all this Company, but was two Days upon the Water, before he landed at Whitſand, near Calais, whence he went to Boloigne, where he tarried one day to refreſh himſelf. It was now about the middle of Auguſt, when King Philip hearing of his Arrival, immediately diſpatch'd away the Conſtable of France, with a good company of Lords and Knights to meet him. Theſe found King Edward at Monſtreul, where they received him in their Kings Name with high Expreſſions of Reſpect: For the French are a wonderfull free and civil People, when they deſign to do honour to any Perſon. Thus both Nations rode very friendly together towards Amiens, enterchanging many courteous Speeches with great Familiarity. King Edward upon his Arrival at Amiens was honourably welcom'd by King Philip, the Kings of Bohemia, Navarre and Majorica, with many Dukes, Earls and Barons, and the Eleven Peers of France, (he himſelf being the Twelfth) who were all there to do him Honour, as was pretended, but indeed to bear witneſs to his Homage. There for Fifteen Days together he was entertain'd with great Royalty, many things being canvas'd and diſcours'd of the mean while at intervals, in order to the preſent Affair. But on the Day appointed, King Edward came into the Cathedral of Amiens in order to his Homage, in a long Robe of Crimſon Velvet pouder'd with Leopards of Gold, his Crown on his Head, his Sword by his Side, and Spurs of Gold on his Heels. King Philip of Valois ſat ready to receive him on his Royal Throne, in a Robe of Violet-colour'd Velvet, pouder'd with Flowers de Luce's of Gold, his Crown on his Head, his Scepter in his Hand, with other Enſigns of Majeſty, beſides his Royal Attendants.

[d] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 232. & Clauſ. 3 Edw. 3 m. 35

An. Dom. 1329. An. Regni III.

[e] Froiſ. c. 24. fol. 14. a. Martin, p. 105.

When [e] King Edward ſaw in what ſcornfull manner King Philip ſat to receive him, his High Courage inſtantly reſolv'd upon a different Way from what he had before intended; ſo that only bending his Body a little toward the Throne, he ſaid aloud with a truly Royal Boldneſs, "I Edward by the Grace of God, King of England, "Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitain, do hereby do Homage to thee Philip King "of France, to hold the Dutchy of Guien, as Duke thereof, and the Earldom of "Ponthieu and Monſtreul, as Earl thereof, and as Peer of France, in like manner as "my Predeceſſors did Homage for the ſaid Dukedom and Earldom to thy Predeceſſors. At this unexpected Gallantry of King Edward's (thô Philip of Valois inwardly repin'd) yet he ſeem'd to take little notice of it, but only order'd his Chancellor to direct the King his Cozen, "That the manner of his Predeceſſors was by "Putting off the Crown, and Laying aſide both Sword and Spurs, to do it Kneeling, with "their Hands between the King of France's Knees, or his great Chamberlain's hands: "and this they were always to do, either in Perſon, or by ſufficient Proxy of ſome high "Prince or Prelate, then and there promiſing Faith and Homage to the King of "France, as to their Soveraign Lord, of whom they held thoſe Lands and Honours. But this King Edward would by no means yeeld to, alledging, that they could ſhew no ſuch Precedent, For one Crowned Head ſo to humble himſelf to another, and that he was not as yet ſatisfied of any ſuch matter. Hereupon they produced ſome Old Memorials, which were read to him, purporting, that certain Kings his Anceſtors, had done in like manner to the Kings of France, when ſummon'd on the ſame Occaſion. But theſe Records the King of England would not allow to be Authentick, and therefore ſaid, he was determin'd as then, to proceed no further, till he had conſulted his own Records, wherein if he ſhould find that any thing more had been done, he would recognize the ſame by his Letters Patents to the French King. And whatever Monſieur du Serres alledges, that the Vicount Melun, Great Chamberlain of France, having made him put off Crown, Sword and Spurs, joyned his Hands together, and received his Homage; yet that no more than a Verbal Homage was then done, appears not only from the Acknowledgment of Monſieur [f] Mezeray, an Author infinitely more diligent and wiſe than Du Serres, but alſo by the King of England's own Letters afterwards, which in order ſhall follow according to the Originall.

[f] Mezeray p. 6. par. 2. tom. 3.

This was a mighty Diſappointment to the King of France, who had expected a more formal and full Homage, in Preſence of all theſe his Honourable Friends and Allies: But no more could now be obtain'd, and ſince no Evidence to the Contrary appear'd as yet Authentick enough (at leaſt to King Edward's ſatisfaction) he was obliged in Honour to ſmother his Diſcontent before that Royal Aſſembly, and ſo ſaid openly, "Dear Cozen of England, we will not here be thought deſirous to "impoſe any thing upon You againſt Right and Equity: What you have already "done, ſufficeth for the Preſent: So that upon your Return, when you have con"ſulted your own Records, and ſeen what your Predeceſſors have done on like Oc"caſions, you will ſend unto us under your Broad Seal, an acknowledgement of the "ſame. Thus he ſpake, and ſo the Aſſembly broke up, as it ſhould ſeem in friendly manner; howbeit King Philip revolved deeply in his Mind of this affront put upon him, where he had look'd for ſuch High Honour, and upon that account, as well as becauſe of thoſe pretences, which he knew King Edward might juſtly make to his Crown, he ſecretly deviſed how, when moſt ſeparated from his people, he might [g] ſurprize and ſeiſe his Perſon, till he ſhould make his own Conditions with him. But this Counſel was not ſo cloſely agitated, but that Henry Burwaſh, Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, a Man of a great Reach, who came over as the King's Chief Counſellour and Governour, had got ſome inkling, or conjecture thereof at leaſt, and ſo privately informed the King his Maſter, of the Danger he was in. He for his part eaſily apprehending the matter, left France ſuddenly with his whole Company, e're any Man imagin'd how or why, and ſo coming ſafely into England, went directly for Windſor, where his Queen Philippa lay; who was extreamly ſatisfied with his ſafe Return; and there had her Female Curioſity abundantly ſatisfied, as to all her Enquiries after the State and Welfare of her Uncle King Philip, and the reſt of her kindred, whom he had lately ſeen.

[g] Knighton p. 2555. n. 10.

But

But King Edward brought home a ſting along with him, whereby he thought his Honour wounded, and which never let him be at reſt, till he had prov'd himſelf Worthy of the Crown of France, thô he never attain'd to the Poſſeſſion of it. From this time it run continually in his Head, that France was too Noble a Kingdom to be deſpiſed; for he had never before ſeen any thing ſo Pompous there, or if he had, his tender Age would not permit him to make any juſt eſtimate thereof: But now whatever he had met with, gave him the more concern, becauſe he look'd on it as of Right his own; however injuriouſly taken from him. An. Dom. 1329. An. Regni III.

The mean [i] while (as if all this was too little provocation) King Philip not thus ſatisfied, reſolves to preſs the unwilling Prince to a more particular acknowledgement; and therefore ſoon after purſues him into England by theſe his Ambaſſadors, the two Biſhops of Chartres and of Beauvois, the Lord Lewis of Cleremont, the Duke of Burbon, the Earl of Harecourt, and the Earl of Tancarville, and divers other Knights and Learned Men, whom he ſent into England, to demand a further performance and ſatisfaction in the Premiſes.

[i] Froiſ. ibid.

By this time, the King of England and his Council (who were then at Weſtminſter) had well conſider'd the Uſage of former Kings of England, when they did Homage in like Caſe for the Dukedom of Aquitain: And they ſaw, that things had indeed been of old ſo performed, as they now were demanded to be done: And thô many in the Realm were Highly offended at theſe doings of the French King, and ſtuck not openly to declare, that the King of England, their Lord, was Truer Heir to the Crown of France by Right of Succeſſion, than was Philip of Valois himſelf; yet the King and his Council at this time prudently forbore to take notice hereof, till he had better weigh'd his own ſtrength, and ſounded his Friends and Allies: So that now not one Word was mention'd concerning King Edward's Pretences, thô much time was ſpent in ſearching and arguing, whereby the Ambaſſadors were fain to tarry in England all that Winter, till the May following; before which they could not obtain any poſitive Anſwer. But then at laſt, the King being prevail'd on by his Council, wrote theſe his Letters Patents, Seal'd with his Broad Seal, wherein he acknowledges, that he ought to have done Homage to the King of France for his Countries and Seigniories held in France, the Tenour of which Letters followeth.

" [k] Edward by the Grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of " Aquitain; to all, who ſhall ſee or hear theſe Preſents, Greeting: Be it known, " that whereas we made Homage at Amiens to the moſt Excellent Prince, our Dear- " eſt Lord and Cozen, Philip King of France, and then it was of him required, " that we ſhould acknowledge the ſaid Homage to be [l] Liege, and that we in do- " ing the ſaid Homage, ſhould promiſe expreſly to bear unto him Faith and Loyalty: " Which thing We did not, as then, becauſe We were not fully informed, but on- " ly made unto the ſaid King of France our Homage in general Terms, " Saying, " that we enter'd his Homage, as our Predeceſſors, Dukes of Guienne in time paſt had en- " ter'd the Homage of the Kings of France, for the time being. But being ſince " that time well informed of the truth, we do by theſe preſents acknowledge, that " the ſaid Homage, which we made in the City of Amiens to the King of France, " as it was in general Terms, is and ought to be intended Liege; and that we ought " to bear unto him Faith and Loyalty, as Duke of Aquitain, and Peer of France, " and Earl of Ponthieu, and Monſtreul: And We promiſe to bear unto him Faith " and Loyalty. And to the intent, that hereafter ſhould ariſe no difference for this " cauſe; We promiſe for Us and our Succeſſors, Dukes of Aquitain, that this Ho- " mage ſhall be made in this Manner: The King of England, Duke of Aquitain, ſhall " hold his Hands between the Hands of the King of France, and he that is to ſpeak " for the King of France, ſhall ſay thus. "--You become Liegeman to our Lord the " King, here preſent, as Duke of Guienne and Peer of France, and you promiſe to bear " to him Faith and Loyalty. Say, Yes. And the King of England, Duke of Aquitain, " and his Succeſſors, ſhall ſay, Yes. And then the King of France ſhall receive the ſaid " King of England, and Duke of Guienne, to the ſaid Homage Liege, with Faith and Troth " by word of Mouth, ſaving his own Right and all other.

" Furthermore, when the ſaid King and Duke ſhall enter the Homage of the King " of France, for the Earldom of Ponthieu and Monſtreul, he ſhall put his Hands be- " tween the Hands of the King of France, for the ſaid Earldom of Ponthieu and " Monſtreul, and he that ſhall ſpeak for the King of France, ſhall addreſs his Speech " to the ſaid King and Duke, and ſhall ſay thus, "--You become Liegeman to our " Lord the King of France here preſent, as Earl of Ponthieu and Monſtreul, and you " promiſe [k] Froiſ. c. 24. fol. 14. b. Du Cheſne l. 14. p. 638.

[l] Homage Liege is done by the Vaſſal ungirt & bare-headed, with joyned Hands laid on the Evangeliſts, and a Kiſs received in the taking of his Oath, &c. Vid. Cotgrave in hoc Titulo.

An. Dom. 1329. An. Regni III.

"promiſe to bear unto him Faith and Loyalty: Say, Yes. And the King, Earl of "Ponthieu, ſhall ſay, Yes. And then the ſaid King of France, ſhall receive the ſaid "King and Earl to the ſaid Homage, with Faith and Troth by word of Mouth, "ſaving his own Right and all other. And thus it ſhall be done and Renewed, as "often as Homage ſhall be done: Of which We and Our Succeſſors, Dukes of Gui- "enne, ſhall (after the ſaid Homage done) deliver Our Letters Patents, Sealed with "Our Great Seal, if the King of France ſhall ſo require. And moreover We pro- "miſe in good Faith to hold and keep entirely the Peace and Accord, made between "the Kings of France, and the ſaid Kings of England, Dukes of Guienne, &c. Theſe Letters the French Ambaſſadors deliver'd to the King their Maſter, who cauſed them to be kept in his Chancery.

II. But before this, while the Ambaſſadors were at London, being then but juſt come thither, the King intending to let the French-men ſee, what kind of men he Ruled over, and what he might do, if too far provoked; privately order'd, that certain choice Knights ſhould make a Challenge, as of their own Heads: Who gladly taking this occaſion, publiſhed throughout the City with Sound of Trumpet, that on the [m] 25 of September, being the Munday after that Thurſday (which was St. Matthew's day) there were Thirteen Knights in London, that would be ready for three days together, to perform Feats of Arms againſt all Comers whatſoever. The Place appointed for the Solemnity was Cheapſide, between the Croſs and Soperlane, where the Stony Street [n] was well cover'd with Sand, that the Horſes might not ſlide, when they ran their Courſes: And there was a Spacious Wooden Scaffold, like a Tower, Erected croſs the Street, whereon Queen Philippa, and many of the Greateſt and Faireſt Ladies, Aſſembled from all parts of the Realm, did ſtand richly attired, to behold the Solemnity. The Lord Maurice ſecond Brother to Thomas Lord Barkley, was of ſuch Renown for Martial Atchievements at this time, that among other Accoutrements prepared for this Turneament, [o] divers Surcoats were uſed, depicted with his Arms and Cognizance. That any of the French undertook with theſe Challengers, I do not find; thô 'tis highly probable, that being Perſons of Title and Honour, they would by no means omit ſuch an opportunity of ſignalizing themſelves, ſince it could not but reflect upon them, if they did. As for more circumſtances of this Martial Sport, they are neither fit to be minutely handled, nor can I find them any where particularized: But this is very likely, that the Actions were performed with Gallantry enough; and that the Undertakers on both ſides were conſiderable Perſons: For ſome ſay, [p] the Young King himſelf with 12 more in his Company (thô diſguiſed) were the Challengers, ready to anſwer all Defendants, that ſhould come. At leaſt the King, Queen, and whole Court were Spectators, with many thouſands of the City: But in the height of this Recreation, there happen'd an accident, which had like to have proved Tragical. For the Stage, [q] whereon the Queen and her Ladies were placed, ſuddenly brake under them, to the great affrightment of all the Company; thô by the wonderfull Goodneſs of God it happen'd, that no harm at all was done: But the King was thereby ſo incenſed at the Maſter-Workmen, that it would have proved very difficult for them to have avoided a ſevere Puniſhment, had not the Noble-minded Queen her ſelf upon her knees requeſted their pardon: Which beſure the King would never have granted on any other conſideration, to thoſe, who had occaſion'd the hazard of a Lady ſo dear unto him. And indeed this vertuous Princeſs was of a moſt Generous and Compaſſionate Nature, always deſirous to do good, but eſpecially to the Afflicted, and thoſe who were brought into any undeſerved Misfortune; ſo that all along ſhe Reign'd in the hearts of the People, whoſe Welfare and Convenience ſhe continually endeavour'd with all her Power.

III. About this time the Queen Mother, who bore an Inveterate hatred againſt Edmund Plantagenet Earl of Kent, one of the Kings Uncles, chiefly for the Earl of Marche's ſake, to whoſe Unreaſonable pride the Noble Princes Courage ſcorn'd to yield, began earneſtly to inform the Young King her Son againſt him, as guilty of matters, into which the ſubtle Mortimer had craftily inſnared the Open-hearted Gentleman. [r] Some ſay, that being the next Heir Apparent, he was accuſed to have conſpired the Death of the King his Nephew, by poyſon; which might not perhaps ſound ſo improbable; but that at this time and for above ſix years after, the Kings own Brother, John of Eltham Earl of Cornwall, was [s] alive (thô Froiſard, and from him others by miſtake ſay, he was then newly dead) beſides this Earl of Kent had himſelf an Elder Brother then living, which was Thomas of Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk and Marſhall of England;

[m] Joh. Tinemouth fol. 229. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 112.

[n] Stow's Survey of London p. 280.

[o] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 356.

[p] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 893.

[q] Stow's Survey of London p. 280. & Hiſt. p. 230. & R. Baker p. 143.

[r] Froiſ. c. 23. fol. 13. a. & Fox Acts & Mon. p. 345.

[s] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 146.

England; and yet above all this, there were two Ladies, Joan Queen of Scotland, and Princeſs Eleanor, the Kings own Siſters ſurviving: So that he could not by any means pretend to be the next Heir; nor even his Enemies with any ſenſe pretend it for him. Moreover in the Records we find no mention of Poiſon, nor that he was ſo much as accus'd of Deſigning to compaſs the King his Nephew's Death: Unleſs that was obliquely inſinuated, as a conſequence of his Delivering the Old King, which it was lay'd to his charge that he endeavour'd. AN. DOM. 1329. An. Regni III.

'Tis certain the Poor Prince was firſt trepan'd into a Sham-plot, and afterwards ſpecioufly by way of Friendſhip undermin'd, ſo as to yield to make a confeſſion of matters, not ſeeming Treaſonable (which afterward his Enemies aggravated much higher) upon the Aſſurance of a Pardon: Inſtead whereof, before he was brought to any legal Tryal, or confronted by his Accuſers, a Warrant was ſuddenly ſign'd for his Execution.

But leſt it ſhould be admired, how any Man ſhould now be accus'd of endeavouring to deliver the Old King, who had been murder'd, as appears, almoſt two Years before, I will exactly ſet down by what arts this Innocent Gentleman was train'd on to his utter Ruine.

Mortimer therefore and his Complotters, with a deſign to make his Enemies obnoxious to him (which he could no other way do, they were Men of ſuch known Loyalty and Integrity) cunningly ſcatters it abroad, that the Old King, Edward the Second was ſtill alive, notwithſtanding the late Rumour of his Death and Burial; and that he now reſided in the Caſtle of [s] Corfe in Dorſetſhire, but was not to be ſeen in the day time by any means, with much difficulty in the Night, for fear he ſhould haſten his own Death thereby. Now to carry on this incredible Tale the better (for thoſe were cauteous and diſcreet Men whom Mortimer aim'd to catch) there were ſeveral Knights appointed to make Shows and Masks, and other Diverſions upon the Battlements and Leads of the Caſtle; which the Country People obſerving, could not but imagin ſome great Prince or King to be there; for whoſe pleaſure and honour thoſe Solemnities were ſo performed. Hence the rumour of the Old King's being ſtill alive was ſpread far and near; ſo that at laſt it came (as was firſt deſign'd) with ſome kind of Authority to the Earl of Kents Ears: who deſiring only (as he thought) to ſift the Truth out, entangled himſelf more ſtrongly in an errour. To the Caſtle of Corfe he privily ſent one of his Confidents, a Preaching Fryer, with a charge to dive into the Matter: He at laſt under much caution, with a great deal of doe, obtaining to be admitted into the Caſtle, was even then out of pretended Fear kept cloſe all the day in the Porters Lodge: But at night, being for more ſecurity, as they held him in hand, diſguiſed in Lay-habit, he was brought into the great Hall, where he beheld one cloathed in Royal Habiliments to perſonate a King; ſo that the Fryer himſelf, either deceived by the glimmering of the Lamps, or the Diſtance which he was forced to keep, or the ſtrength of prejudice working upon his Fancy, did really take him for the Father of the Young King, as he ſat with ſeeming Majeſty and Princely Attendants at a Royal Supper.

[s] Stow p. 229. a.

This Account the Fryer brought back to the Earl of Kent, and whether himſelf alſo corrupted, or really in mind perſwaded, did as really perſwade the Unfortunate Prince, that he had ſeen the King his Brother alive and well, and at ſupper with his own Eyes: Whereupon the Earl declared with an Oath, that he would make uſe of all the Means and Intereſt he could to reſcue the King his Brother from that unworthy Confinement. [u] Now when firſt this Rumour began to go abroad with ſome Authority, Earl Edmund having ſome occaſions at the Court of Rome, held a Diſcourſe with Pope John XXII, at Avignion and ſaid, "How Almighty God had many times "for the love of Thomas of Lancaſter, done many fair Miracles upon ſeverall, both "Men and Women, who were through divers Maladies undone as to this World; "till thrô his Prayers they were reſtored unto their Health. Wherefore the Earl prayed heartily of his Holineſs to grant him the favour, that the foreſaid Thomas, Earl of Lancaſter might be Tranſlated. Now 'tis to be remembred, that this Thomas, who was Eldeſt Son to Edmund Crouch-back (Second Son of King Henry the Third, and Younger Brother of King Edward the Firſt) had been by King Edward the Second beheaded at Pontefract for Heading the Barons againſt the King: But among the Common People he was look'd on as a Martyr for the Nations Liberties, and meriting the name and honour of a Saint. However the Pope anſwer'd Earl Edmund, that he the ſaid Thomas of Lancaſter ſhould not be Tranſlated, untill he ſhould be better certified by the Clergy of England, and had ſeen by their joynt Teſtimonies, what [u] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 220.

thing

An. Dom. 1329. An. Regni III. thing God had done for the love of Thomas of Lancaſter, according to the Suggeſtion that the foreſaid Edmund had made unto him. And when Earl Edmund ſaw, that in this requeſt he ſhould not ſucceed, as to the Tranſlation, he then deſired his Counſel in another matter relating to Edward of Caernarvon, his Brother, late King of England, what he had beſt to do in order to his Deliverance from Captivity; ſince it "was a common Fame thrô England, that he was alive, whole and ſound. When the Pope heard him ſay that King Edward the Second was alive, he commanded the Earl upon his Bleſſing, to help with all the Power that he might, to deliver him out of Priſon, and ſave his Body to the utmoſt of his Ability; in order to which he aſſoyled him and all his Partakers ab omni pœna & culpa; and promiſed to bear the charges of the whole Undertaking, threatning him alſo with Excommunication, if he did not make uſe of his beſt Endeavours to aſſert his Brothers Right and Liberty. Soon after Earl Edmund return'd into England, where he ſet himſelf about diſcovering, as he thought, the Truth more fully; and then ſent to Corfe Caſtle that Preaching-Frier, of whom we ſpake. One ſays, [x] that he was alſo tempted by one of Mortimers Inſtruments, who urging, "That King Edward the Second was alive, and only "wanted his Aſſiſtance to be deliver'd and reſtor'd to his former Dignity, and the "Earl thereupon promiſing his beſt Endeavours, he was by the ſame Party accuſed "of High-Treaſon. Walſingham [y] produces an Imperfect confeſſion of the Earl's which he made before Sr. Robert Howel, Coroner of the King's Houſhold, and afterwards on the 16 of March in the Fourth Year of this King's Reign, own'd it for his Confeſſion, before the Lords aſſembled in Parliament at Wincheſter, whereby we may perceive, that he himſelf ſought out to no Body, but that others (ſet on no doubt to ruine him) came of their own accord to him, as well to confirm in him the belief of the Old King's being Alive, as to pretend their Readineſs, and offering him their Service to deliver him: But the whole Cheat will beſt appear from the Confeſſion it ſelf, which amounts to thus much. "That the Pope had enjoyn'd him on penalty of "being Excommunicate, to uſe his utmoſt Endeavours to work the Delivery of his "Brother late King of England, promiſing himſelf to bear the whole charge of the "Undertaking: That a certain Predicant Fryer, [z] named Thomas Dunhead, in diſ-"courſe with him at Kenſington near London, told him, He had conjur'd up a Spirit, "which aſſured him, that Edward his Brother, late King of England was yet living. "That the Archbiſhop of York had ſent him by his Chaplain, Mr. Alleyn a truſty let-"ter, wherein he promiſed towards the delivery of his Brother five hundred Men or "more. William Iliffe alſo, and William Warham Clerks, and Thomas Bromfield Fry-"er, promiſed him their Aſſiſtance in this Buſineſs: Alſo that Sr. Ingelram Berenger "had brought him word to London from William Lord Zouch, that he was ready to "lend him his help toward the Reſtauration of his Brother. That Sr. Ingelram came "to him again from the Lord John Peche, proffering alſo his Service to the Work; "and ſaying, that Henry Lord Beaumont, and Sr. Thomas Roſſelin (who were fled "the Kingdom for fear of Mortimer) had at Paris in the Duke of Brabants Bed-"chamber, inſtigated them to this Attempt, declaring, they were ready to come in-"to England to the furtherance of the ſame. That Sr. Ingelram came unto him yet "a third time at Arundel, into his Bedchamber over the Chappel, and aſſured him of "the Biſhop of Londons help. That Sr. Robert Taunton brought him word from Wil-"liam Melton Archbiſhop of York, that the ſaid Archbiſhop had Men ready harneſs'd "to compleat the deſign, and that the ſaid Sr. Robert, with two Preaching Fryers, Edmund "and John Savage, had a chief ſtroak in the Affair: And that Sr. Fulk Fitz-Warine "coming to him at Weſtminſter, told him, 'twould be the moſt honourable Action "he could ever ſet about, but to appear in the Attempt; to which he had promiſed "his beſt Aſſiſtance: And laſtly, that the Letters, which he had ſent to Sr. Bogo "of Bayonne and Sr. John Daverill, were ſealed with his Seal; and that his Wife "had wrote another Letter to the ſame effect; and that all this was Truth; ſo "that he confeſſes he has offended, and therefore he put himſelf upon the King's "Mercy.

[x] Leland. Coll. 1 Vol. p. 794.

[y] Walſing. hiſt. p. 110. Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 93.

[z] R. Southwell's Additions to Adam Merimuth. & M. S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 213.

1330. Regni IV.

[a] The truth of it is, that by Mortimers cunning being induced to a belief that his Brother the late King was ſtill living, and in Corfe Caſtle, he went himſelf to the ſaid Caſtle, and ſpake with the Conſtable thereof Sr. John Daverill, and after many rich Preſents, deſired ſecretly to know of him, whether his Brother the late King was yet alive or dead; and if he were alive, that he might have a ſight of him. Now this Sr. John Daverill, being Mortimers Creature, anſwer'd, that indeed his Brother was in health and under his Keeping; but that he durſt not ſhew him to any man man living, since he was forbid in behalf of the King that now was, and also of the Queen Mother, and of Mortimer, to shew his Person to any One whatsoever, except only unto them. But the false Traitor lied unto him: for the Old King was now in his Grave. But Earl Edmund was so far deceiv'd by the Constables protestation, that he deliver'd him a Letter, desiring him to bear it unto his Brother; which he promised to do; but soon after carried it to Mortimer, sealed with the Earls Seal. It began thus: "To the Noble Knight, Edward of Caernarvon, Edmund of Woodstock, wor-"ship and reverence with Brotherly Allegiance and Subjection: Sr. Knight, Wor-"shipfull and Dear Brother; if it please you, I pray heartily, that you be of good "comfort, for I shall so ordain for you, that you shall soon come out of prison, and "be delivered of that Trouble which you are in: And may your Highness understand, "That I have unto me assenting almost all the Great Men of England, with all their "Apparel; that is to say, with Armour and Treasure exceeding much, for to maintain "and help your Quarrel so far forth, that you shall be King again, as you were be-"fore: And thereto they have all sworn to me upon a Book, as well Prelates, as Earls and Barons, &c. This Letter Mortimer presently shew'd to the Queen, telling her, that Earl Edmund design'd to depose her Son; wherefore she went to the King her Son, and having shew'd him the Letter, charged him on her Blessing to be avenged on him, as on her deadly Enemy. Upon her Importunities the King sent for him to Winchester, where he was arrested; thô it appears, that in all the foresaid Proposals, mention'd in his Confession, which was thus made unto him by several Hands, there was little or nothing of real Truth; only these Emissaries invented those improbable Tales to abuse him, or were by the same arts abused themselves: so that it appears evidently but a contrivance against his Life. Now to drive the matter home, [b] Sr. John Daverill Constable of Corfe Castle discover'd that Letter, written by the said Earl to his Brother the King, supposing him still living: which Letter being produc'd by his inveterate Enemy the Earl of March in open Parliament, he was found guilty by his Peers, and had Judgment of Death passed on him.

[a] M. S. Vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 220.

Now when the Earl was condemned and remanded unto Prison, [c] the Lord Mortimer went straight to the Queen Mother's Appartment, whom he found at Dinner, and having obtain'd a private Conference, told her, how the Earl was condemned by way of Law, to forfeit Life and Limb, and his Heirs to be disinherited for ever, upon his own plain Confession in full Court, saving the Kings gracious Favour; "Wherefore, "said he, I think it best for his Execution to be hasten'd, without the Kings know-"ledge; for if he once understand the whole Matter, he'll forgive him his Death; and "that will turn to our great Disadvantage, if not utter Confusion; because he was em-"peached by our means.

Whereupon Queen Isabell, being thus urged by Mortimer, caused a Warrant the next morning to be sent to the Bayliffs of Winchester to see speedy Execution done: for his Brother the Earl-Marshall would by no means (as his Office required) concern himself in that matter; and he was easily dispens'd withall, as well by reason of his Relation to him, as for Suspicion of him: For it [d] appear'd, that he was infinitely dissatisfied, as were all the Lords, but those of Mortimers Faction; thô being terrified by so great an example, they durst not intercede with the King, nor shew their displeasure. But as we said, Command was sent to the Bayliffs of the Town to see the Work done: yet none could be procur'd to perform the ungratefull Office upon him [e] from morning till the evening, when a Wicked ribald out of the Marshalsea, to save his own life thereby, severed his Head from his Body on the 19 day of March, being the Eve of St. Cuthbert and a Monday. Before Mortimer so well watch'd the King that day, that no body could approach to inform him either of his Condemnation, or of that Warrant for his so speedy Execution: For when, being done, he heard of it, with [f] great sorrow he caused his Body to be decently interred in the Fryers Preachers at Winchester. With whom also for form were accused Stephen Gravesend Bishop of London, and William Abbot of Longdon, who were acquitted; but Sr. [g] Robert Taunton, with some certain Carmelite Fryers and Predicants (for a cloak to the Sham) were condemned to perpetual Imprisonment; the Provincials of the White [h] Carmelite Fryers, and of the Black Preaching Fryers being banished. Precepts also were issued out by command of Parliament to the [i] Sheriffs of Warwickshire, Dorsetshire and Hantshire, for the speedy Apprehension of Sr. John Peche, whose Lands also were seised; but both he and they shortly after restored. Beside this, William Archbishop of York, and William Lord [k] Zouch of Mortimer were impeached, but soon after acquitted, and their Goods and Lands restored. Sr. [l] Fulk Fitz-Warine also had his Castle of Whi-

AN. DOM. 1330. AN. REGNI IV.

[b] Leland. Coll. 1 Vol. p. 686. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 220. ubi tota hujus rei series accuratissimè describitur.

[c] M.S. id. ibid.

[d] Joh Harding c. 178. fol. 177. b. §. 8. & 9.

[e] Knighton p. 2555. n. 40. Lit. Dom. G.

[f] Dudg. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 93. b. l. 3. & M. S. ibid.

[g] Walsingh. hist. p. 110.

[h] Stow p. 229.

[i] Dugd. Warw. p. 699. a. id. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 677. b.

[k] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 153.

[l] Dudg. 1 Vol. 445.

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

tington ſeiſed, but the next Year the King reſtor'd him to the poſſeſſion thereof. Nay the great Henry Earl of [m] Lancaſter (with ſeveral of his Friends) was apprehended by order from the Old Queen and the Earl of March; but whether the Matter would hold no further, or that they would ſeem to have reſpect to his Age and Nobility, or by chance, he eſcaped their Hands: So that not one of all this Number was brought to Death upon this Account, but only this Worthy and Heroick Prince, who had leaſt knowledge of the Matter. Yet, when by all this great Buſſle, they thought they had ſufficiently eſtabliſhed the Reputation of a Plot, [n] Proclamations were preſently iſſued out into all the Counties of England to give Notice, that the Earl was put to death, and for what Reaſon.

[m] Knighton p. 2555. n. 40.

[n] Dudg. 2 Vol. p. 93.

Thus fell this Mighty Prince, the King's own Uncle, and a man of Extraordinary Courage and Integrity, in the Flower of his Age (for he had hardly compleated twenty [o] Eight Years) by the Contrivances of thoſe, whom He himſelf, before he was aware, had raiſed to that Power. It is agreed on all hands, He was innocent of the matter whereof He was accus'd; and that if he had not, he had never yet been made guilty of Treaſon, but by thoſe, who had been guilty of Depoſing and Murdering the Old King. Yet let us a little conſider, whether the Hand of God might not be in all this; ſince at firſt he neglected to aſſiſt his own Brother againſt the Rebellious inſolence of his Subjects, but [p] rather countenanced all their Actions with his Preſence; that himſelf ſhould thus pay for his Inadvertency, in firſt raſhly engaging to the Diſſolution of his own Brothers Authority, which afterwards he more inconſiderately endeavoured to raiſe out of the Grave.

[o] Nat. Auguſti 5to An. Dom. 1302. Walſing. hiſt. p. 48.

[p] Walſing. hiſt. p. 101. & cæteres

As for his own Perſon, I find no real Stain fix'd upon him by any, and the manner of his Execution ſhews [q] how Dear he was to the People; not to ſay, that by the Character of thoſe who were his Enemies, we may diſcern him to have been Loyal and firm to the Young King his Nephew; as the Cauſe (for which he died) ſhews; that his Heart was never falſe to the Old King his Brother. Yet for all this, it is ſaid, that he was the leſs lamented, [r] becauſe his Servants were very oppreſſive to the Commons, and many great Diſorders were allowed in his Family. Certainly 'tis not enough for a Man of High Degree to do well himſelf; but to take Care, that thoſe who are under him, do ſo too; Since he is not only lyable to be cenſur'd for their Miſcarriages in this World, but alſo in ſome meaſure to anſwer for them in that which is to come.

[q] Knighton p. 2555. n. 40.

[r] Walſin. Hypod. p. 111. n. 40. & Stow p. 229. b.

He left behind him ([s] by his Lady Margaret Siſter of Thomas Lord Wake of Lydel) Four Young Children, two Sons, Edmund and John, who were both ſoon after reſtor'd in Blood, but dy'd ſucceſſively without Iſſue; and two Daughters, Margaret, who was afterwards married to Amaneus, Eldeſt Son to the Lord Bernard de la Brett, or Albret of Gaſcoigne, and the other a little Female Infant, ſcarce then two Years old, named Joan, who afterwards became the Paragon of her whole Sex for Exquiſite Beauty, Modeſty, and Diſcretion; and upon the Death of both her Brothers, becoming the Sole Heireſs of all her Fathers Poſſeſſions, was commonly called by way of Eminence, the Fair Counteſs of Kent; of whom more hereafter.

[s] Sandford Geneal. Hiſt. p. 212 & Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 94. & Catal. Honor. p. 764. inter ſe collatis.

From the foregoing Story we may obſerve, how early in this Kingdom Malicious Stateſmen, who ſought the Ruine of thoſe who faithfully interpos'd to hinder their Ambitious Deſigns, made uſe of this (now more-common) trick of buzzing Sham-plots into their Princes Ears: Which, however falſe and improbable, would yet never want Evidences to make out ſome plauſible Circumſtances.

IV. And thus at laſt happily We have paſt over the leſs Gratefull Part of this King's Reign; wherein we have beheld him, not as he was in himſelf, Bright and Vigorous; but as he was miſrepreſented by thoſe, who (under his Name) did but Eclipſe and darken his Royal Authority.

Now that all things might ſucceed the better, the Hopefull young King reſolves to begin with Heaven; and remembring, that in his former Troubles, during his Fathers Reign, or in his late Danger at Amiens, when he narrowly eſcap'd being ſeiz'd upon by the French King, he had made [t] a Vow in Devotion to viſit ſome Holy Places in France; he now ſets himſelf about performing his Vow: Leaving therefore his Brother John of Eltham, Earl of Cornwall, Protector of the Realm, on Thurſday in Eaſter-week, [u] being the 12 of April, he adventur'd privately to paſs the Sea, in the Company of John Stratford Biſhop of Wincheſter, and his Valiant and Loyal Servant William Montagu, afterwards Earl of Saliſbury, diſguiſed like Merchants, the whole number amounting but to Fifteen Perſons.

[t] Stow p. 230. b. & Polyd. Virg. l. 19. p. 362. Walſing. hiſt. p. 112. & Knighton p. 2555. & Joh. Tinem. fol. 229.

[u] G. Lit. Dom. Paſcha 8 April. vid Labb. Chro. Techn.

It

It was a bold (not to say a rash) undertaking for a King to expose his Person so lightly (if it is Lawfull to term any thing Light, that proceeds from a Mind so Religiously affected) especially into a Country so jealous of his Fortune, and where he had before been publiquely seen more than once: But the Strength of his Devotion encourag'd him to it, and the Success that followed, makes it in him warrantable; I say in him: For no exact Rules can be prescrib'd to such Mighty overworking Spirits; and Alexander the Great, and Julius Cæsar, thô they have committed many seeming-Rash and Indiscreet Actions, I know not, who dare blame or censure them for it. Our King accordingly soon Returns safe, and with his whole Company; when immediately at Dertford in Kent, he holds a Great and Solemn Tourneament, thereby to Exercise his Nobles to delight in Arms. Thus Early did this Monarch lay his Foundation by Piety and Industry, on which afterwards he Reared so many Glorious Trophies of Victory. AN. DOM. 1330. AN. REGNI IV.

But I am well aware, that there is another Account of the Reasons, which induc'd the King to cross the Seas at this time; which, because it is very probable, I shall here also deliver. King Edward, as we said before, delaying beyond the time prefix'd, to send that Declaration of his Homage (for it was not yet dispatch'd away by the French Ambassadors, till May in this Year) King Philip caused him [x] again to be summon'd, and after some Motions, and Hostility done by the English, who were Rendezvous'd at Saintes, the chief City of Saintogne in Aquitain, he sent his Brother the Lord Charles of Valois, Earl of Alenson, who laid Siege before the Town: Which King Edward understanding, began to talk of Peace, to the obtaining whereof, he sent his Ambassadors into France, with whom this Agreement was made on the Ninth of March at Paris. viz.

[x] Du Chesne p. 639. &c. ex Monsieur du Tillet, &c.

I. That King Philip shall grant a full Repeal of Banishment to the Principal Authors of the Motions of Guienne, named in the Treaty of the Year One thousand three Hundred Twenty and six, according to the Promise made by his Predecessor Charles the Fair.

II. That the Treaties preceding, which import; That those, who were banish'd by the King of France, or his Court, should not be received, nor concealed in Guienne, should be kept inviolably: That even without the approbation of King Edward, the Seneschals of France should have Power, notwithstanding, to Banish his Officers and Ministers for Faults committed in their Precincts, as by right of Soveraignty, the King of France may and doth especially protest, that all the Liberties, of which the said Seneschals have been in Possession, before this Treaty, shall be conserved unto them accordingly.

III. That as to the Sums of sixty Thousand pounds on the one part, and of fifty Thousand Marks Sterling on the other, which King Edward oweth to King Philip, Reason shall be done by Payment or Compensation.

IV. That the Quality of the Homages of the Dutchy of Guienne, and of the Earldoms of Ponthieu and Monstroile, shall be declared to be Liege, and the Form thereof expressed, which shall be Renewed on every Change; and the Kings shall promise to keep the Treaties of Peace made by their [y] Predecessors.

[y] Ibi malè, ut opinor, par leurs Successeurs.

V. That the Castles of St. Croix, Madailhem, Puipines, and du Bourdet, shall be demolish'd, according to the Form prescrib'd by Robert Bertrand, Marshal of France, and that the other Points of the Treaties remaining to be perfected, shall be respectively accomplished.

VI. That the Siege held by the Earl of Alenson, before the Town of Saintes, shall be raised, as soon as King Edward shall have Ratified the present Accord; the mean while, that those, who are culpable in the Town, shall be rendred to King Philip, to do with them after his Pleasure, and as for the rest, they may go, come and tarry freely, and have their Victuals for a days Journey; but they may not supply Saintes, any otherwise, than it is at this time.

This Treaty was followed with another made at Bois de Vincennes, the Thirtieth day of May following; and thereby it was further agreed, that the Profits of the Land of Guyenne, which for default of Homage, were fiefed by the late King Charles, and converted to his Use, after the Law, shall be sequestred in the Hands of two Commissioners, deputed on the behalf of either of the Kings, Edward and Philip: till both their Differences and Proceedings, done since the Truce in the Year 1324, shall be amicably decided.

Finally, King Edward, having given that Declaration of his Homages, which we have set down [z] already, went again in Person into France, to appease the War at Saintes: At which time he requested of King Philip, that he would remit unto him the Demoliſhing of the Caſtle of St. Croix and others, which he then promiſed very Frankly to do, and moreover granted unto him by a new Treaty made the 4th of July 1331, That the Town and Caſtle of Saintes, ſhould be reſtor'd unto him in the ſame condition wherein they were, and thirty Thouſand pounds Tournois for his Intereſts and Damages, notwithſtanding the former Accord of the Ninth of March, approved by his Majeſty the Thirtieth day of April. A Conceſſion (ſays Du Cheſne) which one would think ought to appeaſe all diſguſts whatſoever for a long time: But the Murmurs, which afterward began to run among the Engliſh, that their King was nearer to the Crown of France, than King Philip, were ſo deeply rooted in their hearts, that at laſt they occaſion'd moſt Tragical and deadly Effects; as we ſhall ſhew in due place.

[z] P. 37.

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

V. On the [a] ſeventeenth of the Calends of July, being after our Account, the Fifteenth of June, and a Friday at [b] ten of the Clock in the Morning, the Queen Philippa of England, was at Woodſtock near Oxford, deliver'd of her Firſt-born Son, a very Fair, Luſty, and well-form'd Infant, who was Chriſtened by the Name of his Father Edward. Walſingham, and Speed from him, ſay indeed, that he was Born on the 15 of June, and on a Fryday, but they place it a Year more forward; both which notwithſtanding are eaſily refuted, if we conſider, that in the Year 1329, the 15 of June happen'd on a Thurſday, but this Year, [c] G being the Dominical Letter, it then indeed fell on a Fryday. To which agrees that Ancient Writer [d] John Tinemouth, in his Golden Hiſtory; ſaying, that this year on the Fryday before [e] St. Botolph, there was Born to King Edward, his Son Edward the Fourth, which Name Giovanni Villani, the Florentine Hiſtorian, calls him alſo by, preſuming that he would have lived to Succeed his Father. So Welcome to the King was the News of his Birth, that he gave to the Meſſenger thereof Thomas Prior, a moſt Royal Reward, and [f] 40 Marks per annum out of his Exchequer, till he ſhould ſettle Lands upon him to that Value: And afterwards he gave very conſiderable Penſions to thoſe who were concern'd in his Education; as, 10 pounds per annum to Joan of Oxford, this Young Princes Nurſe, and 10 Marks annually to Mathilda Plumpton, Berſatrix or Rocker to this Princely Infant. Great hopes were immediately conceived of the Royal Babe, by all that beheld the Beauty of his Shape, the Largeneſs of his Size, and the firm Contexture of his Body. The Good Lady his Mother, took ſuch great Care of this firſt Dear Pledge of her Marriage Bed, that ſhe reſolv'd to give him her own Breaſts, as indeed ſhe did to all her Children after: Yet for all that, her Beauty and Flower of Youth was nothing impair'd thereby. And truly, it was not only the Manner of this Queen (who exceeded moſt Ladies in the World, for Sweetneſs of Nature, and Vertuous Diſpoſition) thus to bring up her own Offspring her ſelf: But we find it Cuſtomary for the Queens of England, and other Princeſſes, to do ſo, as well before, as ſome time after: However the Delicate Madams of our Time, think it below their Care. And of the Empreſs [g] Theodora, there is Extant a curious Medal, wherein a Woman gives the Breaſt to an Infant, with this Inſcription, PIETAS ROMANA; whereby it is believed, to be ſignified, that Theodora gave ſuck to her Children her ſelf, according to the Duty of a Pious Mother; which Plutarch and Favorinus do wonderfully commend. This Laudable Cuſtom was not quite laid aſide in the Times of King Edward: For of the Ladies of thoſe Days in General, it is obſerved in the Margin of [h] Mezeray's Hiſtory, at the Year 1368, that even thoſe of the Higheſt Rank were us'd to give the Breaſt to their Children. And of the Lady Margaret, Daughter of Philip the Bold, Second Conſort to King Edward the Firſt, this King's Grandfather; this is Remarkably Obſerved, that when [i] ſhe gave her Firſt-born Son, Thomas of Brotherton, the Milk of her own Breaſts, the Babe, (as if he had an antipathy againſt every thing that was French) could by no means endure it, but ever caſt back again, what he received; yet when an Engliſh young Gentlewoman was brought to ſuckle him, he took it eagerly and thriv'd kindly upon it. And this, becauſe it had ſomething of ſtrange and unuſual in it, was often try'd with him, but ſtill it prov'd ſo, that the Engliſh Lady's Breaſts he freely took, but his French Mother's he could never away with: Whence it is reported, the King his Father ſhould ſay, ſmiling, "God give thee Grace my Boy, I ſee "thou art right Engliſh in thy Nature, and may'ſt one day ſhew thy ſelf a notable "Enemy to the French Nation. Thô even this ſo probable Omen fail'd in part, for Prince Thomas died juſt before the French Wars broke out, as hereafter ſhall be declared.

But to return whence we have digreſſed: The Birth of this young Prince Edward ſpread

[a] Knighton p. 2558. *n.*60.
[b] *Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p.*181. *Aſhmole p.*670.
[c] Labbé Chron. Techn. ad an. 1330.
[d] *Joh. Tinemouth ex Æd. Lambeth. p.*229.
[e] St. Botolphi Ab. dies Junii 17.
[f] Aſhmole p. 670. *& Sandford Geneal. Hiſt. p.*181. ex Pat. 5. Ed. 3. *p.*1 m. 33. 4. Febr.
[g] Gisb. Cuperi Apotheoſis Homeri & Inſcripp. p. 293.
[h] *Mezeray Chr. Abbreg. p.*78. vid. Bp. Taylor's Life of the H. Jeſus *p.*18. ad p. 23. &c. & vid. lib. de Lib. Educ. apud Gell. 12. 1.
[i] *Walſingh. Hiſt. p.*46. ad An. 1301. & Dugd. Bar. 2 *Vol. p.*63.

ſpread an univerſall Joy thrô the whole Land, and was thought to make a good recompence for the late loſs of one of the Kings Uncles. Nay, now as if all things conſpired to make this Bleſſing more acceptable to the Nation, a new Face of things began from this time to appear, and all publique Affairs happily ſucceeded henceforward both to the King and his People. AN. DOM. 1330. An. Regni IV.

Doctor Walter [k] Burleigh (or Burley) who had been bred up in Merton College in the famous Univerſity of Oxford, was at this time of ſuch Fame for learning and piety, that he was taken into Queen Philippa's Service (at her firſt coming into England) and became her Almoner, ſtill encreaſing in great Eſtimation at Court: Inſomuch, that when this Young Prince Edward was able to learn his Book, this Doctor was appointed to be his Tutor; whereupon Simon Burley, who was ſon to Sr. John Burley, a near Kinſman of the Doctors, was admitted among other young Gentlemen to be School-fellow with this Hopefull Prince: By which occaſion he wan ſo much upon the Princes Favour, that afterwards by his means he was advanced to great Honour, being in time made Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter, and alſo had the Government and Education of the Prince's Son Richard of Bourdeaux comitted to his Truſt.

[k] Holinſh. Eng. Chron. p. 1002.

As for the Young Prince Edward, the King his Father, by [l] his Charters dated the Eighteenth of May in the Seventh Year of his Reign, (when he was but in the Third Year of his Age) granted unto him by the Title of Edward, his moſt Dear and Eldeſt Son, the County of Cheſter, the Caſtles of Cheſter, Beſton, Rothelan and Flint, and all his Lands there, as alſo the Cantred and Land of Engleſield with their Appurtenances, to him and his Heirs, Kings of England, together with all Knights-Fees, Advowſons, Liberties, Royalties and all other things, belonging to the ſaid County, Caſtles, Lands and Cantreds, as well in England, as in Wales, and the Marches thereof, as fully, and under the ſame Conditions, as himſelf had received them before he was King; from which time he had the Title of Earl of Cheſter added to his Style. But intending to enable him yet better to maintain this his Dignity, the next day the King gave him all the Corn, as well in Granges, as growing on the Ground, as alſo all the Arms, Victuals, Cattle, Goods and Chattels in all the ſaid Caſtles, Lands and other Places, to him before granted, together with all Debts, Arrearages of Accounts, and other Services due to himſelf.

[l] Aſhmole p. 670. & Sand-Geneal. Hiſt. p. 181. ex Cart. 7. *Ed.*3. *m.*4. *& ex Pat.*7. *Ed.*3. *p.*1. *m.*13.

But in the [m] Eleventh Year of his Reign, and the Seventh of this Princes Age, upon the Death of John of Eltham Earl of Cornwall, the King created him Duke of Cornwall, as appears by his Charter of Creation, bearing Date the 17 of March the ſame Year, inveſting him by the Sword only; which was the firſt Precedent for the Creation of the Title of Duke with us in England. At the ſame time the King ſetled upon him divers Mannors aud Franchiſes, expreſly ſet down in the ſaid Charter, for the better ſupport of his Ducal State and Honour; all which (thô ſome lay in other Counties) were thereby made part of the Dutchy of Cornwall. And further by Letters Patents dated the ſame day, he granted unto him the Stanneries in Cornwall, together with the Coinage of Tynn, and all the Iſſues and Profits thence ariſing, as alſo the Profits and Perquiſits of the Courts of the Stanneries, except only a 1000 Marks granted to William Montagu, then Earl of Salisbury and his Heirs, out of the Iſſues thereof, till Lands were provided for the ſaid Earl, of that yearly Value: And afterwards granted, that all the Caſtles, Honours, Mannors, Lands and Tenements, belonging to the Dukedom or Earldom of Cornwall, which were held in Dower, or for term of Life or Years, whoſe Reverſions belonged to the King, ſhould remain to this Prince, as Duke, ſtill as they fell, and to the Eldeſt Sons of him and his Heirs, as Dukes of the foreſaid Dukedom.

[m] *Cart.*11. *Ed.*3. *n.*55.

After this in the Parliament held in the Seventeenth of this King his Father, he [n] Created him Prince of Wales, and inveſted him with a Coronet, a Gold Ring and a Silver Rod: And the better to ſupport his State, as Prince of Wales, he gave him ſeveral Lands, which are all particularly enumerated in a Writt directed to William Emeldon, to deliver them unto this Prince, or his Attourney. He alſo gave him all Debts and Arrears of Foreign Rents due to himſelf, for what cauſe ſoever, in North-Wales and South-Wales, to the time of his being created Prince of Wales, as alſo all Victuals, Arms, Horſes and other Cattel, Goods and Chattels, in all the Caſtles and Lands which he held by the Kings Grant. After all which this Noble Prince was made Knight of the Garter, at the Firſt Inſtitution of that Famous Order, and laſtly Prince of Aquitain in France, and for his Courage and Conduct, his Policy and Courteſie, became in time the moſt Renowned Captain in the World; being for his [n] 12 Maii Car. 17. *Ed.*3. *m.*24. n. 27.

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV. his Dreadfull Deeds in War (as moſt agree) ſirnamed by the French le Neoir, or the Black-Prince.

VI. In theſe Days the Young King of England finding himſelf a Father, began indeed to play the Man, and thô he was then but 18 Years of Age, takes a reſolution to govern his Realm no more by Others, but Himſelf in Perſon, hearing and learning the Truth in weighty Affairs, and diſtributing Juſtice and Mercy to ſuch who ſhould lay the beſt claim to either. But while Mortimer held his preſent Station, 'twas not poſſible the King ſhould be Maſter of his own Purpoſes: Now therefore to him we haſten, who ſeems already to have been too long free from that Vengeance which always purſues ambitious and bloody Traitors.

Of his Treachery and Cruelty we had no ſmall Inſtances before: But by a certain fatal Ordinance, that wicked Men muſt of themſelves advance and further their own Ruine, his inſupportable Arrogance, and too opiniative Security thence proceeding, was the chief Occaſions of his ſuddain Downfall.

In the Quindenes of St. Michael, the King holding a Parliament at Nottingham, Mortimer appear'd in ſuch ſplendour and ſo well attended, that he became both the Envy and Terror of all the Kings Friends; no man durſt name him by any other Title, than his new-acquired, but much-envy'd one, the Earl of March: And his Intereſt and poſſeſſions bound thoſe to him, whom his Power could not move. For in theſe days he bore ſuch ſway, that he obtain'd whatever he had a mind to, as appears by theſe following Grants from the Young King, who by his [o] Charter dated this Year (beſides all he had got before) granted unto him the Caſtle and Mannor of Hanley with the Chaces of Malverne and Cors in the Counties of Worceſter and Gloceſter, alſo the Town of Wiche in Worceſterſhire, with the Caſtle of Clifford and Mannor of Glaſebury, part of the Poſſeſſions of Hugh Spencer the younger, not yet free from the Attaindure which paſs'd upon him at the death of his Father and Grandfather. For [p] himſelf alſo and Joan his Wife (Daughter of [q] Sr. Peter Fenevill) in Fee, divers ample Liberties and Juriſdictions, to be exerciſed at his Caſtle of Trim in Ireland, beſides the Inheritance of all the Territory of Danahmain in Ireland, with very large Priveleges thereto annexed.

Beſides all which he procured a [r] Grant to Geoffry his Son of the Caſtle of Donnington in Leiceſterſhire, as alſo the Mannors of Lechelade and Sodington in Gloceſterſhire, the Mannor of Wokking in Surry, Byeby and Caſtre in Lincolnſhire, Aſhburn in the Peke in Darbyſhire, Ryehale in Rutland, and Kinely in Wiltſhire, late the poſſeſſions of Edmund Earl of Kent, attainted and executed, as we have ſhewn: Alſo the Wapentake of Ryſſey in Darbyſhire, the Wapentakes of Plumtre and Alreton in Norfolk, the Mannor of Reſeby in Leiceſterſhire, and the Mannor of Alreton with certain Lands in Drayton in Norfolk, all parcel likewiſe of the Lands of the ſaid Edmund late Earl of Kent, from whoſe Fall he gather'd this fruit to himſelf and Family. Being therefore ſo great in Authority and poſſeſſions, he now drew after him more Attendants than the King himſelf; nay [s] he was ſo ſottiſhly blinded with falſe Ambition, that he would expect his Lord and Maſter to riſe firſt to him, and if offer'd permit it; nor would he in the leaſt ſcruple to walk faſt by the King as his Fellow; nay ſometimes walk on in ſtate before him as his Lord, looking back, and more than familiarly laughing upon his Soveraign. He had, beſide the fore-mentioned Round-Table at Bedford, kept another [t] in Wales in imitation of the Famous King Arthur: For which and other too daring Tokens of his proud Spirit, he was by his own Son Sr. Geoffry, called in deriſion, The King of Folly: Which certainly was true, ſince nothing appears more ſupreamly fooliſh and ridiculous than Pride and Arrogance. Among others of his large Retinue, he is ſaid to have no leſs than [u] nineſcore Knights as his Attendants, beſides Eſquires, Serjeants at Arms and Footmen; a Company well ſuiting with his ambitious Spirit, and ſeemingly ſufficient for his Security, if long to remain ſecure was poſſible for thoſe who are blinded with Ambition.

And beſides this his unſufferable Inſolence, whereby he undervalued all the World, but himſelf, and eſteemed no Lord of the Realm his Peer, he was alſo extreamly given to heaping up Moneys; and therefore he ſtill follow'd the Court of Iſabell, the Queen Mother, and had his Proviſion bought by the Officers of the Queens Houſhold, in the ſame manner, as the King's Officers purvey'd for him; and ſo he took up all things, both as to his Victuals and Carriages, after the King's Rates; to the great enriching of himſelf, but the no leſs Grievance and oppreſſion of the People. Wherefore all the great Lords of the Land, both hated and feared him, and the King, and his Council took notice of all his Inſolencies, and ordained among them-

[o] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 146. Cart. 4. Ed. 3. n. 64.

[p] Cart. 4. Ed. 3. n. 71.

[q] Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 575.

[r] Cart. 4. Ed. 3. n. 67.

[s] Stow p. 229. n. 20.

[t] Leland. Collect. 1 Vol. p. 685. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 145. & M. S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.CC. &c.

[u] Draytons Bar. Wars l. 6. Stan. 16. & M. S. id. ibid. 222.

themſelves to pull him down at a Convenient Opportunity, by the pure force of Law and Reaſon: For it was now apparently manifeſt, that King Edward, the King's Father, was through him traitrouſly murd'red in the Caſtle of Berkley. But this their Deſign was diſcover'd to Mortimer by the Treachery of ſome Creatures of his in the Privy Council; whereat he ſtormed and raged exceedingly, againſt thoſe of the Council, that had accuſed him to the King of the Death of his Father; and ſwore, that he would be Revenged on them, whatſoever befell him. And indeed he wanted but little of bringing his purpoſe about: For at this Parliament at Nottingham, by his adviſe, the Queen Mother took into her Hands the Keys of the Caſtle, ſo that none might go in, or out, after ſuch an Hour, but at the Pleaſure of him, and of the Queen Mother, neither any of the King's Council, nor the King himſelf.

AN. DOM. 1330. AN. REGNI IV.

When the Vice-Conſtable Sr. Edward [y] Bohun came at this Parliament to appoint Lodgings in the Caſtle of Nottingham, for the King's own Cozen, Henry Earl of Lancaſter, a Prince of the Royal Blood; he took him up at a high Rate, roughly demanding, "how he durſt preſume without his Direction to preſcribe Lodgings for "any of the Nobles whatſoever, eſpecially in a place ſo near the Queen Mothers "Perſon? Whereat the Vice-Conſtable, either for the Earl of Lancaſter's Security, or to raiſe Envy to Mortimer thereby, appointed his Lodgings a Mile out of the Town; where alſo John Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, High-Conſtable of England, and the Vice-Conſtables Elder Brother, with many other Great Men were lodged. This very thing undid Mortimer, by giving his Enemies Opportunity to confer Notes together, and to adviſe one with another, how to undermine him at this Diſtance; which nearer at hand they durſt never have undertaken to do, for the Multitude of his Spies and Dependants planted about them.

[y] Stow ibid.

But now immediately it was diſcours'd among the Nobles, and privately whiſper'd among the Common People, "That Mortimer the Queen Mothers Paramour, The Old King's Murderer, and the Young King's Governour, ſought by the Ruine of the Royal Family, and by trampling the Nobility under Foot, to aſpire to the Regal Power. It was alſo (the more to enflame Mens minds) privily rumour'd, that the Queen Mother was impregnate by Mortimer, thô never any effect appear'd after to that purpoſe. However, this with other Matters was handſomely convey'd to the Young King's Ear, by ſome of his Faithfull Servants, who upon his demurr at the Danger, encouraged him boldly, not any longer to endure ſuch diſhonour from a Man that had Murdered his Father, Miſlead his Mother, and cut off his Uncle; vowing in Defence and Vindication of his Royal Dignity, to ſtand by him to the laſt drop of their Blood. The King hereat taking high Indignation, and as High Courage at their promiſed aſſiſtance, reſolves forthwith to level this Bold Encroacher on Soveraignty, and bring him to a ſevere Account for all his former Ill Services.

William [z] Lord Montacute, or Montagu (for 'tis the ſame) was the Chief in this Concern, and the Man that moſt Boldly lay'd open the whole matter before the King; who immediately thereupon [a] gave him Command, to take to his Aſſiſtance ſome other Truſty and Reſolute Perſons, which he did accordingly. And the Names of his Aſſociates; as many as I have met with, are theſe, Sr. Humphry Bohun, next Brother to Earl John, the Conſtable, Sr. Edward Bohun the Vice-Conſtable, and Sr. William Bohun, afterwards Earl of Northampton, a Martial Man of that Age (but their Eldeſt Brother the Conſtable himſelf could not be there, by reaſon of an Infirmity of Body) there was alſo Sr. [b] John Lord Molins, Robert Lord Hufford, Ralph Lord Stafford, William Lord Clinton, and Sr. John Nevil of Horneby.

[z] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 641.

[a] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 146.

[b] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 145. vid. Leland. Collect. 1 Vol. p. 686.

Now while theſe men were deviſing how to Seiſe on Mortimer; the ſame Mortimer in Order to their Deſtruction, held a cloſe Council in the Caſtle of Nottingham with the Queen-Mother, the Biſhop of Lincoln, Sr. Simon Bereford, Sr. Hugh Turplington, and Sr. John Monmouth, and other his Creatures, how to bring to utter Ruine all thoſe that had accuſed him of Treaſon and Felony. But this cloſe Carriage of Mortimer's was ſmoak'd by the Lord Montague, and thoſe of the Council concern'd with him; eſpecially, becauſe none of them were permitted to take up their Lodgings in the Caſtle; wherefore they knew, that Mortimer and his Complices were brewing miſchief for them. Then Sr. William Montague went and told the King, that ſince neither he, nor any of his Partakers were admitted to Lodge in the Caſtle, they ſhould never be able to Seiſe Mortimer without the Conſent and Aſſiſtance of the Conſtable, Sr. William Eland. "Now ſurely ſaid the King I love you well; and "therefore adviſe you to go to the Conſtable in my Name, and command him to "be Aiding and Aſſiſtant to you in taking the Mortimer, all other things lay'd aſide, side, on peril of Life and Limb. "Sr, said Montague, then God grant Success: And thereupon he went and found the said Constable, to whom he told the King's will before the rest of his Partakers; but only yet in general Terms, that it was the King's Pleasure, he should be assistant to them in a certain matter relating to the King's Honour and Safety: And the Constable answer'd that the King's Will should be obey'd, in what he could, and that he would not stand out for fear of Death it self; and then he swore to be constant and secret, and made his Oath to the Lord Montagu, and Montagu to him, in the hearing of all the Assistants. "Now surely, "Dear Friend, said the Lord Montagu to the Constable, it behoved us to gain your "acquaintance, in order to seise on Mortimer, since you are Keeper of the Castle, "and have the Keys at your dispose. "Sirs, reply'd the Constable, if it be so, "you shall understand, that the Gates of the Castle are locked with the Locks that "Queen Isabell sent hither, and at Night she hath all the Keys thereof, and lay-"eth them under the Pillow of her Bed, until the Morning: And so I may not "help you into the Castle at the gates by any means. But I know an Hole, that "stretcheth out of the Ward under Earth into the Castle, beginning on the West-side; "which Hole, neither Isabell the Queen, nor none of her Retinue, nor Mortimer himself, "nor none of his Company know any thing of; and through this Passage I shall lead "you, till you come into the Castle, without the Espial of any that are your Ene-"mies. That same Night Sr. William Montagu, and all the Lords his Partakers, and the Constable also, took Horse pretending to go out of Town; which when Mortimer heard of, he thought they were fled away for fear of him, and devised further how to entrap them. But about Midnight, being * a Fryday, and the day after the Feast of St. Luke, or the 19 of October, returning back again, they all came to the Pas-sage aforesaid, and there following the direction of Sr. William Eland, enter a certain dismal Cave, not of a long while taken Notice of, which opening its Mouth with-out, went all under the Castle, dug unequally thrô Stony and other sort of Ground, till it came to the Rock on which the Castle stood; thrô which it also passed with Stairs, till it open'd it self above within the Keep, or Chief Tower.

[c] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. Cantab. c. 222.

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

* Lit. Dom. G.

[d] This wonderfull Passage had been after this manner hewed and dug forth, during the Danish Invasions, by some of the Saxon Kings, for their better Security in case of a siege: But since the Action of this Night, it hath purchas'd the [e] Name of Mortimer's Hole. Whom without any great Noise, and with little Resistance they at last took, not in the Queen Mothers Chamber (as many too ignorantly, or too maliciously suppose) but in another, not indeed far from it, in the Company of [f] Henry Burwash, Lord Bishop of Lincoln. Before he could be seised, the Lord Montagu finding some Resistance from his Attendants, slew Sr. Hugh [g] Turplington Steward of the King's Houshold, and Sr. John Monmouth; and at last, Chiefly by the great Valour of Sr. William Eland, took the Lord Mortimer's Person, to be reserved to some more Publique Fortune. On the King's Party, Sr. John Nevil of Horneby was wounded, but not as some say, slain; as will appear hereafter; where we shall speak of the Reward the King allotted him for this piece of Service; and also in the 15th Year of this King, we shall find him Governour of Newcastle upon Tine. Thô by others, Sr. Hugh Turplington is made one of the King's Party; and again both he and Sr. John Nevil of Horneby, are by [h] Mr. Drayton mistaken for Mortimer's Friends, and both said, then and there to be slain: But this I mention not as a Fault in so Great a Man; since Poets are not obliged to be so Exact for Truth, as Historians are.

[d] Drayton's Barons Wars l. 6. Stanz. 46.
[e] Speed Map. Nottingh. §. 6.
[f] H. Knighton p. 2556.
[g] Knighton ibid. & Adam Murimouth. & M.S. ibid. &c.
[h] Drayton's Bar. Wars l. 6. Stanz. 63.

The Queen Mother being then in Bed, heard the Noise of this Rencountre, and supposing what the matter really was, and that the King himself must needs be there, she called out to him in these Words, [i] Bel Fitz, Bel Fitz, ayes Pitie du Gentil Mortimer, "Dear Son, have pity on the Gallant Mortimer: Or as the foresaid "[k] M. S. (which takes no notice of the King's being there) reports her words more "probably, "Now fair Sirs, I pray you, that you do no harm unto his Body; for "he is a Worthy Knight, Our well-beloved Friend, and Our dear Cozen. But for all this the Earl of March was hurryed away thence, and brought before the King; (where he stood) and presented unto him; who strait commanded him to be put into safe Custody in the Castle; whereof all the Keys are forthwith seised into the King's Hands; that none might issue out to discover what had been done, till the rest of Mortimer's Abettors were secured also.

[i] Stow p. 229, &c.
[k] M.S. ibid. c. 222.

So the next Morning, by the King's special Command, [l] two of his Sons were seised in the Town, Sr. Edmund and Sr. Geoffry, together with Sr. Oliver Byngham, and

[l] Knighton p. 2556.

and Sr. Simon Bedford, (or Bereford) and Sr. John Daverill, Conſtable of Corfe Caſtle, who had been an Evidence againſt Edmund, late Earl of Kent, the King's Uncle. That day Mortimer, with the reſt that were taken upon his Account, was hurryed away by Officers, and a ſtrong Guard towards London, the People all along inſulting on his Miſery, among whom even Henry the Old Earl of Lancaſter (thô almoſt blind with Age) could not refrain expreſſing his Great Satisfaction in the Downfall of this his bitter Enemy, by ſhouting and flinging up his Cap for joy. Being at London, they are all committed to the Tower, the King the mean time having adjourn'd the Parliament from Nottingham to London, the ſummons bearing Date the 23d of October from Leiceſter (where the King then was) whereby every man was commanded to meet at Weſtminſter on the 26 of November following, being a Monday, and the Day after St. Catherine.

AN. DOM. 1330. An Regni IV.

The Parliament being met in Time and Place accordingly, Articles are drawn up againſt the foreſaid Lord Mortimer, Earl of March, which, thô an Extract I have by me, complains could not be perfectly read from the Records (they being Moldred in that part) ſtand to this purpoſe in their old Original French in Knighton, who lived in thoſe Days, and had Copies of the Records; ſo that the Matter appears thereby very Authentick.

1. "Imprimis, That whereas it was ordain'd (by the Parliament then held at London) juſt after the Coronation of our Lord the King, that [m] five Biſhops, two Earls, "and five Barons, ſhould be of Council to the King; that is to ſay, Four at one "time, viz. One Biſhop, one Earl, and two Barons at the leaſt, without whoſe Aſ"ſent no matter of Moment ſhould be done, and that each of theſe ſhould be re"ſponſible for what they ſhould do in their turns; the ſaid Roger, bearing no Regard "to this aſſent of Parliament, appropriated to himſelf the ſole Diſpoſal, Govern"ment, and Adminiſtration of the Realm to the Derogation of the Eſtate Royal, "and placed and diſplaced Miniſters in the King's Houſhold, and elſewhere through"out the Realm at the Pleaſure of himſelf, and his Friends; And ſet Sr. John Wy"ard, and others over the King, as Spies of his Words and Actions; ſo that the King "was in ſuch manner encompaſſed by his Enemies, that he was not able to do any thing "after his own Mind, but was rather like a Priſoner, than a King.

[m] H. Knighton p. 2556. ibi quatre Eveſkes, quatre Contes & vi Barons: ſed hoc ex priùs facto corrigo. vid. c. 1. §. 4.

2. "Item, That whereas the Father of our Lord the King was placed in the Caſtle "of Kenelworth by Ordinance of the Peers of the Realm, there to abide at his eaſe, "to be ſerved according to the Dignity of ſo Great a Prince: The ſaid Roger pre"ſum'd to let him have nothing according to his Will; but order'd him to be remand"ed to Barkley Caſtle, where finally, by him and his, he was falſly, Traitrouſly, and Fe"lonioufly Murd'red and Slain.

3. "Item, That whereas the ſaid Roger had himſelf cauſed, that it was forbid by "the King's Brief under the Great Seal, that any ſhould come armed to the Parlia"ment at Salisbury, on Penalty of forfeiting all they had to the King; Notwith"ſtanding the ſaid Roger, and others of his Company came thither with force of Arms "againſt the ſaid Order: Whereby many, as the Earl of Lancaſter, and others, "knowing the manner of his coming, durſt not come at all: And whereas the Pre"lates were Aſſembled at the ſame Parliament, in a certain Houſe there, to conſult "the Affairs of the King and his Realm, the ſaid Roger compell'd them to ſit in "another Houſe, where his Armed Men were to overawe them, and threatned them "on peril of Life and Limb, not to ſay or do any thing contrary to his Will and "Ordinance: So that in the ſaid Parliament he brought to paſs, that the King made "him Earl of March, and gave him many Lands and Tenements to the Diſheriſon of "the Crown. Alſo then the ſaid Roger perſwaded the King to march in Hoſtile "manner, againſt the ſaid Earl of Lancaſter, and others, Peers of the Realm, as far "as [n] Wincheſter, whither they were advanced towards the King, in order to come "to the ſaid Parliament at Salisbury. So that the ſaid Earl, and the other Peers of "the Realm, to eſchew the Danger that might happen (from a Civil War) and "for Reverence of the Kng, brake up and went homeward, grieving, that they "could neither be admitted to ſpeak with, nor to adviſe their Liege Lord, as they "ought to do.

[n] Errorem hic ſuſpicor vid. c. 2. §. 4. p. 40.

4. "Item, That the ſaid Roger cauſed the King to ride with an Army againſt the "Earl of Lancaſter, and other Peers of the Realm, who had been ordain'd to be of "the King's Council. And ſo violently purſu'd them, that the Earl of Lancaſter "and other Grandees of the Realm, who never deſign'd any thing, but his Majeſties "Welfare; were forced to ſubmit themſelves to the King's Grace, ſaving to them Life

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

"and Limb, and that they ſhould not be diſinherited, nor ſet at too Great Ranſome:
"Notwithſtanding the ſaid Roger put them to great Ranſome, and others he chaſed
"out of the Realm, that he might ſeiſe on their Lands againſt the form of Magna Charta,
"and the Law of the Land.

5. "Item, That whereas the ſaid Roger knew very well, that the Father of our "Lord the King was Dead and buried; he by the help of others his Accomplices had "in deceitfull manner ſo wrought, that Edmund Earl of Kent heard he was alive: "whereupon the ſaid Earl was very deſirous to find out the Truth; and did according- "ly, by all the beſt and moſt honeſt ways he could, proceed to ſearch out the "Reality; till the ſaid Roger by the Royal Power, uſurped by him, cauſed the ſaid Earl "of Kent at a Parliament at Wincheſter, to be apprehended, and then and there procured "him to be put to Death.

6. "Item, That the ſaid Roger had wrought upon the King, to grant unto him, his "Children and Allyes, Caſtles, Towns, Mannors and Franchiſes in England, Ireland and "Wales, to the Detriment of the Crown.

7. "Item, That he had in deceitfull manner cauſed the Charges of the War in "Gaſcoigne, for one whole Year to be paid to him beforehand by the Knights, who "were ſeverally to find ſuch a number of Men of Arms: And that this Money was "not employed in the War, but converted falſly to his uſe and pleaſure.

8. "Item, That by the Royal Power, which he had uſurped, he had by Letters "under the Great Seal ſummon'd many Barons and Knights to come to the King to "what part he pleaſed, and at their coming had charged them to addreſs themſelves "to the War in Gaſcoign, or in lieu thereof to pay ſuch and ſuch Fines, at his plea- "ſure: All which as it was grievous to the Subject, only turn'd to the profit of the "ſaid Roger, [who alſo appropriated the Kings Wards to himſelf.]

9. "Item, That he had falſly and ſeditiouſly ſowed Diſcord between the Father of "our Lord the King and the Queen his Conſort; making her believe, that if ſhe went "to him, he would kill her with a Ponyard or other weapon, or murder her ſome other "way: And by reaſon of that and other his Conveyances, he did ſo much that the "Queen never went to her Lord (to afford him her Bed) to the great diſhonour of "the King and the whole Realm, and perhaps for time to come for its Dammage, which "God forbid.

10. "Item, That the ſaid Roger had taken and cauſed to be taken for himſelf and "others of his Council, the Kings Treaſure, without reaſon, to be diſpoſed of at his "pleaſure; to the utter Impoveriſhment of the King, ſo that he was left unable to "pay for his Proviſion, or maintain his Royal Eſtate.

11. "Item, That the ſaid Roger had taken to himſelf and his Allies the 30000 "Marks, which were paid by the Scots according to the form of the Peace, ſo that "nought thereof came to the Kings uſe or profit.

12. "Theſe Articles with three more, relating to the Publiſhing the Kings Secrets, "his Murdering and Fining ſeveral Peers of the Land, and his Uſurping the Kings Au- "thority, with ſome things in reſpect of the Kings Honour not to be drawn up in "Writing, which I ſuppoſe related to his Familiarity with the Queen Mother, were "the ſumm of what was ſaid againſt him, and conſiſted of Treaſons, Felonies and high "Miſdemeanours.

Whereupon the King [o] chargeth the Earls, Barons and others, Peers of the Realm, to pronounce juſt Judgment upon him the ſaid Roger Mortimer: Who all thereupon conſulting together agreed; that all and ſingular the Articles againſt the ſaid Roger above atteſted were true, and notorious, and known to all the People of the Land, and eſpecially that Article touching the Death of the King at Berkley-Caſtle: Wherefore it was by them adjudged; that the ſaid Roger as a Traytor, and an Enemy of the King and Kingdom, ſhould be Drawn and Hanged. And this Sentence he received, without being [p] called to any kind of Anſwer, as he himſelf had before order'd in the caſe of the Spencers, and of the Lord Edmund, late Earl of Kent, the King's Uncle.

[o] M.S. Rec. Parl. p. 10. & Knighton p. 2558. n. 40. & Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgm. of the Records, ſet out by Mr. Pryn p. 6. &c.

[p] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 147.

A juſt Judgment upon him, though in it ſelf illegal: For it is not the uſage of the Law of England to condemn without Hearing or due ſummons to Judgment: And doubtleſs the ſins of Sodom were more notorious to God in Heaven, than thoſe of any perſon can be to mortall Men in Parliament: But yet we read in the Sacred Books, how that moſt juſt Judge both would and did go down to hear and proceed in a Judicial way. Wherefore alſo [q] twenty four Years after, his Attaindure was reverſed, and Roger his Grandſon, reſtored to all his Titles and Honours, the Judgment being reckon'd kon'd void and erroneous, becauſe not done according to the Laws of England. However now according to the Sentence, the Earl Marſhal (being ſo commanded) with the aſſiſtance of the Mayor and Sheriffs of London, ſaw him executed upon the common Gallows, now called Tyburn, on the [r] 29 of November, being the Vigil of St. Andrew and a Thurſday, or rather, [ſ] as it was found by inquiſition twenty four Years after, on the Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Catherine the Virgin, which was the 26 of November, and the very firſt day of this Parliaments Sitting; and was [t] buried the third Day after, which indeed was the 29 of November, having hung two days and two nights by the King's ſpecial Commandment. After which by the Kings Favour, his Body was granted to the Friers-Minors, or Gray-Friers in London, who buried him in their Church, now called Chriſt-Church; whence [u] many Years after he was tranſlated to Wigmore. So that Du [x] Cheſne appears to be miſtaken, who affirms, that he was hang'd, drawn and quarter'd, his Quarters ſet up upon the Gates of Four chief Cities of England, and his Head upon London-Bridge.

[q] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 147.

AN. DOM. 1330. An. Regni IV.

[r] Knighton p. 2559. l. 3.
[ſ] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 147.
[t] Monaſt. Angl. 2 Vol. p. 224.
[u] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 146.
[x] Du Cheſne Hiſtoire d' Angleterre p. 637.

He died ſeized [y] of the Mannors of Stratfield-Mortimer and Wogfield, as parcel of the Mannor of Wigmore, alſo of the Mannor of Newbury and the Moiety of that Town, all in Berkſhire: Likewiſe of the Mannors of Clifton upon Temede, and Odingley in Worceſterſhire; of the Mannors of Noke, Mawrdyn and Wynfreton, with the Advowſon of the Church of Wynfreton in Herefordſhire; of the Caſtle and Mannor of Nerberth, and the Third part of the Town of St. Clier with the Advowſon of the Church; the Third part of the Commots of Amgeyd and Pentyryock, and the Third part of the Town of Haverford in Herefordſhire; of the Caſtles and Dominions of Blenleveny and Bulkedinas in the Marches of Wales, beſides [z] the Caſtle, Town and Mannor of Denbeigh and the Cantreds of Roes, Rewinoc and Keirmer, with the Commot of Dinmal, and the Appurtenances in Northwales, as alſo the Caſtle and Mannor of Mongomery, with the Mannor and Hundred of Chirbury in Shropſhire. All which his great Poſſeſſions were ſeized into the Kings Hands, as [a] appears by his Precepts bearing date the 23[d] of October, which were directed to ſeveral Perſons, for the Seizing of his Caſtles, Mannors and Lands in Wales (he being then only under Arreſt for ſeveral High Miſdemeanors tending to the Dammage of the King and Kingdom (as the words therein do import) and within 3 Days following, Commiſſion was granted to John Kingſton and Others to take an Inventory of all his Treaſure and Jewels in Wales and the Marches; but not to carry away any thing out of the Wardrobe of Joan his Wife, then at Ludlow, or any thing that belonged to any of her Children, or Servants. By this Lady Joan, who was [b] Daughter and ſole Heir of Peter Jenevill Knight, this great, but unhappy Man, had Iſſue [c] four Sons and ſeven Daughters; his Firſt Son was Sr. Edmund, who was never Earl of March, his Fathers Attaindure not being reverſed in his time, the Second was Sr. Roger, the Third Sr. Geoffry Earl of Jubien, and Lord of Cowith, which three were all Knighted at the Coronation of this King Edward; and the Fourth was John Mortimer, unhappily ſlain in a Tournament at Shrewsbury: His Daughters were Catherine, wife to Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, Joan, married to James Lord Audely, the Son of Nicholas Lord Audely, Baron of Heleigh; Agnes to Laurence Haſtings, afterwards Earl of Pembroke; Margaret to Thomas, Son and Heir of Maurice Lord Barkley; or as [d] Others ſay, to Robert Lord Vere Earl of Oxford, thô the Truth is, that Earl being her firſt Husband, and dying the next Year, ſhe was afterwards taken in Marriage by the foreſaid Lord Berkley: Maud the Fifth Daughter of this Mortimer was married to John Son and Heir of Sr. John Charleton Lord of Powis; the Sixth Daughter Blanch, to Peter Lord Grandeſſon; and laſtly, the Lady Beatrix was firſt wife to Edward Son and Heir of Thomas of Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk and the Kings Uncle, after whoſe immature Deceaſe, ſhe was married to Sr. Thomas Lord Braoſe. But all theſe Poſſeſſions and Strength of Allyance were too weak to ſecure him from the Wrath of an Injur'd King, and the Vengeance that his Immoderate Ambition drew upon him.

[y] Dugd. 1 Vol. 147.
[z] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 641.
[a] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 146.
[b] Mills Catal. Honor. p. 575.
[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 147.
[d] Catal. Nobility by R. B. & Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 192. b.

After this Sentence thus pronounced on Mortimer, the Earls and Barons with one Voice declared in Parliament, that Sr. Simon Bereford, [e] Brother to Juſtice Bereford (whom others by miſtake call Bedford) was ever conſulting, aſſenting and aſſiſting to the ſaid Roger in all his Seditions, Treaſons, Felonies and Miſdemeanours, and was equally with him guilty of the Murther of the late King, and his principal Abettor in all other Wickedneſs: Wherefore the like Judgment being pronounced on him, the Lord Marſhall in like manner ſaw him Executed on the Monday next after St. Thomas the Apoſtle, being the [f] 24 of December and Chriſtmaſs Eve, thô the 16 day of

[e] M.S. R.P. p. 10. §. 2. S. Rob. Cotton p. 6. &c. Stow p. 230. Knighton p. 2558. §. 50.
[f] M.S. R.P. ibi.

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

January is set down in [g] Knighton; whose Works swarm with such Mistakes of Names, and Times and Numbers, by reason of the old and imperfect Copies, whence the Edition was made.

The same Judgment was given against Sr. John Maltravers senior, Sr. Thomas [h] Gournay and Sr. William Ogle (who were all fled) for Murdering the late King, and large Promises were made to those should apprehend them; but as for Sr. John Maltravers it was proclaim'd, that whoever brought him in alive, should have a thousand Marks, or for bringing his Head five hundred.

The like Judgment passed upon [i] Sr. John Daverill, Captain of Corfe Castle, who had been instrumental in contriving the Death of the King's Uncle, late Earl of Kent, and accordingly he was [k] executed, as he well deserved. 'Tis said, [l] this Sr. John Daverill was desirous to make open Confession of the manner of the late Kings Death, but by the cunning of some, who feared to be touched therein, he was not permitted. Besides all these, one Sr. [m] Bogo of Bayonne (mention'd in the preceding Confession of Edmund late Earl of Kent, and so by all likelihood concerned in the Plot against the said Earls Life) was by Proclamation required to be apprehended, and a considerable Reward set for him that should bring him in alive or dead. But that ever he was taken, I do not find; thô Sr. Thomas Gournay was this very Year taken at Marseilles in France, and as they were bringing him over for England, was by secret Order from some at Court, who feared to be touched in his Confession, beheaded on the Sea.

In this Parliament it was [n] Enacted; That thô the Lords and Peers of the Realm, had for this time in the Kings Presence, proceeded as Judges, to give Judgment upon those that were no Peers; yet hereafter this should be no Precedent to draw them to give Judgment on any Other but their Peers, in case of Treason or Felony.

It was [o] also Enacted, That William Merton Archbishop of York, Stephen Gravesend Bishop of London, William Abbot of Longdon, William Lord Zouch of Mortimer, and many Others, who had been agreed with Edmund late Earl of Kent to work the Delivery of King Edward the Second, and had been thereof impeached, should now be wholly Acquitted, and fully Restored to all their Goods and Possessions.

Also, [p] That whosoever had took Arms with Henry Earl of Lancaster at Bedford, or had been concerned in the Matter of Edmund late Earl of Kent, should be released of all Fines for that reason laid upon them, and that their Lands which were therefore seized into the Kings Hands, should be restored with the main Profits; saving, that if they have any Lands of the Kings Gift, the same be of the like Condition as Others, who have Lands of his Gift. And therefore the King pardoneth Henry [q] Earl of Lancaster, and all those who took part with him, all Fines and Ransoms whatsoever.

Accordingly we find that soon [r] after, upon the fame of Mortimers Fall and the knowledge of this Pardon, Sr. Thomas Lord Wake, Hugh Lord Audely, Henry Lord Beaumont, Sr. Thomas Rosselin, Sr. William Trussel, Sr. Thomas Withers and the Rest, whom Mortimers power had forced beyond the Seas, returned from France to London; where they were received, as became their Loyalty, being by the King freely restored to all their Lands, Honours and Possessions.

The [s] Mayor of London complaining, that some of the said Earl of Lancaster's Company, being now pardon'd, did threaten such of the Citizens as had before resisted them; the King thereupon commandeth, that neither Party should presume to seek any Revenge on pain of Imprisonment.

Edmund the [t] Eldest Son of Edmund late Earl of Kent, and Margaret his Mother, Countess of Kent, by their several Petitions require, that the Record made against the said Earl of Kent, may be for the Errors therein, wholly Reversed: Whereupon the King restores the said Edmund the Son, to the Blood and Lands of the said Earl his Father; whereof he died seised in Fee, with Dower to the Countess, saving to the King the Keeping and Wardship of the same, during the Nonage of the said Edmund the Son.

And to put [u] a stop to all malicious and perjur'd Informers, as well as to give a publique Security to Men's Minds, it was now Enacted, that no Peer of the Land, nor other Person, who had any way assisted in procuring the Death of the said Edmund late Earl of Kent, should hereafter be Impeached thereof, excepting only the foresaid Earl of March, Sr. Simon Bereford, Sr. John Maltravers senior, Sr. Bogo of Bayonne and Sr. John [x] Daverill.

Here [y] Richard Fitz-Alan, Eldest Son of Edmund late Earl of Arundel, (who by the Queen

[g] Knighton ib.
[h] M.S. R.P. ib. §. 5. Sr. Rob. Cotton, &c.
[i] M.S. & Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgm. ibid.
[k] Speed p. 568. b
[l] Stow p. 230.
[m] M.S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton ibid.
[n] M.S. ibid. §. 6. & Sr. Rob. Cotton ibid.
[o] §. 7.
[p] §. 8.
[q] §. 9.
[r] Knighton p. 2558. n. 60.
[s] M.S. p. 11. §. 10. Sr. Rob. Cotton, &c.
[t] §. 11. Parl. Anno 4. Ed. 3. p. 1. M.S. ibid. §. 12. Paten. 5. Ed. 3.
[u] §. 13. & Sr. Rob. Cotton.
[x] In M.S. Bervervil per incuriam Amanuensis, apud Sr. Rob. Cotton Berveroile, &c.
[y] M.S. p. 12. §. 14. & Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 7.

Queen Mother had been beheaded in the late Rebellion) humbly prayeth to be reſtored to his Blood, and to the Lands and Goods of his Father; conſidering, that the ſaid Earl his Father had been put to Death without being Tryed by his Peers, according to the Law and Tenour of Magna Charta: But becauſe the ſaid Attaindure was [z] afterwards confirmed by Parliament at Northampton; the ſaid Richard Corrects his Former Petition, and prayeth to be Reſtored of the King's meer Grace and Bounty. Whereupon by the King he was accordingly Reſtored, together with the Caſtle of Arundel (which had been given to Edmund Late Earl of Kent) upon promiſe by him made, to pay the Value of the ſaid Caſtle to Edmund Son of the Late Earl of Kent, the ſaid Earl Richard paying the uſual Rents to the Crown, and ſaving to the King all ſuch Additional Lands, as were too laviſhly given to the Late Earl of Arundel by King Edward the Second.

AN. DOM. 1330. An. Regni IV.

[z] An. Reg. 2. Ed. 3.

Nor was the Young King at this time unmindfull of thoſe, whoſe faithfull Friendſhip had thus aſſerted his Royal Prerogative, and deliver'd him from the over-awing Tyranny of his Enemies: For in this Parliament [a] he gave to the Lord William Montagu, for his Loyal Service againſt the Late Earl of March and his Favourers, the general Entail of a Thouſand Pounds per annum; and for one Thouſand Marks thereof, both the Caſtle, Town and Mannor of Denbigh, and the Cantreds of Roos, Rewyinoc, and Kaermer, with the Commot of Dinmal, and the Appurtenances in North-Wales, all late belonging to Roger Earl of March: Moreover he granted unto him the Caſtle of Shireburne in Dorſetſhire, with the Cuſtoms of Ale and Beer in that place.

[a] M.S. §. 15. & St Rob. Cotton.

On the like Conſideration [b] he granted unto Sr. Edward Bohun (who was Vice-conſtable under his Eldeſt Brother the Earl of Eſſex, and prov'd the firſt occaſion of Broaching this Matter, as well as a Reſolute Aſſiſtant in it) four hundred Marks per annum, in general Entail; Together [c] with the Lordſhips of Vphavene and Sende in Wiltſhire, to hold to himſelf, and the Heirs Male of his Body Lawfully begotten. Further at the ſame time he gave unto Sr. Robert Hufford three Hundred Marks in Special Entail, [d] with a Grant of the Mannors of Cauſton and Fakenhambden in Fee, beſides a Grant for Life of the Town and Caſtle of Orford in Suffolk; as alſo another in Tail Special of the Mannors of Graveſend in Kent, Burgh and Coffeſey in Norfolk, and two parts of the Mannor of Geſting-thorp in Eſſex. Laſtly, to Sr. John Nevil [e] of Horneby, he granted 200 Marks in Tail Special, and to others, other Rewards proportionably.

[b] §. 16. &c.

[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 184.

[d] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 47.

[e] §. 16. p. 12.

In a Plea of the Crown holden before the King this Parliament [f] Thomas Lord Barkley, in whoſe Caſtle (as we ſhew'd before) the Old King had been Murder'd, was Arraign'd for the Death of the ſaid King; for [g] that the ſaid King had been committed by Henry Earl of Lancaſter, to the Cuſtody of the ſaid Thomas Lord Barkley with an allowance of five Pounds per diem, for his Expences; that notwithſtanding ſoon after he was inhumanly Murder'd in the ſaid Caſtle. To which the ſaid Thomas ſaith, that being forced to Reſign his Caſtle and Charge to John Lord Maltravers, and to Thomas Gournay Knight, he retired to his Mannor Houſe at Bradley; that at the time of the Death of the ſaid King, he lay ſick at Bradley, and was not within the Caſtle of Barkley, nor was witting, nor conſenting to the Death of the ſaid King, and ſo he put himſelf upon the Tryal of Twelve Knights, his Peers, whoſe Names are there Recorded, and by whom the ſaid Sr. Thomas was found not Guilty, he not having fled, nor withdrawn himſelf thereupon: But only that he had Reſign'd his Caſtle upon peremptory Command, to Sr. Thomas Gournay, and Sr. William Ogle, who then, and there did Murder the ſaid King Edward the Second. Upon all which thô he was acquitted in Parliament, yet there [h] are ſome Circumſtances, which make it very ſuſpicious, that he was at leaſt a Favourer of the Action; as his Conniving at Gournay therein, and ſheltering him privately for a while after.

[f] M.S. ibid. p. 12 §. 17. & 18. St Rob. Cotton, &c.

[g] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 356.

[h] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 357.

Several others were now Reſtored to their Lands, and releaſed of thoſe Forfeitures impoſed on them by the Late Earl of March; as Sr. [i] Ebulo le Strange of Knoking and his Lady Alice, who was Daughter to Henry Laſcey, once Earl of Lincoln, and firſt Wife to Thomas Late Earl of Lancaſter, theſe had Lands Reſtored to them to the Yearly Value of 1200 Marks: And Sr. William [k] Lord Zouch of Mortimer with his Lady Eleanor was Reſtored to his Lands in Glamorgan, or Morganow in Wales.

[i] M.S. p. 13. §. 19.

[k] §. 20.

For avoiding other Inconveniences, that might ariſe from private Diſtaſtes, the King

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

King enjoyn'd the new Earl [l] of Arundel to pardon Sr. John Charlton, Lord of Powis, and ſon in Law to the Late Earl of March, who was one of thoſe that apprehended his Father Edmund Earl of Arundel; and commanded them both henceforth to keep the Peace mutually.

[l] §. 24.

It was alſo Enacted, [m] that William Lord Montagu and all others with him at the Apprehenſion of the Late Earl of March, and others in Nottingham, ſince what they did was Authorized by the King's Command, ſhould be wholly acquitted thereof, and of all Murders and Felonies there done: From whence we cannot but obſerve, that the [n] Laws of England do ſo abhor Murder and Bloodſhed, that even He, who ſpills Blood, thô in his own moſt juſt Defence, nay thô in his King's Behalf, and at his Command, ſeems yet in a manner to ſtand in ſome need of a Pardon from the King, before he can be fully Reſtored to the ſtate of Innocence.

[m] §. 26.

[n] Ant. Wood's Antiqu. Oxon. l. 1. p. 176. b.

Several other juſt, Gracious, and Profitable things were done this Seſſions; but theſe ſhall ſuffice, as being the Chief; nor could I be leſs large, unleſs I ſhould have left out many things neceſſary to the clearing the Story, and have conceal'd ſomething that makes for this Young Monarch's Honour.

I find nothing in the Records of this Parliament relating to the Queen Mother all this while; whether, in reſpect to the King, they Dutifully declin'd to call her in Queſtion, or whether the King himſelf forbad them to concern themſelves in a matter ſo nearly touching him, which is more likely. And ſurely, whoever conſiders the Inequality of this Queens Age, with that of Mortimer's, She being little more then Thirty, and He at leaſt more then Fifty, (for we find, [o] that he received the Order of Knighthood from this King's Grandfather) will rather believe, that by his ſubtle and crafty inſinuations, he made himſelf Neceſſary to this Queens Counſels, than that his Perſon could ever render him acceptable to her Bed: She her ſelf being accounted one of the moſt Delicate Ladies of that Age. Whereas He was not only a Married man, but a Father of Eleven Children, by moſt of whom he was at his Death a Grandfather. Howbeit near this time the King being ſenſible of her Wickedneſs to the King his Father, [p] confin'd her to perpetual Impriſonment at Riſeings near London, being in Filial Piety obliged to do no more againſt the Mother, nor no leſs for the Sake of his Father. The Greek Tragedians might have ſav'd Oreſtes from his Mothers Furies, had they given him the Diſcerning Juſtice of this Young Engliſh Prince, to Revenge indeed his Fathers Death; but not ſo, as by ſhedding of his own Mothers Blood. Nay herein, he not only tranſcended the Vertue of a Pagan Heroe, but ſhew'd himſelf both more Pious, and more Diſcreet, than that Chriſtian Prince, his Predeceſſor, Edward the Confeſſor; who only upon a bare ſuſpicion of Adultery in his Mother Emma, cauſed her to paſs [q] Blindfold over Nine Burning Plow-ſhares (after the Law of the Ordeal) a Fiery Tryal indeed before any Proof made. Immediately upon this Confinement of the Old Queens, all her Vaſt and Immoderate Dowry was ſieſed into the King's Hands; but ſome Plate and Jewels, with other Furniture convenient for her Eſtate, were ſtill left unto her; and beſides, the King her Son allow'd her, during Life three Thouſand Marks, or a Thouſand Pounds ſterling (which was afterwards Augmented to four Thouſand Pounds) per annum, for her Maintenance, and went himſelf conſtantly, whilſt ſhe lived (which was almoſt Twenty Eight Years after) to viſit her Once or Twice a Year. Nevertheleſs, He often ſent her many Goodly Preſents, and Granted ſeveral Advantages, as of Fairs, and the like; and for her Greater Diverſion would frequently cauſe many Rare and Pleaſant Shews to be Repreſented before her, both within and without the Caſtle, to which, upon Occaſion ſhe was permitted to come: But certain Limits were appointed, and the Keeper of the Caſtle on Peril of his Head, was to ſecure his Royal Priſoner.

[o] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 144.

[p] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 895. &c.

[q] Milton's Hiſt. Engl. l 6. p. 287 & Antiqu. Britann. p. 98.

CHAP-

CHAPTER the FOURTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. Henry Earl of Lancaſter founds the New Hoſpital at Leiceſter: The Popes Grant to King Edward, with his Opinion about the Souls of the Departed. II. The Lord James Douglas of Scotland kill'd in Spain. III. Edward Baliol claims the Crown of Scotland againſt David Bruce, with the Event. IV. Hector and Buchanan found tardy. V. King Edward repreſſes the Licence of certain Outlaws. VI. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. VII. Robert Vere, the Good Earl of Oxford dies: King John of Bohemia his Victories in Italy.

I. THUS at laſt the Nation being by this due courſe of long-intermitted Juſtice cleans'd from the ſin of ſhedding ſo much Royal Blood, began to ſmile again with new Hopes: And now that the Heavy load of Rebellion and Murder was lay'd on the Heads of the Authors of either, the whole Kingdom ſprang out with new Joy, and the Royal Throne became fixed and ſettled, being arm'd with the Sword of juſt Authority; and from this time all publique Tranſactions ſucceeded with an uninterrupted ſerenity. For no doubt, if we look ſeriouſly into the Diſpenſations of Providence, we may ſafely conclude from a proſpect of theſe Affairs, that one Reaſon, why hitherto our Arms were improſperous, and ſo various Misfortunes daily encroached upon the riſing Glories of this Young King, was, that Judgments were ſtill owing to the Land for the late Rebellion and Treaſon, which till now could not be throughly expiated. An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

The Good old [a] Henry Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaſter, High-Steward of England, being now almoſt blind with age, but having firſt ſeen the Redemption of his King and Country from the ſlavery to which Mortimer's Inſolence and Cruelty had well nigh brought it, in pious Gratitude to Divine Providence, and in contemplation of his own Deliverance, built and founded to the Honour of God, the New-Hoſpital by the Caſtle of Leiceſter, which he alſo endow'd with ſufficient Maintenance for one Hundred Impotent and Aged People, of whoſe Wants his own Age made him not a little ſenſible. Which pious Work received its Completion from his Son Henry, the firſt Duke of Lancaſter.

[a] Knighton p. 2559. n. 40.

This Year Pope [b] John the XXII. to ingratiate himſelf with our Young King, grants him the Tythes of all Spirituals for four Years, reſerving however one Moiety to himſelf: So wiſely liberal was his Holineſs both to himſelf and others, of what was not his own. This [c] Pope was of Opinion, that the Souls of the Bleſſed ſhall not ſee the Face of God till the Day of Judgment, as were alſo all the Cardinals of his Court, except [d] James Furnere, Prieſt-Cardinal titulo Sanctæ Priſcæ, commonly called the White Cardinal, who alſo, immediately ſucceeded this Pope by the name of Benedict the XII. Now it [e] happen'd, that Ralph de Berne (alias Barnes) Abbot of St. Auſten's in Canterbury being dead, Thomas Poncy D. D. was choſen Abbot, whereupon he went to Avignion to be Conſecrated of the Pope: There being look'd upon as a Man famous for Learning, and of deep knowledge in Divinity, he was by the Pope enjoyned among many Others to ſtudy the Point, and to deliver his Thoughts thereupon openly in the Conſiſtory. He would fain have excus'd the Matter (as fearing thereby to diſoblige the Pope, and ſo to retard his own Buſineſs) by ſaying, "That he had not his Books about him, and that he came not thither to engage in "Diſputations, but to diſpatch his Buſineſs; and that he could not make any long "ſtay in thoſe Foreign parts without being at vaſt expences: But all this notwithſtanding, he was not ſuffered to depart, till he ſhould declare his mind as to the Premiſes, the Pope offering him a free uſe of his Library. Hereupon, (thô for the moſt part Others approv'd of the Pope's Opinion, even againſt their Conſciences, leaſt otherwiſe they ſhould incurr his Diſpleaſure) our Doctor Thomas Poncy, reſolving rather to hazard all things than to contradict the Catholick Faith, or his own Conſcience, held the Affirmative of the Queſtion, and ſtifly maintain'd it by Word of mouth

[b] Walſing. Hypod. p. 112. n. 10

[c] Victorel. p. 871

[d] Victorel. p. 879

[e] Thorne's Chr. p. 2067. n. 20. ad n. 60.

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

mouth and by Writing: Which afterwards turned to his great Honour, this ſame Pope, upon his Death recanting his former Opinion as erroneous: But for this ſmall Digreſſion we crave pardon.

II. Thô not much more to our purpoſe, yet not altogether impertinent were thoſe two memorable Battels fought this Year between the Pagans and Chriſtians, the One in [f] Armenia upon the Plains of Lyas, where Caſſanus the King of Tharſis was ſlain with 7000 Chriſtians, the Pagans obtaining but a bloody Victory, with the loſs of no leſs than 58000 Men: This Battle was ſtruck on the Feaſt of St. Catherine, being the 25 of November. The Other was between the Caſtilians of Spain and the Moors of Granada, of which (becauſe it bears ſome reference to the ſucceeding Affairs) I ſhall take leave to ſpeak ſomething more particularly. It may be remembred, that when I ſpake of the Diſhonourable Peace made with Scotland at Northampton, I took occaſion to mention a Voyage, which the Lord James Douglas the famous Warriour of Scotland, had undertaken to the Holy Land, there to offer up his dead Maſter King Robert's Heart at the Sepulchre of our Bleſſed Saviour.

[f] Knighton p. 2559. n. 30. &c.

Now as ſoon as he had well provided for ſo long and important a Journey, he took the Noble Heart of his Lord King Robert; [g] embalmed and enſhrin'd in a Golden Box, and with a Gallant company of choice Knights and valiant Gentlemen, of whom the Lord William Sinclare and Sr. Robert Logan were chief; he ſet forth for the Holy Land. And here Hector (according to his uſual way) makes no more adoe, but boldly affirms, that he came to Jeruſalem, offer'd up the Heart, ſtay'd a while, fought many Glorious Battels, wan much Renown, brought the Saracens to a Peace on conditions very advantageous to the Chriſtians, richly rewarded the Prieſts and Holy Men there, and away came he again ſafe and ſound as could be; till he touch'd the Spaniſh Coaſt about Andaluzia, or the Bætic Province, where finally he loſt his Life. But Buchanan (in this place more modeſt) [h] acknowledges, that his Death happen'd not in his Return, but in his Paſſage to Jeruſalem, and therein agrees with [i] Froiſard, a moſt credible Hiſtorian in the main; who thus reports the whole matter. Earl Douglas being well purvey'd of all things, ſets ſail immediately from a Port of Murray in Scotland, directing his courſe for Sluce in Flanders, where he deſign'd to enquire, if there were any Knights or Noblemen, who to advance the honour of Chriſt, and purchaſe unto themſelves true Renown, would adventure to accompany him in this his Expedition to the Holy Land. Having therefore accordingly ſent into the Country thereabout to publiſh his Intention, he lay on Board before Sluce the ſpace of twelve Days, himſelf not once offering to touch the Land; ſo firmly was he ſet on the performance of his Royal Maſter's Injunctions. And all the while (that he might the better allure Companions in Arms to partake with him in this hazardous Enterpriſe) he kept a ſtately and magnificent Port, making on Board triumphant Noiſes with Trumpets, Clarions and other Inſtruments of War, as if he had been King of Scotland himſelf. He had with him in his own Ship two Knights Bannerets, and ſix other Knights, with 26 luſty Eſquires, and other young Gentlemen to attend his perſon, and all the Veſſels he was ſerved in, were of Gold or ſilver: And whoever came on Board to viſit him, were nobly entertain'd with Banquets, Wine and ſpices, every one after his Quality. While thus he lay to the great pleaſure and ſatisfaction of the Country, at the end of twelve days he had certain News, that Alphonſo the XI King of Caſtille and Leon held war with the Moors and Saracens of Granada. Upon this report he thought it every whit as meritorious to fight againſt Infidels in Spain, as in the Holy Land, and that it could no way thwart with his dead Maſters Command, if he ſhould endeavour to exalt the Croſs of Chriſt againſt Mahometaniſme, to which cauſe himſelf had both living and dying devoted his own Royal Heart: Deſirous alſo to leave ſome Token of the Scottiſh Valour in the furthermoſt Parts of Spain, and concluding after all to perform at his leiſure the Voyage to Jeruſalem, he at laſt reſolves to be a partaker in theſe honourable Wars. Whereupon hoiſing ſail directly for Spain, he arrived happily at the Port of Valencia, where he landed with all his Company, but ſuch as were appointed to look to the Fleet.

[g] Hector Boet. l. 15. fol. 311. b. n. 70.

[h] Buchan. l. 8. p. 279.

[i] Froiſ. c. 20. fol. 11.

Thus this Gallant Scot, having well refreſhed himſelf and his Troops, rode bravely forward toward the King of Spain, whom he found with his Army facing the Enemy on the Frontiers of his Kingdom toward the Realm of Granada. To make ſhort, his ſervice was well accepted, and thereupon the King of Spain reſolv'd to give his Enemies Battle. The King of Granada ſeeing the Chriſtians advance, ſet forward alſo to meet them with innumerable Forces: And now both Armies wanted but little of joyning, when the Generous Earl Douglas, fearing to come too late to ſo glorious a Banquet, Banquet, with all his Company ſtrake ſpurs to his Horſes ſides, and couching his Spear, ruſhed fiercely among the thickeſt of his Enemies, all the way crying out a Douglas, a Douglas; as he that nothing doubted, but to be well back'd by King Alphonſo. The Enemy, thô vaſtly Numerous, was ſtrangely amaz'd at this vigorous and reſolute Onſet, and either out of Diſmay or Policy, open'd their Ranks to receive them, giving alſo back a little to abate the Fury of the firſt ſhock. Certainly had the Caſtillians immediately ſeconded this Noble Knight with but half that Bravery, the Moors had either wholly been overthrown, or at moſt gain'd but a Bloody Victory. But whether 'twas Fatal overſight, or Diſcretion not to Engage with ſuch vaſt Numbers, in confidence of a few ſeeming-raſh Strangers, or whether 'twas a certain ſtupor and exceſs of Admiration, or a deſire to ſtay a while beholding the Effects of ſuch Gallantry; or fooliſh Envy, or baſe Cowardiſe, or that they could not come up timely enough, King Alphonſo, however Brave and Victorious at other times, ſtood now ſtill and joyned not the Battle. Whereat the Moors encouraged, immediately ſurrounded the Deſerted Scots with their Numerous Forces; and there the Gallanteſt Captain in the World, being abandon'd to Infinite Multitudes of Barbarians, was miſerably at laſt hewen in pieces with all his Martial Company: Thô they left ſuch Marks of their exceeding Valour behind, that the Infidels, who felt and ſaw their Fury, thought them Invincible, till they beheld them ſlain before their Eyes. Thus by occaſion of a ſuperſtitious Vow of the Late King Robert, was Scotland unfortunately depriv'd of a Noble Captain, and many other Brave Souls, at a time when moſt ſhe needed their Aſſiſtance at Home. This Lord Douglas bare for his Arms [k] Azure a Chevron Argent, but his Poſterity in Memory of this his Enterpriſe and Death do[l] bear the Bloody Heart for their Arms to this day. And indeed he was one of the firſt Builders of his Name and Family in Scotland, being a great Champion to his Native Country, and as great a Terror to all the Engliſh Borderers: For [m] ever ſince the Battle of Sterling, whatever Engliſh Archer he could lay his Hands on, it was his manner to cut off his Right Hand, and to pluck out his Right Eye, that he might thereby be rendred Uſeleſs for the Bowe. We read the like to have been done indeed by the Amazons to thoſe Male Children, which themſelves brought forth, before they put them away to their Fathers: And ſurely, ſuch ungenerous Cruelty better became that fearfull, and therefore leſs humane Sex, than ſo Famous a Knight, as this Douglas; to whom it rather belonged, to be fierce and cruel to thoſe that reſiſted, but Merciſull and Gracious to his Captives, and ſuch as he had Conquer'd. At his Death, however the poor Archers of the North of England rejoyced; but the whole Realm of Scotland was dejected; eſpecially, now ſhe ſaw a Storm approaching, which no humane Power was more likely to avert, than this her Valiant Commander; the Lord Thomas Randulph alſo ſurviving him but a little while.

AN. DOM. 1330. An. Regni IV.

[k] Froiſ. c.17. fol.8.
[l] Holinſhead hiſt. Scotl. p. 227.
[m] Knighton p. 2559. n. 50.

III. But before we fall upon that Story, it will not be amiſs by way of Preparation, to repeat the Original of the matter, ſomething whereof We remember to have ſpoken [n] in the firſt Chapter of this our Hiſtory: Namely, how upon the Vacancy of the Crown of Scotland, upon the Death of Alexander the Third, the Lord John Bailiol, an Engliſh Baron, was by King Edward the Firſt adjudged to have the beſt Right of all the Pretenders to that Realm; as he that claimed from the Eldeſt Daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon, Younger Brother to William King of Scots, and Great Uncle to Alexander aforeſaid: And how this John Bailiol made Fealty and Homage to King Edward the Firſt of England, for the ſaid Crown of Scotland, and how afterward he withdrew his Homage thrô Counſel of the French King, the Abbot of Melros, and others, and in the Year of our Lord MCCXCIV ſent unto the Pope, that thrô falſe ſuggeſtion he had made his Oath unto King Edward, both contrary to his Dignity, and againſt his Will; and therefore beg'd to be abſoyled thereof; which Requeſt the Pope granted. Thus [o] did John Bailiol begin to Rebell againſt the King of England, who had ſet him up; but King Edward ſoon after went againſt him, and took the Town and Caſtle of Barwick, with the ſlaughter of 26700 Scots; ſo that Bailiol was obliged to yield himſelf up to the Conquerour; by whom he was us'd with much humanity, and at laſt deliver'd out of the Tower of London with all the Great Lords of Scotland, that were taken at Barwick, and upon his Oath and theirs, had a ſafe Conduct to go into their own Country. The other Scotch Lords forgot the Oath and Aſſurance they had made to King Edward; but the Noble King John Bailiol, had rather forſake a Crown, than make it heavy unto him by perjury; wherefore he took his Son Edward and his Family, and went over the Sea to Quimper in Bretagne, and lived there a private Life upon his own Lands: And voluntarily forſook his Realm of Scotland, Eſteeming it leſs than his Faith and Honour: Thô the Scots in Deriſion called him Sr. John Turnelabard, becauſe he was ſo ſhie of offending the King of England. Thus John Bailiol kept in France, till he died there, and Sr. Edward his Son received his Heritage, doing Homage to the King of France, for his Lands of Quimper. This Edward had in his Service an Engliſh Eſquire, born in Yorkſhire, named John Barnby, whom he loved moſt intirely; but one day John Barnby chanced upon a quarrel to kill a certain Frenchman, whereupon he fled in all haſt to the Caſtle for ſafety, under the Protection of his Lord and Friend. The Officers follow'd, and demanded him to be deliver'd up as a Felon; but Sr. Edward refus'd it for that time, and at Midnight ſent him ſecretly out of the Caſtle, and he got ſafe over into England. But the King of France was ſo diſpleas'd with this Action of Bailiol's, that he ſieſed on all his Lands and flung him into Priſon. There he lay till the Lord Henry Beaumont came into France, being drove out of England by the Power of Mortimer, as we ſhew'd before: Now this Lord Henry was Earl of Buquhain in Scotland, in Right of his Wife, but had been forced to relinquiſh the ſaid Earldom, when that ſhamefull Peace was made between England and Scotland, at Northampton; wherefore he thought no better way now of Recovering his Right, than by the means of Sr. Edward Bailiol, whom he look'd on as the true Heir to the Realm of Scotland; and ſo deſired to get him at Liberty, if by any means he might prevail ſo far. He was very Gracious with the King of France, as being of his Blood, and therefore beg'd of him, "That he would grant him of "his Grace Sr. Edward Bailiols Body until the next Parliament, that he might live on "his own Rents in the mean time, and then ſtand to the judgement of his Peers. This Requeſt the King Granted, and upon Sr. Edward Bailiol's delivery from Priſon, the Lord Beaumont privily convey'd him into England, and kept him cloſely at the Mannor of Sandall, upon Ouſe in Yorkſhire, with his Siſter Iſabell of Beaumont, Lady Veſci: Where privately he began to retain Soldiers on all hands, in order to recover his own, and the Bailiol's Right. And Henry Lord Beaumont having firſt ſounded the King, this Year about the beginning of Auguſt, the Lord Edward [p] Bailiol, being attended by ſome 44 Knights of Almaine, Captains of a few ſelect Bands, who follow'd him for hire, or at a venture, to partake of his Fortune, came to London to our King Edward: To whom he declared, "How his Father had been prefer'd, "as the Indubitate and Right Heir to the Crown of Scotland, by Edward the Firſt "of England, his Grandfather: That for doing Juſt Homage therefore to the ſaid "King Edward, he had been finally deſerted by his own Subjects, and afterwards "ſupplanted by Robert Bruce: That if it pleaſe the King, He [q] alſo would hold the "Crown of Scotland of Him, as Superior Lord of that Realm; that therefore he humbly requeſted ſome Aſſiſtance from his hands, whereby to recover his Ancient Right "and Patrimony.

[n] P. 4. §. 5.

[o] Fabian p. 140. & M. S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 223.

An. Dom. 1330. An. Regni IV.

[p] Walſing. Hypod. p. 112. n. 20 & Hiſt. p. 112. & 113.

[q] Hector. p. 312. n. 30.

King Edward indeed was troubled not a little at the Diſhonourable Peace ſtruck up with the Scots in his Minority; but it having been made in his Name, he was reſolved to keep it entirely for the promiſed term of four Years, whereof hardly three were yet fully run out. In his own Perſon therefore he abſolutely [r] refuſes to aſſiſt the Bailiol as yet, or ſo much as to let him lead any warlike Troops into Scotland thrô his Land; both having a due reſpect to the foreſaid Peace, and for his Siſters ſake, whom David the preſent King of Scotland had married; as alſo becauſe the old Queen and the Lord Mortimer had at the time of making that Peace at Northampton, oblig'd the King in a [s] Bond of 20000l. to be forfeited to the Pope, in caſe of any Hoſtility or Breach made on his part, till the full terme of four Years ſhould be accompliſhed. But as for thoſe Engliſh Adventurers, who claim'd Lands in Scotland, which were now forfeited for their Non-reſidence (according to an Article of the foreſaid Peace of Northampton) after King Edward [t] had in vain ſent to the Earl of Murray, then upon the Lord [u] Thomas Randulph's death, Guardian of that Realm (by reaſon of King David's Minority) on their behalf, he gave them his leave, or rather a tacit Connivance (for nothing was expreſly ſaid) in their own Names upon their own Titles, and at their own charges to make War in the company of the Lord Edward Bailiol againſt the preſent King of Scotland; till they might have their Injuries redreſſed. Of theſe we find the Lord Henry [x] Vicount Beaumont, Earl of Buquhain, the [y] young Lord David Strabolgi, Earl of Athol, who had been a Ward to the ſaid Lord Beaumont, the Lord Gilbert [z] Umphravil Earl Angus, Henry [a] Lord Percy, who claimed Galloway, Thomas [b] Lord Wake, the Lord Fulk Fitz-Warine, Ralph [c] Lord Stafford in the Title of William Lord Zouch, [d] Henry Lord Ferrers of Groby, John [e] Lord Moubray, [r] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 507. a. & Stow p. 230. n. 50.

[s] Knighton p. 2560. n. 20, 30, 40. &c.

[t] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 51. a.

[u] Buchan. l. 9. p. 282. An. 1331.

[x] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 51.

[y] Id. ibid. p. 96.

[z] Id. 1 Vol. p. 507.

[a] Harding c. 178. fol. 178. b

[b] Dudg. ibid. p. 541.

[c] Knighton p. 2560.

[d] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 267.

[e] Id. ibid. p. 127

Moubray, and Sr. Alexander Moubray his Kinſman, the Lord [f] Richard Talbot, a famous young Warrier, Sr. Roger Swinnerton and ſeveral other Lords and Knights; who raiſed their Friends and Tenants, and as many as deſired to purchaſe Honour or prey in the Wars: All who taking the ſea at [g] Ravenſpurr in Yorkſhire (for the King would not allow them to paſs thrô his Land) they arrived at Kingcorn in Scotland, not far from Dunfermlin. The Scots had beforehand intelligence of this their Deſign; and ſo were not unprovided of Forces to impeach their Landing: They had ſent forth no leſs than [h] 10000 Men under the Command of Duncan Macduff Earl of Fife, the Lord Robert Bruce Earl of Carrick, King David's Baſtard brother, and Sr. Alexander Seton, eldeſt Son to the Lord Alexander Seton, of whom more hereafter. The Lord Bailiol's Forces were very ſmall, as appears from the higheſt account of them; ſome, as [i] Buchanan confeſſes, reckoning them but 600. which he rather thinks ſhould be 6000. But another of more Honeſty, and therefore of more Authority, ſays they were no more then [k] 2500; which ſmall number being furniſhed with ſo many gallant Leaders, muſt needs be pretty conſiderable, ſince Diſcipline and Courage might very well make up their Defects; as it is well known to thoſe who either underſtand the Art Military, or have read thoſe many Inſtances of the like nature abounding in Hiſtory.

AN. DOM. 1331. An. Regni V.

[f] Knighton p. 2560.
[g] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 51. a.
[h] Tinemouth fol. 229. & Knigh. p. 2560. n. 40. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 113. n. 10. & Stow p. 230. n. 50. & M.S. præfat.
[i] Buchan. l. 9. p. 283.
[k] Knighton p. 2560. n. 66. idem Joh. Tinemouth fol. 229. & M.S. ve. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 223.

Accordingly the Valiant Lord Bailiol, thô he ſaw theſe more numerous Forces ready to impeach his Landing, reſolved not to loyter away the time in cruiſing and coaſting about, but forthwith to diſcharge his Veſſels in that very place; for he was not ignorant of the Worth of his Men, and what high Hopes they entertain'd, as thoſe who fought with him for no leſs than a Kingdom: Withall he diſcreetly conſider'd, how this (however too great a Match as to his Numbers) was the ſmalleſt Force he could expect to meet with in Scotland; but that if here he prevail'd, the reputation of the Victory would be of no ſmall moment, but eaſily procure Friends to his Quarrel, and Terror to his Arms.

This well-grounded Reſolution was ſo well favour'd by Fortune; that before his Men of Arms could touch the land, the Scots being gall'd by the Archers, (a few Footmen alſo making upon them a briſk Impreſſion at the ſame time) gave back in Great confuſion, and were ſoon thereupon totally routed, no leſs than 900 of them being ſlain, together with an hopefull young Gentleman Sr. Alexander, [l] Eldeſt ſon to the Lord Alexander Seton. Upon this ſucceſs the Bailiol marched directly toward the Abbey and Town of Dunfermlin, wherein they found good ſtore of Proviſion, and other neceſſaries for Men of War: And among other things [m] 500 Great ſtaves of fine Oak, with long Pikes of iron and ſteel, which the Bailiol took and deliver'd to the ſtrongeſt of all his Men. Soon after at a place called Gledeſmore, this ſmall reſolute Band of Engliſh, not yet conſiſting of above three or four Thouſand in all, met with more than 40000 of the Scots to oppoſe them. But for the preſent they were hindred from joyning by a Deep Water, being the River of Erne that ran between both Armies. For the Citizens of St. Johnſton, when they heard how the Earl of Fife was diſcomfited by the Bailiol, were much terrified, and brake down all their Bridges, which they had made over the Water of Erne; ſo that the Engliſh could not get over, but ſtood all that day in Battle Array, fronting the Enemies on the Banks of the ſaid River: But the Lord Bailiol could not diſpoſe himſelf to reſt the night following; his Spies had brought him word of the negligence of the Enemies in their Camp, and his Courage made him conceive high Hopes of ſucceſs, if he took his Opportunity; wherefore having aſſembled all the Chiefs together, he ſaid, "Now Dear "Lords, ye know that we are ſurrounded with Enemies on all ſides; who if they "may have an Advantage againſt us, there is nothing to be expected but Death. "And I verily believe, that by tarrying here the remainder of this Night, we ſhould "only contribute to our own ruine. For the Power of Scotland may every day wax "and encreaſe; but it will not be ſo with us, unleſs we gain Reputation by our Cou"rage; althô we are but a ſmall People in reſpect of them. Wherefore I pray you "for Godſake, let us be hardy and couragious, and reſolve with all our might to fall "upon the Scots this night, and prove our ſelves the Aggreſſors; whereby we ſhall "daunt their minds; eſpecially now they are weary with their long March, and all out "of Order, by reaſon of their ſecurity and contempt of us: Nor will they ever be a"ble to recover, for the terrour we ſhall bring among them. And then manfully ſhall "we beat them down before us; ſo that thrô the Grace of Almighty God, all the "World ſhall ſpeak of our valour and Chivalry. To this Reſolution of the Bailiols all the Engliſh gladly conſented, and having [o] for a mark of Diſtinction in the dark

[l] Buchan. l. 9. p. 283. Hector l. 15. f. 312. n. 40. &c.
[m] M.S. præf. ib.
[n] M.S. præf. ibid. &c.
[o] Hector l. 15. f. 313. n. 10.

An. Dom. 1331. An. Regni V.

night, tyed every Man a piece of White linnen about his arm, they boldly pass'd over the Water at a place called Duplin [p] by Ernemouth, being directed by Sr. Alexander Mowbray, who was best of all acquainted with the Passage. Thus all in great silence and good Order at last got safe over, except only Sr. Roger Swinnerton, who by ill accident was drowned, as some say: But it is evident by the [q] Records, that he lived at least till six years after. Now the Scots were in [r] two Camps, almost five miles distant one from the other, intending by acting separately to distract the Bailiol, for they despised his Numbers. But soon after midnight the English Army, except the 44 Almaine Captains (who with the rest of the Strangers stood aloof, as well to observe those who should break forth of the Scotch Camp, as to pursue those that fled) was hotly engaged with the Scots in their First Camp: At the first Alarm the Scots were in an horrid Confusion; and they [s] said among themselves, "What is now "befallen unto us, that so small a Company as the Bailiol hath, doth us such mischief "and sorrow? Now surely it seems that he works by Grace, for he is wondrous For- "tunate in his Cause: But certainly we will all die rather than yield unto him, since "his Father esteem'd so little of us. But the English now prevail'd mightily, and all the Captains were fierce and haughty against their Enemies, wherefore the Scots, by reason of the suddain surprise, and the straightness of the Place, which allow'd them no more room than they had time to Order their Battails in, were by Day-break utterly broken and defeated: For the Throng was so great among the Scots, that many were crowded and trampled to Death; so that while every Man thrust forward to come to the Battle, he but holp to encrease the Disorder of those that were fighting; insomuch that the Crowding prov'd as fatal as the Sword. When this Victory was thus gain'd, the Englishmen, who thought they had overcome the whole Power of Scotland, drew together in the morning, and began to repose and refresh themselves. But the mean while the Noble Baron of Vesci, and the Noble Baron of Stafford, and the valiant Lord [t] Roger Swinnerton (falsly reported by some to have been drown'd the night before) pricked their Horses up and down by the Hills, to observe the Straights of the Country. And as they pricked thus up and down, they saw from the Hills a great Host in good Array, ranged in Three Battails, with Helmes and Shields shining, marching towards them. At this they return'd full speed to the Bailiol's Men, among whom they said aloud, "Now for the love of Almighty God, be of good com- "fort, for you shall have another Victory presently; and so they shew'd, how another Army was coming against them. Then stept forth Sr. Fulk Fitz-Warine, a Baron of great Renown for Deeds of Arms, and said in the Head of the English, "Now my Lords, understand you what I shall say; since I have in my time seen ma- "ny and different Armies, as well among Saracens and Jews in Spain, as among "Frenchmen and Scots; and yet saw I never the Fourth part of any of those fight: "Wherefore, if we will abide our Enemies, We are enough to fight against them. "But if we be not of good Courage and Resolution, 'tis to no purpose to fight with "them; for surely We are too few to match so Great a Company. And therefore "for the Love of God, let us take Heart, and grow Bold, neither thinking on our "Wives, nor Children, but only how to win the day; and through the help of our "Lord God We shall overcome our Enemies. And with that came the Scotch Host towards them Furiously, in three Battails well arrayed: But upon their approach, when Donald Earl of Marr (who had secretly combin'd with the Bailiol) saw all this, and how few the English were; fearing they would be all lost, he said to Robert Bruce Earl of Carrick, and Bastard-son to the Late King Robert of Scotland, "Sr. Ro- "bert, (quoth he) full sorry am I at my heart to think, that all this People, whom "the Bailiol hath brought with him, must die by dint of Scotchmens swords, since "they are Christians, as well as we; wherefore I think it would be great Charity, to "send unto them to yield themselves to our Mercy and Grace; and so to ransom "them at an High Rate; forasmuch as they have invaded our Land, and done so "much mischief. "Now surely (reply'd Sr. Robert) I have well perceived, that thou "art an Enemy and Traytor unto Scotland; since thou art willing to consent to save "our deadly Enemies, who have done us much sorrow and shame: And now it "plainly appears, that You are of their Faction. "Surely Robert, said Sr. Donald, "Ye lie falsly: I am not of their Company, and that soon shall you see: For I "will fight with them rather than the proudest Man here. "And certainly, (said "Sr. Robert) maugre your Head, I shall assail them before you dare. And with that they both spurred their Horses on the Moor, and their Battailions follow'd them in their Order, and so they came and met the Bailiol at an hanging Gap of the Moor

[p] Knighton p. 2560. n. 60. & Speed p. 568.
[q] Dugd. Bar. 2. Vol. 112.
[r] Hector & Buchan.
[s] M.S. præfat. c. 223.
[t] M.S. id. ibid.

in

in a ſtrait Paſſage; and they came ſo precipitantly upon the Engliſhmen, that hundreds fell to the ground each upon other on an heap, both Horſe and Man. Then the Bailiol and his men with a great ſhout flew fiercely upon them, and kill'd the Scots upon the ground, before they could Recover, and ſtood upon them, and foyned with their Swords and Spears, till they were even weary with ſlaughter; and all the while the Engliſh Archers ſhot thick among thoſe that were farther off, to the great deſtruction both of Men and Horſes; ſo that this Army being preſently brought to Confuſion, became a Prey to the Conquerour; the reſt of the Scots quitting the field as faſt as they could: But Sr. Edward Bailiol and his Men follow'd the Chace, beating them down till night. In theſe two Battles of the Scots, there fell more than [u] 20000 Men, among whom were Robert the Baſtard Earl of Carrick, Donald Earl of Marr, the Lord Nigel Bruce, and Sr. Alexander Bruce, the Earls of Menteith and Athole (for David Strabolgi, who had the Right to that Earldom, was outed, and this other put in his place) twelve Barons, 800 Knights, 2000 Men of Arms, and above 13300 Foot: But on the Engliſh ſide there fell no more than two Knights, Sr. John Gourdon, and Sr. Reginald Beche; and of Eſquires thirty three, but not one Archer, nor Footman: So that the extraordinarineſs of the Victory occaſion'd, that it was juſtly attributed to Divine Power; and from this time the Lord Bailiol began to bear the Sirname of Conquerour: This Battle was ſtruck on the 14 of Auguſt, being the [x] Wedneſday after the Feaſt of St. Laurence.

AN. DOM. 1331. An. Regni V.

[u] Walſing. hiſt. p. 113. & Knighton p. 2561. *n.*20.

Lit. Dom. F.

[x] Knighton p. 2561. *n.*30.

The next day in purſuance of ſo notable a Victory, they march up to St. Johnſton upon the River Tay, which thô very Defenſible, was thrô the Conſternation of the Inhabitants taken without Aſſault; and here they found good ſtore of Warlike Ammunition, and Proviſion of Victuals: Wherefore they thought beſt to Fortifie the Town for their own Uſe, and to entrench it round with deeper and larger Ditches, as not doubting ſhortly of an occaſion to be put to defend themſelves againſt Greater Forces; which indeed came to paſs accordingly.

For immediately after Earl Patrick of Dunbar and Archimbald Douglas came and inveſted the Town with an Army of 40000 Men; before which time they had ſent Orders to Sr. John Crab the Admiral, that he ſhould ſet forth with as many Veſſels of War, and as Great ſtrength as he conveniently could of the ſudden, and therewith fall upon the Engliſh Fleet, which lay in the Water of [y] Tay, but ill-defended, as they imagin'd. This Counſel was put in execution, but miſſed of its deſired Effect: For Sr. John Crab came with Ten ſtout Ships of Flanders, ſuddenly upon the Engliſh, as they lay in the Harbour: Sr. Henry Beaumont's Barge felt his Fury firſt; for this he took, and put all to the Sword he found there; which were yet but a few, and they not ready, becauſe of the ſuddenneſs of the ſurpriſe: But however, before they fell, they made ſuch Reſiſtance, that the reſt of the Engliſh had time to Arm and Unite ſtrongly together: Which being done, thô nothing equal to the Scots in number, they behaved themſelves ſo well, that by plain Valour they extorted another unexpected Victory from their overweening Enemies; ſlaying and wounding the greater Part of them, and burning, ſinking, or taking all their Veſſels. Their Admiral Crab himſelf very narrowly eſcaped away; flying by Land, and himſelf bearing the firſt News of his own Loſs. This Succeſs happen'd to the Engliſh on St. Bartholomews, being a Saturday; on Knowledge whereof Earl Patrick and Douglas raiſed their Siege in Deſpair: Becauſe nothing was to be done effectually, unleſs they could cut off the Engliſh from the uſe of the Water; which by this Defeat, could not now be performed. After this the Engliſh deliver the Town well Fortified and Provided with a ſufficient Garriſon, to the Cuſtody of the Lord Duncane Macduff Earl of Fife, who upon the Victory at Kingcorn, had revolted from King David to the Lord Bailiol the Conquerour: But ſhortly after he betray'd the Town again to the Bruceans, requiting one Treaſon with another.

[y] Knighton p. 2561. *n.*50.

IV. The Reputation of theſe frequent and incredible Victories was ſo great, that many Nobles and Gentlemen [z] of England, of their own accord flock'd thither to the ſervice of the Lord Bailiol, even at their own expence; either in hopes of Prey, or out of pure Courage to get Honour in the Wars, or of Love to the Family of the Bailiols, which had always been ſupported by the Engliſh: Or perhaps by King Edward's allowance, for the Exerciſe of his Gentry in the Wars. Not a few alſo of the Scots themſelves revolted to the Conquerour: So that ſoon after on the [a] 5 of the Calends of October (which is the 27 of September) the Lord Edward Bailiol was by the Engliſh Crowned King of Scotland at Scone, many alſo of the Prime Nobility of that Realm, conſenting to, and aſſiſting at, the ſame. Such weak Reſiſtence can even ſo Potent a [z] Walſingh. Hypod. p. 112. *n.*30.

[a] Walſing. hiſt. p. 114. n. 1.

King-

An. Dom. 1331. An. Regni V.

Kingdom make; when thoſe who ſhould joyn in the Common Defence of their Country, either by Diſloyalty to their Prince, or Faction among themſelves, prepare a way for a Common Enemies Succeſs: Eſpecially when the ſupream Governour himſelf, either by reaſon of Childhood, or Unskilfulneſs, can have no abſolute Diſpoſal of the Laws in his own Hands to any purpoſe. Beſides, at this time the Scots had few or no ſufficient Leaders, the Lord James Douglas being (as we ſhew'd before) kill'd in Spain, and the Lord Thomas Randulph, who had been Protector of the King's Perſon, and the ableſt either Counſellor, or Soldier in Scotland, was now newly dead.

[b] Hector Boet. l.15. fol.310. lin.70. & Buchan.l.9.p.281.

[b] Boetius, and from him Buchanan would here fain make us believe that he was poiſon'd by a Monk at the Order and Contrivance of King Edward of England: Who upon the news thereof brought to him by the ſaid Monk, invaded Scotland (ſay they) with a great Army: When finding Randulph ſtill alive (thô but then diſſembling health, as he that had received the Poiſon) for Anger he burnt the Poiſoner, and for Fear broke up his Army. Thus theſe Egregious Hiſtorians, and indeed they ſet off the tale wonderfull prettily; but with what Truth or Honeſty appears, not only in that they bring no Author for what they ſay (themſelves being more than 200 years after that Age) nor in that they are both very frequently found, either thrô Malice or Ignorance, in ſhrewd and palpable Errors; but in that, it appears from the moſt Authentick Records extant, that King Edward the Third invaded not Scotland in Perſon, till two years after the Death of this Lord Randulph, which by their own [c] Confeſſion preceded even this Invaſion of the Bailiol: And moreover the whole Courſe of King Edward's Life and Reign will appear full of Acts of Generoſity, Honour and Magnanimity.

[c] Buchan.p.282. ubi moritur 3° Calend. Auguſt. i.e.30 Julii: Cum Balioli Invaſio contigit circa principium Auguſti; ut ſupra dictum.

But having laid down theſe Firſt Seeds of the Scotch War, we ſhall now take a ſhort leave of theſe Affairs, till time calls us to conſider what Fruits in their Order they brought forth, and by whoſe Hand the chief Harveſt of Honour was gather'd.

[d] Walſingh.hiſt. p.113.n.40.

V. In England this mean while certain [d] bold Fellows of the Realm, in meer contempt of the King's Youth, or by the ſecret inſtigation of ſome great Malecontents, began to aſſemble themſelves in conſiderable Bodies together: And thus they kept in Woods and Foreſts, robbing and abuſing all that came near them after their own pleaſure; and as it is uſual, when Impunity accompanies Villany, in a ſhort time theſe Bands grew ſo numerous and formidable, that they became a Terror and Grievance to the whole Kingdom. Among other of their Licentious Practiſes, the Lord Chief Juſtice [e] Sr. Richard Willoughby going after Chriſtmas towards Grantham, was taken by one Richard Fulvile, and by force carried into a Wood hard by, where being ſieſed by certain of theſe Lawleſs Fellows, he was compell'd to lay down immediately Ninety Marks, as a Ranſom for his Life, and alſo to ſwear never to diſcover them. Upon News of theſe and the like Inſolencies, the Young King reſolving now to be Maſter of his Crown, ſends forth his Juſtices of Trailebaſton, two and two with Power to enquire after all Mayors, Sheriffs, Bayliffs, Eſcheators, and others, who had abuſed or neglected their Offices, by Extortion, Bribery, Fear or Favour; and after all ſuch as had failed in the due Execution of the Laws, whereby theſe Licentious People began firſt to take ſuch Boldneſs upon them. The form of the Writ, thô of moment, I forbear to tranſcribe, becauſe 'tis already Extant in [f] Holinſheads Chronicles, and elſewhere. But leaſt the Law ſhould fail of Power to maintain it ſelf, the Young King takes to him ſome choice Troops of Armed Men, with many Light-Horſemen well mounted, and marches forth in Perſon to diſcover theſe Enemies to Government. Some Parties of theſe Audacious Villains were met with by him, nor did they much decline the matter, Succeſs had made them ſo Impudent: But Majeſty and Vertue are more Valiant, than Vice and Rebellion; ſo that they are all ſoon Worſted by the Brave Young King, and become an Example to others, ſome of them being ſlain in Skirmiſh, many Hang'd and Quarter'd, a few Beheaded, others impriſon'd and put to great Fines, and in ſhort ſuch Order taken with all, that the whole Kingdom was kept in Peace and quiet at Home all his Reign after.

[e] Knighton p. 2559.n.60.

[f] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p.840.

VI. On the Thirtieth [g] of September, or the Morrow after St. Michael, being a Monday, the King held his High-court of Parliament at Weſtminſter, to conſult about the Affairs of Guienne, and other his Lands beyond the Seas; as alſo concerning a Peace to be had with France, and to conferr about the Matters of Ireland. Theſe were by John Stratford Biſhop of Wincheſter and then Lord Chancellour of England, offer'd, as the reaſons inducing the King to call that Parliament. The Affairs of Guienne were not in ſo ill a poſture, the [h] Earl of Ulſter being now there, and Sr. John Darcy Juſtice of Ireland having been ſent thither the Year foregoing, eſpecially becauſe of the late late Composure between England and France, the French being also at this time about a Treaty with England: Yet because then a Peace is most likely to be made on good Conditions, when he that treats is in a posture of Defence, it was thought fit to provide something for the Defence of those Parts however. And therefore Sr. John [k] St. Philibert, a Baron of great prudence and valour, was now by the King appointed to be Major of the City of Bourdeaux, having an assignation of an 100l. allow'd him for the Expences of his journey thither; thô this Worthy Gentleman deceased about two Years after. Sr. Oliver Ingham a mighty Baron, and One of the Twelve appointed for a Guide and Counsellour to this King at his Coronation, had now his [l] Patent (which had been granted him seven Years before) for the Seneschalsie of Aquitain renewed; and not long after he was sent over with pretty considerable Forces: Of whose valourous Exploits this Book will not be silent. At the same time the Lord [m] Bartholomew Burwash senior was constituted Seneschall of Ponthieu in Picardy, which King Edward held in right of his Mother, with whom that Earldom was given upon her Marriage with the King his Father. As for Ireland, it was resolved, that the King in Person should go thither; that to prepare his way, a certain power of Armed Men should go before him under able Commanders; and that those especially who held any Lands there, should make speedy repair thither for Defence of that Kingdom; as also that all learned Men in the Law, who should be appointed as Justices, or otherwise to serve in Ireland, should by no means be excus'd on any pretence whatsoever: And further 'twas order'd, that search should be made into his Majesties Records, to see what Methods had been formerly taken for the civilizing and governing that Country.

[g] M.S. p.14. Sr Rob.Cotton & Statute Book, &c.

[h] Knighton p. 2563.

[i] Dugd. 1 Vol. p.371.

AN. DOM. 1331. AN. REGNI V.

[k] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 151. a.

[l] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 104.

[m] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 34. Ashmole p. 693.

As to the Affairs [n] with France, the King by his Chancellour demanded, whether he had best treat with that Crown by way of Amity or Marriage: The Commons humbly conceived, that Marriage would be the best way; whereupon certain were appointed to consult about this Treaty; and a [o] Commission was given to Sr. John Darcy and Sr William Trussel, to treat and agree with King Philip, or his Deputies upon the Premises. Now for the better understanding of this Matter, it appears from the Records (as we shall more fully shew hereafter) that near this time King Philip being taken up with thoughts about the Holy War, that he might be sure of King Edward, of whose pretences to that Crown he was jealous, had offer'd to enter into a strict Alliance with him, by [p] a Marriage between a Daughter of his and the young Prince Edward of England. And lest that might not suffice, had importun'd him to be his Fellow in Arms, and in Person to accompany him into Palestine; or as [q] Others say into Spain to fight against the Moors of Granada. But because nothing was done in this Matter yet, only it was refer'd to the foresaid Commissioners to advise about it, we shall remitt the further prosecution hereof to the next Year, to which it more properly belongs.

[n] M. S. p. 14. §. 3. Sr Rob. Cotton's Abridgement. p. 9 §. 3.

[o] Ashmole p. 675

[p] Ashmole p. 675 & Sandford p. 184.

[q] Odoric. Rainald. Addit. ad Annal. Baronii 1331. n. 29. &c.

Yet this we must not pass over, that now upon Occasion of the King's being invited into France, the former Resolution, that he should personally go into Ireland, took not effect this Year; and as for the next other Business put it off, and the Scotch Affairs the Year following wholly null'd it; so that the King went not thither at all, as it had been here resolved; only an Armed Power was sent thither the Year after this.

In this Parliament Sr. Hugolin, the Granchild of the Lord Hugh Spencer the Elder (who with his Son Sr. Hugh had in the late Revolution been illegally executed by Queen Isabell) having first by his great Valour [r] in holding his Castle against the said Queen, compounded for his life, and since that Obtaining his Majesties Gracious Pardon, was now wholly acquitted thereupon: As indeed by this time both his Father and Grandfather too might have been, had not the too speedy violence of their Enemies taken them both out of the way. Yet 'tis observable by this Sr. Hugh the younger, whose Manuprizors were Sr. Ebulo le Strange and eleven other Knights; as also by Thomas Lord Barkley, who had as many Manuprisors, thô he was acquitted the last year; that it was a custome (to say no more) in those days, when any one had been tryed as an Offender against the King, thô he were thereof acquitted, or had his Pardon, yet [s] notwithstanding he was to provide Twelve of his Peers to be Sureties for his Forth-coming during the Kings pleasure: The Discontinuance of which custom has been too usefull to Traytors in our days.

[r] Holinshead Engl. Chron. p. 880.

[s] M. S. p. 15. & 16. & Sr Rob. Cotton p. 10.

It was also here moved by the whole Parliament, either in compassion of Innocence, or because all their Rancour was satisfied in the execution of Mortimer, that the King's Majesty would be graciously pleased to extend some Favour to Sr. Edmund, Eldest Son

An. Dom. 1331. An. Regni V.

Son to the late Earl of March. At which bold requeſt the King being offended, as imagining they petition'd for his full Reſtoration to his Fathers Lands and Honours, asked them with ſome Emotion, "What they would have, ſince the King his Father "had been murder'd by the procurement of the ſaid Earl? The Parliaments Anſwer was, they only ſpake in the Young Man's behalf for ſome certain Lands Intail'd; to which the King replied, "That he himſelf would do what to him ſhould ſeem beſt "at his Pleaſure. Which ſeverity went ſo near to the heart of the young Lord, that before the end of the Year [t] he died in the Flower of his Age, leaving behind him Roger his Son and Heir, then but three Years of age, which Roger three and twenty Years after was fully reſtor'd to all the Lands and Honours of his Grandfather.

[t] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 147.

It is [u] agreed that all Feats of Arms ſhall be defended, as well by the Juſtices as Others, untill the King and his Council do otherwiſe appoint.

[u] M.S. p. 14. §. 5. & Sr Rob. Cotton p. 10. §. 5. &c.

It is agreed, that Queen Iſabell the King's Mother, ſhall have yearly four thouſand Pounds in Rents, or Lands.

All the Eſtates in full Parliament do agree, that none of them ſhall retain, ſuſtain or avow any Felon, or other common Breaker of the Law.

It is enacted, that no Purveyance be made, but for the King, Queen and their Children, and that by good Warrant and ready Payment.

The King ſhall appoint certain Perſons to determine the Office of Thomas de Ferrers and Other his Brethren, of the Parſonage of Marleſton in the County of Leiceſter.

Commandment is given to the Abbot of Crowland, and Thomas Lord Wake of Lidel, between whom there had been debate, to keep the Kings Peace: The like command was given to Sr. William de la Zouch of Aſhby, and Sr. John Grey of Rotherfield. Stephen Graveſend Biſhop of London was taken into the Kings Privy Council, and took his Place at the Board accordingly.

At the requeſt of the whole Eſtate, the King now at laſt diſchargeth the Lord Thomas Barkley of his Mainpriſors, day being given to him to appear at the next Parliament.

Whereas Sr. Henry Percy for the Yearly Fee of 500 Marks, ſtood bound to ſerve the King with a certain number of Men, as well in Peace as in War: The King in releaſe of the ſaid Fee, granteth to the ſaid [x] Sr. Henry in Fee, the Caſtle of Workworth in Northumberland and the Mannor of Rochbury.

[x] In my M.S. and Sr. Rob. Cotton too he is here called an Earl, thô the Firſt Percy Earl of Northumberland was not till the Coronation of King Richard the Second, An. 1377. vid. Mills Catal. Ho p. 718.

In this Parliament Sr. Robert [y] Benhale, who was then or ſoon after, a Baron of the Realm, and a moſt noble and couragious Knight in his time, as we ſhall have Occaſion to ſee hereafter, with William Clopton and John Clopton, all young ſpritely Gentlemen, having been convicted before the Juſtices of Aſſize in Norfolk and Suffolk of certain Ryots and other youthfull Extravagancies, were brought to appear in full Parliament, with ſeveral Knights and Eſquires, their Sureties, where each of them was fin'd, and further bound with other Sureties for his good Behaviour: For at this time Juſtice being provok'd by the Inſolence of thoſe, who took too great liberty during the Kings Minority, was every where ſeverely adminiſtred, as in the next years Parliament we ſhall ſee more particularly.

[y] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 154.

Sundry Merchants of Brabant, having been arreſted by Engliſh Merchants for Wools, taken up to the uſe of the Duke of Brabant; upon the ſaid Duke's requeſt, the King commands all the ſaid Engliſh Merchants to appear before the Council, and abide further Order therein.

About this time King Edward [z] confer'd on the young Sr. Walter Manny, Carver to his Queen, the Honour of Knighthood here in England, by Bathing, and other ſacred Ceremonies, with allowance of Robes for that Solemnity out of the Kings Wardrobe, as for a Baneret: And in the Sequel of this Hiſtory we ſhall ſee, how worthily he behav'd himſelf in this Honour.

[z] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 148.

VII. There [a] departed this life on the 19 of April this Year the Lord Robert Vere, called the Good Earl of Oxford, Lord of Bolebec, Samford, and High-Chamberlain of England: So Valiant, that King Edward the Firſt often employ'd him in his greateſt Affairs with equal ſucceſs; ſo Temperate, that he had the common Repute of a Saint. He was ſolemnly interred at the Priory of Colne; and becauſe he left no Iſſue of his Body, was ſucceeded in his Honours by his Nephew, Sr. John Vere, ſon of his Brother Alphonſo, who was now about Nineteen years of Age: The Arms of this Honourable Family are Quatterly Gules and Or, in the Firſt a Mullet Argent; which have belonged to the Earls of Oxford of that Houſe and Name, from the Year of our Lord 1140, even down to our days.

[a] Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 683.

In

In these days John of Luxemburgh (Son and Heir to Henry of Luxemburgh once Emperour of Germany) the most valiant King of Bohemia * invading Italy, brought under his subjection Brescia, Bergamo, Lucca, Parma, Reggio and Modena; of whose noble Exploits and Death we shall have Occasion to speak hereafter: But the Occasion of his Wars in Italy may be seen in the Writers of that Nation; and no where more particularly than in Odoricus Rainaldus his Continuation of Baronius his Annals of the Church, at the Year of our Lord 1330, and after.

* Lanquets Chro. ad hunc annum.

CHAPTER the FIFTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. A Parliament at Westminster. II. The true Grounds of the Scotch War enquired into. III. A Recapitulation of the Scotch Affairs from the first Invasion of Bailiol to this time, IV. The Scotch Preparations against the War, which they expected from England. V. King Edward's Provision against them, and a Parliament at York. VI. The King's Sister Married to the Earl of Gueldre: The young Earl of Kent dies: The Queen deliver'd of a Daughter.

I. ON the 27 [a] of April, being the Monday after the Feast of St. George, King Edward held his Parliament again at Westminster; where that we may see what Prudent Care was taken in those days by that August Assembly, that their Debates should not be aw'd by Fear, nor disturbed by Tumults, it was first by the King's Order proclaim'd, that no Man on pain of forfeiting all his substance, should presume to use, or wear any Coat of Plate, or other Weapon offensive or defensive in London, Westminster, or the Suburbs of the same: And also, that during the time of this Session, no Games, or other plays of men, women, or children, should be used in Westminster to the disturbance of the Parliament. Here also, once for all we shall mention the Laudable Custom of Parliaments in these days; whereby they had certain appointed, not only to be Receivers, but also, Tryers of Petitions, who were to enquire of matter of Fact, expressed in the Petition; that so it might be cleared, and rightly stated, before it came to be debated in full Parliament. But the first day nothing more was done, except the Proclamation aforesaid, because the Archbishop of Canterbury and Others were not yet come. After this Simon Mepham Archbishop of Canterbury, and John [b] Stratford Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Chancellour of England, began to open the Parliament, and by way of Oration, shew'd how the French King as then intended a Voyage into the Holy Land, and desired the King's Company in that pious Enterprise: Which caused his Majesty thus to call them together at this time. Then Sr. Geoffry Scroop of Masham in the King's Presence, and at his Command, declared further, that it was as well to redress the Breaches of the Laws and his Peace, as for the Voyage to the Holy Land, that he had called them together. The Prelates alledging, that it did not properly belong to their Function to be present at Criminal Debates, with a Proviso of reserving their Rights still to themselves and Successors, withdrew with the Proctors of the Clergy to consult together by themselves: And the [c] Earls, Barons, and other Grandees consulted by themselves apart; as also did the Commons, they at that time [d] having no Speaker of their own. As for the King's Voyage to the Holy Land, it was thought as yet too Early for his Years and the Good of his Realm, to be undertaken, and therefore 'twas resolv'd it should be defer'd for three Years: As to the Treaty of Peace with France by way of Marriage, which we mention'd in the foregoing Parliament; Sr. Geoffry Scroop now declaring, that the French King had assured our Ambassadors, that if his Majesty would in Person go over to him, in order to an amicable Conference, he should find nothing but Friendship and Honour at his Hands: Upon this Declaration Sr. Geoffry requiring their advice, was answer'd; that for those Reasons, with his Majesties good liking, they agreed he should pass the Seas, and therefore would humbly Request him to defer his Personal Expedition into Ireland for one Year; but yet so, as that an Army should be sent thither. And then as to matters relating to the Conservation of the King's Peace, the Lords and [e] Great Men returning, declare by the Mouth of the Lord Henry Beaumont,

AN. DOM. 1332. An. Regni VI.

[a] M. S. Rot. Parl. p. 16. &c. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 11. &c.

[b] Vid. Godwin's Catal. Bps. Philipot's Catal. Chancellors.

[c] Les Dits Countz Barons & Grauntz par eux Mesmes. Ita in Record.

[d] M. S. p. 17. §. 9. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 12. §. 10.

[e] Les Grauntz.

An. Dom. 1332. An. Regni VI.

mont, how they think fit, that certain Juſtices be appointed in every County, with Power to ſet Officers in every Town; who by the Aſſiſtance of the Conſtables ſhould apprehend all guilty or ſuſpicious Perſons, and make Publique Hue and Cry. And further it was Enacted by Authority of the King, Prelates, Lords and Commons; that ſentence of Excommunication ſhould be publiſhed in all Churches and Chappels throughout the Realm, againſt all Breakers of the King's Peace, or their Abettors. And alſo, Power was granted to diſpence with all Obligations made by Word, Oath or Bond, relating to the countenancing or concealing of any Violators of the Peace. To ſuch an Heighth of Inſolence had ſome ill Subjects grown in the Minority of this King, that he was fain not only to go in Perſon to ſuppreſs them, as I ſhew'd before; but now alſo to draw forth both the Civil and Spiritual Sword againſt them. But I muſt not here omit, what I find in the Remembrances of this Parliament, that in a Debate held between Sr. John Grey of Rotherfield, and Sr. William de la Zouch before the King and his Council, they grew to ſuch high Words, that at laſt Sr. John drew his Dagger upon Sr. William in the Preſence: For which preſumption they were both commanded to Priſon, althô they were Barons of the Realm. And being afterwards brought forth to anſwer the Contempt, upon equal hearing the ſaid Sr. William was acquitted; but Sr. John Remanded to Priſon, there to remain, during his Majeſties Pleaſure. Thus like a Wiſe Builder, did this Monarch begin with a firm Foundation, as thinking it Neceſſary to Govern well at Home, before he could Expect to Conquer abroad.

II. And ſurely now was Fate buſied not a little in preparing Matter for his Sword: France was not yet Ripe, and Ireland was not Worthy enough to employ ſo Noble an Arm; but Scotland to its unhappy Honour, did both ſeem a more equal Enemy, and by its Evil Genius was already haſting to ruſh into that War, which of it ſelf came too ſoon upon them.

But becauſe hitherto I have not ſeen any Author, either Foreign or Domeſtick, that ſeems fully to underſtand the Cauſe of King Edward's Invading that Realm; ſome ſaying, he did it out of Intereſt (which that he might do partly, I ſhall not deny) [f] others, that demanding Barwick, as his Right, and being refus'd, he made that Refuſal an occaſion of breaking the Peace: I ſhall now therefore Faithfully and Diſtinctly ſet down all that I have learn'd of this Matter, and leave it to the Deciſion of the Impartially Judicious.

[f] Polydor. Virgil. &c.

King Edward had hitherto kept the Quadriennial Peace moſt punctually; ſaving only, that he hindred not thoſe of his Subjects, who claim'd Lands in Scotland (which by peaceable Means they could not enjoy) from uſing their beſt endeavours, (thô without the leaſt help from him) for the Recovery of their Right. Nay, we find it expreſly mention'd to his Honour, [g] that theſe Engliſh Adventurers undertaking that War without his leave (for he would not, as we ſhew'd before, permit them to paſs thrô his Land into that Realm) he became ſo diſpleas'd at their preſumption; that by Advice of his Council, he cauſed all the Caſtles, Mannors and Lands belonging to the Lord Henry Vicount Beaumont (the Chief of theſe Undertakers) ſcituate and lying in the Counties of Warwick, Leiceſter, Nottingham and Derby, to be ſeiſed into his Hands: Thô ſoon after at the Parliament then ſitting at Weſtminſter, upon further examination, he had a full Reſtitution of all again. Thus much can truly be ſaid concerning this King's Reputation, as to his Faith in this Matter: Nor yet did he when the Term of the Truce was expired, firſt ſeek an occaſion againſt his Young Brother in Law. For we find that in his Parliament holden again at Weſtminſter this Year, on the Day [h] after the Nativity of our Lady, being the Ninth of September and a Wedneſday, whereas the Parliament was only called, as the Chancellor John Stratford Biſhop of Wincheſter declared about the Iriſh Affairs, and the King's Perſonal Expedition thither (for that was again reſum'd, and the French Voyage put off) there was ſuddenly terrible News brought from the North, of a Scotch Invaſion, which immediately turn'd all their Minds that way. So that in a great Hurry the Parliament was Adjourn'd to York, there to meet on the 25 of the ſaid Month, which was the Fryday before the Feaſt of St. Michael. But before they brake up that Seſſion, the Prelates [i] by themſelves, the Lords by themſelves, and the Knights by themſelves, by their Petitions Adviſed his Majeſty, and Requeſted him not to depart the Land for any Affairs of Ireland; only to ſend thither a new ſupply of Men and Money, and himſelf to March with an Armed Power toward the North, there to watch the Motions of Scotland: Towards which Exploit, they [k] granted to the King one Fifteenth of the Temporality, and a Tenth of all Cities and Burroughs; ſo as the King would pleaſe to live

[g] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 51. a. ex Clauſ. 4. Ed. 3. m. 12.

[h] M.S. p. 18. Sr Rob. Cotton p. 12. §. 3.

[i] M. S. p. 18. §. 3. 4. Sr Rob. Cotton p. 13. § 3.

[k] M.S. ibid. Sr Rob. Cotton ibid. Walſing. hypod. p. 112.

of

of his own, without grieving his Subjects by outragious Prises, or such like: Whereupon the King revoked the New Commissions for rearing of Tallages; and promiseth from henceforth to * remise the same according to the old Rate. AN. DOM. 1332. An. Regni VI.

III. But that we may the better understand the Business in Hand, it seems not unnecessary to give a short Account of the Scotch Affairs, since the Invasion of Edward Bailiol the Conquerour; of which we have made some Relation already in the Year foregoing. After those frequent and memorable Victories, the said Edward Bailiol was Proclaimed King of Scotland, and Crowned at Scone, in Opposition to King David: His English Assistants were the Chief that both encouraged, and in a manner enforced him to take this Title upon him; they alledging, "That they fought for his Right to the "Crown of that Kingdom, which if now after such fair Beginnings he had not the Cou- "rage to own, he would not deserve to obtain it: But that if he accepted the Title "of King, it would confirm the Hands of his Friends, and weaken those of his Ene- "mies: Besides, 'twas not unlikely to bring over many great Ones to his Party. On these and other the like Considerations, he accepted the Crown, as we shew'd before, and accordingly most of the Scotch Nobility came in to him: Thô some did but dissemble to secure their own Estates; till a Fairer occasion might be offer'd to declare themselves with more Advantage.

* In Sr. R. Cotton 'tis remise in M.S. raise

Soon after his Coronation, that he might secure the Crown unto himself, which he had taken upon him, [1] he marched with his gallant little Army from Scone, and had another Victory over the Rebel Scots at Roxborough, where he took the Lord Andrew Earl of Murray, and sent him prisoner to Durham. These thick and manifold Losses, thô able to have broke the Spirits of any but the hardy Scots, did only make them more cauteous, and put them almost against their nature upon subtle Contrivances, now they saw how unsuccessfull their Forceable Opposition proved. Whereupon [m] Patrick Earl of Dunbar, Archimbald Douglas and Sr. John Randulph, son to the Lord Thomas Randulph, late Protector of Scotland, with certain other Lords, that were still in their hearts firm to King David's Interest, did with subtlety require of King Edward Bailiol a Truce till the [n] Feast of the Purification following; that then by peaceable Treaty in full Parliament a perfect Union and Agreement might be made among these different Parties of the Scottish Nation. The unwary Prince willing by any means to stop the further Effusion of his Subjects blood, presently swallows this Bait, accepts with joy this deceitfull Overture; and either to shew his Confidence in his People, or to create in them a confidence of his peaceable Inclinations, freely dismisses the greater part of his Forces. The Parliament was pretended to be held at Anan the chief Town in Anandale, about 15 miles from Caerlile; whither the perfidious Scots (on Christmas Day, being ten days before the Parliament was to sit) coming suddenly upon their new King, made a lamentable slaughter of his Friends who were about him, he himself hardly escaping away on an Horse, without either Bridle or Saddle. But there he lost his only Brother, the Lord Henry Bailiol, a Man of singular valour, with the Lords Walter Cumin and Richard Kirkeby; only Alexander [p] Bruce, Earl of Carrick and Galloway, had his Life spared at the interception of the Lord John Randulph, who was his Kinsman as well upon the account of his relation to King David, as because he was one of the latest that yielded to the Bailiol. But surely the Lord John Moubray of England was not now slain, as Hector falsly affirms; for we find [q] by undoubted Records, that he died not till 29 years after this time. And here I must not omit to take further notice of the vanity of this Hector Boetius, [r] who to advance his Nations Honour as he thinks, sticks not to averr by a most notorious falshood, that this Victory was obtain'd by a just Battle, and after a long and doubtfull Fight: Whereas not to mention, that never any King went into battle deliberately, with his Horse unbridled; nor that it appears by Records, that several of King Bailiols chief Abettors and Friends, without whom he neither could nor would maintain a field, particularly, that the Lord [i] Henry Beaumont was then in England, even Buchanan [t] himself acknowledges, that King Bailiol was surprised, almost asleep and half naked. He for his part fled away directly for Caerlile, where he was kindly [u] received of Ranulph Lord Dacres of the North, then High [x] Sheriff of Cumberland and Governor of Caerlile, with whom he stay'd during the Holydays. Thence [y] he went into Westmorland, where he was honorably entertain'd by Robert Lord Clifford at his Castles [z] of Appleby and Brougham; [a] in requital whereof King Bailiol then and there granted unto him and his Heirs for ever Douglasdale in Scotland (which had before been given to his Grandfather the Lord Robert Clifford by King Edward the First of England) if ever again he should recover that Realm of his Adversaries. Not long [b] after this he went into

[1] Walsingh. hist. p. 114. Buchan. l. 13. p. 288.

[m] Knighton p. 2562. & Walsing. ibid.

[n] 2 Febr.

[o] & 6 Calen. Jan. i.e. 25 Decemb. Buchan. p. 286. vid. M.S Vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 223.

[p] Buchan. l. 13. p. 286.

[q] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 127. a. & b.

[r] Hector p. 314.

[t] M.S. p. 17. §. 18. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 12. §. 6. Buchan. l. 13. p. 286.

[u] Knighton p. 2562.

[x] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 22. b.

[y] Rob. Southwell.

[z] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 340.

[a] Rob. Southwell.

[b] Knighton p. 2562. n. 40. sed lege Lancastriam pro illius Leicestriam.

An. Dom. 1332. An. Regni VI.

to Lancaſhire to the Lady of Ghiſnes then reſiding at Mourholme, where for one week more he tarried with his ſmall Company, who had with him eſcaped from the Scots; and this Lady (who was wife to [c] William Lord Coucy, Earl of Ghiſnes in France) furniſhed him with Horſe, Arms and Money; for he had loſt all that ever he had, when he eſcaped from the Treaſon of the Scots. Moreover King Bailiol [d] ſent to King Edward his Letters Supplicatory, "Complaining unto him how falſly and treacherouſly "he had been in a little while reduced to ſhame and ſorrow, by the perfidiouſneſs of "his Liege-men, upon whom he had entirely truſted; and praying him for the Love "of Almighty God, that he would maintain and help him againſt his Enemies: On "which Condition he would hold the Crown of Scotland of him, and render homage "unto him for the ſame. King Edward had great commiſeration of this his forlorn Condition, and promiſed him very ſhortly to give him powerfull Aſſiſtance.

[c] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*761.
[d] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 223.

IV. In the mean time, while King Bailiol was thus recruiting himſelf again in England, and rallying his former Friends to his Aſſiſtance, the [e] Scots that held for Bruce, nothing ignorant of what they were to expect, apply themſelves to Archimbald Douglas, who was then Viceroy of that Kingdom (in the place of the Lord Andrew Murray, who had been taken before at Roxborough) to conſult with him about their Affairs. For they had ſuch an inveterate hatred againſt the Engliſh, who ſtill claim'd Superiority over them, that even for their ſakes, by whoſe Aſſiſtance he ſought the Kingdom, and under whoſe Homage they rightly judged he would ſubmit it, as his Father had done before, they now unanimouſly reſolve no way to endure the Bailiol for their King. Him therefore they all mark out for a common Enemy, and with more alacrity make proviſion of all things neceſſary to a War; as knowing what a Potent Adverſary they were to deal with. 'Twas here imagin'd, how the Engliſh who were to take his part, would firſt begin with Barwick; that therefore they firſt furniſh with a ſufficient Garriſon, the Lord Patrick of Dunbar being appointed Governour of the Caſtle, and Sr. Alexander Seton, a worthy Scotch Knight to defend the Town and Suburbs. But William Douglas Lord of Liddiſdale, a Man of great Wiſdom and Courage, is ſent to Anandale to guard the Weſt of Scotland. Here Buchanan ſends Andrew Murray the Viceroy to Roxborough, but Archimbald Douglas was now Viceroy, the Lord Andrew being a priſoner at Durham: And Bailiol was not at Roxborough now, as he ſays: So mightily do great Men err ſometimes for want of Diligence or Integrity. The Lord Archimbald the Viceroy undertook himſelf with more than [f] 3000 Choice men to enter the Marches of England, and to rob and ſpoil the Borderers to his power; as a while after he did by the way of Caerlile, making great havock every where, but eſpecially in Gilleſland, and the Lands of the Lord Ranulph Dacres; where for 15 or 16 leagues about, he lay'd all waſt before him. And beſides all this, the Lord John [g] Randulph is diſpatch'd into France, to implore the aſſiſtance of King Philip againſt his and their ancient Enemy.

[e] *Buchan p.*286
[f] Knighton p. 2562. *n.*60. & *Holinſhea. Eng. Chron. p.*895. & *Walſingh. hiſt. p.*114. *n.*10.
[g] *Bucha. p.*286.

V. The news of all theſe Preparations, and the apprehenſions thereof, was that which allarum'd the Parliament at Weſtminſter in that manner, as I ſaid before: And indeed gave the firſt Occaſion of renewing that War (by diſcharging King Edward of his former Obligations) which afterward proved ſo fatal to Scotland. For immediately when the Parliament was reaſſembled at York, Sr. Geoffry [h] Scroop declar'd, "That the King "his Maſter having underſtood, that the Lord Bailiol had proclaimed himſelf King of "Scotland, for which Crown, on condition of Aſſiſtance, he proffer'd to render Homage to the Crown of England; now therefore demanded whether (the Truce being "fully expired) He ſhould fall upon Scotland in his own Name, or claim the Demeſne "of the ſame, or by making himſelf a Party ſhould take advantage of Recovering "thoſe Services and that Homage, which his Royal Anceſtours have had before him. But becauſe moſt part of the States were abſent, theſe things at that time were not ſo fully determin'd; ſo that the Parliament was adjourned till the Octaves of St. Hilary, the King being fain to ſend out new Summons, ſtrictly enjoyning all Perſons to attend, and on no pretence whatſoever any longer to delay or hinder the Kings weighty Affairs by their Non-appearance.

[h] M.S. 19 §.6. *Sr. Rob. Cotton. p.*13.§.6.

This laſt default happen'd thrô the Pride of the Spirituality, the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York not agreeing about the Bearing of their Croſiers; ſo that only the Archbiſhop of York, whoſe name was William Melton, Henry Burwaſh Biſhop of Lincoln, and John Kirkeby Biſhop of Caerlile, with the Abbots of York and Selby came thither: But Simon Mepham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with all his Clergy forbore coming; whereby was occaſion'd the loſs of a fair Opportunity againſt Scotland; beſides the indignity put upon the King, in thus Fruſtrating his Expectation and the Inſup-

Insuppoptable Expence and Trouble that must needs accrue to the whole State by a Reassembly. AN. DOM. 1332. AN. REGNI VI.

I need not say any more of this Parliament, because I cannot find it produced any thing answerable to the present Exigence of Affairs, or to the King's Expectation: Save that upon their Reassembly, [i] Wardens were appointed for the Marches of the North; and the King enabled by his Subjects either to Invade or Defend. But John Stratford Bishop of Winchester, and other the Commissioners, that were to consult about certain Matters put to them by the King, either could not, or would not of themselves be fully resolved; but (after the manner of that Age) wished the King to Advise first with the Pope, and also with the French King, both which befriended King David of Scotland, and concern'd themselves in his matters. However King Edward was so far from either violating the Peace first, or even when 'twas done by the Scots, from precipitating himself into a War; that thô the French King did openly abett the Scots, and the Pope did abett France as palpably; yet he follow'd this Counsel: For we find that about this time, among others, [k] he sent this same Bishop of Winchester into France, concerning these Affairs. Of whom this is observable, that being then Lord Chancellour, he did not (as afterwards Cardinal Woolsey did in the Days of King Henry the VIII.) presumptuously carry the Great Seal with him beyond the Seas; but left it in his Absence with those, who both could and would be responsible for it, during his abode in France. And these things being thus done, the [l] Commons had all leave to depart; but the Lords were Commanded to attend the next day, at which time the King dissolved the Parliament. It is observable, that on the first day of this Parliaments sitting, Commandment was given to the Mayor of York, in Presence of the King in full Parliament, to see the King's Peace kept in the same City, and the Suburbs thereof, and to arrest them that did the contrary. Also that Proclamation against Weapons and Plays, should be made by the Steward and Martial before the Parliament-House, and by the Mayor and Bayliffs in the City of York.

[i] M.S. p. 20. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 14.

[k] Philipot's Catal. Chancell. p. 36.

[l] M. S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton ibid.

VI Thus this Year ended, the Peace not yet broke on the English part; but all things being in so loose a Posture, that nothing seem'd more certain, than that a War would inevitably follow.

The Princess [m] Eleanora, King Edward's Younger Sister, being about fourteen Years of Age, was this Year given in Marriage to Reginald the Second, Earl of Gueldre, a great Lover of King Edward and the English Nation: Her Portion was 15000 pounds Sterling, no small Summe of Money in those Days; for we find in Ancient Times, that even the Marriages of the Daughters of France [n] exceeded not 6000 Crowns ready Money; thô in our Days a Merchant of London has made his Daughter worth Forty, Sixty, and a Hundred Thousand Pounds. This Lady (thô his second Wife) brought to the said Earl two hopefull Sons, Reginald and Edward, both Dukes successively after their Father: For when afterward King Edward was made Vicar of the Sacred Empire, he Created this Earl Reginald Duke of Gueldre, since which that Earldom became a Dukedom.

[m] Speeds Ed. 2. p. 564. §. 81.

[n] Causin's Holy Court l. 3. part. 1 §. 39. n. 60.

In her passage to Guelderland she was Honourably attended by many English Knights, among whom was [o] William Lord Zouch of Mortimer, and Sr. Constantine Mortimer his Kinsman, both Branches of that Great Family of the Mortimers, late Lords of Wigmore: Sr. Constantine four Years after became Steward of the Houshold to the foresaid Countess of Gueldre.

[o] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 154.

This [p] Year the Lord Edmund Plantagenet, Eldest Son of Edmund of Woodstock late Earl of Kent departed this Life, being at his Death the King's Ward, and so without Issue: Whereupon his Brother John succeeded him in the said Earldom.

[p] Sandford's Geneal. Hist. p. 214. Clauf. 6. Ed. 3. m. 31.

To repair which Diminution of the Royal Branches in England, Queen [q] Philippa soon after Christmas, was happily deliver'd at Woodstock, near Oxford of her second Child, a fair Daughter, who was Christened by the Name of Isabella, and many Years after by the King her Father given in Marriage to the Honourable and Valiant Lord Ingelram Coucy, Earl of Guisnes and Soissons, and in time Archduke of Austria.

[q] Knighton p. 2560. & Speed p. 590. b. & Stow p. 231. &c.

CHAP-

An. Dom. 1333. An. Regni VII.

CHAPTER the Sixth.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Lord Robert Earl of Artois in Picardy, being profecuted by the French King, flies into England to King Edward's Protection, and becomes a Firebrand of the War againſt his Country. II. King Edward Summons the King of Scotland to come and do Homage, as alſo to render Barwick unto him, with King David's Reply. III. King Edward in Parliament reſolves on a War with Scotland, and ſends his Defiance. IV. Mutual Inroads, as Præludiums to the War, with the Siege of Barwick. V. King Edward's expedition in Scotland, and return to the Siege before Barwick, where he is met by the Lord Darcy. VI. A Combat between a Scotch and Engliſh Knight, with the Battle of Halidown. VII. The Names of the Engliſh Lords in that Battle, with an account of the Loſs on both ſides: Barwick taken and Garriſon'd by King Edward. VIII. King Edward's Devotion after the Victory: He leaves Edward Bailiol to proſecute the War in Scotland. King David flies into France, and makes a League Offenſive and Defenſive with King Philip. IX. King Bailiol's Succeſs in Scotland, he calls a Parliament at St. Johnſton, to which the Engliſh Lords, his Aſſiſtants, come and do Homage for their Lands held in that Kingdom. The Year concludes with the Death of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Durham, and the Lord Hugh Poynz.

I. THat it may appear, that National Commotions and Deſtructive Wars do come by the Ordinance of God, for the Correction of Pride, Injuſtice, or other Sins; I ſhall here briefly touch at the ſeeds of the French War, which being caſt about this time, laſted for ſo many years, and brought forth ſo many ſtrange and notable Events; thô when firſt ſow'd, they ſeem'd ſo ſmall and inconſiderable.

[a] Froiſ. c. 25. King Philip of Valois, who now wore the Crown of France, [a] obtain'd it at firſt chiefly by the Aſſiſtance, Conduct, and Authority of a Mighty Peer of that Kingdom, named, Robert Earl of Artois, who was one of the moſt Noble, Valiant, and Politick Lords in France, of High Lineage, and Prince of the Blood. He had married King Philips's German Siſter, and was ever his Chief and Special Friend and Counſellour; as well before, in his private Condition, as now in his Regal Eminence. Inſomuch, that for the ſpace of three or four Years, nothing of any moment paſſed in all that Kingdom, but at the Adviſe and Diſcretion of the Lord Robert of Artois.

[b] Sandford Geneal. Hiſt. p. 94. This Lord Robert, beſides the Relation he bore to King Edward, as having Married the Siſter of King Philip, who was Uncle to Queen Philippa, was alſo by the [b] Mother's ſide deſcended from King Henry the Third of England, King Edward's Great Grandfather, by the Lady Blanch of Bretagne, who was Daughter to Beatrice, ſecond Daughter to the ſaid King Henry the Third. He was the Son of Philip Earl of Artois, Lord of Conches and Damfront, and was entituled Robert of Artois, Earl of Beaumont le Roger, Peer of France, Lord of Conches, Damfront and Mehun: And as his Blood was Illuſtrious, his Courage was undaunted, and his Spirit unable to brook an Injury.

[c] Gaguin & Grafton p. 229. &c. Now in proceſs of time, it happen'd, [c] that in a Plea of ſome High Concern, for Lands, between this Sr. Robert and his Aunt, the Lady Mathilda Counteſs of Artois, he had judgement awarded by the Court againſt him, whether becauſe of Letters, that Sr. Robert was ſaid to have counterfeited, or for Reſpect to the Lady, who was a Widdow, or out of Envy to him, who was the King's ſole Favourite, or thrô neglect and inadvertency, or for any other cauſe, Juſt or Unjuſt; however the proceeding ſo much incenſed Sr. Robert, that he could not forbear to utter in the hearing of many theſe High Words------"By me was Philip Crown'd, and by me ſhall he be diſcrown'd again.

Theſe raſh Words had ſurely coſt him his Head, could Philip have taken him in his his anger. But he had wisely voided his Dominions, and cast himself upon his Nephew John Earl of Namur. The mean while King Philip had caused his Lady (thô so near related to himself) with her two Sons, the Lords John and Charles, to be apprehended and flung into close Prison, [d] in the Castle of Gastenois; whence he sware they should never return while they lived, whatsoever he should be advised to the contrary. Nor content with this, he sends to the [e] Bishop of Liege, desiring him effectually, that he would for his sake defie, and make War against the said Earl of Namur, unless he would deliver up Sr. Robert of Artois, or expell him his Country. All this the Bishop did accordingly, he was so addicted to the Crown of France, and thereupon the Earl was forced, thô unwillingly, to send Sr. Robert away: Who went thence directly to his Cozen the Duke of Brabant, by whom he was entertain'd with much friendship and generosity. The enraged King, upon knowledge hereof sends the Duke word, that if he continued any longer to foster or entertain this his Enemy in any part of his Countrey, he with all the Realm of France, his Friends and Allies, would thenceforth commence an everlasting Quarrel against him. The Duke upon this Menace privately conveys this his Friend to a strong Fortress of his, expecting the Issue of King Philip's Intentions: But this angry Prince had so well studied his Revenge, that by his Spies he was acquainted with this Finess of the Duke's. Whereupon taking it very heinously to be thus impos'd on, by his great Importunity, seconded with round Sums of Money, he engaged John of Luxemburgh King of Bohemia (thô he was Cozen German to the Duke of Brabant) the Bishop of Liege aforesaid, the Archbishop of Colen, the Earl of Gueldre, the Marquis of Gulick or Juliers, the Earl of Bar, the Lords of Ros and Fauquemont or Valkenburgh (as the Germains) with several others, all at one time to concurr in a common Defiance against the Duke of Brabant. And accordingly all these having joyn'd the Earl of Ewe Constable of France, who led a considerable Army himself, defi'd the Duke of Brabant, and entring his Country by the way of Esdan or Sedain on the Meuse, came to Antwerp, at that time the chief City of Brabant, and twice over-ran the Country where they pleased with Fire and Sword. Hereupon William Earl of Heinalt, out of kindness to the Duke his Kinsman, sent his own Lady Joan de Valois (who was King Philip's Sister) together with his Brother John Lord Beaumont of Heinalt into France, to entreat for Peace, and to obtain a present respit from War for the Duke of Brabant. At last, thô not without much ado, King Philip was wrought upon to vouchsafe him a Peace upon these Conditions: "That the Duke of Brabant "should cast himself upon the favour of the Court of France, and of the Kings Coun- "cil, of them to abide the Censure; and also without fail by such a certain time abso- "lutely to banish out of his Territories the said Robert Earl of Artois.

AN. DOM. 1333. An. Regni VII.

[d] Grafton p. 267.
[e] Froiss. c. 256

The Lord Robert being thus eagerly prosecuted from one Country to another, and wholly driven to despair, at last resolves to fling himself upon the more powerfull Protection of the King of England, and from this time sets himself with full Bent against his own Country. So dangerously impolitick is it, for a Prince to declare himself irreconcilable to any Great Man, before he has him in his Power: For here he kindled such a Fire, as the blood of more than an hundred thousand Frenchmen could not extinguish. He came into England disguised, like a Merchant (his Stuff and Riches being all convey'd hither before) about the time that King Edward held his Parliament at [f] York, in order to his Affairs relating to Scotland. The King knew him well, for [g] both he and his Mother had formerly received much kindness at his Hands, when they were persecuted by the Spencers, and beside as we have shewn, he was of Kin to the King by the Mother; wherefore readily apprehending of what great use such a Man might prove to his future Attempts, he immediately made him of his Council, and assign'd him the [h] Profits of the Earldom of Richmond, till he should provide some other Settlement for him: But of him we shall speak more anon.

[f] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*645.
[g] *Grafton p.*207 Polydor. l. 19. p. 364.
[h] Froiss. c. 26. & Speed p. 570. §. 37.

II. King Edward before the sitting of this Parliament, had upon Occasion of the foremention'd Rumours from the North, sent [i] Ralph Lord Basset of Drayton and Sr. William Denham, his Ambassadors to King David his Brother in Law, demanding present Restitution of the Town of Barwick, which his Grandfather Edward the First had held in peaceable Possession; and also to summon him to come into England to render Homage unto him, as Superior Lord for that his Kingdom of Scotland. To which Message King David by advice of his Council return'd thus, [k] "Lords, it is no small "wonder to Us and to all our Barons, that the King your Master, our Good Brother in "Law, should send us such a Message as here you bring us: For it could never appear

[i] Ashmole p. 645. ex Rot. Pat. 6. Ed. 3. p. 3. m. 3. 14 Dec.
[k] Froiss. ibid.

"to

An. Dom. 1333. An. Regni VII.

"to us, that the Realm of Scotland was of old bound or subject to England, either "to yield Homage or any other Service thereto. Wherefore neither would the King "our Father, of famous Memory, ever own any such thing, for all the Wars that "were made against him by your King's Father or Grandfather. The steps of our "Father we Our selves, God willing, intend to follow, in all that is Just and Hono- "rable, even thô thereby we hazard both our Life and Kingdom. As for Barwick it "was [1] fairly won by the Prowess of King Robert our Father, from King Edward Fa- "ther to the King your Master, in time of Open War. And by the same Prowess he "held it with Honour, till by his Death it came with the rest of his Inheritance to Us, "his undoubted Son and Heir; who intend also with our utmost Ability, to hold it in "the best manner we may.

[1] Vid. John Harding c. 172. and Speed p. 559. § 34.

"But this Lords, we require of you as Gentlemen and Christians, that you would "do your best to persuade the King your Master, whose Sister we have taken into our "Royal Bed, that he will suffer us peaceably to enjoy our Rights and Franchises, as "his Ancestors have done before; and leave freely in our Possession, what our Father so "valiantly wan, and so quietly enjoy'd, and at last so entirely transmitted to Us with "his Crown and Kingdom. Nor let the King your Master be too credulous of light "Reports; since we intend Religiously to keep the Peace so lately made at Northam- "pton. Nor let him give too much Faith to evil Counsellors, whose restless Spirits "stirr him up against us: Since if any other Prince in the world intended to injure us, "He ought especially to aid, succour and defend us for his Sisters sake, whom we have "Married and taken into our Bosom.

Upon this Answer the Ambassadors promising to acquit themselves as he had required them, were dismissed; but King Edward was nothing content when he heard them report the Answer. I am well aware, that the Scotch Writers, imagining the better to colour all their losses, deliver how their King David had before this, even upon Bailiols Invasion, convey'd himself with his Queen into France: But neither doth it seem honourable nor reasonable, that by so weak, thô successfull an Enemy, and at the appearance of such small Forces, their King should be driven to such desperate Courses; nor is it agreeable to other, either Circumstances or Authors, and it is utterly contradicted by Froisard, who lived near those Days, and took great Care, and was very impartial in Collecting his History. Wherefore with him we cannot admit that he left his Kingdom in this manner, till the Main of his Forces were overthrown by King Edward in the Battle of Halidoun, to which now we hasten.

III. The late-mention'd Answer from Scotland was no way pleasing to King Edward; for whatever Natural affection for his Sister, the Queen of Scots, might persuade, he saw plainly by the resolute Answer of King David, that he was no longer to be rely'd on as a Friend, than he should want Power of manifesting himself an Enemy to England; that the Old League with France was more prevalent than this New Alliance with him; that however now in his Pupillage he seem'd desirous of Peace, within a few years he would prove both willing, and able to wage the fiercer Wars. It troubled him also not a little, that while himself was under Age, so Dishonourable a Bargain had been made, wherein he had been induced to resign those Instruments of his Superiority over Scotland, which as his Father had purchas'd with much Honourable Difficulty, so till himself had regain'd them he could not be at friends with himself. The present Occasion also seem'd more promising, since the Scots had already broke the Peace, and that (on his Part beside) the Limits of the Peace were fully expired; that moreover King Bailiol, had in Reality the best Right to that Crown; from whom he might expect not only the accustomed Homage, but also Restitution of what Himself in his Minority had by evil Counsel resign'd, to the extream Diminution of his Honour and Royal Prerogative. Add to all this, that till he had settled his Affairs on that side, he could not safely make any Pretensions to France; which the Lord Robert of Artois from his first coming had vehemently instigated him unto; according to that vulgar Saying,

He that the Realm of France would win,
Must with Scotland first begin.

[m] Knighton p. 2562. Walsing. hist. p. 115.
* it began to sit in the 2d week in Lent Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 645.
[n] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 6. 45. Walsing. hist. p. 115. n. 40.

Now therefore he calls his [m] Parliament, which, as we said before, met at York a little after the Purification of the Virgin Mary, or rather in the beginning of March, the * Second Sunday in Lent happening that Year on the last of February. To this Parliament King Bailiol, as holding of King Edward, had his Summons; but [n] he understanding, ſtanding, that his Enemies had laid wait for him in the adjacent Iſles and elſewhere, durſt not adventure to come in Perſon; but ſent his ſufficient Excuſe by the Lord Henry Beaumont Earl of Buquhain, the Lord William Montagu and other Lords and Knights; who ſo evidently declared the Reaſons of his Non-appearance at that time, that their Apology was accepted by the King and his Council. Here the King declaring to all his Lords, the late Anſwer of the King of Scots to his Embaſſy, [o] demands their Advice thereupon, and that they would conſider what way he might beſt ſalve his Honour and maintain his Right. AN. DOM. 1333. An. Regni VII. [o] Froiſ. c.26. fol.15. b.

The Reſult was, The whole Parliament was of Opinion, that the King could no longer with Honour put up thoſe Wrongs and Injuries daily done unto him, and his people by the Scots: They humbly therefore pray'd and adviſ'd his Majeſty to provide ſuch force of Men and Arms, as might not only reduce Barwick into his Power, but alſo compell the King of Scotland gladly to ſeek his Peace, by rendring unto him the accuſtomed Homage for that Kingdom. In which Enterpriſe they all promiſed to aſſiſt him in Purſe and Perſon.

The King, as he was always very Gracious to his People, thanked them heartily for the Loyal Affection, wherewith they embrac'd his Honour and Intereſt, and ſo having prefixed [p] Trinity Sunday for the time wherein his Forces were to be Aſſembled at Newcaſtle upon Tine, he Diſſolv'd the Parliament. [p] Clauſ.7.Ed.3. m.19. Dorſo.

Thus was a War reſolv'd on: But yet [q] before the King of England would draw his Sword, he ſends again to King David other Ambaſſadors, to ſummon him to come and do the required Homage, upon peremptory refuſal whereof, they were ſecretly inſtructed with full Authority to defie him. But for all this, the Scots were ſo Reſolute upon their Liberty, that no better Anſwer could be obtain'd, than what was return'd before: So that the Defiance was openly made, and War Publiſhed between the two Nations. [q] Froiſ. c.26. ibid.

[r] Tanton' placuit concurrere Motu,
O Deus, aternâ Gentes in Pace futuras! [r] Virgil.l.12. v.503.

IV. Before [s] this King Edward had ſent ſome Forces toward the North, not to Invade Scotland, but to make good the Borders, in caſe of an Invaſion from thence: And well it happen'd, that he had ſo provided. For [t] before the Defiance was made, the Lord Archimbald Douglas, on the 20 of March, being the Sunday after the Annunciation, had enter'd the Marches of England (as we [u] ſhew'd before) where he continued four days in great Outrage, without any encounter, and after that got off ſafe, thô with no great Booty. But now King Edward had order'd Repriſals to be made upon the Enemy, and ſoon [x] after the Lord William Montague, Ralph Lord Nevill, the Lord Henry Plantagenet, Son to the Old Earl of Lancaſter, and Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, paſſed with King Bailiol into Scotland, where they did much Damage to the Enemy; and among the Reſt, they took a certain Fortreſs wherein they found the Lord Robert Colvile, a Baron [y] of England, Priſoner (whom they releaſed) with many other Engliſh Gentlemen, and ſeveral great Ladies of the Country, all whom they deliver'd. Here alſo they found a vaſt quantity of Proviſion of all ſorts, which they kept for themſelves, and ſo ras'd the Caſtle to the ground: From hence they March'd directly for Barwick, which they began to lay Siege to, both by Sea and Land.

[s] Walſingh. hiſt. p.114. n.10.
[t] Knighton p. 2562. n.60.
[u] L.1.c.5.§.4. p.68.
[x] Knighton p. 2562. n.40. & 50.
[y] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p.626.

A little before, to retaliate thoſe Hoſtile Incurſions made by the Scots upon the Marches, the Lord [z] Anthony Lucy of Cockermouth, and William of Loughmaban with only 800 Reſolute Men had enter'd Scotland in Hoſtile manner, for above twenty Leagues, when they were met by the Lord William Douglas, Captain of the Fortreſs of Loughmaban, attended with a great Multitude of Men of War. However at laſt the Victory fell to the Engliſh, the Lord Humphry Gurdon, Sr. William of Carlile, and more than an hundred and ſixty Men of Arms being ſlain; the Lord Douglas himſelf, with Sr. William Ward, and about an hundred others were taken Priſoners, with a great deal of Booty. But the Lord Anthony Lucy on the Engliſh part, was very much wounded in the Fight, thô not mortally; and ſo they all return'd with their Prey and Priſoners into England. About the ſame time another party of the Engliſh Borderers made a ſudden Inroad into Scotland, and coming to Haddington in the time of a great Fair, they ſlew and took all they found there, ſeiſing on all their Cattle and other Commodities, that were of any Value. [z] Knighton p. 2563. n.10. & Walſingh. Hiſt. p.114.n.20. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p.565.

V. But now, while the Siege of Barwick was carrying on, King Edward himſelf comes thither in Perſon with a well appointed Army; and there reſolutely inveſts the

An. Dom. 1333. An. Regni VII.

Town, declaring, he would never depart thence, till he had reduced the Place, or the King of Scots ſhould come thither to give him Battle. Some five Weeks before he had been before Barwick, but [a] then he was adviſed not to ſpend his time in a tedious and uncertain Siege; but to ride up in the Land and Deſtroy and Conquer, as his Grandfather had done in the furtheſt parts of Scotland; the Forces of King Bailiol being judg'd ſufficient to hold a formal Siege, thô not to carry the place by force. Upon this reaſon, and hoping thereby to draw King David, or his Lieutenant to a Battle, he follows the advice, Waſting and Deſtroying all the plain Countnry of Scotland, and taking in ſeveral fortified Towns, and the ſtrong Caſtle of Edenburgh particularly, wherein he placed a Garriſon. Thence paſſing the Frith at Queensferry, he came to Dunfermlin, and deſtroy'd the Town, but not the leaſt harm was done to the Abbey, the King giving ſpecial Command to the contrary; hence he overran all the Country about Scone, as far as Dundee, and on the left hand, as far as Dunbritton, an impregnable Caſtle, about five Miles from Glaſcow, ſtanding on the River Cluid, in the Marches, bordering on the wild Scots. To this place King David with his Queen was now retired for ſafety; for he had been adviſed by his Council, "not to hazard a Battle, ſeeing, that beſide the common uncertainty of War, he had "but few good Captains remaining, and himſelf was little more than ten Years Old; "the Lord William Douglas alſo now being Priſoner in England: "But wait a while "(ſay they) till this Tempeſt is of it ſelf blown over; another time we may reco- "ver theſe Loſſes more eaſily. Hereupon the King being thus ſecur'd, the reſt of the Scots of thoſe parts had withdrawn themſelves, and the beſt of their Moveables into the Foreſt of Gedworth, which was impaſſable, but to thoſe who were well acquainted with the Country. King Edward therefore, having thus ravag'd over all Scotland at his pleaſure, without the leaſt proffer of Battle made to him (except that ſome Knights and Gentlemen of Scotland would frequently Skirmiſh with any ſmall detachments from his Army) and finding it fruitleſs to expect any juſt Oppoſition from King David, intends back again for Barwick: But in the way thither he took the Caſtle of Blacknes belonging to Earl Douglas, which being about 10 Leagues or 20 Scotch Miles from Edinburgh, he Garriſon'd alſo for himſelf, as he had done divers other Caſtles before, intending thereby to make conſtant War upon Scotland within its own Bowels.

[a] Froiſ. c. 26. fol. 16.

Juſt as the King of England was return'd to the Siege before Barwick, with a Reſolution not to ſtir thence, till he had taken the Place, or that King David ſhould raiſe his Siege by Battle; about the ſame time came to Barwick, the Lord [b] John Darcy Juſtice of Ireland, with a Gallant ſmall Body of Men to the King his Maſters Aſſiſtance. He had three Years [c] before been ſent by King Edward into Aquitain to the Reinforcement of William de Burgo, alias Burgh, Earl of Ulſter, then Guardian of that Dutchy. But the ſaid Earl being this Year [d] deſirous to paſs into Scotland to wait upon the King his Lord, as he was riding to Knockfergus, near the Fords of Ulſter, and talking familiarly with his Followers about the ſubject matter of his preſent Undertaking, an Iriſhman called Robert Fitzmartin Mandevil, ſuddenly drew his ſword and ran it into his belly; ſo that there the young Valorous Earl was ſlain (only becauſe he had impriſon'd one Henry Mandevil of that Family) leaving behind him [e] one Daughter, Elizabeth, Heir of all his vaſt Poſſeſſions; which afterwards was Married to a Son of King Edward's not yet Born. To Revenge his Death, the Lord Darcy leaving Aquitain, came now for Ireland with this ſmall Army; but underſtanding that the Men of the Country had already done that Work to his hand, by putting the foreſaid Mandevil and his Fellows to due Execution, he ſet Sr. Thomas Burgh in his place, as Lieutenant of Ireland, and ſo made directly for Scotland, whither he came juſt in time to give a Specimen both of his Loyalty and Valour.

[b] Thoroton's Notting. p. 264.

[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 371.

[d] Knighton p. 2563. & Holinſhead Chron. Ireland p. 70. ad An. 1333.

[e] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 167.

For in this very juncture the Scots having gotten together a conſiderable Army, reſolv'd to raiſe the Siege from before Barwick; but when they ſaw too much difficulty in the undertaking, they proceeded over the Tweed into Northumberland, where being informed, that the young Queen of England was in the Caſtle of Bamburgh, near the River Warne, they immediately laid their Siege thereto; if by any means, for her ſake at leaſt, they might ſo oblige King Edward to riſe from before Barwick. But this Prince was not ſo Uxorious; and beſides he well knew the Great ſtrength of that Place, and that his Queen had ſufficient Proviſion both of Men and Victuals; ſo that for all this he ſtirred not, thô he heard likewiſe, how the Scots, during this their Siege before Bamburgh, [f] overran the whole Country with their Detachments, Ravaging and Deſtroying whatever they could find, for ſix days together.

[f] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 114. n. 30.

During

During this Siege of Barwick, there aroſe [g] a great Controverſie between two Engliſh Knights, the one Sr. William Fackenham Appellant, and the other Sr. John Sitſylt, alias Cecil, Defendant. The Quarrel was concerning an Enſign of Arms, which were, [h] A Field Barry of Ten pieces, Argent and Azure, on ſix Eſcutcheons, three, two and one, Sable, as many Lions Rampant of the Firſt. Which Arms each of theſe Knights challenged as his Right, and proffer'd to maintain the ſame by Combat in their proper Perſons. But it pleaſed the King, that the Heralds ſhould decide this matter by Law and Juſtice, without ſhedding of Blood; and ſo the Right of bearing thoſe Arms was ſolemnly adjudged to Sr. John Cecill, as Heir of Blood lineally deſcended from the Body of James Cecill, Baron of Beauport, ſlain at the Siege of Wallingford Caſtle in the Fourth of King Stephen. Which Lord James Cecill was Son of Sr. Robert Sitſylt (for that is the right Ancient Name) who in the Days of King William Rufus, went with Robert Fitz-Haimo to the Conqueſt of the County of Glamorgan; after which he Married a Lady, by whom he had Alterennes, and other Lands in Hereford and Gloceſterſhire. From theſe Cecills in a direct Line is the Right Honourable [i] James, the Preſent Earl of Salisbury, Vicount Cranburne, deſcended: Who, when at St. Johns College in Cambridge, was pleas'd to allow me the Honour of his Acquaintance, whereby I am able upon Knowledge to declare, that he is a Gentleman, who for Loyalty, Generoſity, and affability, is moſt likely to Advance the Ancient and Honourable Name of the Cecills to the utmoſt Period of Glory.

But to proceed to our Hiſtory; all this while the Scots within Barwick had not been idle, but always defended themſelves gallantly, and ſometimes by briſk and vigorous Sallies offended their Enemies not a little: For the Town was well furniſhed with Men of War and Proviſion of all ſorts, as having had a timely warning of what they were to expect beforehand. Once they undertook to fire the Engliſh Navy, thô without effect, at which time Sr. William [k] Seton, the Baſtard of Sr. Alexander Seton, a Man of great valour, being about to leap on board an Engliſh Ship, his own Veſſel was ſuddenly wrought ſo far by the violence and motion of the Waves, that falling ſhort between the two Veſſels, he was unfortunately loſt in the great hurry of the Engagement, to the infinite regret of all that knew him. Once there happen'd a ſudden fire in the Town, when the Captains fearing the Engliſh might make uſe of that advantage to their Ruine, begg'd a Truce and Reſpit, only while they might quench the Fire, promiſing thereupon to yield the Town afterward, if they had no Succour by that time: But the danger of the Conflagration being once overcome, they perſiſted in their Obſtinacy. Thus for three Months the Siege continued with much trouble to the Beſieged, as well otherwiſe, as becauſe of their frequent Sallies, wherein for the moſt part they always had the worſe; in one of them One of Sr. Alexander Setons legitimate Sons being alſo taken Priſoner. So that at laſt Sr. Alexander was ſo much oppreſt, that he gave his Eldeſt ſon Sr. Thomas Seton an Hoſtage to King Edward; that he would now without fail yield up the Town, if he were not ſuccoured by ſuch a Day. The King of England [l] would have had all yielded up ſimply on Diſcretion (whereas the Beſieged required their Lives and Goods to be ſaved) till he was obliged to comply with their Requeſt by the Advice of his Council, eſpecially of the Lord Robert of Artois, who being with him in all this Expedition, and obſerving the Barrenneſs of Scotland, and the unprofitableneſs of theſe Wars, ſtill egg'd him on with all the earneſtneſs imaginable to make an end here, and to enterpriſe the Conqueſt of France, which was his by Right of Inheritance, and was rich enough to fill his Armies with Plunder. Upon this account the Truce being granted, and the Hoſtage deliver'd, [m] the Lord Patrick of Dumbar and Sr. Alexander Seton, ſent away Sr. William Keth to the Siege of Bamburgh, to require the Scotch Lords ſpeedily to come back to their Aſſiſtance, aſſuring them, "That if they would Couragiouſly diſpoſe themſelves to fight "with the two Kings, they would undoubtedly prevail, great Numbers of the Engliſh "Army being beſtow'd about in Garriſon; and as for the Reſt, they muſt either di"vide themſelves when they were to fight, or the Town and Caſtle would be at "liberty to fall on their Backs, while the Army engaged them in the Front. Now when Sr. William Keth had brought this Meſſage to the Scotch Lords before Bamburgh, they, becauſe alſo by this time the Caſtle ſeem'd impregnable (as we may partly gueſs by thoſe Ruins of the Walls, which are yet, or were very lately, to be ſeen) reſolve to Riſe from before the Place, and to advance againſt the Enemy. Wherefore the ſeventh Day from their coming thither, they began their March toward Barwick, and ſo repaſſing the Tweed, fetch'd a compaſs, and at laſt encamped in a place called Bothul near Halliden (vulgarly Halidoune) Hill, on the North ſide of Barwick.

AN. DOM. 1333. An. Regni VII.

[g] Powel's Hiſt. of Wales p. 147 ex Joh. Boſwel's Concords of Armory fol. 80.

[h] Aſhmole p. 715. & 716. in Kts. 355. 391. 400. 417. & Sandford p. 378 In Margin.

[i] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 408. Vid. Powel's Hiſt. of Wales, ubi tota hujus Familiæ Genealogia, à p. 142. ad p. 147

[k] Buchan. l. 9. p. 287.

[l] Froiſ. c. 26. fol. 16.

[m] Walſing. Hiſt. p. 114. Vid. M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 223.

An. Dom. 1333. An. Regni VII.

But before I come to the Battle, I must not omit a Story, which the Scotch Writers call (thô nothing at all credible) lest thereby I may seem partially to rob that Nation of what is esteem'd so honourable by those indiscreet Authors. Both the Besiegers and the Besieged saw this Approach of the Lord Archimbald Douglas with an Army of above Sixty thousand Men: At which time (as they [n] report) King Edward of England calls forth his Hostage Sr. Thomas Seton, together with his brother William, whom he had taken prisoner, and erecting a Gibbet in sight of the Town, sends an Herald to assure Sr. Alexander, that unless he would forthwith yield up the Town, they should both be speedily executed. What should the Captain do in this case, he had already lost his Bastard son, who for his worth and valour, was no less dear to him than One of these. Both these, who were now ready to die, except he yeelded, were also Young Men of great Hope, and to a Father not less dear than Life it self. Yet Manly honour, and the Duty he ow'd his Country, pleaded strongly against Fatherly Affection; and now in a manner he is resolved to conquer importunate Nature, and make her as is fit, give place to vertue; when e're he was aware, casting his watry eyes toward the Gallows, and beholding again both his Sons, his only Hopes, ready to be sacrificed by the Hangman, the violence of Natural Affection return'd again, and wholly master'd his Nobler Thoughts of Honour. But just then, as he is resolving out of Paternal piety to be Impious to his common Mother his Country, behold his Lady, the Mother of the young Men, putting on the Spirit of a Man (which her Husband had laid off) began to confirm his late-wavering Mind, by laying before him, "What Duty he ow'd to his King and Country, and how untainted the Honour of "his Family had hitherto been: That thô these their Children should thus perish, "they might have Others, for neither was he, nor her self as yet uncapable of "producing more (which we shall examin by and by) that thô they should now e-"scape, once they must surely die; but if now the Name of Seton should be blackned "with Treason, no time would purge it from their Posterity. That she had often "heard from the discourses of wise Men, the Praise of those who had voluntarily re-"sign'd their Children to death for the sake of their Country. Beside, should he prove "Disloyal in hopes to save their Lives, how could he assure himself to preserve them "thereby? Or that the perjur'd Tyrant (says she) would then keep his Word, who "had broke it already; the day being not yet come, on which he was engag'd to "yield? But the Succour being ready at hand, which ought to secure the Hostage? "That therefore he should not seek to redeem an uncertain or short satisfaction, for a "certain and perpetual Blot of Infamy! This Speech settling the Good Man in his Loyal Resolution, she withdrew him from the Walls, that he might no more be stagger'd when he should behold the shamefull End of his dear Children.

[n] Buchan. l. 9. p. 288. & Hector l. 15. p. 314. n. 60.

To say the truth this is a very pretty Tale, and would make as much for the Honour of that Noble Virago, as it reflects upon King Edward a stain of Inhumanity and Injustice: But as I said before, it is no way credible, if we consider the little Authority wherewith it is confirmed, only Hectors and Buchanans Word for't; the utter Improbability, that so Gallant a Prince should be so ungenerously Cruel; the Inconsistence of that part of the Speech, wherein 'tis affirmed that they were both capable of having more Children; when her youngest Son was now so great a Soldier, as they make him in the Sally wherein he was taken; his Elder brother Sr. Thomas having been given as Hostage, and yet an Elder than him, named Sr. Alexander, was a great Captain and slain at Kingcorne, when Bailiol first landed in Scotland, two Years before. But above all, we shall find a few Pages hence, that this Sr. Alexander the Father, the Town of Barwick being yielded, when among others he had his choice to go or stay, chose rather to yield Homage to King Edward of England, which certainly neither his Lady would have suffer'd him to do, nor Nature it self, had his Children been now so unjustly and barbarously put to death by that King. Not to take notice of the Declamatory Art, wherewith this Ladies Speech is fraught, she in one place alluding to the stories of Macaria or Iphigenia among the Greek Tragedians, or perhaps to the Tragedy of Jeptha, which Buchanan himself had put forth; and yet Hector is much more florid and rhetoricall in the Speech he makes her; and he says too, that the Scotch Army was not yet come neither. But having thus, for fear of being thought willing to conceal any Truth, told an Incredible story to the Honour of a Scotch Lady, I hope, I may be allow'd at the same time to tell another, every whit as well attested of an English Knight.

Now it is to be premised, that in these Days there were found in the Great Wood of Caledon a sort of huge wild white Bulls, called [o] Bisons, with shaggy and curled Mains, [o] Gesneri Hist. Quadruped.

AN. DOM. 1333. An. Regni VII.

Mains, like [p] Lions, otherwise not unlike to ours: These [q] were so Fierce and Savage, that they could never be made familiar, nor would they taste of any Herb, or Grass, on which they found the Scent of a Man, after many days: When they were taken (which was very hard to do) they would refuse all sustenance, and starve themselves to Death. Whatever came against them they would with great Fury and Violence run at, neither fearing Dogs, Nets, nor any kind of Weapon. It is said the late King of Scotland, Robert Bruce, who greatly delighted to hunt these Bulls, was one time overthrown by one of them, and in evident Peril of his Life: When a certain young Esquire, that was at that instant near his Person, running up to his Rescue, and seising upon the Bulls Horns by plain Force, overthrew him to the Earth, and so held him, till the Hunters came up and slew him. For this Notable Fact of his, the King endued him with large Possessions, and from that time his Name became Turnbull, which is retained by his Posterity even to this day. Now this Turnbull being at this time of such Renown, as also of incredible strength and Courage, and of unusual Stature, resolv'd to venture his Life for the Honour of his Country, and accordingly on the Vigil of St. Margaret, being the [r] 19 of July, and a Monday, before the Battles joyn'd, came out of the Scottish Host, and standing between both Armies, by an Herald [s] Challenged to fight a Mortal Duel with any One of all the English. While every Mind was busied about this bold Defiance, a young Knight of Norfolk, whom Baker calls Venile, Stow, Venale; but by good Authority, I find his Name was Sr. Robert Benhale (the * same who in the Parliament An° 1331 was Fined for a Riot) offer'd himself before the King of England, and kneeling desired his leave to undertake the Combat. This granted, he Arms himself, and with his naked Sword walks forth fair and softly to meet the Enemy: Before they joyn'd, it is reported, that a Monstrous Fierce black-Mastiff, an [t] attendant of Turnbulls, flew out against the English Knight, who nothing daunted at the unexpected meeting of so uncouth an Enemy, raising his Right Arm on High, with a quick and sprightly pace, advanced up directly before him, till just upon the Shock he nimbly skips on the right side of the Mastiff, and at the same instant let fall his Right Arm so strongly, that he cut him in sunder at the Loins; and as fully secure of his own unerring hand, on he proceeds leisurely, without once looking back to see what he had done. This Resolution of Mind, and this Activity of Body, as it greatly comforted all his Party, so it much disturbed the Bulky Challenger, who could not but look on this as an unlucky Omen to himself. But Honour, and indeed Necessity, oblig'd him now to Muster up all his Courage; for by this, Sr. Robert Benhale was at him, wisely observing, what part of his Body was most assaultable.

[p] Hector Boeth. p. 6. n. 70.

[q] Holinshead Descript. of Scotland p. 13. c. 7.

[r] Lit. Dom., C.

[s] Stow p. 231. & Sr. Rich. Baker in Men of Note in K. Edward's time.

* Vid. l. 1. c. 4. §. 6. p. 64.

[t] De Canibus belli societatem gerentibus vid. R. Sheringham de Anglorum Origine c. 1. p. 6.

The Giant laid most Manfully about him, and it seem'd, that a few of his strokes might suffice to decide the Controversie: But the Defendant was Young, Vigorous, and Nimble, ever at him, and yet ever at a distance from him; still offering, and never resolving to strike, till he might once do it to purpose. When Turnbull thought himself sure of his Head, his Adversary was three paces out of his reach; and yet it behov'd him to make use of all his skill to defend himself; for immediately he was in upon him again. Thus for a while it was a delightfull sight for the Spectators to behold, how the Unwieldy Turnbull behav'd himself, with as much Skill and Courage as was possible; but the Active English Knight traversing his ground with no less skill, and renewing his approaches with no less Courage, breath'd his Bulk pretty handsomely. All that beheld the Combat were full of Concern, according to their several Interests; but the English had the greater share of Hope, when they saw what Methods their Champion us'd to tire his Antagonist, and how neat a Master he was of his Weapon. Turnbull well knew this Dilatory way was not for his Advantage, and therefore resolv'd to take the first opportunity to strike home with a vengeance. Sr. Robert, who well observ'd his Eye and Hand together, and easily apprehended his Design, came one time briskly so near, that the Scot was now sure to himself of good Fortune. He strake at him with all his Might, Sr. Robert suddenly eludes the Blow, and while the Adversary bending down his Right side, and Rearing at the same time his left Arm, was recovering his overpois'd Body, in that very instant, Benhale steps boldly in, and with one home blow divides his left Arm from his Body; and just then (to the Admiration of all) while the Scot was lending a full stroke, he avoided out of his reach. And now, had he so pleas'd, he might have danc'd him to Death, the Blood gush'd out so mainly: But he had Courage, as well as Activity, and immediately counterfeits a Design at his right Leg; many Falsifies he made toward his Head, but seem'd chiefly to aim lower: When the Giant considering his Condition requir'd quir'd diſpatch, and hoping to requite the Loſs of his Arm, with his Enemies Death, Levels a deadly Vengeance at Sr. Robert's Head. This was alſo fully avoided, becauſe craftily invited; when quick as Imagination, he throws himſelf in upon him and with one full Blow, to which he lent both his Hands, cuts off Turnbulls Head. 'Twas ſo ſuddenly done, that it could not eaſily be judg'd, whether the Giant rais'd his Arm before or after the ſtroke was given: The Trunk ſtood ſome moments, but preſently yielded to Death, falling forward to the Ground, at which Inſtant the Heavens Rang with the Shouts of the Engliſh. The Knight addreſs'd himſelf forthwith to ſpoil the Body, or at leaſt to gather up the Head and ſword of Turnbull: When of a ſudden a Troop of Horſe from the Scots, came forward upon the Spur to deſtroy him baſely, who had defended his Life with ſo much Honour. King Edward was not aware of any ſuch unworthy Action; ſo that the Knight was well near ſurrounded, by that time the King had commanded a Troop out to his Aſſiſtance. However, Fortune ſo well ſeconded his Valour, that he eſcap'd alive from this Field; for in the [u] Tenth of this Kings Reign we find him again in the Wars of Scotland, and two Years after in the Expedition into Flanders, and two and twenty Years after that he had Summons to Parliament amongſt the Barons of this Realm.

An. Dom. 1333. An. Regni VII.

[u] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 154.

The Scots came freſhly forward in Four Battails about the time of Evenſong, at which time the Floud was up at Barwick in the Water of Tweed; ſo that none might paſs over on Horſe, or Foot, the River being between the Engliſh, and the Realm of England: Wherefore the Scots, who were on the other ſide the Engliſh, expected, that thoſe who fell not on their ſwords, would be drown'd in the Water.

This was the Array of the Scots, when they came in Four Battails againſt the Two Kings of England and Scotland.

In the Scotch Vaward [x] were theſe Lords, John Lord Murray, who that day ſupply'd the Place of the Lord John Randulph, Earl of Murray, he being detain'd by ſickneſs; the Lord Andrew Fraiſier, with his two Brethren, Simon and James; Reginald Cheyne, Patrick Graham, John Graunt, James of Carlile, Patrick Parker, Robert Caldecotes, Philip Meldrun, Thomas and Gilbert Wiſeman, Adam Gourdon, James Gramont, Robert Brady, Hugh Park, with 40 Knights new dubbed, 600 men of Arms, and 3000 Commons.

[x] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 224. & Knighton p. 2564. n. 10.

In the Firſt half of the Second Battail of the Scots, were theſe Lords, Robert Steward of Scotland, with his Banner, James Stuart his Uncle, with his Banner, the Earl of Menteith, the Lord William Douglas, David Lindſey, Malcom Flemin, William Keth, Duncan Campbell, with 30 Batchelours new dubbed; and in the Second half of the ſaid Battail, were theſe Lords, James Stuart of Colden, Alan Stuart, William Abernethy, William Morrice, William Friskin, Adam Moreſt, Walter Fitz-Gilbert, John Gretton, Robert Walthew, the whole Battail amounting to 700 Men of Arms, and 17000 Commons.

In the Third Ward of the Scotch Army were theſe Lords, Hugh Earl of Roſs, Kenneth Earl of Southerland, and the Earl of Strathern, William Kirkeby, John Cambron, Gilbert Say, William Ramſey, William [y] Prondegeſt, Criſpin Hard, William Gourdon, Arnold Ward, Thomas Duplin, with 40 Knights new-dubbed, 900 Men of Arms, and 15000 Commons.

[y] Knighton l. Prendeſoit.

In the Fourth Ward of the Army of Scotland were theſe Lords, Archimbald Douglas, with his Banner, the Earl of Lenox, Alexander Bruce Earl of Fife, John Campbell, Reputed Earl of Athol, Robert Sterenlow, William Vipount, Robert Lawether, John Lindſey, Alexander Graham, Patrick Prolleſworth, David Wimes, Michael Scot, Thomas Bois, Roger Mortimer, William Umphranville, Thomas Vaux, William Landis, with 30 Batchelours, 900 Men of Arms, and 18400 Commons. Beſides this the Earl of Dunbar, Keeper of the Caſtle of Barwick, holp the Scots at this time with 50 Men of Arms, and Sr. Alexander Seton, Captain of the Town with an 100 Men of Arms; and the Commons of the Town with 400 Men of Arms, and 10800 Footmen: For all was ſet upon the Fortune of this Battle.

So the Summ of the Earls and Lords amounts to 65; the Summ of Knights Batchelours new-dubbed, comes to 140; the Foot of the Computation of Men of Arms makes 3650, and of the Commons, 64200: The Total of the whole Army ariſes to 68055. And the 65 Great Lords lead them on in Four Battails, as we ſaid before, all on Foot; having deliver'd their Horſes to their Servants.

Now becauſe the Garriſon of Barwick was almoſt exhauſted, and by the Conſent of both Nations, the Matter was to be determin'd by this Battle, there was no neceſ-

ſity

AN. DOM. 1333. An. Regni VII.

sity of leaving any Engliſh Troops at the Siege; wherefore Edward King of England, and Edward King of Scotland, having drawn out all their Forces into the Field, had alſo by this time well Marſhal'd their Men in Four ſmall Battails, to fight on foot againſt their Enemies. And then the Engliſh Minſtrels blew aloud their Trumpets, and founded their Pipes, and other Inſtruments of Martial Muſick, and Marched furiouſly to meet the Scots. Now to each Battail of Engliſh, were two Wings of choſen Archers, who [z] ſhot this day ſo thick, and ſo home, that the Scots could by no means maintain their Order: So that the Engliſhmen of Arms and Footmen enter'd in among them, and beat them down by Heaps. Yet ſtill the Scots fought valiantly; and while the Lord Archimbald Douglas liv'd, kept the Field with great Courage, thô much to their Loſs: But when they ſaw him ſtruck thrô the Body with a Spear, they began to flee for ſafeguard of their Lives, thô to very little purpoſe. For when the Scotch Valets and Pages ſaw the Diſcomfiture, they ran away upon the Spur, with their Maſters Horſes to ſave themſelves, taking no Care for their Maſters. But when the Engliſh men of Arms ſaw that, they leap'd on their Horſes, and follow'd the Chace with great Fury; then were the Scotch men trodden down on all ſides, their diſplay'd Banners fell'd to the Ground, all torn and hack'd in pieces; and many a good Habergeon bathed in the Owners Blood. Yet frequently did the Scots gather together in Companies to diſpute the point with their Purſuers; but ſtill they were diſcomfited. And thus, ſays my [a] Author, it befell as God would, that the Scots had that day no more Power nor Might againſt the Engliſh, than twenty Sheep would have againſt five Wolves; and ſo were they diſcomfited, althô they were almoſt five to one of the Engliſh: And in this Battle were ſlain of the Scots; 35712, and of Engliſhmen only Seven, according to the foreſaid Author, and thoſe were Footmen. Their Writers confeſs, that a Wing of Engliſh wheeling about, intercepted them in their Flight, and that they were [b] even wearied with the ſlaughter of the Scots; and yet at the ſame time, Hector allows but 14000, Buchanan but 10000 to be ſlain: So fearfull are they to ſpeak an ungrateſull Truth, thô they have not Art enough wholly to conceal it. They themſelves acknowledge that theſe Great Men fell that day; namely, the Lord [c] Archimbald Douglas their General, the Lords James, John, and Alan, Stuarts, Hugh Earl of Roſs, Kenneth Earl of Southerland, Alexander Bruce Earl of Carrick, Sr. William Tudway, Sr. John Graham, Sr. Alexander Fraiſier, and his two Brethren, James and Simon Knights of High Birth and Valour: Sr. Duncan Campbell, and Sr. John Campbell who call'd himſelf Earl of Athol, the Earls of Lenox and Menteith, and many more: So that this day ſeem'd to take away whatever of the Scotch Nobility was left in the Battle of Duplin. The Engliſh followed the Chace five Miles, making a Bloody Purſuit till Night: For the Scots as they gather'd together, made frequent Returns upon their Enemies; inſomuch, that in all they loſt upon this Occaſion 8 Earls, 90 Knights and Baronets, 400 Eſquires, and about 32000 (or as ſome ſay [d] 35000) of the Common Soldiers. For the Lord John [e] Darcy with his Iriſh Troops on the one ſide, made a great Slaughter; while the King, with a choice Brigade of Men of Arms and Archers on Horſe-back ſo encompaſſed them on the other ſide, that very few could eſcape, except thoſe who firſt of all began the Flight. Not a few alſo were taken alive, as Sr. William Keth, who was the Occaſion of this Loſs to his Country, by perſwading them againſt their Opinions, to joyn Battle with the King; Sr. William Douglas the Son of Sr. James, who died in Spain, Sr. Robert Kirkpatrick, Sr. William Campbell, Sr. Gilbert Wiſeman, Sr. Alexander Graham, Sr. Oliver Sinclare, with many more, all whom, as Hector ſays, King Edward the next day cauſed to loſe their Heads, except ſuch, as for Rewards were privily conceal'd from Death by the ſouldiers. This ſhamefull lie Buchanan however wholly omits, not out of good Nature we may be ſure, but becauſe of its Notorious Falſity. And Froiſard frequently Reports of the Engliſh and Scots, that of all other Nations they were moſt Fierce againſt each other in time of Battle, but mutually Kind and Courteous to their Priſoners. Nor durſt any ſouldiers for Gain conceal them, nor could they if they would, and we ſhall find ſeveral of theſe, ſaid here to have been Beheaded, in Action hereafter: For thô Hector in ſubtlety left out the Names of the Priſoners, we have recovered them elſewhere, and cannot but obſerve the Malice of the Man, who when he makes Calumnies, many times uſes ſuch General Terms, as plainly ſhews he was not furniſh'd with Particulars. Thoſe, who were privately ſaved by ſome Engliſh Souldiers, make a plauſible excuſe for the Forger to evade by, when we ſhall produce him any of theſe Priſoners alive afterward.

VII. Now the moſt Famous Barons and Leaders that were with King Edward in this Battle, [f] were Prince John of Eltham, the Kings own Brother, and Prince Thomas of Bro-

[z] Confer H. Knighton p. 2563. n. 50.

[a] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 224.

[b] Hector p. 316. n. 10.

[c] Knighton p. 2563. n. 50. & c. & Hector p. 316 n. 20. & Buchan. p. 289. & Aſhmole p. 645. & Holinſhead Engl. Chr. p. 896.

[d] Walſing. Hiſt. p. 112. Knighton p. 2563. Stow p. 231. lin. 50. Fabian p. 199.

[e] Thoroton Nottingh. Antiqu. p. 264. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 371.

[f] Vid. Dudg. Bar. 1 & 2 Vol. ſub his Nominibus, Brotherton, Montague, Mauley, &c.

An. Dom. 1333. An. Regni VII.

Brotherton his Uncle, William Lord Montagu, Peter Lord Mauley, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, John Earl of Warren and Surrey, the Lord Walter Manny, Ralph Lord Nevil of Raby, Henry Lord Percy, John Lord Gray of Codonor, the Lords Alexander Hilton, Ralph Camois, Thomas Furnival, Gilbert Aton, Adam Wells, John Moels, alias Mules; beside the Lords John Willoughby, and John Fauconberg, both who fought Valiantly under the Banner of the Lord Ebulo le Strange: There were also these Lords John Moubray, Bartholomew Burwash senior, Robert Lord Clifford, William Lord Clinton, Hugh Lord Audley junior, afterwards Earl of Glouceſter; Ralph Lord Baſſet of Drayton, Sr. John Roos and Thomas Brethren to William Lord Roos, Sr. Hugh Courtney son and Heir apparent of the Lord Hugh Courtney the Elder, and Sr. Robert Pierpoint, [g] whose services that day were so Considerable, that they obtain'd him an High Place in the Kings Favour: And from him the present Thrice-Noble Earl of Kingston is Descended.

[g] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 458.

It is [h] generally agreed, that the Scotch Army did by far exceed the English in number; and the Courage of that Nation was never justly called in question; yet thus by their own want of Experience, or disadvantage of Ground, or Divine Judgment, they were slain, taken and routed by a far less number of English; who yet in the whole Action lost but one Knight, one Esquire, and twelve or thirteen Footmen, fifteen being the most that are said to fall on our side. So great and signal a Victory could not but enforce the yielding up of the Town and Castle, which were before so much distressed, and could now expect no other timely Succour. Accordingly [i] that very day, or rather (as [k] some say) the next, both were deliver'd up to King Edward, who gave the Townsmen [l] a Truce for 40 days, in which space of time they might sell, or otherwise dispose of their Goods, such as had a mind to depart; but as for those who were willing to become his Liege Men, he gave them free leave to remain in their dwellings still, and enjoy their own, they giving unto him their Oath of Fealty. Of these were Earl Patrick of Dunbar, late Captain of the Castle, and Sr. Alexander [m] Seton himself (Captain of the Town) who certainly would never have sworn Loyalty to him, had he so cruelly executed his Sons, as the same Scotch Writers too rashly report. Sr. [n] Alexander Ramsey also, and Sr. Robert Miners, with Other the Chief of the Town, to save their Houses and Lands there, took the Oath of Allegiance.

[h] Walsing. hist. p. 114. n. 40. & Knighton p. 2559. n. 10 & 20.

[i] Id. ibid. n. 29.

[k] Walsingh. p. 114. Fabian p. 199. Holinsh. p. 896. & M.S. ibid. &c.

[l] Knighton p. 2564. n. 60.

[m] Hector l. 15. p. 316. l. 32. & Buchan. p. 289.

[n] Knighton p. 2564.

King Edward entred into Barwick with great Solemnity, where having tarried twelve days, he appointed King [o] Bailiol to rule all the rest of Scotland, and left with him the Lord Richard Talbot and many other valiant Leaders with a sufficient Army to keep that Realm, that is, all beyond the Scottish Sea; but he himself claim'd Barwick both by Inheritance from his Ancestors and his own Conquest. And there therefore in his own Name, he immediately places the Lord Henry Percy, as Governor of his Castle of Barwick, with his Lieutenant Sr. Thomas Grey, and the Lord Patrick Earl of Dunbar was joyn'd in Commission with them, as Wardens jointly of all on this side the Scotch Sea, which he had received to his Peace. Only Earl [p] Patrick had this Penance imposed on him by King Edward, "That since upon the first Arrival of the English, he had (thrô "despair to keep it) caused his Castle of Dunbar to be dismantled and rased to the ground, "he should now at his own charge rebuild it, and admit an English Garrison therein.

[o] Froiss. c. 26. & Grafton p. 228.

[p] Hector l. 15. fol. 316. lin. 37.

The Lord John [q] Darcy having obtain'd much honour in this War, return'd now with all his Forces to his Province of Ireland; where all along he exercis'd much wisdom and integrity in that his Government, and upon his return presently deliver'd Walter Bermingham Primate of Armagh out of the Castle of Dublin; of which matters to enlarge would be foreign to our purpose.

[q] Thoroton Nottingh. Antiq. p. 164.

VIII. But the Pious King Edward of England, in [r] Memory of this great Victory, which happen'd as we have shew'd, on the Eve of St. Margaret the Virgin (that Festival being in the Roman Calendar on the [s] 20 of July) repaired the Church and Convent of the Nuns, near the place where the Battle was fought (it having upon that Occasion been burnt and destroy'd) and caused an Altar to be therein erected and dedicated to that Virgin-Martyr. He further granted to those Nuns and their Successors for ever, 20*l. per annum* out of the Issues of the Town and County of Barwick; untill Lands to that value might be settled upon them; to the end, "That annually "on the Eve and Day of St. Margaret for ever they should commemorate the Goodness of God for his so prosperous Success in that Battle.

[r] Ashmole Garter p. 645.

[s] Male ergo Ashmole 13. ibid.

As for the Bailiol, about the Feast of St. [t] Laurence, which is the tenth of August, even before the King of England had left those parts, he put himself in the Head of an Army of about 26000 men, all English, or such Scots, as had yielded to serve him; and to prosecute this Victory, marched forth into the very Heart of Scotland, taking [t] Knighton p. 2565. n. 1. &c.

Towns

Towns and Castles at his pleasure; for none resisted him: And there he took up his Winter Quarters, all the Country being subjected unto him; as we shall shew more fully anon. AN. DOM. 1333. An. Regni VII.

About this time it was as the best Authors agree, that King [u] David Bruce, being thus in a manner deprived of his Kingdom, was both advised by his Friends, and forced by Necessity to forsake his Native Country for a while, and fly to the protection of his old Confederate of France. All this was happily effected by the Loyal assistance of Malcome Flemein of Cumirnald, the Captain of the impregnable Castle of Dunbriton; under whose Conduct, departing secretly with his Queen and a small Company, he set sail for France, and arrived safely at Bouloigne; whence riding to Paris, he was heartily welcom'd of King Philip, who received him with extraordinary Courtesie, offering him freely to command any of his Houses or Castles to reside in, and to take up whatsoever he should want either for Use or Pleasure, provided he would engage never to make any final Agreement with King Edward of England without his Consent first had and obtained; thô at the same time the Lord [x] Bartholomew Burwash the Elder, and other Commissioners late sent from England, were then in France about renewing a Truce toward a full Establishment of Peace. And indeed King Philip, who knew that the Lord Robert of Artois, his Mortal Enemy, was harboured and protected in England, did not at all question, but that he would do his utmost to embroil the Affairs of France; nor was he ignorant, what just pretences King Edward might make to his Crown, beside the ancient and inveterate Antipathy that seem'd almost Natural between the two Kingdoms. He gave therefore to King David the Castle of Galliard upon the Seyne to reside in, during his Necessitous condition, and assign'd him a truly Royal Allowance; for nothing could be got from Scotland considerable enough to maintain a Port becoming the Majesty of a King. Nor was it long e're Philip sent into Scotland to those Lords, who held against the English, honourable Messengers with many large Promises of great Assistance both in Men and Money, provided they would engage never to strike up a Peace with the King of England, but by the consent and allowance of him and David their King.

[u] Fabian p. 199. & Froiss. 33.

[x] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 34.

This Message so encouraged the Brucean Lords, that they readily accepted the Motion, and sware to keep the Covenant, which they sent back to the French King, with their Seals thereto annexed. The Contents whereof were but the same with those, which their King Achaius of old had made with Charlemaine King of France, and which were usually from King to King renewed between the two Crowns, till at last in our Fathers Days Scotland was happily united to the Crown of England: Which Covenant, since the Articles are but short and few, it will not I hope be amiss, here once for all to record.

[y] 1. That a firm and perpetual Alliance and Confederacy should be maintained between the Scots and French.

[y] Favin's Theatre of Hon. 2 Vol. p. 795.

2. That when the English made War upon either the Scots or French, they should both give mutual Succour reciprocally one to the other.

3. That if it happen'd, the English should war in France, the Scots should then give them Succour with Men of War, to be waged and maintained at the Expences of the French; They also engaging to do the like for them, if it happen'd the English should make War in Scotland.

4. That neither Scots nor French should for the future aid or assist the English with Men, Money, Victuals or Advice, without the consent of the Kings of both Nations, under penalty of being declared guilty of High Treason.

5. That the French should make no Peace or Truce with the English, except the King of Scots may be comprised, named and allowed therein.

6. And lastly, That the Covenants and Conditions above-named, should be confirmed from King to King, and at each Change or Succession of them, that their Pragmatical Sanctions should be sealed and confirmed reciprocally on both Sides.

This is the summ of that ancient League with France, which was now renewed again; And accordingly King Philip soon after [z] sent into Scotland to the assistance of the Bruceans, Men of War under the Command of the Lord Arnold D' Andreghan (who after became Marshal of France and a Famous Warrier) and the Lord Garenciers, with many other Captains, Knights and Esquires. Besides which he [a] mann'd out ten Men of War to the Reinforcement of the Scots, but these meeting with a Terrible storm at Sea, were driven into Flanders, and so beaten, that after much loss of their Stuff and Provision, they were fain to return home inglorious and without effect.

[z] Froiss. c. 33.

[a] Fabian p. 209

King Edward the mean while, having so happily obtained the Victory aforesaid, and ſettled his Affairs at Barwick and thereabouts, adding Piety to his Valour, [b] goes according to the Superſtition of thoſe Times, with a few Attendants to viſit ſeveral Places in England, which were moſt fam'd for Sanctity, and there offer'd his Thanks to God Almighty, the Bleſſed Virgin Mother, St. Cuthbert at Durham, St. Edward at Weſtminſter, St. Erkenwold at St. Pauls in London, St. Thomas at Canterbury, and St. George at Windſor, for at that beloved Seat of his he finiſh'd his Pilgrimage. After which in * November he again marched toward Scotland, as we ſhall ſhew in the beginning of the next Chapter, and kept his * Chriſtmas at York, being ſtill [c] attended with the Lord Robert of Artois, who never ceaſed day nor night to ſet forth before him the Great Right which he had to the Crown of France; and the King took pleaſure to hear him: But as yet matters were not fully ripe.

An. Dom. 1333. An. Regni VII.

[b] *Walſing. hiſt. p.*114. *n.*40.

* *Fabian p.*200.
* *Grafton p.*229
[c] *Froiſ c.*26. fol. 16.

IX. And now was Scotland for a while quite out of breath, her Nobility being ſo mightily conſum'd by the continual Wars, and their own too great Courage; and none remaining, who was any way able to encounter or impeach King Bailiol, who from this time had the ſirname of Conquerour attributed to him. So that now with his [d] Army aforeſaid, wherein was the Lord Richard Talbot, and many young Knights and Eſquires of England, he took in almoſt all Scotland, diligently viewing every Place, and prudently ſettling his Affairs; for the moſt part furniſhing his Garriſons with Engliſh, as not yet daring, ſince the late Treacherous ſurprize, to repoſe much confidence in the revolted Scots, whatever Submiſſion they now pretended. Only a few Caſtles continued true to King David in this Alteration, which as they could not then be eaſily taken for their ſtrength, ſo for their Number were they very inconſiderable: If any thing may be ſaid to be ſo in a War, when no leſs than a Kingdom lies at ſtake.

[d] *Hector f.*316. 40. & *Buchan. l.*9. *p.*290.

Hereupon King Bailiol finding himſelf pretty well eſtabliſhed in his Throne, [e] ſummons a Parliament to meet him at Perth, alias St. Johnſton, to which thoſe Engliſh Lords that claim'd Poſſeſſions in Scotland, came and there did their Homage to him for the ſaid reſpective Lands held under him, reſerving ſtill the Allegiance they ow'd to their natural Lord and Soveraign the King of England. Among theſe was Henry Lord Beaumont Earl of Buquhan, who had to wife the Lady [f] Alice, one of the Siſters, or rather as others ſay, Coſins and Heirs of the Lord John Cumin Earl of Buquhan and Conſtable of Scotland; of the Lands of whoſe Inheritance, doing Homage therefore, he had [g] Livery and Seiſin in the Sixth of Edward the Second, thô afterwards he was diſpoſſeſſed, as other Engliſh Lords were till this time. This Great Lord they ſay, did firſt adviſe King Bailiol to implore the King of England's Aid toward the recovery of his Right; and till the King's Mind might be known, had conceal'd him at the Lady Veſci his ſiſter's Houſe. The Lord Richard Talbot was now alſo reſtored to the Lands which he claim'd in right of his Lady [h] Eliſabeth, another of the Coſins and Coheirs of the ſaid Lord John Cumin of Badenagh, Earl of Buquan; as David Strabolgi Earl of Athol, in Right of his Mother [i] Joan, the other Coſin and Coheir, whoſe Name Others reckon to be Katherine, had Livery of his Lands at the ſame time. Beſides theſe King Bailiol gave to the Lord [k] Henry Percy of Alnwick Caſtle in Northumberland, a Grant of the Inheritance of the Pele of Loughmaban, as alſo of Anandale and Moſſetdale, with all the Knights Fees and Advowſons of Churches within thoſe Valleys, in as full and ample Manner as the Lord Thomas Randulph, ſometime Earl of Murray ever had them; And moreover, of divers Lands in that Realm which had belonged to other Men of the Brucean Party. The like Grants were given to Ralph Lord Nevil of Raby, John Lord Moubray, and Sr. [l] Edward Bohun, Brother to John Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and Conſtable of England, all Men of great Nobility and Valour. Theſe with ſome few more came to this Parliament, held by King Bailiol, as Peers of Scotland, and as owing Homage for their reſpective lands held of him, partly to ſettle their own Affairs, and partly [m] as Commiſſioners from the King of England, to ſee thoſe Agreements ratified and confirmed, that had been made between the two Kings. And in this Parliament [n] were revoked, and made null and void all Acts, Statutes and Ordinances which the late Kings of Scotland, Robert or David had made; and it was enacted, That all ſuch Lands and Poſſeſſions, as either of the ſaid Bruces had given, granted or confirmed to any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, ſhould be now taken away and reſtored to the former and true Inheritor. Thus was David ſeemingly unking'd, and Bailiol to all appearance fixed in the Scottiſh Throne; but we ſhall quickly ſee him at the bottom of the Wheel again, and once more King David muſt be lifted up, thô to his greater loſs and trouble.

[e] *Walſing. hiſt. p.*115. & M.S. vet. Angl. &c.

[f] John Cumin Earl of Buquhan died without Iſſue, but Alexander Cumin, his brother left three Daughters, his Coheirs, of which this Alice the Eldeſt. *Mills Catal. Honor. p.*957.

[g] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*50. b.

[h] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*326.

[i] Dudg. 1 *Vol. p.*96.

[k] *Dugd.*1 *Vol. p.*274.

[l] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*184.

[m] Rot. Scoc. 7. *Ed.*3. *m.*2.

[n] *Holinſh. Eng. Chron. p.*896.

But now we muſt ſhut up this Active year with a few Memorandums of Mortality: For Lewis Beaumont Biſhop of Durham, departing this life in September, on the 19 of December, [o] Godwins Cata. Bps p. 661.

December following Dr. Richard Bury, formerly the Kings Tutor, was consecrated Bishop in his stead, in the presence of the King and Queen of England, and of King Baliol of Scotland, besides 2 Archbishops, 5 Bishops, 7 Earls, and many other Noble Personages both Lords and Ladies: So obligingly Gracious was this Mighty Monarch to the Man that taught him; as indeed for his great Learning and Abilities he did well deserve. Also on the 12 of October following, Dr. Simon Mepham Archbishop of Canterbury deceased at his Mannor of Magfield, and was succeeded in that See by Dr. John Stratford Bishop of Wincheſter, a Man of great Learning, Judgment and Loyalty. And on the 13 of the same Month Sr. Hugh Poynz, a noble and valiant Knight and Baron of this Realm went the way of all Flesh, leaving behind him Nicholas his Son and Heir, from whom many worthy Branches are descended.

[p] Godwins Catal. Bps p. 132. & Thorne's Chron. p. 2066.

[q] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 2.

CHAPTER the SEVENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. A Parliament held at York. II. Edward Bailiol King of Scotland renders Homage to King Edward of England, whereby the Scots begin first to be distasted again. John Duke of Bretagne likewise renders Homage to the King of England for his Earldom of Richmond. III. A Council at Nottingham, which produces a Parliament at Westminster. Wherein King Edward shews his Resolution to go with the French King to the Holy Land; Upon which he sends Ambassadors to the Pope and King Philip; but that Design is broke. IV. King Bailiol causes a disgust among his Friends, whereat his Enemies take Advantage; till being reconcil'd again, he grows stronger. However his Enemies get to a Head again, and for a while prosper. V. King Edward startled at the News, prepares for another Expedition to Scotland in Person: He arrives with his Army at Newcastle: The Lord Edward Bohun, Brother to the Earl of Hereford and Essex, unfortunately drowned.

I. KING Edward of England in his March toward Scotland, which as we have observed, he began in the November foregoing, [a] stay'd to keep his Christmas at the City of York: Thence he went and laid Siege to the Castle of Kilbridge, which he presently took by fine force, and thereupon having confer'd with King Bailiol, and pretty well settled Affairs in those parts, he return'd again after Candlemas [b] to York, in order to hold his Parliament, which he had summon'd to meet him there the next day before St. Peter in Cathedrâ, being the 21 of February, and a Monday, the second Week in Lent. AN. DOM. 1334. AN. REGNI VIII.

[a] Fabian p. 200. & Grafton p. 229.

[b] Holinshead p. 896.

Here it was [c] Enacted, that the Great Charter of the Forest, and other Statutes should be observed, and that what Clauses therein were obscure, should be by good Advice more fully Explain'd.

[c] B. Dom. Lit. Pasc. 27 Martii. M.S. Rec. Parl. p. 20, 21. §. 1. &c. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 15 §. 1. &c.

It was also petition'd, that in every County one Justice of the Peace Learned in the Law, should be appointed, as Chief over the Rest; before whom all Offences should be sued to the Outlawry: And that these were yearly to make an Account of their Doings before the King. To which the King replying, he would be advised, granted that they should yearly send up an Extract of their Proceedings into the Treasury; and to Encourage them the more herein, undertook to [d] provide, that each of them should have certain and limited Fees allow'd him. To the Petition, that no Pardon be granted to any Outlawed, by any suggestive means, but only by Parliament; his Majesty answer'd, that the Statutes made should be observed; and whereas it was Requested, That Sheriffs might continue but one Year, according to the Statute of Lincoln and Woodstock, he told them that the Statutes made should stand, and that the Chancellour, and others, who were appointed to make Choice of Sheriffs should name Able Men, who were to continue One Year, or longer, according to their Demeanour.

[d] Ibid. §. 4.

It was now Enacted, that the Justices of the Kings Bench, and the Common Bench, Justices of Assise, and of the Peace in every County, should Determine of false Jurors and Maintainers: Moreover, the King by his Letters Patents charged all Archbishops and Bishops, to cause Excommunication weekly in every Parish, to be Denounced against all such Offenders.

An. Dom. 1334. An. Regni VIII.

Upon Request of the Commons, that all Men might have their Writs out of the Chancery for Fees of the Seal only, without any Fine, according to that of Magna Charta---- Nulli vendemus Justitiam; the King granted, that Writs, which were of Course, should be so, and that for such as were of Grace, he would Command his Chancellour to be therein Gracious.

It is Enacted, that Bigamy shall be Tryed only in Court Christian.

It is Enacted, that Justices of Assise, after their Assise taken, shall not depart, before they have made Delivery of their Goal, on pain of loosing their Fees.

It is Enacted, If any Delivery be taken before any other Justices, than such, as are appointed thereto, contrary to the Statutes at Northampton; that the same may be void.

It is Enacted, that no Purveyance be made, but for the King.

The Commons Petition, That Remedy may be had against Oppressions of the Clergy, for Probates of Wills, and Citations for Trifles:

The King will herein do his Best, and chargeth the Bishops to do the Like.

That every Infant acknowledging any Statute or Recognisance, may at his Full Age, Averre his Nonage. The King reply'd, There was a better Law, than by Averment.

That all Men may have Delivery of their Beasts, which escape into any Hay, or Forest, without any Fine to the Forester, who accounteth them Forfeits, and that Coroners may Execute their Office there.

The Coroners shall Execute their Office there, and Wardens of Forests shall be commanded to keep their Officers from Extorting.

That certain may be appointed to hear the Debates between the Town of Great Yarmouth, and Little Yarmouth.

The Judgements therefore made between them shall stand.

That Remedy may be had for the true making of Woollen Cloaths according to the Assize.

The King will Provide for the Execution of the Statute.

That no money be Exported out of the Realm.

The King will Provide therefore.

That Pardons may be granted for the Debts due to King John and Henry the Third, for which Process came daily out of the Exchequer.

The King will Provide an Answer the next Parliament.

That Remedy may be had against Sheriffs and their Officers for Gathering of Green Wax.

The Statute therefore made shall stand.

[c] In Dorso ejusd. Rot

For [c] that the Staple was ordain'd to endure at the Kings Pleasure, It is now Enacted, that the same Staple should be revoked; and that all Merchants-Strangers may freely buy any Staple Wares, paying the due Custom.

Sundry Justices in several Counties were appointed to enquire of the Felonies of Bennet of Normanton.

Lastly, because Sr. Geoffry Scroop Lord Chief Justice was to be employ'd in the Kings Weighty Affairs; it was Enacted, that the Kings Bench should be continued in Warwickshire after Easter next; Sr. Richard Willoughby being appointed to supply his Place for the time, with the Assistance of Sr. William Shareshull, one of the Justices of the Bench.

II. This is the Summ of what I find transacted in this Parliament, which being adjourn'd, the King, who was desirous to keep a watchfull Eye over Scotland, passed on, and held his Whitsuntide [f] at Newcastle upon Tine: Whither soon after Edward Bailiol, King of Scotland, Sirnamed the Conquerour, came to him well and Honourably attended with the Nobility of either Nation, and there [g] on the Day of Gervasius and Prothasius (which is the 19 of June) in the Church of the Preaching Fryers, render'd his Homage, and swore Fealty unto him for his Kingdom of Scotland, and the Isles thereto belonging, with the Ceremony of Kneeling (while the Words of the Homage were pronounced) after which he [h] kissed the King of Englands Cheek; all being performed in the Presence of several Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, and many other Barons of both Nations. Here King Bailiol acknowledged the King of England, as Superior Lord of Scotland, swearing to hold his Realm of him, his Heirs, and Lawfull Successours for ever. Then and there also he gave and Granted to King Edward, in Requi-

[f] Whitsunday fell on the 15 of May.

[g] Walsingh. hist. p. 115. & Holinshead p. 896. & Ashmole p. 645.

[h] Vid. Selden's Tit. Honor. p. 32.

tal

tal of his Expences and Labour in the Wars on his Behalf, Five whole Counties next adjoyning to the Borders of England; as Barwick, Roxborough, Peblis and Dumfres, with the Towns of Hadington and Gedeworth, and the Caſtles, and Fortreſſes of Selkirk, Etherick and Gedeworth: So that all and each of theſe, ſhould from thenceforth be wholly ſeparated from the Crown of Scotland, and annexed to the Crown of England for ever: And all this was confirmed by Oath, Scepter, Writings, and Authentick Subſcription. AN. DOM. 1334. An. Regni VIII.

Moreover King Bailiol by the Advice and Conſent of his Scotch Nobles, in Requital of King Edward's Coſt and Labour for his Sake, and to Nouriſh a continual Sence of his Gratitude; Granted for him and his Heirs Kings of Scotland, to King Edward and his Heirs Kings of England for ever: That [i] whenſoever he, the ſaid King of England, or any of his Heirs, ſhould have War either at Home or Abroad, the Scots at their own proper Coſts and Charges, ſhould aſſiſt him or them with 300 Horſe and a 1000 Foot, well Furniſhed for the War, which ſaid 1300 Men, the Scots were to pay for one whole Year: But if the King of England ſhould not within the ſaid Space end his War, then he, the ſaid King of England, ſhould take them into his Pay, as he doth his own Souldiers. [i] Fabian p.202.

But this Homage of the Bailiols was ſo highly ſtomached by the hardy and courageous Scots, that thô for the preſent they were neceſſitated to ſmother their Reſentments, and indeed could never be able to drive him wholly from his Kingdom (as upon the ſame account was done to his Father) he being conſtantly ſuſtained by the Engliſh: Yet what with their reſtleſs ſtrugglings for Liberty, and their frequent and obſtinate Rebellions, they ſo tired him out at the long run, that ſeeing himſelf alſo old and childleſs, he at laſt was fain to reſign the whole Kingdom, with all his Right and Title thereto, unto his Superior Lord King Edward of England; as hereafter will be ſhewn at large.

Yet at the ſame time [k] David Strabolgi Earl of Athol, Sr. Alexander Moubray and other Scotch Lords, that held Lands, Tenements and Fees in England, did their Homage to King Edward for the ſame. When alſo the Lord John [l] Dreux Duke of Bretagne in France, and Vicount Limouvicen, Son to Arthur once Duke of Bretagne, and Nephew to John the brother of Arthur, late Duke thereof (who died without Iſſue the 8 of February this Year) performed [m] his Homage to King Edward, on the 24 of June, at Newcaſtle, for the Earldom of Richmond in England. Which Earldom, thô our common Hiſtorians ſay, it was lately given to the Lord Robert of Artois, as I have ſhewn before, appears [n] yet to have been and continued in this Family of the Dreuxes ever ſince the year 1268, in the days of King Edward the Firſt, untill this time and ſeven years after, when upon the Death of this John de Dreux without Iſſue, King Edward gave this Earldom to his Fourth Son, [o] John Plantagenet, ſirnamed of Gaunt. Nevertheleſs, thô I know not how nor when, the Lord Robert of Artois had the Title of Earl of Richmond; but I never could find that he had any Creation thereto. But this John Dreux, as we intimated juſt now, died ſeven years after, in the 15 of this King, leaving no Iſſue behind him; thô he had been thrice Married: To whom John Earl of Montford his Half-brother, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Bretagne; which John was Father to John ſirnamed the Valiant, after his Fathers deceaſe Duke of Bretagne, of whoſe Wars and gallant Exploits this Hiſtory makes honourable mention.

[k] Knighton p. 2566. n. 50.

[l] Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 606.

[m] Walſing. Hypod. p. 113. n. 10 & Adam Murimouth.

[n] Catal. Honor. p. 603. ad p. 606

[o] Ibid. p. 610.

III. Immediately after this Enterview at Newcaſtle, the two Kings parted, the One toward Scotland, the Other for Windſor; whence King Edward ſpeedily iſſued out his Summons to the Lords both Spiritual and Temporal, commanding them to meet him at Nottingham on the 10th of that inſtant July; there with him to adviſe about Affairs concerning the Weal of the Realm. In this Council 'twas ordain'd, that a Parliament ſhould be call'd at Weſtminſter, to meet on the 24th of September, or the Exaltation of the Holy Croſs, the day bearing ſome proportion with the Deſign, which was to exalt the intereſt of Chriſtendom. At which time the Parliament being aſſembled, the Pious Young King did then declare, "That being thereto invited by his Kinſman the "Duke of Bretagne, who came in Embaſſy from France, he had formed a Reſolution "to march with his Coſen the French King and other Chriſtian Princes into the Holy "Land, to advance the Croſs of Chriſt againſt the Turks and Infidels. For, thô he "had not as yet anſwer'd King Philip directly, when he requeſted his Society in this Croiſade, becauſe he had been credibly informed that King Philip about this time had victuall'd and mann'd out ten great Ships, which he deſign'd for Scotland in purſuance of King Davids Quarrel; yet foraſmuch as thoſe Veſſels being miſerably ſhatter'd at Sea,

An. Dom. 1334. An. Regni VIII. Sea, were at laſt forced to return home without any effect; and becauſe now Scotland ſeem'd fully ſettled under the government of King Bailiol, all things appearing ſafe from thoſe Quarters, and quiet at home, himſelf alſo flouriſhing with Riches, Honour, Children, and full and vigorous Youth; he declares as we ſaid before, to this Parliament, his Reſolution to partake with Chriſtendom in this pious and honourable Enterpriſe. And thô he did not expreſly limit the time, ſince there can be no exact certainty before hand of ſuch weighty and ſlow-moving matters; yet then he appointed Dr. John Stratford, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as his Ambaſſador, to go to the Pope and to the French King, to conſider and agree with them, as of other things, ſo eſpecially about the Time, when the two Kings ſhould ſet forward to the Holy Land together.

But for all this, althô the Lord Robert of Artois could by no means prevail to divert the King from this Deſign, to that of claiming his Right in France, which he earneſtly labour'd to perſuade him to: Yet thrô ſome ſecret Ordinance of Providence it happen'd, even while this Parliament ſat, that by other means he was compell'd to take other Meaſures: Which were not indeed ſo happy for Europe, but nothing leſs glorious to this Engliſh Monarch.

IV. For King Bailiol being thus fully ſettled in his Kingdom of Scotland, and no way fearing that his Enemies had any Ability left, ſufficient in the leaſt to ſhake his Throne, began firſt himſelf to open a way to his own Ruine, by imprudently occaſioning Diſcord among his moſt powerfull Friends.

Many of his Followers had been long diſinherited of their Rights in Scotland, and ſeveral interchangable Marriages happening the while among them, it was utterly impoſſible to avoid, but that ſome Controverſies would happen in deciding matters now by adjuſting all things equally. And beſides all this; not a few, who had no great Concerns in that Kingdom before, could not yet but merit high Conſiderations from the Bailiol, in regard of their late Services. Among Others John Lord [p] Waren Earl of Surry was now by full conſent of Scotch and Engliſh Nobles, created Earl of Strathern inſtead of Maliſius, the late Earl, who had forfeited that his Honour by Rebellion: Thô afterwards [q] at the ſollicitation of Maliſius his Friends, great endeavours were uſed for Revocation of that Judgment and Forfeiture. This was one difficult Point, inſomuch that King Edward of England, whoſe clearer Judgment ſaw the ill Conſequences of theſe matters, had by his Letters to King Bailiol, deſired him that the Buſineſs might be publiquely diſcuſſed by his Nobles and Faithfull Peers of the Realm, and not by ſuch whoſe Fidelity might be called in queſtion; And he had alſo ſent his Letters to Henry Lord Beaumont, one of the chief of King Bailiols Council, requiring him to uſe his utmoſt intereſt for preventing any ſudden Determination in that buſineſs: Conſidering of what ill Example it would be, as alſo of peril to himſelf and others in the like caſe. But there aroſe another Controverſie higher than this by far; For whereas the Lord Henry Beaumont had already received what he claimed in Right of his [r] Lady Alice, one of the Coſens and Coheirs of the Lord John Cumin, Earl of Buquhan, as was ſhew'd before; now it ſeems her Uncle, Sr. Alexander Moubray a potent Man, lately brought over to the Bailiol, claim'd a Purparty of her Lands from the ſaid Lord Beaumont. The Cauſe was debated in Parliament with great heat, the Lord Richard [s] Talbot and David Strabolgi, Earl of Athol, taking part with the Lord Beaumont their Kinſman; and Others, as their Opinions, Humour or Intereſt lead them, with the Lord Moubray. King Bailiol thinking himſelf ſure of his Old Friends, and hoping now for ever to bind faſt unto him this late-reconciled Enemy, too raſhly adjudged the matter in behalf of Sr. Alexander Moubray.

As it was too ſoon done, it was too late repented of; for the other Party was immediately ſo exaſperated, that in the very Parliament Houſe they could ſcarce forbear flying to extremities: But the Parliament hereupon being preſently adjourn'd, the Quarrel ſeem'd to ſleep for a while. Yet however King Bailiol (who by the greatneſs of the Smoak perceived what a dangerous Fire was kindled, doubting the worſt, made towards Barwick in all haſt for his better ſecurity, with Sr. Alexander Moubray in his company. The Lord [t] Richard Talbot in deep Indignation, that his Adviſe was ſo little reckon'd of, haſted with ſome few of his Friends and Attendants for England; but being ſurpriſed in the way by a ſtrong Party of the Bruceans (who knew well how to make their advantage of theſe private Diſſentions) after he had loſt ſix men of Arms, and many more Foot, was himſelf taken Priſoner, and ſo carried to the ſtrong Caſtle of Dunbriton. The Lord Beaumont in as great diſpleaſure hies him to the Caſtle of Dundarg in Bucquhan, [u] of his Wifes Inheritance, which having well victual'd and

[p] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 81.

[q] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 51.

[r] Hector p. 316. 60. & Buchan. l. 9. p. 290.

[s] The One was Lord Beaumont's Wife's Siſter's Huſband, the other Siſter's Son. vid. l. 1. c. 6. §. 9.

[t] Hector fol. 316 60. & Buchan p. 290.

[u] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 51.

and fortifi'd, he not only by continual Excurſions ſubjected to himſelf the Lands late in Controverſie, but all the Country round about him. David Strabolgi goes to Athol with the ſame Diſcontent, and there makes great Proviſion for his own Defence. AN. DOM. 1334. An. Regni VIII.

Hereupon King Bailiol too late ſeeing his Error, and doubting not a little, what all this might come to, as alſo fearing, leſt his only Protector the King of England might take theſe Proceedings in evil part, by an action as weak as the other was raſh, revokes now his own former Sentence, grants the Lord Beaumont the Lands in conteſt, appeaſes the Earl of Athol with many and large Poſſeſſions belonging to the young Lord Robert Stuart (who afterward was King) and promiſed them both to ranſom their Kinſman the Lord Talbot at any rate whatſoever. Having thus with much adoe reconciled thoſe great Perſonages to himſelf (thô Sr. Alexander Moubray was again loſt thereby) he reſolves if poſſible, to be beforehand with his Enemies, whom he knew to make huge Preparations againſt him; being the more animated by the late Acceſſion of Sr. Alexander Moubray: Suddenly therefore he comes before Reinfrew, a City in the Province of Cunningham near the River Cluyd, which he as ſuddenly reduces; and having ſettled Matters there, paſſes over into the Iſland of Bute, where Sr. Alan Lile Sheriff of the Iſland, preſenting him with the Keys of Rothſay, had the Caſtle and whole Iſle committed to his Charge again. After this he took the Caſtle of [x] Dunnow in Kyle, whereby he terrified the greater part of his Enemies into a Compliance, having ſeized on all the Lands belonging to the [y] Stuarts, and lying in the Iſlands of Bute and Arran, about Reinfrew, Cunningham and Kyle, beſides what belonged to many others, who like that Noble Family, ſcorn'd to ſave their Lands by forfeiting their Loyalty. Many of his own Friends he now rewards moſt liberally with Lands and Poſſeſſions taken from his Adverſaries, as well of his own Natural Bounty (for he was a Prince of great Worth and Gallantry) as with Deſign to bind them faſt to his Intereſt.

[x] Buchan. l. 9. p. 291.

[y] Id. p. 292.

At the ſame time he [z] made a narrow ſearch after the young Lord Robert Stuart aforeſaid, that by his Death he might ſecure himſelf on that ſide; as who was Nephew to the late King Robert Bruce, (being eldeſt Son to King David's eldeſt Siſter) and had even in the days of King Robert been ſworn and own'd, as the next Heir Apparent to his Son David. For as for David who was then an Exile in France, he thought himſelf pretty ſecure of him, and now look'd upon this innocent young Lord, who was ſo powerfull in Wealth and Allies, and had the Right to the Crown of Scotland next after David, as a moſt Dangerous Perſon. But God had order'd it otherwiſe, and the Hopefull Prince Robert, being then ſcarce fifteen years of Age (thrô the ſecret Goodneſs of Providence, which deſtin'd mighty things for him and his Poſterity) with the great care and foreſight of his Friends, eſpecially of Sr. William Heriot and Sr. John Gilbert, was privatly by water conveyed to the impregnable Caſtle of Dunbritton, and there earneſtly recommended to the Care of that Loyal and valiant Lord Malcome Flemein, who was ſtill Governour of that Place.

[z] Hector l. 19. fol. 317. &c.

In the mean time the Lord Andrew Murray (Viceroy of Scotland for King David) being lately redeem'd from England with a good round Summ of Money, beſtirs himſelf vigorouſly for his diſtreſſed Country, and now at laſt having joyn'd Sr. Alexander Moubray (who thrô diſpleaſure had lately revolted from King Bailiol) he ſtrictly beſieges the Lord Henry Beaumont in his ſtrong Caſtle of Dundarg.

During this Siege, 'tis [a] ſaid that King Edward of England himſelf upon news thereof, with a great Power entred Scotland and relieved him. The time indeed of this Siege may well enough agree with King Edwards Winter Expedition; for thô upon good reaſon I have laid the foregoing Story together, yet the whole Procedure took up more than the ſpace of twelve Months: but yet in this matter the Scotch Writers are more agreeable to Truth; who ſay, that he was forced to yield himſelf on certain Conditions: Thô ſurely One was not, as [b] Leland ſays, that he might have liberty to retire freely into England, nor was he ſuffer'd, as Hector ſays, to depart upon parole, only giving his Oath never to return into Scotland any more, unleſs in King Davids Quarrel; but he was fain to pay a good Ranſom for his Liberty, as it evidently appears from the [c] Records, which plainly ſhew, that when about a Year after King Edward in requital of his Services, acquitted him of all ſuch Debts as were due from him to the Exchequer, he eſpecially forgave him among the reſt four hundred Marks formerly lent unto him at York, towards the Payment of his Ranſom, upon this his Impriſonment in Scotland.

[a] Walſingh. hypod. p. 113. n. 24

[b] Leland Collect. 1 Vol. p. 797.

[c] Pat. 9. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 22. & Sr. Will. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 51.

V. The News of the foreſaid Siege, and of the taking of the Lord Richard Talbot, was [d] brought to King Edward, during the laſt Seſſion of Parliament at Weſtminſter, which as we ſhew'd, began about the 24 of September this Year: Whereupon the late late Reſolution for the Holy Land was Suſpended, and his Majeſty thought it neceſſary in Perſon to undertake one Expedition more into Scotland, and not to deſiſt, till he had wholly ſubdu'd that untractable People, and cut off from them all poſſibility of future Rebellion. He was alſo extreamly exaſperated [c] at the News, that David Strabolgi Earl of Athol, had Revolted to the Bruceans; the truth of which Buſineſs was, That being, as we ſhew'd before, by large Gifts and Promiſes, as well as by the Revocation of Judgement in the Lord Beaumont's behalf, Reconciled again to King Bailiol, he was [f] ſuddenly one time ſurpriſed by the Bruceans, who then began to beſtir themſelves apace, by whom (thô for the preſent he eſcap'd them) he was ſo cloſely Hunted and Purſued on all Hands, that at laſt, after he had with much Difficulty ſuſtain'd himſelf with Roots and Water for a while, he was compell'd to yield himſelf at Louquhabre on this ſide the High Mountains of Ardmanoth: At which time, to ſave his Life, he was fain to take an Oath to be thenceforth true to King David, and his Adherents.

[d] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 116. & Hypod. p. 113. n. 14

An. Dom. 1334. An. Regni VIII.

[c] Walſing. Hypod. p. 113. n. 22.

[f] Hector fol. 318 n. 50. &c.

But thus the Report came to England, that he had voluntarily quitted ſides, and turn'd to the Rebels, as the Bruceans were then called; whereat King Edward was ſo Highly incenſed at this his Treaſon, as he thought it, that immediately he [g] gave Command to the Sheriff of Kent to ſeiſe all his Lands; and he himſelf made great Preparation, as well to chaſtiſe his open Enemies, as his treacherous Friends. Towards which chargeable Enterpriſe he had in the foreſaid Parliament a [h] Grant of one Tenth from the Clergy, of all Cities and Burroughs a Tenth, and the Fifteenth of their Temporals.

[g] Rot. Fin. 8. Ed. 3. m. 2. Dugd. 1. Vol. p. 96.

[h] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 116. n. 20.

And now preſently after; to wit, about the [i] Middle of November, King Edward came in the Head of a Gallant Army to Newcaſtle, to the Aſſiſtance of King Bailiol; with which Forces in the Winter time, he entred Scotland by Galloway, and there without any conſiderable Oppoſition, he paſſed as Conquerour, farther than ever his Victorious Grandfather Edward the Firſt had penetrated, even beyond Caithnes and the Mountains, where the High-landers, and Wild-Scots inhabit, where the Extremities of Scotland are waſh'd by the Deucaledon Sea, above two hundred Miles from Barwick. But for the Particulars of this War, as they rather belong to the beginning of the next year, ſo thither I ſhall refer them, that they may make the better impreſſion on the Readers memory, being methodically ranged together.

[i] Walſingh. hiſt. ibid. n. 5.

But we muſt be juſt to the Aſhes of a Noble Young Lord, who unhappily was taken away about the cloſe of this Year: It was [k] Sr. Edward Bohun, a Right Valiant and Worthy Gentleman, being Brother to John Earl of Eſſex, and the Kings Coſin, who as he was driving a great Booty of Cattle over the Solway Fryth in the Marches of Scotland, was loſt in this manner. For cauſing his Guide to ride ſoftly before him thrô the water; he preſently ſaw, that what with the ſlipperineſs of the ſtone whereon they were, and the ſtrength of the Current, thrô which they paſſed, his ſervant together with his Horſe was overwhelmed in the Water: When Sr. Edward out of meer Compaſſion, indeavouring to recover the Man, chanced in like manner to looſe his right Ground, and ſo being oppreſt with the weight of his Armour, periſhed unfortunately in the Channel, [l] leaving no Iſſue behind him.

[k] Knighton p. 2565. n. 33. Stow p. 232. & Walſingh. hiſt. p. 116. n. 38.

[l] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 184.

CHAPTER the Eighth.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Philip of France takes upon him the Croiſade: And invites the King of England to joyn with him. II. King Edward ſends his Ambaſſadors with Overtures to Philip, who raſhly rejects them; with an exact Inquiry into the firſt Seeds of the French War. III. The Lord Hugh Courtney created Earl of Devonſhire: A Parliament at York. IV. The Names of the Chief Captains which attended King Edward in the Scotch Expedition, together with the Expedition it ſelf. The weakneſs of Scotland, and the occaſion of their Non-oppoſition at this time. V. Some few Efforts of the Scots againſt their Invaders, with the taking of the Earl of Namur on the one ſide, and of the Earl of Murray on the other: And Prince John Earl of Cornwall's wall's Succeſs.. VI. King Philip ſends again to King Edward, with King Edward's Anſwer. VII. The Scotch Nobility ſubmit to King Edward, with the Articles of their Submiſſion. VIII. King Philip makes this their Agreement fruſtrate: King Edward's care to prevent a Revolt. IX. David Strabolgi Earl of Athol, upon his Pardon, appearing an Enemy to the Scots, is by them ſlain, with the manner of his Death. X. Two Prodigies, with the Death of two Great Barons of England.

I. WHile things paſſed thus in England and Scotland, the French [a] King was very hot in his long-deſign'd Preparations for the Holy War: Of his Progreſs wherein, with his Motives to it, and the occaſion of its Interruption, we ſhall in this place take leave to ſpeak a little more fully once for all. AN. DOM. 1335. An. Regni IX.

[a] Froiſ. c. 27. fol. 16. &c.

In the Beginning of this Year King Philip of France, together with John King of Bohemia, Son to Henry of Luxemburgh, late Emperour of Germany, the King of Navarre, and many Great Princes, Dukes, and Barons in his Company, made a Royal Progreſs to Avignion, the Chief City of Venaiſſin in Provence, where at that time the Seat of the Roman Biſhops was, to viſit Pope Benedict the XII, partly out of Devotion, and to [b] pay his Vows for the late Recovery of his Eldeſt Son John Duke of Normandy from a dangerous Sickneſs, and partly to procure his Aſſiſtance toward the Holy War, as well as out of Curioſity, and to Congratulate his Election to that Supream Eminence of Spiritual Dignity: For he had been but newly Elected and Conſecrated Pope in the Place of John the XXII, who departed this Life on the Fourth of December, the Year foregoing: Of whom one Word by the by. This Pope John had all along been an Implacable Enemy to Lewis of Bavaria the Emperour, whom he Excommunicated, and not only ſought to Domineer over him, but the Greek Church and Empire too. But as the Emperour of Germany ſtood up ſtiffly againſt his Pretences, and once ſet up an Antipope Nicolas to ballance him; ſo from Greece he received ſuch a Laconic Reply, which well ſhew'd how little they valued his Authority; and that was this--- [c] "Thine uncontroulable Power we firmly believe; "Thine Exceſſive Arrogance we cannot endure, thy boundleſs Avarice we are unable to "ſatisfie: The Devil be with Thee; for God is with Us. And certainly he was ſo bent upon amaſſing up Money, that he is ſaid to have left behind him at his Death [d] 1250000 Pieces of Gold, or as Ciaconius hath it, 24 Millions of Gold, whereof 17 were coyned, the other 7 Or and rude Ingots; thô others make the whole to amount to 25 Millions in all; the manner how he Collected it, being confeſſed by the foreſaid Author of the Lives and Actions of the Popes and Cardinals: An incredible Summ, and far beyond what any of his Predeceſſors could ſhew. So true was the Proverb vulgarly Current in thoſe Days,

[b] Fabian p. 267.

[c] Rob. Barnes & Joh. Baleus de Rom. Pontif. l. 6. p. 375. & Cluverii Epit. Hiſt. p. 570. ex Græcis, &c.

[d] Dinothi Adverſ. hiſt. p. 377 & Ciacon. & Victorell. in Vitt. Pontificum 1 Vol. p. 872. & Addit. ad Abbat. Urſperg. f. 376. Mezeray ad an. 1334.

[e] He, that the Roman Flock doth keep,
Without the Wooll won't feed the Sheep.

[e] Curia Romana non paſcit Ovem ſine lanâ. vid. Cluver. Epit. Hiſt. p. 569.

thô Odoricus * Rainaldus ſays, he intended all this for the Holy War.

But whatever this his Avarice brought him to after Death, 'tis certain, his Succeſſor Pope Benedict made no ill uſe of that ill gotten Treaſure; but kept great Hoſpitality, and beſtowed much in Magnificent Buildings, and Deſign'd many Great and Worthy Matters indeed; ſome whereof took no Effect, thô a ſpecial Occaſion ſeem'd to be offer'd now at this time by the coming of the King of France, and thoſe with him.

* An. 1330. n. 40.

Upon their firſt Arrival, his Holineſs, and the College of Cardinals Received them with much Honour and Reſpect, appointing for them all according to their Quality, convenient Lodgings at Villeneufe without the Town: After whom within few days came thither [f] Alphonſo King of Aragon alſo, as well on the ſame Deſign with the others, as to require the Popes Aſſiſtance in the adjuſting of Matters between James King of Majorica, and himſelf, relating to Sardinia and Corſica; for * which (Received on the Conditions which Pope Boniface the VIII had impoſed) he had by his Ambaſſadors done Homage to Pope Innocent, Predeceſſor to this Benedict. While theſe Great Perſonages remain'd thus at Avignion, Highly Honoured and Entertain'd by the Court of Rome; tidings came, that in Granada, Pruſſia, Paleſtine, Armenia, and Greece, the Enemies of God became ſtrong; that the Africans and Saracens of Granada infeſted Spain; the Turks Grecia; the Egyptians and Babylonians Armenia; that Orchanes eſpecially, and his Captains had Wonderfull Succeſs againſt Chriſtianity; anity; that well nigh all the Realm of [g] Rascia was overrun by the Infidels; and that the King thereof (being a Christian) was by them most Barbarously Martyr'd, and put to Death.

[f] Victorellus James 1 Vol. p. 871. ſed Pedro apud Froiſ. Alphonſo Rainald ad Baron. 1335. n. 39. recte.

* Victorellus ibid.

An. Dom. 1335. An. Regni IX.

These News greatly Afflicted the Hearts of all those Christian Worthies; insomuch, that the Pope himself on the Good-Fryday following, Preached before the Kings and Princes a Passion-Sermon with much Devotion: "Wherein, after he had most feelingly set forth the Wonderfull Condescention of our Lord Jesus for our Sakes, "the unspeakable Extremity of the Pains he underwent for us, and at last, even Death "it self, a most bitter and Ignominious Death, the Memory whereof was continually "with most sorrowfull Compunction Recorded by all good Christians, in especial Man-"ner on that day; after this and more to the like Purpose, he earnestly Exhorted "his Royal Auditory, in Pious Gratitude for all these transcending Benefits, to ad-"venture now something for their Gracious Lord and Masters Sake; with Christian Cou-"rage to undertake his Battles, and with the Hazard of their Frail Bodies to op-"pose the Enemies of his most Holy Religion, the Blasphemers of his Great and "Glorious Name. To all which he added, the Examples of many Christian Princes, "their Predecessors; the Everlasting Renown, that would recommend their Names "to Posterity; the Great Rewards they would purchase thereby, as here an Absolution "from all their Sins, and in the end an Eternal Weight of Glory.

[g] Rascia vulgò le Rasce pars Regni Hungariæ latè sumpti, &c.

All the Princes, but especially King Philip, were sensibly moved by this Pious and Eloquent Harangue, which was insinuated with very Pathetical Applications, exaggerated with many Figurative Expressions, Illustrated with much Copiousness of Language, and Variety of Historical Instances; but above all, deliver'd with so much Zeal, and shining with so much Truth and Sincerity, that it easily made way into the very Souls of those, who came before with a good Affection to the Cause: So that what thrô Pity joyn'd with Royal Courage, what thrô the Hopes of worldly Honour and Eternal Felicity, what thrô the Confidence of sufficient Assistance, and the Feasability of the Matter, first of all King Philip Bravely professes himself a Champion of Christ, and Vows to take upon him the Croisade: Especially, having consider'd in his Mind, that long since this same Matter had busied his Thoughts; thô he could never absolutely fix upon it till now, for want of sufficient Motives and Leisure from other Affairs.

His Holiness highly Applauded this Heroick Resolution, and besides, a Liberal Assistance in Money promised to all the Undertakers, a Plenary Indulgence, and full Absolution ab omni pœnâ & culpâ: From which Encouragement, and the Example of so great a King, were moved to the same Resolution, John K. of Bohemia, Philip King of Navarre, Alphonso King of Aragon, and many Dukes, Earls, Barons, Knights, and Esquires, with four Cardinals, [h] Talayrand Earl of Perigort, Cardinal of St. Peter ad Vincula titulo Eudoxiæ Prior of the Priests; Neapoleo, Cardinal of St. Adrian, Prior of the Deacons; Gauceline Bishop, Cardinal of Alby, a City of Gallia Narbonensis, and Bertrand de le Puy Bishop of [i] Ostia, which latter by right is Senior Cardinal, and is by his Place to Crown the Popes of Rome.

[h] Victorell. p. 880.

[i] Lloyds Poet. Diction. tit. Ostia.

Presently hereupon was the Croisade published thrô all Christendom; whereat, as many as were truly Pious or Valiant, rejoyced Highly; those supposing Religion would be much Advanced thereby, and these hoping to purchase Immortal Honour by their Deeds of Arms and Noble Chevalry. The whole business therefore being thus thoroughly agreed on at Avignion, the Kings and the other Grandees having taken their leave, went their ways to provide for this Weighty Affair. King [k] Philip went along with the King of Aragon as far as Monpellier; at which place he tarried a while, till he had made a full Reconciliation and Peace between the King of Aragon, and the King of Majorica. After which Christian Work he returned by small journeys, but with great Expence into France, visiting his Towns and Castles as he went thrô Auvergne, Berry, Beausse and Gastinois, till he came to Paris; where he was Received with Great Triumphs and Feastings. At that time the Kingdom of France was very Puissant, and Flourishing with Nobility, Gentry, and good Men of War; as also with much Plenty and Riches, the Consequences of a long Peace and Prosperity.

[k] Froiss. ibid.

But besides this, the Pope gave that King a Large Assistance in Money, and promised much more; but especially, he Granted him a [l] Tenth of his own Subjects for [m] six Years to come towards this intended War: Such was the Policy of Popes, whereby they came by Degrees to so great Authority over Princes; for first they granted things gratefull to them; Kings being willing to connive at these their Encroachments, which were so profitable to themselves; and afterwards they pleaded prescri-

[l] Knighton p. 2567.

[m] Victorell. 1 Vol. p. 865. §. c.

prescription to dispose Matters, as well against, as with, the Pleasure of Christian Monarchs. King Philip indeed gave his Oath to his Holiness, not to put these sexennial Tythes to any other use, except that of this Holy War: Thô afterwards he either forgot, or dispensed with this Oath, being in a manner necessitated to break it, when King Edward of England, like a sudden Inundation rushing upon him, drove all his High Designs and Vast Preparations another way. AN. DOM. 1335. An. Regni IX.

I will not here dissemble, that this first Mention of the Croisade, and what else I have now related, is (nor without good Reason and Authority) placed more forward by [n] four Years: But be sure the great Heat of all was about this time, and I could not find a more proper place to mention the whole in, than this, upon several accounts; wherefore also, I believe Froissard chose to fix it hereabouts, naming the Pope, who sat then, Benedict, who notwithstanding entred not his Papacy till this Year.

[n] Victorell. p. 865. ibid.

King Philip, who was look'd upon as the Chief General of this War, and was so [o] stiled by the Pope, made the greatest Preparation, together with his Friends and Allies, that ever yet had been seen, either in the Days of Godfrey of Bouloigne, or any other time before or after. For in the Havens of Marseilles, of Aquæ Mortuæ, of Narbon and Mompellier, were provided as many Vessels, Ships, Carricks and Gallies as would suffice for 60000 fighting Men, with all their Horse, Arms, and other Warlike Furniture, and Provision for 3 Years: And besides, [p] being assisted with the Popes Legats, he had so wrought with Senior Philippo Belegno, Blasio Zeno and Marino Morisini the Venetian Ambassadors, that this Agreement was made; the Pope and the French King setting out 20000 Horse and 50000 Foot to the War, that the Venetians should furnish them with a Fleet of an hundred Sail, whereof there should be Gallies man'd with 4000 Souldiers; the Ships of burthen being fraught with Provision, Engines and other things necessary for War; as Bisquet, Wine, Fresh-water, Powder'd Flesh, Salt-Fish and the like. Moreover King Philip sent his Ambassadors to Charles King of Hungary, requesting him to open the Passages of his Country for these Holy Pilgrims; who receiving the News gladly, sent word of his Readiness to comply in all things with his Pleasure. He sent also to Hugo the noble and valiant King of Cyprus, to his constant Friend Robert King of Sicily, and to the Genoans also to joyn the Venetians at Sea; all who assured him, they would gladly concurr with so great a Prince in so good an Enterprise. The Grand Prior of France also was sent to the Isle of Rhodes, to agree with the Knights of St. John to prepare things necessary in those Quarters: The Rhodians lightly consented on certain Conditions to supply the Army from the fruitfull Isle of Candy (anciently called Crete) and at that time under the Dominion of the Venetians) who had agreed with them of Rhodes to that purpose.

[o] Knighton p. 2567. & Victorell. 1 Vol. p. 865.

[p] Pantaleon's Hist. Rer. Gest. Johannitarum, Rhodior. & c. l. 4. p. 100. & Odoric. Raynald. ad Baron. An°. 1333. §. 11.

Thus in [q] a manner all Christendom with one consent embrac'd this Holy War; so that more than 300000 Men were ready to take the Cross upon them in this famous Expedition: The Venetians had [r] already sent forth their Admiral Peter Zeno, who being joyn'd with the Fleet of Rhodes by a wonderfull course of Victory, chasing and destroying the Barbarians far and near, secur'd all the Sea-coast which respects Syria, about the Isles of Rhodes and Cyprus, from the injuries of the Saracens and Tartars. King Philips Navy also was ready in Provence, and he had view'd it, and made his Son John, then about fourteen Years of Age, his Lieutenant or Regent during his absence, having commanded all his Lords to swear Obedience to him. Nor content with all these vast Preparations, he sent to our English Edward, desiring also his Company in this his most Christian Undertaking; but he being otherwise busied about his Wars in Scotland, and not a little displeased, that King Philip had interested himself in that his Quarrel, made as then no direct Answer to his Embassy, so that Philip perceiving he was not well satisfied in his mind, and doubting to leave so Powerfull a Prince behind him in Discontent, thought fit before he set forward to search his Mind more narrowly; and thereupon by the Lord [s] Ralph Earl of Ewe, and High Constable of France, he repeated his Embassy unto him. These Ambassadors with some difficulty obtain'd an Audience; thô little more was concluded on with them, than that King Edward promised very speedily to send his Ambassadors over into France, to confer about certain Points then in difference between the two Kings: For said [t] he, "The seat of this "Holy War is not so far off, as King Philip pretends; it lies not in Palestine, I am "well assured, but in Aquitain, which evidently appears by his Offers that way alrea-"dy: That as yet (he said) he could not consent to agree with him, who had not "agreed with his own self; but had forgot, if not broken, the Promise made at Amiens, "about the Restoring of what he had seized on in Gascoigne: That when once these "Matters should be fully adjusted, he would be rather more ready to undertake that Ex-

[q] Froiss. ibid.

[r] Pantaleon l. 4. p. 100.

[s] Gaguin. p. 133. & Fabian p. 199

[t] Pantaleon l. 4. p. 100. & Gaguin. l. 8. p. 133.

An. Dom. 1335. An. Regni IX.

"pedition than their Master. With this short Answer he dismissed them, promising to follow them with his Ambassadors.

II. Accordingly soon after there were [u] sent Dr. John Stratford Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Richard Bury Bishop of Durham, William Lord Montagu, and the Lord Geoffry Scroop of Masham; who being come to Paris, could not be admitted to King Philips Presence, in requital, as it should seem, of King Edward's Reservedness lately shewn to his Ambassadors; or perhaps to make them surmise, that he feared not War much, who was so little carefull of making Peace: But when the English Lords had roundly told the Earl [x] of Ewe, the Marshall of Troyes, and Peter Roger Archbishop of Roüen, how highly they resented this coldness of the King's, and withall intimated, how reasonable their Masters Requests would be, they were forthwith order'd to be brought before him, well received and graciously heard: So that immediately the Matter about which they came, was propounded to be taken in hand and throughly discussed.

[u] Gaguin. ibid. & Pantaleon. ibid. & Holinshead p. 897. & Stow p. 232. & Odoric. Raynald. An° Bened. XII 3. §. 42.

[x] Gaguin. l. 8. p. 134.

King Edward's Demands from the Crown of France were only these,

1. That perfect Peace and Amity between the two Kings should be inviolably maintained to both their Powers.
2. That all Towns and Castles, heretofore taken from the English in Gascoigne by the Lord Charles of Valois, Father to King Philip, should be entirely restored to the King of England.
3. That the said King Philip should swear never to give any Aid or Succour to the Scots against the King of England.

All which being fully Ratified and Granted, King Edward would be ready to accompany the French King to the Holy Land, in order to fight against the Common Enemies of Christendom.

In the discussing and debating of these Articles, the King of France was so zealously bent on the Holy War; and such diligence was used by his Council, not one at that time daring on the suddain to contradict, that in the end a full Conclusion of the Peace on the Terms proposed was agreed on, and Matters proceeded so far, that Proclamation was order'd to be made thereof the next day in Paris and the Towns thereabouts. But whether by the Fickleness and Inconstancy of King Philip, or the Advice of some Scotch Pensioner in his Council, or a sense of Generosity, and a Commiseration of King David's exil'd Condition; or by some secret Impulse of Heaven for the sins of Christendom and the punishment of France, scarce were the English Ambassadors return'd to their Lodgings, but they were remanded back again to Court, where presently new Scruples were started, which chiefly concern'd the third Article: For tho as to the second Demand, King Philip stood stifly against it at first, unless all the Charges his Father Charles had been at in those Gascoigne Wars, were repaid him by the King of England; yet that (when 'twas made appear, that the War it self was unjust) he easily remitted: But now as to the third Article, King Philip answer'd peremptorily:

"That he could not either in Honour or Equity, desert his Friends the Scots in this "their Oppression; they being his Confederates and just Men: Nor ought he to esteem "King Edward worthy of his Friendship, while he continued War against them. That "himself was, as all Kings ought to be, a Friend to Justice, from which he should ne"ver swerve, either for Affinity or Advantage, or any other Consideration whatsoever; "but that he would to his Power vex and molest all the Disturbers of the Peace of "Scotland. For said he, there will never be perfect Peace and Quietness in Christen"dom, till the King of France shall stand as Umpire between the Realms of Scotland "and England. And therefore he briefly told the Ambassadors, that having better "consider'd of it, he was resolv'd to conclude nothing as to Peace with England, un"less King David also might be comprehended in the same League; so as that he "might be restored to his Kingdom, and the Bailiol wholly excluded.

Surely, how gallant soever this Speech might seem, 'twas neither modest enough, prudent nor seasonable: For had he temporised so far, as thereby to have obtain'd King Edward's Company in this Holy War, the Bailiol might easily have been ruin'd by King David's Interest alone: And it was more likely, that then by fair means & modest Reasonings King Edward might have been wrought upon by a personal Conference, than by this rash and imperious way of Prescribing: For from these peremptory Words the Breach became so wide, that without bloody Wars Peace was not likely to be obtained. Not to say, that if King Philip did really intend this Holy Expedition, he was not very wise to talk so high in such a juncture; and if he did not intend it, he was scarce sincere enough in his pious Resolutions.

However the English Ambassadors replied, their Commission extended not so far, as as to reach to King David, or to make any Conceſſion to his Advantage; ſo the whole matter was broke off and the Breach made wider than before. AN. DOM. 1335. An. Regni IX.

Now the moſt exact Account of the firſt Original of theſe Unkindneſſes between the two Kings of England and France, which is by no Hiſtorian over-exactly handled, is to be found only in the publique Records of the Peace ten years before this, made between King Edwards Father and Charles the Fair of France, a Copy whereof was then ſent to Pope John XXII. and afterwards from the Library of Avignon brought into the Vatican, and being ſeen and diligently weighed by my [y] Author, becauſe from the Breach thereof, the Wars which exercis'd England and France for ſo many Ages, ſeem'd to take their firſt Occaſion, yield us theſe Obſervations. In the Year 1325. which was the 19 of King Edward the II. of England, by the diligence of Qu. Iſabella, with her Brother K. Charles of France, together with the aſſiſtance of William Archbiſhop of Vienna, and Hugh Biſhop of Orange, Nuntio's from the Apoſtolick Seat, a Peace was made between the two Realms on this Condition, [z] ſays Villani, that what had been won by Charles of Valois in Aquitain, ſhould remain wholly to the French; but in the publique [a] Records ſigned with the Seal of the King of France, that Condition is not expreſſed, but very cunningly cover'd with obſcure and deceitfull Circumlocutions, which when the Inventers of theſe politick Fetches contrived, then they ſcattered the Seeds of a moſt inveterate Enmity between the two Realms to the infinite Dammage of France: When the French wreſted the Articles to their own purpoſe, and the Engliſh exclaim'd, that they were falſly and treacherouſly deceived; for it was added, that as to thoſe Lands the French King ſhould determin according to Law, the King of England demanding his Right: And ſo the Quarrel was not ended. But now this Condition in that Treaty is evident, that the French King ſhould ſet over Aquitaine to adminiſter juſtice a Perſon of integrity, and one not ſuſpected by the King of England, and ſo the Armies on both ſides ſhould be disbanded, and the King of England on the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin ſhould meet the French King at Beauvais, and do Homage to the Crown of France for Aquitain, which was then to be reſtored entirely unto him, the foreſaid Lieutenant being called back. And this Agreement at the inſtance of Queen Iſabell and the Pope, was by conſent of the Ambaſſadors of both Parties, unanimouſly eſtabliſhed in the Year aforeſaid, as appears by the Letters of both the Kings. But now when afterwards King Edward II had conferr'd on his Son the Dukedom of Aquitain, and a while after by Civil Tumults miſcarried, and Edward the III ſucceeded in the Throne, the former Wars began to bleed freſh again, our Young Edward being obliged to ſeek that Right by Arms, which by Law he could not obtain; but leſt the Laws of Nature and the Peace of Chriſtendom ſhould be violated, theſe Diſcords at the inſtance of the Pope, who ſent William Archbiſhop of Vienna, and John Grandeſſon Biſhop of Exceter for that purpoſe, were compoſed on this Condition; That as ſoon as might be, what had been taken by the Engliſh in Aquitain, contrary to the Form of the foreſaid Agreement ſhould be reſtored; and on the other ſide, that what had been taken by the French ſhould be rendred to King Edward, the ſaid King Edward being to pay 50000*l.* Sterling towards the reparation of Dammages, and thoſe Gaſcoigners, who as Ringleaders of the foreſaid Diſſentions, had been by the French King adjudged to death, for King Edwards ſake were only now baniſhed. At this time alſo the Articles of the former League were reſtored, and publique Inſtruments thereof made at Marmanda the October following, and on the 20 of February in the beginning of the next Year were ſigned at Paris with the Kings Seal. But this Peace was intricate and doubtfull, becauſe King Charles died before he had reſtored the Lands to his Nephew King Edward, which had been taken away in Aquitain. But hereupon Philip of Valois, who had been preſent at the Ratification of the Peace, being raiſed to the Throne, neither would reſtore thoſe Places won by his Father, nor could by the Pope's perſwaſions be moved thereto; and ſo dealing more hardly, and too unkindly as well as unjuſtly with King Edward, never remitted any thing of his Haughtineſs, till he had obliged the Young Prince to begin a War in the behalf of his Right, which had almoſt brought the Kingdom of France to utter deſtruction. But of this hereafter.

[y] Odoricus Raynaldus Continuat. ad Baronium tom. XV. Ad an. Chriſti 1327. §. 44.

[z] L. 9. c. 314.

[a] Extant in Arch. Vatican. ex Avenion. delat. ſign. n. 10. in Chart. Pergam.

III. This mean while King Edward doubting what might happen, reſolv'd to be beforehand with his Enemies, and as he queſtion'd not, but that a War would ſoon be open'd from France, ſo he wiſely deſign'd by a full Conqueſt to ſtop it the other way from Scotland. Soon after Chriſtmas therefore he went to Newcaſtle, that he might bear an eſpecial Eye to the Affairs of that Realm. From whence [b] he made the Lord Hugh Courtney, a valiant old Gentleman, Earl of Devonſhire upon this occaſion. This

[b] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 638.

Hugh

An. Dom. 1335. An. Regni IX.

Hugh had for many years, after the Death of Isabell de Fortibus, Countess of Albemarl and Devonshire, quietly possessed the Lands and Fees of the Earldom of Devonshire, as being [c] sole Heir to the foresaid Countess, thô he had neither the Title nor Investiture of an Earl: But at length there arose great difference between him and the Kings Officers of the Exchequer, concerning the payment of the third Penny, which, as they said, he being no Earl ought not to receive; and thereupon the Sheriffs of Devonshire declin'd to pay it him any longer. Wherefore he wrote his letters Supplicatory to the King being then in Scotland, who immediately directed his Precept to the Lord Treasurer and Barons of his Exchequer, requiring them to make search into the Records and Memorials remaining in their Hands, and to certifie him thereof: Which being done, the King having well consider'd the Matter and the Merit of the Man, return'd this Answer. Rex Dilecto & Fideli suo Hugoni de Courtney seniori, Comiti Devon. Salutem, &c. [d] "The King to his Well-beloved and Trusty Hugh Courtney "senior, Earl of Devonshire, greeting. Whereas you, as appeareth by your Petition "exhibited to Us and our Council, have for some time been sued for the Annual Pay- "ment of xviii l. vi s. viii d. of the yearly Fee of the Earldom of Devonshire, which "Isabell de Fortibus, late Countess of Devonshire (whose Heir you are) and the Pre- "decessors of her the said Countess and yours, Earls of Devonshire, yearly received "at the hands of the Sheriffs of that County, that were for the time being, and which "you likewise after the Death of the said Countess, as her Heir, received for some "time. And whereas the said Summ hath since been from you detained, because you "have not used the Name and Title of an Earl, as by the Certificate of our Treasu- "rer and of the Barons of our Exchequer, by our Commandment made into our Chancery, "doth appear. Forasmuch as the Inheritance of the foresaid Countess, and of her "Predecessors and yours, Earls of Devonshire, is unto you descended by Hereditary "Right, and that you at this present do hold the said Inheritance; We therefore wil- "ling to provide, as well for our own Dignity and the Equity of our Kingdom, as "for your Honour and Support, Will and Command you, in requesting you, that by ta- "king to you the Name and Honour of an Earl, you cause your self henceforward to "be called Earl of Devonshire, being assured, that we will cause the foresaid Fee to "be yearly paid unto you, as it hath been wont to be paid to the Earls of Devonshire "your Predecessors. Witness the King at Newcastle upon Tine the 22[d] of February, "and in the Ninth Year of our Reign. Edward R. And to enforce this the more he sent his Precept to the then Sheriff of Devonshire, the Writ beginning---Rex Vicecomiti Devoniæ Salutem, &c. Commanding him forthwith by publique Proclamation, both in his County, and all other places of his Bailywick, to require all Persons thenceforth to esteem and call him Earl of Devonshire. And likewise another Precept to the Lord Treasurer and Barons of his Exchequer, that they should cause the said Summ of xviii l. vi s. viii d. to be annually paid unto him, nomine Comitis, by the Title of an Earl, as his Ancestors formerly had received it.

[c] Vid. quomodo Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 465.

[d] Claus. 9. Ed. 3. m. 35. in dorso. Mill's Cat. Honor. p. 465. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 638. Time's storehouse p. 524.

[e] Walsing. Hypod. p. 113. n. 30. & Holinshead 898. & R. Southwell, &c.

Now [e] about the Feast of the Ascension the King held his Parliament at York, concerning his Affairs then in hand, relating to the Scotch War; at which time were Enacted sundry Statutes very serviceable for the Peace and Weal of the Realm: And here by the Interception of King Philip, who sent thither the Bishop of Auranches and others for that purpose; he granted the Scots a Truce, till the Feast of St. John Baptist, then next ensuing.

IV. But about Midsummer (the Truce being near expired) he went in the Head of his Army to Newcastle again, whither King Bailiol came unto him from Carlile: And here it was finally agreed between them and their Council, that King Edward of England should pass to Carlile, and on the 12 of July enter Scotland that way in Hostile Manner, with these Lords and Captains in his Company, Prince John Plantagenet, sirnamed of Eltham, Earl of Cornwall, the Kings own Brother, the Lord Henry Plantagenet, Son to the Earl of Lancaster, the Kings Cosin, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, John Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex, John Vere Earl of Oxford, the Lord Bartholomew Burwash Senior, the Lord Adam Wells, Ralph Lord Bulmer, the Lord Ebulo le Strange, who dying this Year, left his Wife and Title of Earl of Lincoln to Hugh de Frenes who was also in this Expedition, together with John Lord Willoughby, Henry Lord Fitz-Hugh, Robert Lord Ferrers, William Lord Montague, the Lord Hugh Audley junior, the Lord William Clinton, the Lord John Norwich, the Lord John Bardolph, the Lord John Tibetot, or Tiptot, and the Lord John Grey of Codnore, with Sr. Mawrice Barkley, Brother to Thomas Lord Barkley, and many others of High Quality and Courage: On the other Hand King Bailiol Bailiol was appointed to go to Barwick, till the Truce was fully expired, and then on the same 12 day of July to enter Scotland in Hostile Manner with his Forces, the Chief Captains whereof under him were John Lord Warren Earl of Surrey, in England, and of Stratherne in Scotland; Richard Fitz-Alan the Stout Earl of Arundel, Henry Lord [f] Beaumont Earl of Buquhan, who it seems had made no Oath to the Contrary, as the Scotch Writers affirm; but was redeem'd from his Imprisonment by a good round Summe of Money, as we shew'd before; the Lord Ralph Nevil, and the Lord Henry Percy were here also, together with the Lords Nicolas Cantilupe and Ralph Stafford, all Barons of great Valour and Conduct; who (thô Subjects of England) being for the most part ally'd to King Bailiol, with their several Retinues, and a choice Band of lusty Welchmen, enter'd Scotland on the One part, at the same time that King Edward enter'd on the Other, as it had been before appointed. Two such Mighty Torrents of War were not likely to be much resisted by the almost-exhausted Powers of the Bruceans: So that in a manner they ravag'd the Country at their Pleasure, wasting and burning all before them.

AN. DOM. 1335. An. Regni IX.

[f] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 51.

On the 12 [g] of July, being a Wednesday, King Edward of England began his March from the City of Carlile, passing over the Solway Frith, and so entring into Scotland in good Order of Battle. On the Tuesday following, being the 18 of July, the Lord William Montague with certain other Barons of England rode forth, coasting on the left hand, towards the Parts of Caerlaverock in Nidisdale, to fetch in Prey for the Army; and the next day they return'd all safe with some Hundred Head of Cattle. On Thursday* the King passed the Ford of Anand, which giveth Name to Anandale, and then he rear'd his Banners Royal, and made many Knights; but to the Lord William Montague he granted his Crest with the Eagle, and a gallant Courser with Caparisons, adorn'd with the Arms of Montague, which are Argent, three Fuzils in Fess, Gules: Moreover he gave him the Reversion of the Mannor of Wodeton, and Mersewode-vale with the Advowsons of the Churches; as also of the Mannor of Pole, with the Advowson of the Church, after the Death of Robert Fitz-Paine, and Ela his Wife, without Issue; paying to the King, his Heirs and Successors upon Christmas-day, whersoever he or they should happen to be, a sword of 3 shillings and four pence for all Services. Encouraged with this Bounty of his Prince, the Lord Montague pierced yet farther into Scotland, making great Havock and Spoil, and continually bringing in huge Quantities of Victuals, and Prey to the Army.

[g] Knighton p. 2566. &c.

* Julii 20.

On that same day, a certain Knight of Heinalt, Named Sr. Enend, came before King Edward with a Present from his Father in Law, William Earl of Heinalt, which was a very Gorgeous and Princely Helmet, Richly beset with Precious Stones, and adorn'd with the Coronet and other things, in the same manner as the Earl himself was us'd to wear it on Festivals, and when he appeared in the Greatest Splendor. The King was extreamly pleased with this Present, and immediately Rewarded the Messenger with an Hundred Pounds sterling. 'Tis likely he wore it long after for the Sake of the Donor: For I have seen several ancient Pictures, that Represent him in such an Helmet.

On the Sunday* after St. Mary Magdalene, King Bailiol on the other hand took a strong Castle of the Earl of Athols, called Cambremouth; which would hardly have been master'd so soon, but that in time of the Assault, whether by chance, or from without, there happen'd such a fire in the Castle, as compell'd them to yield presently, together with all their Ammunition, and Provision lay'd up for a long time, or else they had all perished by Fire, or been put to the sword. Here they found the Lord David Marshal with his Lady, also the Relict of the Lord Archimbald Douglas, and the Wife of Sr. Philip Moubray, beside meaner Prisoners.

* Julii 23.

Yet all this while, neither of the Kings found any Considerable Opposition: For long [h] now had the Scots been us'd to these Harassings, and therefore the better avoided them at this time, by retiring with the best of their Substance into their Fortresses among the Marishes and thick Forests: This manner they were first taught by their King Robert Bruce; who in the Days of King Edward the First, being so hardly hunted and pursued, that neither Town, City, nor Castle could, or durst entertain him, betook himself to these Forests with good Success: And still, when the said King Edward was return'd for England, he would forth again, and appear on his Countries Behalf with sword in Hand; straight Rally his broken and scatter'd Forces, and presently recover, either by Strength or Policy, all that he had lost, as far as to Barwick: Upon News whereof King Edward would return with his Power, and win all again. Thus King Robert wan and lost the Kingdom of Scotland by turns for four or five times together, when [h] Froiss. c. 26. f. 16.

An. Dom. 1335. An. Regni IX.

when being at last Chaced into [i] Norwey, his Mighty Adversary, King Edward the First died in a good old Age at Burgh upon the Sands near Caerlile. But while he lay on his Death bed he sent for Prince Edward his Son, and gave him Counsel "to "be Mercifull and Just, and Constant in all his Words and Deeds, to love his Bre- "thren; but to avoid Flatterers, and especially Piers Gaveston: After this he made "him [k] swear upon his Blessing, that when he should see the Breath out of his Body, "he should take his Corps and boyl it in a Cauldron till the Flesh should all come off: "Then to bury the Flesh, but to keep the Bones in a Coffin, and to bear them along "with him, whensoever the Scots should Rebell; for whether by Imagination, or Superstition, or secret Revelation, he promised certain Victory against the Scots, as often as his Bones were carried into the Field against them. We read indeed in profane Story many such Instances, and particularly, that the Turks had some such Opinion of Scanderbeg's Bones; but however King Edward the Second, either out of Filial tenderness, or pure disobedience, buried his whole Body at Westminster, where it remains Honourably Entombed to this day; yet surely he never prosper'd against the Scots, besides that he came to an unhappy end, as we shew'd in the beginning of this History; whether for want of his Fathers Bones, or his Blessing; for generally the Blessing of God goes along with a Parents just Benediction: But this by the by.

[i] Martin p. 87. & Fabian p. 148 & Grafton p. 192.

[k] Froiss. c. 26. f. 16. b.

While after their old Manner, the Scots thus again at this time to avoid King Edward's Fury, retired into their Fastnesses, the [l] Welchmen who were with King Bailiol, being Highly incensed for want of Opposition, spared neither Religious Persons, nor Places; but put all that came in their Reach to Fire and Sword. The mean while the Mariners of Newcastle, with part of the Kings Fleet (which Hector vainly makes to be so dreadfully shipwrack'd) made shift to come in at the Mouth of the River Tay, where they burnt a great part of the Town of Dundee, which stands between Brechin and St Andrews. And at the same time [m] John Lord Darcy Justice of Ireland, having well settled Affairs at home, sailed with a Fleet of 56 Ships (with the Chief of the Irish Nobles in his Company) making a short cut to the Parts of Scotland, next adjoyning to Ireland, where having wasted the Isles of Aran and Bute, he return'd with great Prey and Glory. For which his Voluntary and Signal Services, a while after King Edward granted unto him and the Heirs Male of his Body Lawfully begotten, the Mannors of Rathwar and Kildalk in Ireland.

[l] Holinshead Engl. Chron. p. 898.

[m] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 371.

V. But however, thô thus the poor Scots were Harassed on all sides, yet were they resolved not to betray their Country, either for want of Care, or Courage; but being in strength unequal to these Forces, they were obliged to act more wisely, and to lie chiefly upon the Catch; nor altogether without Success: For about this time [n] 500 Archers of England with other Footmen, upon some occasion, returning homeward in great Security, as having seen no appearance of an Enemy in Scotland, were suddenly set upon, being intercepted by Andrew Earl of Murray, Patrick Earl of Dunbar, and Sr. William Douglas, by whom they were all put to the sword. In this season John the young Earl [o] of Namur (whom the Scotch Writers by mistake call the Earl of Gueldre) with his Brother Sr. Robert of Namur, came into England to serve King Edward, for the Sake of Sr. Robert of Artois their Uncle; and boldly undertook to enter Scotland only with a Choice Band of an Hundred Men of Arms, and seven or eight Knights and Barons, their Leaders, which came over with them, and a few English from Barwick for their Guides. But before the Earl could recover Edenburgh, he was so hotly assaulted by the Earl of Murray and Dunbar, and the Lord William Douglas; that althô the Strangers bare themselves Right Worthily, yet being oppressed by Multitude, they were compelled to give back, thô honourably by little and little, still maintaining the Fight, and by sudden Chargings defending themselves, till they reached Edenburgh, and recovered the Hill whereon the Castle had stood, thô now it lay in ruines. Here they most manfully kept their Ground till the next day; when despairing of any Succour, and utterly destitute of either Meat or Drink, they were content to yield themselves on certain Conditions. The Scots not willing to drive these Men to despair, whose Natural Valour they found scarce matchable, and knowing that the weak Estate of their Country required them to be frugal of their Persons, accepted their Conditions: And here the Earl of Murray, either of Generosity or Policy, or for the sake of the Leader the Noble Earl of Namur, whom he admired, or hoped by obliging to gain to his Side; quitted them all of their Ransom, and gave them present liberty of returning into their own Country; he himself for their further Security, and desirous to gratifie the King of France, whose near Kinsman the Earl of Namur was, conducting them as far as the Borders: But this Compliment was ill-timed; for upon his [n] Knighton 2567. n 30.

[o] Holinshead Engl. Chron. p. 898.

Return

Return [p] being unhappily encountred by an Engliſh Party, belonging to the Garriſon of Roxborough, he was by them overthrown, himſelf being taken Priſoner by Sr. William Prieſtwood, and the Lord Willam Douglas eſcaped very narrowly, but his Brother Sr. James Douglas was there ſlain upon the Spot with many more. AN. DOM. 1335. An. Regni IX.

Among the [q] Bodies of thoſe few Strangers, that were ſlain in the paſſage to Edinburgh, 'tis reported, that there was found the Body of a Woman of exact Beauty, but more than ordinary Stature: She had been obſerved in the beginning of the Battle to ſtep forth before all her Companions, where ſingly ſhe overthrew a ſtrong Eſquire of Scotland, named Richard Shaw; and long and well ſhe fought with the Scots, till finally, ſhe not flinching, and her Company not able to come up to her, being encompaſſed by the Scots, unknown as ſhe was, ſhe was there ſlain. 'Tis thought, becauſe ſhe was left in ſo deſperate a condition, that her own Party was ignorant of her Sex; and it might be, that for the love of Sr. Robert of Namur, who was a Batchelour, young, beautifull and couragious, or thrô ſome Heroical Diſpoſition proceeding from high Birth, or Conſcience of unuſual Strength, or deſire to emulate the ancient Viragoes, called Amazons, ſhe thus adventur'd to take the Field: But her indiſcreet Obſtinacy to the Death, when Retreating was not inglorious, ſhew'd her unwiſe, and too much a Woman.

[p] Walſingh. hiſt. p.116. & Holingſhead p.898
[q] Holingshead Scotland p.236.

But of the Fight, wherein the Earl of Murray was taken, Others report a little otherwiſe, ſaying, [r] How theſe Scotch Lords now in their paſſage toward the Borders were no leſs than ten thouſand ſtrong, as reſolving upon ſome notable Exploit, either thereby to requite their Loſſes at home, or to oblige King Edward to leave Scotland for the Defence of his own People, and eſpecially for his Queens ſake, whom hearing to be as then in Bamburg an impregnable Caſtle of Northumberland, they went thitherward to inveſt the Place. But being on their way met by 5000 Engliſh ('tis probable, as appears by and by, under the Conduct of Prince John of Eltham, who was coming this way at that time, either before parted from the King his Brother, or not till now come to joyn him) however after a ſharp Conflict, the Scots were wholly broken and routed, leaving 5000 of their Companions on the ground with Sr. James Douglas; only the Earl of Murray of their Captains being taken Priſoner, but Earl Patrick and Sr. William Douglas eſcaped. This Victory however coſt the Engliſh 400 Men, 'twas fought ſo obſtinately before the Day inclin'd to them.

[r] Knighton p. 2567.

It is certain, [s] that about Lammas-tide Prince John of Eltham Earl of Cornwall, and the Kings Brother, with the Forces of Yorkſhire and Northumberland, and the Lord Anthony Lucy of Cockermouth, with the Men of Cumberland and Weſtmorland, entring Scotland, [t] ravag'd and deſtroy'd in Galloway, Carrick, Kyle and Cunningham, and all the Weſtern Parts which held againſt the Bailiol, or had lately revolted from him. The Lord William Douglas indeed with certain Troops of light Horſe, ſtill coaſted them from far, waiting for ſome Advantage, but by the Policy of their Princely General they ever kept good cloſe Order; ſo that at laſt without any conſiderable loſs, Prince John with his little Hoſt paſſing by Lenox, Menteith and Stratherne, came laden with Spoil and Prey to St. Johnſton, where he found the King of England his Brother, lately return'd thither from his victorious March beyond the Scottiſh Mountains. This Town had been lately deſtroy'd by the Scots, who deſpair'd to maintain it for their own behoof: But now King Edward order'd it to be rebuilt, fortifi'd and encompaſſed with a ſtrong Wall, Ditch and Rampire.

[s] Aug. 1. Holinſhead p. 899.
[t] Hector Boeth. l. 15. fol. 320. n. 40.

VI. The King of [u] France all this while did what he could by Policy to hinder King Edwards Proceedings, and withdraw him home again, before he might perfect any Conqueſt in Scotland: To that end again he ſends his Ambaſſadors to him, and procures Others to be ſent from the Pope, with Letters bearing date (apud Pontemſorgiæ Avenionenſis Diœceſis, 2 Kal. Aug. Anno Pontif. 1.) to endeavour a Peace between King David and him, and to requeſt his Company once more in the Holy War: But King Edward obſerving his pragmaticall Curioſity in Affairs no way relating to him, and alſo his unſincere way of Addreſs, ſent him ſhort Word, "That he was able of himſelf "(bleſſed be God) without any help from him to wage war with the Infidels, when "he ſhould ſee fit, unleſs He and his Adherents by their Malice and underhand Dea- "lings ſhould ſtand in his way: And that he neither could nor would undertake any "Foreign Expedition, while his Enemies the Scots continued ſo rebellious againſt him, "who were alſo by him abetted and encouraged in their Rebellion: Thô both as a "Chriſtian Prince and a Kinſman he ought rather to compoſe War and Strife among "two Chriſtian Nations, and even to aſſiſt him with all his Might in his juſt Wars, than "to nouriſh up his Capital Enemies unjuſtly againſt him.

[u] Knighton p. 2567.
[x] Vid. Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1335. §. 36

An. Dom. 1335. An. Regni IX.

VII. Thus King Edward put him off at that time, and proceeded with ſuch ſucceſs in his Affairs in Scotland, that about the Feaſt of the [y] Aſſumption of our Lady, moſt of the Scotch Nobility being wholly tired out, and fearing yet much more, [z] came in and ſubmitted themſelves to King Edward of England at St. Johnſton, where both the Kings then were; among whom, thô the Lord Strabolgi came not in perſon, for fear of the Kings ſudden Diſpleaſure, yet by his Advocates and Letters he ſo humbly ſued for Peace and Pardon, and ſo well acquitted himſelf of all Treaſon, that he with the reſt was accepted on theſe Conditions.

[y] Auguſti 15.
[z] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 116. & Adam Murimouth

[a] Theſe are the Points and Articles agreed on betwixt the Council of the Kings of England and Scotland on the one Party; and the Lord Alexander Moubray, the Lord Geoffry Moubray, the Lord Geoffry Roos, Dr. William Bullock Clerk, and the Lord Euſtace de Lorrain, having full power from David Strabolgi Earl of Athol, and Robert Stuart of Scotland on the other Party, to treat on, accord and confirm all Points enterparled and to be enterparled, betwixt the ſaid Kings and the ſaid Earl and Robert Stuart, as appeareth by the Letters Patents of either Party.

[a] Ces ſont les Choſes & le Pointz accordez, &c. Murimouth, &c. Stow p. 232. & Knighton p. 2566. n. 30. &c.

1. "Imprimis, it is accorded, That the Earl of Athol, and all the Great Men, and "Others of the Commonalty of Scotland, which were willing to come in to the King "of Englands Peace, ſhall have Life and Limb, Lands and Tenements, Fees and Of- "fices, which they ought by right, or by inheritance to have in Scotland, thoſe except "which by common Aſſent ſhould be excepted. In ſuch manner, that all Offences and "Miſdemeanours, which they had committed in the Realm of England from the begin- "ning of the World to the Date of theſe Preſents, ſhall be pardon'd without Impriſon- "ment, or any other Moleſtation.

2. Item, That the Earl of Athol and the Lord Alexander Moubray ſhall ſtill hold thoſe Lands, Tenements, and Fees in England, which they held at their departure from Newcaſtle upon Tine, when they paid Homage to the King of England.

3. Item, That the Franchiſes of the Kirk of Scotland ſhall be maintained after the ancient Uſage: And that the Laws of Scotland in Burroughs, Towns and Sheriff-wicks within the Lands of the King of Scotland, be uſed after the Old Way, as they were uſed in the time of King Alexander: And that the Offices of Scotland be adminiſtred by Men of the ſame Nation; yet ſo, as that the King of Scotland of his Prerogative Royal may at any time according to his pleaſure advance to places of Office Men of any Nation whatſoever.

4. Item, That all thoſe, who being in the ſame caſe with the Earl of Athol, have Lands and Tenements within the Lands of the King of England, ſhall ſtill hold thoſe Lands and Tenements, Poſſeſſions, Fees and Offices, as they had them at their departure from Newcaſtle upon Tine, when they paid Homage to the King of England; thoſe except, who by common Aſſent ſhall be excepted, and if they be impleaded for their Lands and Tenements aforeſaid, they may have their Defence and Recoveries in any Court according to Law.

5. Item, As touching the Demand which the Earl of Athol claimeth, that the King of England would releaſe him his Lands in England, which he hath in gage for 800 Marks, the King neither ought nor will do that; but as for his Mannor of [b] Bulindon, which the ſaid Earl laid to pledge for [c] two hundred Pounds, it is accorded, That if the ſaid Earl of Athol come within one Year, and make true payment of the ſaid Money, that the King ſhall cauſe the ſaid Mannor to be reſtored unto him.

[b] Stow, Byphingdone, quod corrigo autoritate Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 96. ubi legitur Bulindon in Com. Buck.
[c] Stow 250 l. ſed Knighton CC li. ubi li pro l. a Stow acceptum per errorem: cum ſtat li. pro libris.

6. Item, That as touching the Caſtle and Lands of Chilham, the ſaid Earl ſhall be in the ſame point that he was before, at his departure from Newcaſtle upon Tine, when he paid Homage to the King of England, and ſhall have his Recovery by Law; and the King promiſeth in good Faith to take Order, that he ſhall have the Law of his Kingdom without favour on either Party.

7. Item, That as touching the Lands which the ſaid Earl claimeth in Norfolk, whereof he hath Charters, the King promiſeth, that having ſeen firſt his Charters, by Advice of his Council he will do him reaſon. And if in any caſe any man ſurmiſe Treaſon upon the ſaid Earl, he may defend himſelf with his Body, according to the Laws and Uſage of Scotland, and upon the Marches; And that all thoſe in his caſe have the like Grant.

8. Item, that as to the Pardon, which William Ramſey Knight demandeth for the Treſpaſs by him done to William Lord Montagu, in beating down his Caſtle of Haghterdorne, the ſame William ſhall be ready to make ſatisfaction in ſuch manner as ſhall be by the Kings of England and Scotland deviſed.

9. Item, That the Lord Euſtace de Lorrain ſhall have his Lands and Tenements, which which he ought to have within the Realm of Scotland, and if any man hath treſpaſſed againſt him, he ſhall have his Recovery by Law. Dat. at St. Johnſton in Scotland the 18 of Auguſt Anno Dom. 1335. AN. DOM. 1335. An. Regni IX.

Now whereas it was before remembred, that theſe Commiſſioners were empowred not only from the Earl of Athol, but alſo from the Lord Robert Stuart himſelf; it is not ſo much to be admired, that ſo great a Man as Prince Robert, who was now ſole Governour of Scotland for King David his Kinſman, ſhould yield ſo far as to admit of an Agreement ſo much to his Maſters Detriment with the King of England: I ſay, it is not ſo greatly to be admired, if we but conſider the extream Neceſſity that drove him to it in that juncture, he himſelf being very ſick at Dumbriton, and his late Partner in the Government, the Lord John Randall Earl of Murray, being at the ſame time priſoner at London, and likely to continue in that Condition; becauſe he had both before and now alſo refus'd to accept of King Edwards Peace.

Thô indeed no great ſincerity was on the Scots Party, but the wonderfull Streights they were in, required a little Diſſimulation and outward Compliance till a better Opportunity: Nay 'tis ſaid by a very [e] ancient and authentick Hiſtorian, that the greateſt part of the Scotch Nobility (among whom the foreſaid Lords, no doubt, are included) being wearied out by theſe continual Haraſſings and Deſolations, came in voluntarily and ſubmitted themſelves entirely to the King of England on theſe Conditions, "That "they ſhould obey the Bailiol as their King, during his Life; the mean while King "David with his Queen to live privately but honourably at London; and upon the "Death of King Bailiol, who as yet had no Children, to ſucceed: That they would "oblige King David to come to the Parliament, which was to be at London the next "Michaelmas, and to ſtand to the King of Englands Awardment and Arbitration: In "the mean while they yielded their Homage to him, as to their Superior Lord.

[e] Knighton p. 2568. *n.*10.

VIII. But the King of France, having knowledge hereof, out of Envy to King Edward's Glory, or becauſe he found it more conducible to his own Affairs, to have the Intereſts of Scotland and England ſtill divided, dealt ſo aſſiduouſly with the Scots, by promiſing himſelf to ſtand by them, that all this came to Nothing; nor did King David appear at all in that Parliament, as they had engaged he ſhould do.

The mean time King Edward, thô he had great hopes that the Scots would at laſt ſtand to this their own Agreement, however thought it not becoming the Wiſdom of a King to repoſe himſelf too much on the Faith of others; eſpecially, conſidering the Mutability of that People, and their ſtrong Inclinations to France: Wherefore he reſolves ſo to ſtrengthen himſelf, that if they ſhould be Falſe, they ſhould not be over Dangerous; and ſo having already [f] fortified St. Johnſton, he now goes to Striveling, where, on the plat of ground on which the late Caſtle had ſtood, he built a ſtrong Fortreſs called the Pile; thence he proceeded to Bothwill, where he added much ſtrength and a Garriſon to that Caſtle, appointing Thomas Lord Barkley to victual it from Edinburgh; who was ſo good a Convoy to what he brought thither, that he diſcomfited one night the Lord William Douglas, who lay in Ambuſh for him, with little or no loſs to himſelf; but with ſuch an entire Victory, that Douglas himſelf with only three more could hardly eſcape, and that by the Benefit of the Night too. Edinburgh alſo about this time is rebuilt, and committed to the [g] Cuſtody of Sr. John Striveling, afterwards a Baron of this Realm. And having thus provided for the Peace of Scotland, the King returns in Health and Honour into England, leaving a good part of his Forces behind him with King Bailiol, and other his Captains, for the better Security of his Affairs that way. A little before which the Famous Warrier, the Lord [h] Richard Talbot, was Redeemed from his Impriſonment for 2000 Marks, by the Favour of Prince Robert Stuart, who highly Reſpected Worth, thô in an Enemy.

[f] Holinſhead Scotl. p 236. & Aſhmole p. 646.

[g] Buchan. p. 297 & Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 143.

[h] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 327.

IX. But the Lord [i] David Strabolgi, Earl of Athol, having now fully obtain'd a Pardon from King Edward, as we ſhew'd before; that he might again purchaſe his good Opinion, reſolves to be in Action for him with the foremoſt: Having therefore provided himſelf with competent Forces, Horſe & Foot, and other Neceſſaries, he preſently lays Siege to the Caſtle of Kildrummy, on the River Done, that held ſtill for the Bruceans. The mean while certain of the Brucean Lords, as Patrick Earl of Dunbar, the Lord Andrew Murray, William Douglas, and others, prepar'd to go againſt him, as well to puniſh his Revolt and Perjury, as to Relieve the Beſieged. Of this the Earl having timely notice, ſeemingly Raiſes the Siege, but indeed Marches directly forth in good Order of Battle to meet the Enemy. Both Armies joyned in the fields of Kilblaine, where began a very fierce Encounter; for generally in Civil Diſſentions, when [i] Walſing. Hypod. p. 113. & Holinſhead Scot. p. 236. & Buchan. l. 9. p. 295 & Hector Boeth. l. 15. p. 319.

An. Dom. 1335. An. Regni IX.

mens Minds are mutually exasperated, the Animosity, wherewith they contend, is greater than that of different Nations: As the fallings out of old Friends are usually more fierce than those of Strangers. But at length the Earl of Athol, who was Superior in number, and no way Inferior in Skill or Courage to his Enemies, had carried away a Compleat Victory, had not Sr. John Crab, the Captain of Kildrummy Castle, instructed either by secret Notice, or his own Conjecture, issued out of his Castle with 300 fresh Men, who coming suddenly on the Backs of the Atholians, in the very Instant of their Victory, and falling on with great Fury, Noise, and Clamour, so terrified them, and added such Courage to the almost Conquer'd Bruceans, that the Victory now presently enclin'd the other way. Upon this, Earl David disdaining to fly, or to be taken alive to suffer a Publique Execution, or perhaps not dispairing by a Vigorous Opposition to wrest back the Victory again, with a Select Troop of his Best Friends, makes a Desperate Impression upon the Enemy: Where Fighting a while Valiantly he was notwithstanding finally slain by the Hands of Sr Alexander Gurdon. There fell with him of the Nobles [k] Sr. Robert Brady, and Sr. Walter Cumin; whose Brother Sr. Thomas being taken alive, was the next day condemned to lose his Head: Some few escaped into the Castle of Camoron with the Captain thereof Robert Menneth, who yet were compelled to yield the next day for want of Provision.

[k] Buchan. p. 295

This Victory, thô not of it self considerable, did yet prove a Mighty Refreshment to the dejected Minds of the Scots; especially, since the Numbers of each Party were so unequal, that the English exceeded the Scots almost three times in Number: For [l] one says, that the Earl of Athol had 3000 Men, the Bruceans being but 1100, beside those 300 fresh Men, who by their sudden Sally quite turn'd the Scale of Victory: Thô the most Resolute Men in the World being so surprised from behind in the heat of an Engagement, when nothing is certain, and as little can be deliberated, may well be frighted into a Fatal Confusion.

[l] Fordon.

Yet [m] others report the matter something otherwise, saying, that upon this sudden Sally of the Scots, the Earl of Athols Men thrô Treason, or Panick fear fled all from him, except about 13, who being content to partake of the same Honourable Fortune with their Valiant Leader, were all slain with him.

[m] Walsingh. Hypod. p. 113.

This Earl David Strabolgi (whom Hector and Buchanan erroneously call by the Name of David Cumin) was a Baron also of England, where he had large Possessions; for he died [n] seised of the Mannor of Gainsborough, in Com. Linc. Bulindon in Com. Buck. Posewyke, West-Lexham, Styvely, and Holkeham in Norfolk, as also of the Castle of Mitford, with two parts of the Mannors of Pont-Eland and Calverdon, and certain Lands in Mollesdown in Northumberland, beside what he held in Scotland, leaving behind him David his Son and Heir then three Years of Age, and Catherine Beaumont, Daughter to the Lord Henry Beaumont, his Wife surviving; he himself being but eight and twenty Years of Age at his Death.

[n] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 96. b.

This Battle was struck on the last day of December, from whence the distressed Bruceans Raised themselves with Hopes, that the succeeding Year would prove more favourable to their Cause.

X. This Year [o] there was found in the Forest of Wolmer a young Mule with two Heads, and two Necks, of equal bigness, in other parts nothing different from another. She was kept alive for some time after, in the yard of Sr. Edward St. John, Warden of the said Forest.

[o] Walsingh. hist. p. 118.

It is also [p] reported, that a young Woman, named Joane, living in the Parish of Kingsley in the Diocess of Winchester, and the Decanate of Aulton, being on the fourth of June at Night, advised by a voice to go and meet her Sweet-heart William in the Forest of Wolmer aforesaid, early in the Morning met with an Incubus in his Shape, who then and there carnally knew her. At her return home she fell into a grievous Malady, and then upon Conference with her Sweet-heart William, it appeared, that she had been seduced to her Confusion by an Evil Spirit: Whereupon with great Contrition and Lamentation she bewailed and confessed her sins, all the house being filled with an intolerable and noisome Savour. In this deplorable Condition she held for three days, and then died, having her whole Body extreamly swoln, and her bosome and privy Parts most dismally Black and Dreadfull; and so prodigiously heavy, that eight lusty Men could hardly bear the Body to the Grave. I know not how far it may please God sometimes for the Punishment of Impure thoughts and Unchast desires, as well as for Example to others, to permit Satan to Tyrannize by his Illusions. Many Grave Authors have not doubted to attest Instances of the like Nature: However, be this true or not, I leave it to the Decision of others, and the credit of the Author.

[p] Id. ibid. & Odoric. Rainald. contin. ad Baronium. An. 1335. n. 58.

King

King Edward this Year [q] confirmed to his Cozen Henry de Torto Collo Earl of Lancaſter, the County of Provence in France, being the Inheritance of Queen Eleanor, Wife of King Henry the Third of England, and Second Daughter of Raimond Earl of Provence, Grandmother to the ſaid Earl Henry: which Inheritance the ſaid Queen Eleanor granted to her ſecond Son Edmund, ſirnamed Crouchback, Father to Thomas Earl of Lancaſter, who dying without Iſſue, this Henry the younger Brother became his Heir. I know not how valid this Grant of the Kings might be, but ſure at this time Provence was in other Hands, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter.

[q] Pat. 9. Ed. 3. par. 1. & Sandford Geneal. hiſt. p. 109. & Speed p. 539. §. 106. & §. 107.

This Year the Lord Ebulo le Strange, who in Right of his Wife Alice, Daughter and Heir of Henry Laſcy, Earl of Lincoln, obtained the Title of Earl of Lincoln, [r] departed this Life in Scotland: His Relict the ſaid Lady Alice, of whoſe Laſciviouſneſs I ſhall ſay nothing here, immediately upon his Death Married a certain Knight, called Hugo de Frenes, who likewiſe in her Right was entitled Earl of Lincoln; but he alſo died the next Year in Scotland, as we ſhall ſee in due place. Ebulo's Heir was the Lord Roger le Strange of Knokin Senior, his Coſin.

[r] Sandford p. 109. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 668.

Beſides there died the Thrice-Noble Lord John Bohun Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and High-Conſtable of England; he deceaſed [s] at Kirby-Thure in Weſtmoreland, on the Feaſt of St. Fabian and Sebaſtian, and was buried at Stratford, near London; but leaving no Iſſue behind him, was ſucceeded in his Honours and Eſtate by his next Brother Humphry, a Man Famous for Military Affairs, as we ſhall have Occaſion to take Notice.

[s] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 184.

CHAPTER the NINTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. In the Revenge of the Earl of Athols Death the Engliſh Lords in Scotland lay Siege to Dunbar; but are not able to take it. II. King Edward ſends word to King Bailiol to keep the field with his Engliſh Forces, and himſelf leaving the Parliament ſitting, follows them in Perſon, with his Exploits there. III. King Philip endeavours to divert him from an entire Conqueſt of Scotland, and ſends out a Fleet againſt him, with King Edward's Commiſſion to his Admirals about the Defence of the Engliſh Seas. IV. King Edward furniſhes himſelf with Money divers ways, yet again makes overtures for Peace. V. His Conſiderations about the War with France, and the Advice of his Council thereupon. VI. He ſends an Embaſſy to the Earl of Heinalt, with the Reſult thereof. VII. The two Kings put themſelves in a Poſture. VIII. Prince John of Eltham King Edward's Brother dies; a Scotch Tale of his Death refuted: The Earl of Lincoln dies: The Queen deliver'd of a Son. IX. A Comet, forerunner of the French War, with other Prodigies.

I. UPon the News of the Earl of Athols Death, the Lord William Montague, and the Lord Henry Beaumont, his Father in Law, were greatly diſpleaſed, as were alſo the two Kings of England and Scotland: For he was a Man of Conſiderable Power, Valour, and Conduct: But eſpecially the Lord [a] Beaumont, to ſhew his Reſentment, put every one to the ſword he could lay Hands on, that had been of the adverſe Party at the Battle of Kilblaine, where he was ſlain.

AN. DOM. 1336. An. Regni X.

[a] Hector l. 15. fol. 320. n. 50. & Holinſhead Scotland p. 237 n. 60.

But the Lord William Montague, and the Lord Henry [b] Plantagenet, Son to the Old Earl of Lancaſter, the Lord Robert Morley, John Lord Molins, Richard Earl of Arundel, Gilbert Umphravill Earl of Angos, the Lord William Clinton, the Lord John Segrave, and Sr. Hugh Audley Junior, with the Lords Nevil, and Piercy, and Staffford, and Sr. Robert Benhale of Norfolk, who fought the Duel at Halidoun, as we ſhew'd before, the Lord John Leyburne, and many other Noble Captains with near 20000 fighting Men, went and laid Siege to the ſtrong Caſtle [c] of Dunbar, which had been lately rebuilt, and well furniſhed by Earl Patrick himſelf at the Command of King Edward, when he took Barwick: But now both the ſaid Earl had Revolted, and the Caſtle was held for the behoof of King David, which was a great Eyeſore to the Engliſh, [b] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 902. Dugd. Bar. ad ſingulorum nomina, &c.

[c] Buchan. l. 9. p. 296. & Hect. Boeth. l. 15. fol. 321. n. 10.

An. Dom. 1336. An. Regni X.

Engliſh, as being ſcituated on the Sea Coaſt between Barwick and St. Andrews, and the Garriſon thereof doing them much miſchief.

This Siege began on the 27 of January, and was continued with pertinacity enough for the ſpace of [d] 19, or as ſome ſay, 22 Weeks: Within the Caſtle at that time was the Counteſs of Dunbar her ſelf, ſirnamed Black Agnes of Dunbar, who was ſo liberal of her Hands to her Souldiers, and ſo pleaſant in her Speech, that ſhe Encouraged them wonderfully to acquit themſelves like men upon all Occaſions. Once it chanced, that as the Engliſh Pioneers approached near to dig down the Walls under the Covert of a certain Vaulted Engine, called a Sow, ſhe beholding it, ſaid merrily, "that unleſs they look'd well to their Sow, She would ſoon make her caſt her Pigs; and within a while the Engine was deſtroy'd accordingly. Nor yet were the Engliſh able with all their Coſt and Labour to purchaſe much Honour or Advantage at this Siege: For when they had almoſt brought the Caſtle to a Surrender [e] Sr. Alexander Ramſay came once at Midnight as privately as boldly, thrô the Engliſh Fleet, and ſupply'd the Counteſs with 40 Select Warriours, and ſufficient Store of Ammunition; and thereupon taking ſome of the Garriſon to thoſe with him, he made a Brisk Sally upon the Beſiegers, who fearing nothing leſs than ſuch a matter from Men who were almoſt reduced, received a Conſiderable Loſs by this ſurprize. This being performed as was intended, the next Night Sr. Alexander eſcap'd away again thrô the Engliſh Galleys, in the ſame manner as he paſſed by the Night before. Nor did the Engliſh underſtand any thing of the matter, but ſuppoſed the Garriſon was in ſo good State ſtill, as of themſelves to undertake ſuch daring Actions. Wherefore ſoon after, either by the ſubtle Colluſion of the Scots, who by Mediation of Meſſengers from the Pope and French King, required and obtained a Truce, or by the Engliſh mens Deſpair of taking the Place, as ſome ſay, or rather, becauſe the Lords that lay there, had a great mind to attend the King their Maſter into Brabant and Flanders, whither (as they heard) he was now preparing to go; for ſome or more of theſe Reaſons the Siege was Raiſed Inglorioufly, under pretence of a Temporary Truce, whereby the Engliſh generally became looſers. But certainly, however the Vulgar deſcanted on the Matter, or whatever prejudiced Authors deliver of it, the Engliſh Lords aforenamed, that began and left the Siege in this manner, were all Perſons of great Valour, Prudence, and Loyalty; wherefore we for our Parts dare not by any means raſhly condemn them, thô we underſtand not what Reaſon they ſhould have to leave the Siege.

[d] Walſing. Hiſt. p. 118 & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 646.

[e] Buch. p. 297.

[f] Maii 9.

II. Before the [f] Aſcenſion, King Edward ſent word to King Bailiol to take with him the Lord Henry Plantagenet, whom he had [g] lately made Captain General of all his Armies in Scotland, and the Earls of Warwick and Oxford, with divers other Lords and Captains of either Nation, and with them and their Forces to take the field. Accordingly [h] after Whitſuntide the foreſaid King Bailiol paſſed with an Army over the Scottiſh Sea, and went to St. Johnſton, where they waited the King of Englands further Order.

[g] April 7, 10. Ed. 3. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 784.

[h] Maii 19.

The mean while King Edward held his High-Court of Parliament at Nottingham, where he underſtood, [i] that the French King had ſworn to Uphold and Protect the Intereſt of King David and the Rebel-Scots, as they were then called, againſt England, and had to that purpoſe ſent over ſeveral Eminent Commanders with Conſiderable ſupplies of Men, Money, and Ammunition. With this News King Edward was very well ſatisfied, as well becauſe the French King had thereby apparently given him a juſt Occaſion of turning his Arms againſt France it ſelf; as alſo verily believing that the French and Scots together, would not fail now of affording him Battle. He therefore [k] leaves the Lords and Prelates at their Debates in Parliament, and himſelf with a Select Company Poſts away Incognito for Scotland, till he came to Barwick upon the Tweed: From thence borrowing a few Men of Arms for his Guard, he rode forth to St. Johnſton, where he found King Bailiol ready appointed with the Forces of either Nation, as he had commanded.

[i] Knighton p. 2568.

[k] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 119. & Adam Murimouth ad An. 1335. &c.

The Bailiol and all the Lords with him were as much ſurpriſed as pleaſed at this ſudden coming of the Kings, and not a little ſatisfied with themſelves, that they were found in ſuch Readineſs, as they ought to be.

Now before King Edward's Arrival at St. Johnſton, [l] Earl Patrick of Dunbar, the Lord William Douglas, and Sr. William Keth, Chief Captains of the Bruceans, taking freſh Courage from their French Auxiliaries, had won the Caſtles of St. Andrew and Bothwill, and thence proceeded to Beſiege the Caſtle of Striveling. The Place was vigorouſly Aſſaulted, and as well from within Defended; but when the Scots heard of [l] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 117. n. 30.

of King Edward's drawing near to the Reſcue, then they made a General Aſſault with more Fury than ever. But it was ſtill ſo well maintain'd, that nothing was got but the Loſs of many of the Aſſailants, among whom was ſlain Sr. William Keth, a Valiant, but a Raſh Leader, and he who occaſion'd the overthrow at Halidown: Whereupon together with the Apprehenſion of King Edward's approach, they brake up the Siege, before he could come upon them. As did alſo another Party of the Scots, [m] then lying at the Siege of Lochindoris, wherein was encloſed the Lady Catherine Beaumont, Relict of the late Earl of Athol, who before their coming, having Intelligence of their Deſign upon her Caſtle, had Requeſted King Edward's Aid, which was one occaſion more of this his Expedition: But now the Fame of him did what was deſired from his Sword; for the Scots upon Report of his coming brake up their Siege and departed.

AN. DOM. 1336. An. Regni X.

[m] Holinſhead Scotl. p. 236.

The mean while [n] King Edward paſſed with his Army by Dunkelden thrô Athol and Murray, as far as Elgin and Innernes, where Scotland is bounded that way, in purſuit of the Enemy, if by any means he might come to a Battle: But for all the Aſſiſtance from France, they durſt not at that time look him in the Face, but [o] kept themſelves in Foreſts and other Faſtneſſes; only in the night-times they would make falſe Alarms to terrifie the Engliſh; but they knew them ſo well, and kept ſuch Watch, that they eaſily prevented all their Attempts that way.

[n] Aſhmole p. 646. & Buchan. p. 296.

[o] Adam Murimouth.

In the King's Return on the left hand through Buquhan, [p] he took Aberdeen, and burnt divers Towns and deſtroyed the Country, but ſtill the Scots kept aloof, for they durſt not hazard their only ſtanding Forces againſt a Royal Army; nor in common prudence could they: Wherefore King Edward not reliſhing this dilatory Way, and being perpetually both adviſed by his Friends and provoked by his Enemies to the French War, leaving King Bailiol at St. Johnſton, ſettled in the Goverment of that Kingdom with ſufficient Forces to deal with the Scots, returns himſelf for England; reſolved now, either by fair Means or Force to keep the French quiet at home.

[p] Aſhmole ibid.

III. For beſides [q] the Aſſiſtance King Philip had lately ſent to the Bruceans, in confidence of theſe Diverſions in Scotland, he began to take ſo much upon him, that thinking thoſe Forces ſufficient to hold play with England, he raſhly and unjuſtly flies upon King Edward's Lands in France, conquering, ſurprizing and plundering Towns and Caſtles in Gaſcoigne, and ſlaying his Subjects without any other reaſon, but that he vow'd, as he ſaid, to take revenge for his Friends the Scots.

[q] Knighton p. 2568. n. 30. & p. 2569. n. 10.

Beſides all theſe Provocations, while King Edward was in Scotland, he ſent abroad no leſs than twenty ſix Gallies well mann'd, with other Ships of War, to cruiſe about the Engliſh Coaſts for ſome Advantage, or to make for Scotland to the Aſſiſtance of the Bruceans; whereupon we find, that the King, who was not yet returned from St. Johnſton, ſent forth his Commiſſion to the Lord Geoffry Say, then conſtituted his Admiral of the Southern and Weſtern Sea, and to the Lord John Norwich, his Admiral of the Northern Sea, a Copy whereof for that it proves the King of Englands Power over the Engliſh Seas, I have thought fit to inſert in this place, tranſlated from the [r] Original: "The King to his Beloved and Truſty Geoffry de Say, Admiral of his Fleet "of Ships from the Mouth of the River Thames toward the Weſtern Parts, Greeting. "Whereas we have of late commanded you by our Letters, that together with cer- "tain Ships out of the Cinque Ports, which we have order'd to be furniſhed and made "ready for War according to our Command, you ſhould ſet forth to Sea, to oppoſe "and reſiſt certain Gallies provided and enforced with Men of War in divers Foreign "Parts; which as we are informed, were ſet out toward the Parts of our Dominion, "to moleſt Us and our People, or elſe to make toward the Coaſts of Scotland for the "ſuccour and relief of our Enemies there; and in regard that it hath been related by "ſome, that Gallies of that kind, to the number of twenty ſix, are newly come to the "Coaſts of Bretagne and Normandy, and there ſtill abide, waiting, as it is ſuppos'd, "to do what Miſchief they can againſt Us and Ours, or to ſuccour our ſaid Enemies as "aforeſaid: We therefore calling to mind, that our Progenitors, the Kings of England, "have before theſe times been LORDS OF THE ENGLISH SEA on every ſide, "yea, the Defenders thereof, againſt the Encroachments of Enemies; and ſeeing, it would "very much grieve us, if in this kind of Defence our Royal Honour ſhould (which God "forbid) be loſt or any way diminiſhed in our time, and deſiring with the Help of "God to prevent all Dangers of this Nature, to provide for the Safeguard and De- "fence of our Realm and Subjects, and to reſtrain the malice of our Enemies, do ſtrict- "ly require and charge you by the Duty and Allegiance wherein you ſtand bound unto "Us, according to the ſpecial Truſt repoſed in you, that immediately upon ſight of "theſe

[r] Vid. Selden's Mare Clauſum l. 2. c. 23. p. 376 & Rot. Scoc. 10. Ed. 3. Memb. 16. & 27.

An. Dom. 1336. An. Regni X.

"these Presents, and without any further Delay, you set forth to Sea, with the Ships of "the Ports aforesaid, and other Ships which are now ready; and that in obedience to our "Command you arrest those other Ships, which we lately required you to arrest for "our Service (but so, as they may be ready and provided to set forth according to "our foresaid Command, seeing we caused the Masters and Mariners of the said Ships to be "prepared and gathered together, whether they were within your Liberties or without) "and to cause them being well furnished with Soldiers and other Provisions, to launch out "to Sea with the aforesaid Ships, and that with all diligence you make search after the "foresaid Gallies, and other Ships of War abroad against Us, and stoutly and manfully set "upon them, if they shall presume to bend their Course for the end aforesaid, either to-"ward the Parts of our Dominion, or the Coasts of Scotland. And if they steal a-"way from you, so that you cannot meet with them, then you are with the fore-"said Ships of our Fleet without any delay, to follow after the said Gallies and Ships "of War set out against Us (if they shall make toward our Kingdom or the Coasts of "Scotland) and them couragiously to destroy for the Conservation of our Royal "Honour.

"But yet we will not; that you occasion any hurt or hindrance to Merchants or O-"thers passing by Sea, who have no intention either to offend Us and our Subjects, or "to succour our Enemies, &c. After all which there follows in the Commission a Power from the King to press Sea-men, and some other matters of that kind; the like Commission also was issued to the Lord John Norwich Admiral of the Northern Parts, both bearing this Date, --Witness the King at the Town of St. Johnston the 16 day of August. By the King himself.

[f] Knighton p. 2568. n.40. & Walsing. hist. p.119.n.10.

IV. Presently after King Edward came [f] back to Nottingham, where he found his Parliament sitting as he had left them, who had provided him towards the maintenance of his Wars in Scotland, France and Gascoigne, a Grant of one Twentieth, or as others, of one Fifteenth of their Temporalities, of a Tenth, or as some, a Sixth of the Clergy, a Tenth of all Burroughs, and of English Merchants for every Sack of Wooll 40 s. but of Merchants Strangers 60 s. Besides [t] this, the Clergy of their own accord granted unto the King all the Mony that had been collected and laid up in the Cathedral Churches throughout England toward the Holy War. About this time also it was ordained, [u] "That no Wooll of English Growth should be exported the Land, "and that all Cloath-workers should be received from whatever Foreign Parts, and fit "Places should be assigned them with many Liberties and Privileges, and that they "should have certain Allowance from the King, till they might be fix'd in a way of li-"ving by their Trade. It was also ordain'd, that none should use Cloth wove beyond "sea, or to be imported hereafter, except the King, the Queen, and their Children "only; Also that none should wear Foreign Skins, Silks or Furrs, unless he had of "yearly Revenues an hundred Pounds. By these and the like good Laws, thô for the present they took not their full effect, King [x] Edward reduced the Woollen Manufacture, after it had been lost for many years in this Nation; from whose Time it hath flourished unto our Days, to the general advantage of the whole Kingdom. Also this or the following Year, the King sent his Commission to John Lord [y] Molins empowring him to seise on all the Merchants of Lombardy, with their Goods, Jewels of Gold and Silver, and other Chattels then in the City of London, and to deliver them for the Kings Use to the Constable of the Tower. No doubt among all these and many other ways of Raising Mony, the Inquisition after Corrupt Officers, called Trailebaston, was now renewed for the Advantage of the Kings Coffers: For that Wise Prince well knew, that neither Friendship nor Honour was to be expected abroad without Money, the Nerves of War. Wherefore also he is said to have seised into his Hands [z] Rich Vestments, and Vessels of Silver, and other Ornaments out of Abbeys, before he went Personally beyond the Seas. By all which means he is said to have amassed together such an Excessive Heap of Treasure, that by his Plenty of Coyn, the Land was almost quite drain'd; insomuch that Victuals and other Commodities became exceeding cheap, [a] a qnarter of wheat being sold at London for two shillings, and a fat Ox for six and eight pence, a fat Sheep for eight pence, a fat Goose for two pence, a Pig for a Penny, and six Pigeons for a Penny.

[t] Walsing. ibid. n. 20.

[u] Walsingh. hist. p.117. n.40. Stow p.233. Holinshead. p.900. & Fabian p.214

[x] Judge Hales his Origin. of Mankind p.161

[y] Dudg. 2 Vol. p.146.

[z] Knighton p. 2571.

[a] Fabian p.203. Knighton p. 2569. n.20. & Lanquet f. 237. & Sr. Rich. Baker p. 143.

Having by these and the like Methods pretty well stock'd himself with Money, the Sinews of War, and conscious both of his own Courage, and that of his People, he yet notwithstanding like a Wise Prince, seeks out at the same time for Foreign Assistance, and yet in the midst of all these hot Preparations for War, he as piously endeavours by Offers of Peace to prevent the Effusion of Christian Blood.

Once

Once again therefore [c] he ſends his Ambaſſadors to treat of an Accommodation between the two Kings; and to ſee, if by any means King Philip might be brought to Reaſon, both in Reſtoring what he had unjuſtly ſeized on in Aquitain, and in Forbearing any farther to intermeddle with the Matters in difference between him and Scotland. And thô this he did (after many humble and advantagious Conceſſions offer'd by him in vain) rather now to ſatisfie the World of his own equitable Proceedings, than that he had any hope of ſettling a firm and friendly Correſpondence between himſelf and his Coſin Philip: Becauſe he well knew, that the French King being ſo mightily addicted to the Scotch Intereſt, was by no means likely to comply with his juſt Demands; he counſelled yet farther, how he might by Force compell him, if by fair means he ſhould not be able to enduce him to reaſon. AN. DOM. 1336. AN. REGNI X.

[c] Walſingh. Hypod. p. 114. n. 1.

V. Now the Lord [d] Robert of Artois was ſtill, as we ſaid before, of his Council and in great eſteem with him: He was continually urging him to a War with France, and made it his only buſineſs to take all occaſions of perſwading him to a Breach with Philip of Valois, who had unjuſtly uſurped his lawfull Right, and withheld it from him againſt all Law both Humane and Divine. King Edward was inwardly well pleaſed with the words of this great Perſonage, and more than once conferr'd with his Privy Council about the matter. For as he was of a noble and daring Spirit, always ready to undertake the higheſt Enterprizes, ſo withall he was agreeably circumſpect, and ever carefull by Wiſdom to mark out his Deſigns beforehand. As yet he ſaw but ſmall likelihood, that of himſelf he ſhould ever attain to the Conqueſt of ſo entire and flouriſhing a Kingdom as France was. And as he conſider'd, it was much both againſt his Honour and Intereſt, wholly to neglect ſo great a Concern as his Right to the Crown of France; ſo alſo he thought it better, not to lay any Claim thereto, than not to purſue that Claim with Force of Arms to the utmoſt of his Power. Often therefore he demanded Advice of the Ableſt Counſellors, Lawyers and Divines in his Kingdom, who thô they all agreed, that he had a clear Right to the Crown of France, were notwithſtandlng ſomething backward to determin any thing in a matter of that Conſequence; as doubting, if the Event happen'd otherwiſe than well, to have all the blame laid at their Doors. But at laſt the Kings Council being much preſſed by him, agreed upon this Anſwer.

[d] Froiſ. c. 28. fol. 17.

"Sir the Matter, about which Your Majeſty requires our Advice, is ſo weighty and "of ſuch vaſt moment, that we dare not preſume by any means to ſpeak directly to "the Point, nor abſolutely to determine your Royal Mind, either one way or the other. "For to put you upon a War may be of dangerous Conſequence to You and your Peo"ple; and yet wholly to diſſwade you from it, is to betray your Right and Honour, "both which we are bound by our Allegiance to maintain with the hazard of our "Lives and Fortunes. This one thing therefore we have at this time to ſay: That it "would not be amiſs for your Majeſty to ſend ſome Diſcreet Perſonages, ſufficiently "inſtructed in your Royal Pleaſure, to the Earl of Heinalt whoſe Daughter is your "Queen, and to John Lord Beaumont his Brother, who hath always yielded your Ma"jeſty both valiant and loyal Service. That of them your Majeſty would by your "ſaid Ambaſſadors require their Advice and Aſſiſtance in way of Love: For they "are not only well able to render your Majeſty good Service on this Occaſion, but alſo "they underſtand the whole Matter ſo well, that they can beſt of all Men living ad"viſe You, what Friends to have recourſe to, and by what means you may oblige them "to your Side.

VI. The King was ſo well ſatisfied with this Anſwer, that forthwith [e] he ſends over to his Father-in-Law that right Politick Prelate, Henry Burwaſh Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, with two Banerets, the Lord William Montagu, and the Lord William Clinton and many other Nobles, beſides two other Doctors learned in the Laws. All who with a fair Wind arrived at Dunkirk, and thence riding thrô Flanders, came to Valenciennes the chief City of Heinalt, where they found the Old Earl lying on his Bed ſick of the Gout, and the Lord John his Brother with him.

[e] Froiſ. ibid. & Walſingh. hiſt. p. 118. & Aſhmole p. 646.

They were highly entertained and reſpected by the Earl and his Brother, for the ſake of him that ſent them; whereupon having diſtinctly ſhew'd the cauſe of their coming, with King Edwards Pretenſions to the Crown of France, and all his Reaſons and Scruples on either Hand, they were thus anſwer'd by the Earl. "So God bleſs me, as I "ſhould heartily rejoyce, if King Edward's Deſigns might take a full and happy Effect: "For I rather deſire the Proſperity of him who hath married my Daughter, than of "him, who thô I have married his Siſter, yet never did any thing of Good for me or "mine: Nay, he was the occaſion of hindering the young Duke of Brabant from mar-

An. Dom. 1336. An. Regni X.

"rying one of my Daughters, as he desired to do. Wherefore I shall be so far from "failing to aid my Dear and Well-beloved Son the King your Master, that I shall al- "ways be ready to the best of my Power to further his Undertakings, both by Pru- "dent Advice and Warlike Assistance. Nor do I at all doubt, but that my Brother "Sr. John will do the same, who has not been slothfull in his Service to the King your "Master before this. But alas! our Country of Heinalt is too too inconsiderable in "respect of the flourishing Realm of France: And if we of our selves should once pro- "voke the French Arms upon us, England you know, is too far off to afford us a- "ny timely Assistance. Upon this, the Bishop of Lincoln answered thus unto the Earl.

"Sir, We most heartily in our Royal Masters Name return you our Thanks for the "great Affection you are pleased to bear unto his Affairs; and humbly desire you to "give our Lord the King of England your Advice, whose Friendship he had best have "recourse to for their Assistance in this weighty Concern; especially of such who are "your Neighbours, and border upon the Realm of France: That thereby we may "not only be render'd more Powerfull to prosecute this our Master's quarrel, but your "Country also may be more strongly Protected against any Violence, which otherwise it "might suffer for our sakes.

"Surely Gentlemen, repli'd the Earl, I cannot for the present think of any more "Puissant in War, nor more surely my Friends, nor more likely to be His, than the "Noble Duke of Brabant his Cosin-German, the Earl of Gueldre, who hath Married "his Sister, the Bishop of Liege, the Archbishop of Colen, the Marquis of Juliers, "Sr. Arnold of Baquehen, Sr. Valeran his Brother, and the Lord of Faulquemont. For "these Lords, as they are well addicted to your Masters Interest, so are they the on- "ly Men, that at the shortest warning can Raise the greatest Numbers of good Soul- "diers, of any I know: They are all good Captains, and well enclin'd to War, "especially against France, which is near at hand, if your Master can prevail with "them to begin once, being all together able to serve him with 10000 Men of Arms, if "they may have wages accordingly. And then if he please to come this way, 'tis but passing "the Water of Oyse and he is in King Philip's Dominions.

VII. This was the Effect of this first Essay, which when King Edward heard, he was well satisfied, and resolved to push on the business with all Speed and Vigour possible. As for those English Ambassadors who were then in France, they were now remanded home, because King Edward understood [f] that while they were treating of a Peace, King Philip had sent a well-rigg'd Fleet to the Assistance of the Scots against him. Now the Admiral of this Navy for the French was [g] David Bruce, the exil'd King of Scotland, who did much mischief to the English Merchants about the Isle of Wight, and besides had already enter'd the Isles of Garnsey and Jarsey, and put divers of the Inhabitants to the Sword. Wherefore King Edward immediately [h] gave Commission to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Henry Plantagenet, Son to Henry Earl of Lancaster, and others (himself being then at Bothwell in Scotland, so busied in the Affairs of that Realm, that he could not be at the meeting appointed) to treat with certain Prelates and others, whom he had commanded to meet at London on Wednesday after New-years day following, upon Matters relating to the Defence and safety of the Kingdom, repulsion of the Enemies, and other things concerning the State of the King and his Realm; as also seriously and fully to acquaint them with the Kings Intensions, to Ordain and do all things referring thereunto, and to His Honour, as if he were there Personally present. Nor indeed was the King of Englands Design [i] wholly unknown to King Philip of France, for whether by meer Suspicion, or more certain Information, the matter began by little and little to take wind so much, that presently the Mighty Zeal for the Holy War grew cold in France of a sudden; and King Philip countermanded all his Officers from making any farther Preparations, till he might see whither King Edward's Designes would tend. But before I proceed with those matters, I shall rid my hands of some things, which falling about this time, are fittest here to be inserted. Only I must not omit, that [k] Pope Benedict, seeing how matters began to go between the two Kings, sent by the hands of his Nuntio, Philip de Camberlake, his Letters bearing date the x Kal. Decemb. to both the Kings, endeavouring to perswade them to an Accommodation; but especially he sought to pacifie King Edward's enflamed mind, and exhorted him to put away from him the Lord Robert of Artois, who continually stirr'd him up to the War; besides which he wrote to Queen Philippa, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, that they [f] Walsing. Hypod. p. 114. n. 1.

[g] Ashmole p. 677.

[h] 11 Decemb. Rot. Scot. 10. Ed. 3. m. 3.

[i] Froiss. c. 28.

[k] Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1336. §. 46.

they would use their endeavours to bring the King to Terms. But all was too late, King Edward was too far exasperated by the Insolence of his Adversary: And thus the War began to break out between England and France, than which hardly ever any was either of more long continuance, or of more Fatal Consequence to Christendom. AN. DOM. 1336. An. Regni X.

VIII. On the [l] 14 of September, or as some say, in the latter end of * October, at the Town of St. Johnston, departed out of this Life the most hopefull young Prince, John Plantagenet, sirnamed of Eltham in Kent, the Place of his Birth; who was only Brother to King Edward, being the second Son of Edward the Second, by his Queen Isabella, Daughter to Philip le Bel King of France. He was [m] advanced to the Title of Earl of Cornwall by his Brother King Edward the Third; and was twice by him made Lieutenant of all England upon his Expeditions, the one into France, the other into Scotland, during his Absence. But in his Action of this Year he so heated himself, that he fell into a Feavour upon his return to St. Johnston, and now at last died, in the very Flower of his Youth, being but twenty Years of Age, and a Batchelour. His Body being embalmed, and brought into England, was with great Solemnity Interr'd [n] in St. Edmunds Chappel in Westminster Abbey, on the Southside of the Choire, and the Northside of the High Altar, on the Left hand of the Door of the said Chappel: Where the King his Brother raised for him a [o] most Noble Monument of Grey Marble, set about with 24 little Images of various-coloured Alabaster, and white Marble, under each whereof are the blank Escutcheons remaining, whereon had been as many several Coats of Arms depicted, which are now wholly worn away and decayed. On this Tomb lies his full Image of Admirable wrought Alabaster, in his Coat Armour, his Visage bare, and a deep Shield on his Left Arm, whereon are engraven the Arms of England within a Bordure of France, having two Angels on each side supporting his Head, and a Lion Couchant at his Feet, Carved and finely Pictured of the same Alabaster, with a Canopy covering the whole, with delicate wrought Spires and Masons Work, every where intermixed and Adorned with little Images and Angels, according to the Fashion of those times, supported by eight Pillars of white Stone, of the same Curious-wrought Work; But there is no Epitaph or Inscription to inform us any further.

[l] Adam Murimouth. * Fabian p. 203. Walsingh. hist. p. 117. n. 20.

[m] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 109.

[n] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 110.

[o] Keep's Monument. Westm. p. 66. &c. & Sandford's Geneal. Hist. p. 155 ubi the Figure of it.

The Scotch [p] Writers tell the manner of his Death thus; "that having done many "abominable Cruelties in that Kingdom, and especially without any Regard to Holy "Places, after all he came to St. John's Town, where (say they) the King his Bro- "ther then was in the Church at his Devotions near the Altar. That upon sight of "him, the King, who had heard of all his Barbarous and Profane Cruelties, question'd "him somewhat about those Matters: But receiving from him an harsh and unduti- "full Answer, was so far provoked, that immediately drawing his sword, he there slew "him with his own Hands upon the Place, adding this----That an Altar ought not to "be a Refuge for One, who had by Fire and Sword violated both Churches and Altars. Certainly this Sentence, which Hector puts into King Edward's Mouth, was no way unbecoming a Religious Prince, even thô he had perform'd such a Fact upon such a Brother, as they make this Lord John to have been. But this very Author, forgetting Decencies and Characters, at another time makes the same King as great a Profaner of Holy Places himself; and yet his Friend Buchanan likes not this Story of his so well, as to set his Hand to it, which he very seldom scruples to do, but when the Lye is too apparent: For indeed King Edward was not in Scotland at the time of Prince Johns Decease; and the young Lord was neither so Barbarous nor Profane, as Hector feigns; and besides, his Death was [q] Natural, as all our Histories and the Records themselves agree.

[p] Hector l. 15. f. 320. n. 40. &c.

[q] Knighton p. 2568. n. 30. & Holinsh. Scot. p. 237. n. 50. & Pat. 10. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 3. & Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 109. &c.

In the [r] Month of December there died also at St. Johnston the Lord Hugh Frenes (who in Title of his Wife, the Relict of Sr. Ebulo le Strange, was called Earl of Lincoln) of a Bloody Flux, occasion'd by an excessive cold; and indeed many other English were destroy'd by the vehement cold in those Quarters that Winter. This Earl Hugh was the [t] Third and Last Husband of Alice, Daughter and Heiress of Henry Lacy, Earl of Lincoln; but neither he, nor any of her other Husbands had any Issue by her.

[r] Walsingh. hist. p. 117. n. 20.

[t] Catal. Honbr. p. 947.

Queen Philippa of England [s] this Year was deliver'd of her second Son at Hatfield, who in Memory of her Father William Earl of Heinalt, was Christened by that Name, and sirnamed of Hatfield, the Place of his Birth, as was customary in those Days. But this young Prince William of Hatfield lived but a short while, and was buried in the Cathedral at York.

[s] Sandford's Geneal. Hist. p. 177. & Walsingh. Hypod. p. 113. n. 40.

An. Dom. 1336. An. Regni X.

IX. About this time (as it were to uſher in thoſe grand Affairs, which King Edward was now entring upon) there [u] appeared a fearfull Comet, which for a conſiderable time darted forth its Rays with long and terrible Streams toward the Eaſt and toward the South: It was look'd upon as a Forerunner both of thoſe Wars in the Holy Land, wherein the King of Armenia loſt all his Country to the Turks, and alſo of the great Devaſtation, that followed ſhortly after in the Noble Realm of France. Althô (if they might not be divers) I had rather ſet the time of this Comets Appearance to the Year following: For [x] we find, that in the Years 1337 and 1338. there were ſeen either two, or one and the ſame Comet, of ſuch a remarkable Phænomenon, that together with that which happen'd in the Year 1330, they employed the Pen of that learned Aſtrologer of thoſe Days, Godfry de Meldis an Oxonian, to write his Book called Judicium Stellæ Comatæ.

Alſo this Year in a Village called Leighton, about ſix miles Weſtward from Huntingdon, was calved a Calf with two Heads and Eight feet, if [y] Walſingham may obtain credit, as there is little doubt to be made of the probability of this Matter.

This Winter was very ſharp in England, there being a hard Froſt from the 27 of November to the 9 of February, but no Snow at all; whence Wheat became dear, but other Grain grew plenty. In many Parts of England the Willow-trees brought forth Flowers in January, like Roſes for Bigneſs and Colour; and Elder-trees bare fruit exactly like unto Cherries, but without any Stones; let who can, tell the Meaning of the Prodigy, ſays Walſingham.

[u] Aſhmole p. 646. & Fabian p. 203. & 208. & Walſingh. Hypod. p. 114. & Hiſt. p. 131. n. 30. Gaguin. l. 8. p. 134. Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 900.

[x] Eſq; Sherburne in his Catalogue of Aſtromers at the end of his Manilius, &c.

[y] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 119. n. 20. & 30. &c.

CHAPTER the Tenth.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward ſends a freſh Embaſſy to the Earl of Heinalt, with an account of 500 Gentlemen Voluntiers, whoſe Captains were the Lord Walter Manny and the Lord James Audley; with the ſucceſs of the Ambaſſadors. II. King Edward endeavors alſo to bring over the Flemings; the Earl of Flanders puts to death the Lord Sigar of Courtray, whereby he looſes the Affections of his People; who vanquiſh him in battle, and put him to flight. III. The Riſe of Jacob van Arteveld in Gaunt, his Popularity, Power and Intereſt. IV. The Engliſh Ambaſſadors make uſe of him to bring over the Flemings to the King their Maſter; with their Succeſs. V. The King in Parliament creates his Son the Prince, Duke of Cornwall, and makes ſeven Earls; the Prince at the ſame time dubbs twenty new Knights; with other things relating to that Parliament and the Affairs of Ireland. All the Lands of the Priors Aliens throughout England ſeiſed into the Kings Hands, and by him let to farm. VI. William the Good Earl of Heinalt dies, an inſtance of his Juſtice: and an account of a Divine Judgment upon an unnatural Siſter: William Son to the Good Earl ſucceeds; the Counteſs Dowager goes into a Nunnery. VII. King Edward ſends to demand the Crown of France, and makes many Potent Friends in High-Germany and elſewhere. King Philip ſeeks to draw off the Flemings to himſelf, but in vain. VIII. King Philip ſets a Garriſon in Catſand to intercept the Engliſh Commiſſioners: King Edward beats them out. IX. King Edward holds a Treaty of Peace with Philip, and with his Allies for further enabling him in the War. X. The Pope intercedes: The King calls a Parliament.

I. KING Edward the mean while not to ſlack his Buſineſs [a] ſends a Commiſſion to the Earl of Heinalt (wherein he is ſtiled William Earl of Heinalt, Holland and Zealand, and Lord of Friſeland, our Father-in-Law) and thereby conſtitutes him his Proctor to treat and agree with ſuch Noblemen, Perſons of Note, as he ſhould think beſt, touching both Alliances and Retainers. He alſo ſent Commiſſions with the like Power, and under the ſame Date, to William Marquis of Juliers, the Kings Brother-in-Law (he [b] having married Joan Siſter to Queen Philippa) to Sr. John Montgomery Knight, and to Doctor John Waweyn Canon of Darlington, his Liegers in thoſe Parts.

[a] 16 Decemb. Pat. 10. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 6. Aſhmole p. 646.

[b] Ritterſhuſius in Tab. Com. Hollandiæ & Selandiæ, &c.

In

In April following a like Commiſſion bearing Date the 19 of the ſaid Month, was iſſued to Henry Biſhop of Lincoln, William Lord Montagu and William Lord Clinton, then newly made Earls, and they immediately diſpatch'd to the Earl of Heinalt, on another Embaſſy far more honourable than before: For it conſiſted of ten Great Barons and fourty other Knights; who were all fully inſtructed to treat further with the Earl, and to article and conclude with ſuch Lords of the Empire, as by the ſaid Earl had been nominated. When they were come to Valenciennes, each of them kept a great State and Port, ſparing for no Expence, no more than if the King of England had been there in Perſon, whereby they were highly extolled and reſpected by the People of thoſe Parts. In the Company of theſe Engliſh Knights there was a gallant Troop of young Engliſh Batchelors, who had all their left Eyes hoodwink'd and clos'd up with a piece of Silk. It was talk'd, as if they had made a Vow to their Miſtreſſes in England, "That they would never take off thoſe Patches, till they had "paſſed into France, and there performed ſome notable Exploit of Arms upon that "Nation. Some ſay, [d] that for all this, they could never hear of any great Matter performed by any of them. If not, certainly 'tis for want of Reading or Underſtanding: For of this Reſolute Company were no leſs than 500, Captains whereof were reported the young Lord Walter Manny, that afterwards did Wonders in France, and was the firſt that begun the War, as we ſhall ſhew preſently; the young Lord Thomas Holland, and alſo the noble Lord James Audely, [e] then not three and twenty Years of Age, of whoſe valiant Acts and Heroick Exploits in the French Wars, the Hiſtories of both Nations make very honourable Mention. In his Minority, being under the Guardianſhip of Roger Lord Mortimer, firſt Earl of March, he was by him cheated into a Recogniſance of ten thouſand Marks, which Debt, as a Chattel, became due to the King upon the Attaindure of the ſaid Mortimer: But his Majeſty being ſoon convinced of his high Merit (for thô ſo young, he accompanied the King in all his Wars at his own Expences) freely diſcharged him of that Summ. He bore for his Arms Gules a Fret Or, and was afterwards one of that moſt honourable Company, whom King Edward choſe for his Firſt Companions of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter; and particularly in the Field of Poictiers he behav'd himſelf ſo eminently well, that he obtain'd this Teſtimony of John then King of France, to have beſt approved himſelf of any Knight whether French or Engliſh in Battle that day. But I muſt not foreſtall the Reader by too long a Digreſſion; only this I thought neceſſary in order to refute the Lord Montaigne, and to ſhew what kind of Gentlemen theſe were, and that at leaſt ſome of their Actions were not inferior to their Promiſes. However this [f] Vow of theirs was rumor'd as the occaſion of thoſe honourable Patches, while they were at the Court of Earl William at Valenciennes, thô they themſelves would by no means acknowledge any ſuch thing, becauſe the War was not yet declared.

AN. DOM. 1337. An. Regni XI.

[c] Froiſ. c. 28. fol. 17. b.

[d] Lord Montaigne in his Eſſays l. 2. c. 25.

[e] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 748. b.

[f] Froiſ. c. 28. f. 17. b.

Theſe Engliſh Lords with their Company having thus for a while kept together in great ſplendor, did notwithſtanding all the while ply their Maſters Buſineſs ſo well, that by the [g] 24 of May enſuing, they had fully engaged divers of the Nobility and Others in Heinalt, Gueldre and the Marquiſate of Juliers, to appear in the Kings Aſſiſtance againſt the French, and withall ſettled the Proportion of Men and Arms, wherewith each of them were to furniſh the King in that Service, together with the Stipends and Wages to be paid them in lieu thereof.

[g] Aſhmole p. 647. ex Rot. Aleman. 11 Ed. 3. m. 9, 10, 11.

The mean time the [h] Biſhop of Lincoln taking ſome of the Chiefs with him, rode to John Duke of Brabant, who entertained them with much Honour, and lighty accorded to their Motion, "Promiſing to ſuſtain the King of Englands Quarrel to the "beſt of his Power, as well by Council, as by Force of Arms: That his Country "ſhould be open to his Coſin the King of England, or any of his; ſo that He or "they might come or go, armed or unarmed, at his or their pleaſure: That if King "Edward would defie the French King, he alſo would do the ſame, and enter the "Realm of France with Forces to the number of a thouſand Men of Arms; ſo that "their Wages might be paid them from England. And accordingly on the 13 of July we find, that John Duke of Brabant, Lorraine and Lemberg, was retained for the King; and with the aſſent of the Emperour, was the Confederation made with Lewis his eldeſt Son, there ſtiled Marquis of Brandenburgh, Count Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Bavaria, and Arch-Chamberlain to the Emperour. There paſſed alſo between the Emperour himſelf and the King of England and their Heirs, an Union and Confederacy, which obliged them to uſe all their Power particularly againſt Philip of Valois (who bore himſelf as King of France) and his Succeſſors in that Kingdom, for the Recovery and Defence of their Honours, Inheritances and Poſſeſſions.

[h] Froiſ. ibid.

[i] Rot. Aleman. 11 Ed. 3. m. 8. 2 Septem. ibid. m. 6. ibid. m. 11.

Things

An. Dom. 1337. An. Regni XI.

Things ſucceeding thus happily, the [k] Engliſh Lords return to the reſt of their Company at Valenciennes; whence by Letters and Meſſengers they ſo well managed the reſidue of that Affair, that the Lord Reginald Earl of Gueldre and Zuitphen (who had married Eleanora the King of Englands Siſter) and William Marquis of Juliers (who had married Joan one of Queen Philippa's Siſters) with Walram Archbiſhop of Cologne, and the Lord Valeran his Brother, and the Lord Faulquemont, came all to Valenciennes to treat with the Engliſh Lords about the Premiſes before the Earl of Heinalt and the Lord John his brother. And here at laſt on Conſideration of certain Summs of Florens to be paid to each of them, beſide ſuch and ſuch Wages for their Men; They all undertook to defie the French King, and to bring into the Field againſt him every Man ſuch a number to attend King Edward, when and where it ſhould pleaſe him: Promiſing moreover on the like Conditions to procure other Lords of the Empire, ſuch as were beſt inclin'd to War and moſt able, from beyond the Rhine.

[k] Froiſ. ibid.

After this Covenant thus made, the Almaine Lords departed to their ſeveral Countries; but the Engliſh remain'd ſtill with the Earl of Heinalt, whence they ſent frequent Meſſengers to Adolph Biſhop of Liege, being very deſirous to bring him over. But he was ſo firmly knit to the French Kings Intereſt, that there were but ſmall hopes of ever prevailing with him. As for the Valiant King John of Bohemia, thô they wiſh'd for him, he being a Prince of great Wiſdom, as well as Reſolution, and of great Power in the Empire, which once was govern'd by his Father Henry of Luxemburgh; yet they forbore to attempt any thing upon him, becauſe they ſaw plainly, that having married his Daughter to King Philips Son, John Duke of Normandy, he could neither in honour nor intereſt move another way. And indeed both he and the foreſaid Biſhop of Liege ſtuck ſo cloſe to the Crown of France, that nothing but Death could ſeparate them from it; which they both at laſt ſuffer'd in one day, at the famous Battle of Creſſy, wherein the Engliſh obtain'd a moſt ſignall Victory.

But however they prevail'd elſewhere, and retain'd in the Kings Name, for his intended Expedition into France, ſeveral other Noblemen of thoſe Countries; [l] as namely Adolph Earl of Mont (who having done Fealty and Homage to King Edward, received of him in reward thereof a Penſion for Life of 1200 Florens of Gold per annum out of his Exchequer) Everard eldeſt Son to Theoderick Earl of Limbergh, Adolph Earl of Marlia, Robert de Touburgh Lord of Warnich, Theoderick Earl of Loſſen and Heuſeberg, and the Lord Blatikenberg, and Theoderick de Montjoy Lord of Walkenberg, beſides divers Valiant Knights and Commanders of eminent Note.

[l] Aſhmole p. 647.

II. Moreover King Edward well conſidering, how opportunely the Flemings lay to annoy the Kingdom of France, and how their Trade in Wooll and other Merchandiſes, which came from England, made them in a great meaſure obnoxious to him, reſolves to attempt them. And thereupon ſends over [m] an Engliſh Knight, named Sr. Bernard Brett, of an excellent Tongue and obliging Deportment; who (if upon tryal he ſhould find any Difficulty with Lewis, [n] ſirnamed of Creſſy, Earl of Flanders) was then ſecretly by promiſes and other arts to work upon the Demagogues, and ſuch as were moſt acceptable to the Populace; ſo as to perſwade them to enter League and Amity with the Crown of England. The Earl of Flanders, thô he was perfect French at heart, yet could not, he thought, in reaſon, but propound this Requeſt of King Edwards to his Eſtates being called together in Council. In ſhort, the King of England found more Favourers here than the Earl had imagin'd, many openly alledging, that it was more for their Intereſt to prefer his Friendſhip than that of France; the chief of whom was a Lord of Flanders, named [o] Sr. Siger of Courtray, who ſtifly maintain'd that Opinion in Council; for which he began to be in great diſlike with the Earl.

[m] Fabian p. 204

[n] Engliſh Atlas 4 Vol. p. 239.

[o] Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 903.

This Knight [p] had been accounted a Perſon of ſingular Honour, and of unqueſtionable Valour and Fidelity to his Lord the Earl of Flanders; but whether that he was won by the Policy and Golden Perſwaſion of this Engliſh Knight Sr. Bernard Brett, or whether he indeed thought it the beſt Advice for the Wealth of his Lord and of his Country, he was perfectly now for abetting the Engliſh Intereſt. His uſual Reſidence was in the City of Gaunt, the Metropolis in thoſe Days of all Flanders, where he kept great Hoſpitality, eſpecially for the entertainment of Strangers, for which he was extreamly dear to the common People, who call'd him the Lord of Courteſie. This his manner of being Free to all Men, made him not doubt of entertaining the Engliſh, among others, with all civility and honour; whereat the jealous Head of King Philip was ſo ſtung, that upon News thereof he ſent to the Earl of Flanders, commanding him to ſtrike ſtrike off his Head, as One whom he affirmed to be corrupted with Engliſh Gold from his Duty. The Earl, who was already not well-pleas'd with the Lord Sigar of Courtray, not daring, or not willing to give King Philip any occaſion of Suſpition, ſent for him accordingly: Whereupon Sr. Sigar readily obeyed, as one, who having done no ill, ſuſpected none, but when the Earl had got him once in his power, without Proceſs or Judgment he cauſed him preſently to be beheaded. AN. DOM. 1337. An. Regni XI.

[p] Froiſ. c. 29. fol. 18.

This raſh and illegal Action of the Earls did ſo incenſe the Commons of Gaunt and Bruges, that they began plainly to Rebel againſt him, openly rejected his Government, and prepared to reſiſt him by force of Arms. The [q] Earl thinking to chaſtiſe them for their preſumption, gather'd all his Lords and Knights about him; but ſoon after being met by the Commons in plain Battle, after a long Fight they utterly routed him, ſo that he hardly ſaved himſelf by flight; and then entring into a ſtrong Caſtle of his, he began to fortifie with all diligence. [q] Fabian p. 205.

III. Things thus ſtanding between the Earl and his people, [r] there aroſe in Gaunt a Man of mean Birth to the Higheſt Command of all; he was by profeſſion a Refiner of Honey, or rather, as others ſay, [s] a Brewer, his Name Jacob van Arteveld, or as the French call him, Jaques d' Arteville; but by reaſon of his great Wealth, ſubtle Wit, and boldneſs of Mind, he had long been of ſome Authority among the People; whereupon now he improv'd his former Popularity ſo far, that of a ſudden by his Dexterity he render'd himſelf more abſolute than ever the Earl of Flanders was himſelf, or any other before him. He had all things entirely at his Command, none having Courage or Power to reſiſt him; for undertaking to be the Peoples Patron, thoſe who would not appear his Friends, were look'd upon as Common Enemies; And he never walk'd in the Streets of Gaunt with under Threeſcore or Fourſcore luſty Yeomen at his Heels; among whom were Three or Four who underſtood his moſt intimate Secrets. So that whenever he met with any whom he feared or hated, that man was ſlain without Remedy: For ſo he had precontracted with thoſe his three or four Intimado's, that upon meeting of any One, if he ſhould make ſuch and ſuch a ſign to them, they ſhould immediately diſpatch him whatſoever he was, even thô himſelf ſhould ſay to the contrary, without any ſcruple, queſtion, or demurr. By this means, of thoſe that did not love him, he was ſo feared, that every body was glad to diſſemble a complyance with any thing, that Jacob van Arteveld had a Mind to. Theſe Yeomen at any time when they had brought their Maſter home, us'd to go abroad for their Dinners, after which they would return again into the Street before his Lodgings, and there wait till he came out, and ſo attend him till Supper time. Their ſtanding wages were four Flemiſh groats per diem for each man (beſide other profits) which four groats the day was duly paid every Week. And thus in every Town he had Souldiers and Servants, for their wages, at his Commandment; who were to watch and eſpie, if any perſon had a Deſign againſt him, or ſo, and to give him Information thereof: Which having once received, he would never leave till he had baniſh'd or deſtroy'd that man. Eſpecially, he took care to baniſh all the Lords, Knights, Eſquires, and Burgeſſes, who were known or ſuſpected to be Friends to the Earl: Of all whoſe Lands he would levy one Moiety for his own uſe, the other to the uſe of the Wives and Children of the ſaid Exiles. As for the Earls Rents and Profits, he collected them every groat himſelf, and expended them at his Pleaſure, without taking or making any Account. Yet if he ſaid he wanted Money, the People either durſt not, or would not, but believe him, and where he had a mind to borrow of any Burgeſs, he was refus'd nothing. [r] Froiſ. c. 29. fol. 18. [s] Mezeray ad hanc an. p. 14.

But it is very obſervable, that when God permits any great Evil to ariſe among men, his gracious Providence at the ſame time is creating a Remedy againſt that Evil: So now at that very time, when Jacob van Arteveld was riſing to this Inſolence of Power, a Friendſhip was making up between him and the Engliſh Intereſt; which at laſt was the occaſion of his Downfall, as hereafter we ſhall ſee.

IV. For the Engliſh Lords who ſtill kept an Honourable Port at Valenciennes, when they underſtood the Errant about which the King their Maſter had ſent Sr. Bernard Bret, and alſo heard of this new diſcord between the Earl and the good Towns of Flanders, they immediately thought to make ſome Advantage of all this for their Maſters ſervice; knowing it would be very acceptable unto him, if by any means they might win the Flemings to their ſide. Upon their adviſing with the Earl in this Matter, he plainly told them, "That without doubt the aid of the Flemings could not but be of "very great Importance: But added he, "I verily think your endeavours to gain them will "prove utterly ineffectual, unleſs you can firſt make Jacob van Arteveld your Friend.

The

An. Dom. 1337. An. Regni XI.

The Engliſh Lords reſolv'd to do their beſt, and thereupon departed for Flanders: Being there, they diſtributed themſelves into Three Parties, One for Gaunt, another for Bruges, and the Third for Ipres; and they all kept ſo high a Port, and ſpent ſo largely, as if Gold and Silver flow'd from their Hands: And yet beyond all this they made many great Promiſes, and Liberal Offers to thoſe whom they confer'd with about theſe Matters. 'Twas the Biſhop of Lincoln's Province to be at Gaunt, and he ſucceeded ſo well by help of his ſmooth Tongue, and more Eloquent Hand, that Jacob van Arteveld became forthwith his humble Servant. By Jacob's means the Repreſentatives of the good Towns of Flanders were often conven'd together, before whom the Offers of the Engliſh Commiſſioners were propounded, concerning many conſiderable Advantages, Priviledges, and Franchiſes, on ſuch Conditions to be Granted unto them by the King of England. In ſhort, things were here ſo well menaged, that it was fully agreed, that the King of England, or any of his might come into Flanders armed or unarmed, and go at his or their Pleaſure: But as for themſelves they added, "how they were ſtraightly bound to the Pope in a Bond of [t] 2000000 "Florens of Gold, to be paid on peril of a general Interdiction, never more to make War "againſt the King of France. And with this Anſwer they deſired the Engliſh Commiſſioners to be content for that time.

[t] Aſhmole p. 650.

Hereupon they return'd very well ſatisfied to Valenciennes, whence they ſent frequently to England to give the King an account of their Progreſs; and he for his part moſt liberally ſupply'd them with Gold and Silver to bear their own Charges, and to preſent to the Lords of Almaine, who were very ready to receive whatever was offer'd of that kind.

At this time alſo the King ſent an Orator to the Pope, Requeſting that with his good leave he might enter a ſtrict League and Alliance with the Emperour of Germany, becauſe as then the ſaid Emperour was not only Excommunicate himſelf, but alſo all thoſe, who joyned themſelves unto him, were involved in the like ſentence. But to this Requeſt of the Kings, the Pope refuſed to conſent, and endeavour'd to diſſwade him from that Deſign by his [u] Letters, bearing date at Avignon 13 Kal. Auguſt An° Pontificatûs 3. Thô for all this we ſhall find the King to enter a League with the ſaid Emperour the Year following.

[u] Extant apud Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1337. §. 7.

V. Thus ſtrongly did King Edward prepare, before he would Commence a War againſt ſo Powerfull a Monarch; all which thô it prov'd in a manner unprofitable, and thô little or nothing of all his Glorious Actions was really performed, but by his own Forces, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter: Yet his great Prudence appears ſufficiently from theſe Inſtances of his Foreſight and Conduct, and that he was not Raſh nor Preſumptuous; but Reſolute with Deliberation. Yet next to God, he repoſed his chief Confidence in the Valour of his own Subjects; and now as well to Reward paſt Services, as to give Encouragement to new Ones, in a Parliament held at Weſtminſter * about the Feaſt * of St. Gregory, the Pope and Confeſſor, he converted the Earldom of Cornwall (void by the Death of the Lord John of Eltham his Brother) into a Dukedom, and confer'd it on his Eldeſt Son and Heir Prince Edward, who was now but ſix Years of Age, [x] inveſting him by the ſword only, together with the County Palatinate of Cheſter; adding ſhortly after ſuch Mannors and Priviledges to this Title, [y] which were for the future to be inſeperable, and to deſcend perpetually to the Eldeſt Sons of the Kings of England, his Succeſſors; but upon the Death or Non-exiſtence of ſuch Dukes, to revert unto the Crown: And [z] this was the firſt Precedent for the Creation of the Title of Duke with us in England. The Charter of this Creation bears date the 17 of March; but other particulars of this Matter I have already ſpoken of, when I was about the Birth of this young Prince. On the day preceding the King created the Lord Henry [a] Plantagenet (Son to the Earl of Lancaſter) Earl of Darby; and the Lord William Montague at the ſame time he made Earl of Salisbury, with a grant of the yearly Rent of 20*l.* out of the Profits of that County; alſo the Lord William Clinton Earl of Huntingdon, with a grant of a 1000 Marks Land per annum for him and his Heirs-male for ever, beſides 20*l.* Rent alſo iſſuing out of the Profits of that County, for his better ſupport in that Dignity. At the ſame time the Lord Hugh Audley, Coſin to the Lord James Audley, was created Earl of Gloceſter; the Lord Hugh Courtney, an old tough Souldier of almoſt Fourſcore, was now created Earl of Devonſhire, thô he was made ſo by Writ two Years before, as we have ſhewed: Beſides theſe the Lord Robert Hufford was made Earl of Suffolk, and the Lord William Bohun Earl of Northampton; to the Earl of Northampton ſhortly after the King gave a Grant of the Caſtle, Mannor, and Town of Stamford, with the Lord-

* Knighton p. 2568. n. 50. * i.e. 12 Martii

[x] Aſhmole p. 671. [y] Dugd. Warw. p. 90.

[z] Aſhmole ibid.

[a] Vid. Dugd. Bar. ad horum ſingulorum nomina, &c. Knighton p. 2568. n. 60. Adam Murimouth. Will. Shepſteed. Sr Tho. de la More.

ſhip

ſhip of Grantham in Lincolnſhire (which John Warren Earl of Surrey held for Life) alſo of the Caſtle and Mannor of Fotheringhay in Northamptonſhire, and of the Caſtle and Mannor of Okeham in Rutland, with the Sheriffalty of the ſaid County, to hold to himſelf and the Heirs-Male of his Body, under certain conditions in the ſaid Grant expreſſed: The extent whereof may be [f] ſeen in the Record. To the Earl of Suffolk the King gave (over and above an annuity of twenty pounds ſub nomine & honore Comitis, pro tertio Denario Comitatûs illius, which anciently belonged to all Earls) the Honour [g] of Eay in Suffolk, and the Mannor of Baſe-Court in the Pariſh of St. Giles without Cripplegate in London, commonly called the Barbican, [*] becauſe of old it had been a Burgkenning, or Watch-Tower for the City. Many like Advantages together with their Honours, the King at this time heap'd on the reſt of theſe Noble and Valiant Earls; at which time alſo the young Duke of Cornwall (afterwards Prince of Wales) made [h] twenty new Knights; to wit, Sr. Edward Montague (Brother to the Earl of Salisbury, and Simon [i] Montague Biſhop of Ely) Sr. Thomas Somerton, Sr. John Liſle, Son to Robert Lord Liſle, Sr. Richard Darcy, Sr. ------Damorie, Sr. John Poultney, Sr. Peter de la Mere, Sr. Roger Banant, Sr. Roger Hilary, Sr. --------Bolingbroke, Sr. --------Buterell, Sr. Simon Swanland, Sr. William [k] Scott, Sr. William Baſſet, Sr. Robert Sodington, Sr. William de la Zouch, Sr. ------Cogſhall, Sr. Roger Sangraville, Sr. John Strachie, and Sr. Thomas de la More, who wrote in French the Life and Death of Edward the Second, and alſo of our Edward the Third, both which are Extant in Latine, thô the latter is not yet publiſhed. What we ſaid of the Woollen Manufacture in the Fourth Paragraph of the preceding Chapter, ſome will have to have been done in this Parliament; the matter is all one, let the time be now or then; for by theſe [l] Laws, which gave ſo great Encouragement to Foreign Clothworkers to come hither, and alſo prohibited that none ſhould buy any Cloth made beyond Sea, the occupation of Cloth-Weevers ſoon came in queſt more than ever before in this Nation.

AN. DOM. 1337. An. Regni XI.

[f] Eſc. 14. Ed. 3. n. 87. Linc.

[g] Mil's Catal. Honor. p. 528.

[*] Stow's Survey of Lond. & Hiſt. p. 233.

[h] 24. Adam Murim. & Stow p. 233. Holinſh. p. 900.

[i] Godw. Catal. Bpps. p. 268.

[k] Weevers Fun. Monum. p. 269.

[l] Vid. Statute Book An. XI Ed. 3. p. 77.

Sr. John Charleton [m] Senior, Lord of Powys, a Man highly Eſteemed for his Fidelity, Prudence, and Valour, was at this time conſtituted Juſtice of Ireland (the Lord [n] Darcy being then Steward of the Kings Houſhold, and otherwiſe employ'd in the Kings Affairs) and accordingly in October following, [o] on the Feſtival of St. Calixt the Pope, and a Tueſday, he arrived ſafely there with his Brother Thomas Biſhop of Hereford, Chancellor, and Thomas Rice Treaſurer of Ireland, and two Hundred luſty Welchmen. But whether for any juſt cauſe or no, in the Year following, the Biſhop [p] his Brother complaining to the King by Letters of Sr. Johns Miſgovernment, was himſelf appointed in his Room, and further made Guardian or Deputy of that Realm. But the Affairs of Ireland I ſhall not proſecute, becauſe I haſte to more Conſiderable and Weighty Matters, referring the Reader to Holinſhead, and others, who may ſatisfie them of thoſe things.

[m] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 72.

[n] Id. 1 Vol. p. 371

[o] Chron. Joh. Clinne. i. e. 14 Octob. E Dom. Lit.

[p] Godw. Catal. Bpps. p. 458. & Holinſhead Ireland p. 71.

And foraſmuch as there were ſundry [q] Priories at that time in England belonging to Foreign Abbeys, and thereupon called Aliens, becauſe they were Cells to ſome Monaſtery or other beyond the Seas; the Number whereof at this time was found to amount to One Hundred and Ten, beſides thoſe in Ireland, Aquitain, and Normandy; King Edward now thought fitting (becauſe of his Wars intended againſt France) to confiſcate unto his own Uſe all the Goods of the ſaid Priories, with all the Lands, Tenements, Fees, and Advowſons of the ſame, Letting out their Houſes to Farm, as his Grandfather before him had done, in the 23 Year of his Reign, upon the like occaſion. And this was Cuſtomary not only before this, but alſo afterwards, [r] when ever the Wars brake out between England and France, for the Kings of England to ſeiſe all the Poſſeſſions of the Cluniacks, and other Aliens into their Hands, and to put them out to Farm to the Religieux themſelves, on conſideration of an annual Penſion. But when the War ended, there was full Reſtoration made of all again, as particularly we ſhall find four and twenty Years hence, or in the 35 of this King.

[q] Ex Bandello Priorat. Alienigenarum An°. 11. Ed. 3. fiſco applicatorum. Vid. Clem. Reyneri. Apoſtol. Benedictinorum in Append. Par. 2. p. 71. & Weever's Fun. Monum. p. 328.

[r] id. Clem. Reyner. in Append. Par. 3. p. 146.

VI. While King Edward was thus buſied at home, and his Ambaſſadors equally concern'd in his ſervice abroad, there [s] died at his Palace in Valenciennes, William the Third, Earl of Heinalt, Holland, Zealand, and Friſeland, Father to Philippa King Edward's beloved Queen; who for his Great Mercy temper'd with Juſtice and other Princely Vertues, was ſirnamed the Good. One Example of his Exact Juſtice I ſhall ſhew, whereby we may gueſs at his other Perfections: The Deed was done not long before his Death, upon a Bayliff of South-Holland, [t] who had unjuſtly taken a goodly fair Cow from a poor Peaſant, which had been the ſole ſupport of himſelf, his Wife and Children: As there are ſome Kine in that Country, which can give twenty * Pottles of Milk and more in a Day. The Earl lay then ſick on his Death-Bed, as it proved; but it was his Cuſtom, never to Debar the meaneſt Suitors, whether he was ſick or well: So that upon this poor Countrymans Complaint and Examination duly had, the Bayliff was adjudg'd to give unto the Peaſant an 100 Crowns of Gold, for the great Wrong he had done him; which was accordingly performed. But then for his Affront to Publique Juſtice, ſince he was an Officer, and had thus abuſed the Authority entruſted to him, the Earl ſent for an Executioner, and cauſed him to ſtrike his Head off by his own Bed-ſide. I ſhall only crave leave to add one more ſmall digreſſion of a matter happening in his Days, which thô not pertinent to the Hiſtory, is yet well worthy Memory for its great Rarity.

[s] Junii 9. obiit, Ut apparet ex illius Hiſtoriâ in l. dicto Time's Storeh. p. 720. Alii 6 Junii ponunt.

[t] Vid. Time's Storeh. p. 720. l. 7. c. 30. & Engl. Atlas 4 Vol. p. 153.

* To enforce the truth of this Relation a little, Conradus Geſner hath theſe Words: "The "Oxen of the Belgian Provinces, eſpecially in Frie- "ſland and Holland, are of very great ſtature: For "it hath been found by experience, that one of "them hath weigh'd Sixteen Hundred pounds Troy "Weight. And when the Earl of Hoochſtadt was "at Machlin in Frieſland, there was preſented un- "to him a Fair Large Ox, which being killed, "weigh'd above Two Thouſand Five Hundred "Twenty Eight Pounds [which I reckon to a- "mount to 180 Stone and 8 Pounds.] Where- "fore that ſucceeding Ages might not miſtruſt the "Truth of ſo ſtrange a Matter; the ſaid Earl "cauſed the Picture of the ſaid Ox to be ſet up "in his Palace, at his full Proportion, with an In- "ſcription ſignifying his Weight, and the Day and "Year, when this Ox was deliver'd and killed. Conrad. Geſner. Hiſt. of Fourfooted Beaſts. p. 70. Engl. folio.

An. Dom. 1337. An. Regni XI. In the Eleventh Year of this Earls Government, which was the Tenth Year of the Reign of King Edward the Second of England, and the Year of our Lord 1316, there happen'd even in England a great Scarcity of Corn, as appears by * our Hiſtorians; but in this † Earls Country there was ſo terrible a Dearth and Famine, that poor people fell down dead in the Streets for Hunger. Many alſo were found Dead in the Highways, and in Woods and Fields, whither they went to ſeek for Herbs and Roots to ſtop the Importunities of craving Nature: Little Children would die, as they indeavour'd to ſuck at their ſtarving Mothers Breaſts, and ſome Women could not refrain eating their Children. In this time of Famine a certain Poor Woman of Leyden, being extreamly oppreſt with Hunger, came to a Siſter of her own, who was far better to paſs, begging of her for Godſake to lend her ſome Bread; which ſhe promiſed with Thanks to repay, when it ſhould pleaſe God to enable her. The hard-hearted Siſter deny'd her oftentimes, notwithſtanding the other was ſo importunate, and withall told her, that ſhe was aſſured by her Countenance, how ſhe muſt needs have ſufficient for her ſelf, if not to ſpare. Hereupon the unmerciſull Wretch (lying both to God and her poor Siſter) ſaid, "If I have any Bread to help my "ſelf withall, I wiſh to God it may all inſtantly be turned into Stone. It ſeems the heavy Diſpleaſure of Almighty God laid hold on thoſe raſh Words of hers; for going ſoon after to the Cupboard to relieve her ſelf, ſhe found all her Loaves of Bread moſt plainly converted into ſolid ſtones; ſo that ſhe her ſelf died for want of that, which ſhe had ſo wickedly deny'd her own Siſter. It is moſt credibly told us; ‡ that one or two of thoſe Stone-Loaves are yet to be ſeen in St. Peters Church at Leyden in Memory of this moſt juſt and extraordinary Judgement.

* Walſing. hiſt. p. 83.
† Time's Storehouſe p. 720.
‡ Time's Storehouſe ibid.

However this Good Earl William, King Edward's Father-in-Law, having been all along a moſt Vertuous Prince, Victorious in War, Wiſe and Judicious, Well-ſpoken and Learned, a great Friend to Peace, affable to all Men, and univerſally Beloved, after he had Governed his Provinces of Heinalt, Holland, Zealand, and Frieſland, for the ſpace of 32 Years, died, as before we ſaid, and with [a] great Pomp was buried at the Fryers in Valenciennes. The Biſhop of Cambray himſelf ſang the Maſs, and beſides the Engliſh Lords, there were preſent many Dukes, Earls, and Barons of ſundry Countries; as well for the manifold Alliances he had abroad, as for that his Fame was Singular, and his Memory Dear to all Men. He was ſucceeded by William the Fourth, his Son and Heir, who had Married the Lady Joan, Daughter to John Duke of Brabant, giving her for her [b] Joynture the Land of Binche upon the Hayſne, a fair and goodly Inheritance. As for the Lady Johanna Counteſs Dowager of Heinalt, the young Earls Mother, and Siſter to King Philip of France, ſhe reſolved to ſpend the reſt of her Days in a Nunnery at Fontaine on the River Scheld, where being ſoon admitted ſhe gave her ſelf wholly to Devotion, Almſdeeds, and other Pious Offices.

[a] Froiſ. c. 29.
[b] Vid. l. 1. c. 24. §. 7.

VII. And now King Edward being fully in earneſt, ſends Dr. John Stratford Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Dr. Richard Bury Biſhop of Durham, Henry Burwaſh Biſhop of Lincoln, and the Earls of Salisbury, Northampton, Huntingdon and Suffolk, with Sr. Geoffry Scroop Lord Chief Juſtice of England, and John Lord Darcy Steward of the Kings Houſhold, his Commiſſioners to the French King, not now to demand Reſtitution of a few Caſtles or Towns unjuſtly taken and detain'd, but to declare King Edwards Rightfull Claim to the Crown of France it ſelf; as alſo by the by, to propoſe pose some Conditions for a Treaty with [c] David Bruce the exil'd King of Scotland, then in France. But if the French King should prove untractable and averse to Reason, then to proceed to the Court of Prince [d] Rupert, Count Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Bavaria, and the Emperours Brother, to engage him also on the Behalf of England against King Philip. These [e] Ambassadours being arrived at Bologne, received there Advice, that King Edwards Mind was alter'd; as who justly conceived, that their journey might be hazardous and expose them to the Fury of a passionate Prince, who in his displeasure made no difference between Just and Unjust, Sacred or Profane, and had before threatned his Negotiators with Death, if ever they came again, when before his Coronation, they were pleading the King of Englands Right to that Crown in the Chamber of France: Wherefore leaving off their design of visiting Paris, they bent their course for Heinalt; where they renewed the League with [f] William the young Earl of Heinalt, the Earl of Gueldre, and the Marquis of Juliers. And proceeding to Colen made a like Agreement with Rupert Duke of Bavaria, he undertaking to serve King Edward against all Men Living (the Emperour his Brother only excepted) with an hundred and fifty Men of Arms, the whole number amounting to a thousand Men; in lieu whereof the English Commissioners engag'd, before their Return for England, to pay unto him at Dort 2700 Florens of Florence, or their equivalent Value in Sterling; and moreover upon the Feast of St. Michael next ensuing the summ of 15000 Florens of good Gold, viz. for every Souldier 15 Florens for the two first Months Service.

AN. DOM. 1337. An. Regni XI.

[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 185.
[d] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 646.
[e] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 531.
[f] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 531.

Nay it appears by one of Pope Benedicts [g] Letters to King Philip, bearing Date at Avignon, VIII Id. Novemb. Anno Pontificatûs III, how there were Treaties on foot at this time, that Lewis the Emperour, laying aside his Right to the Roman Empire, and only retaining to himself the Kingdom of Almain, the Secular Electors therefore giving him some good Equivalent, the King of England on Consideration of no small Summs of Mony, should be made King of the Romans, and elected Emperour. Or if this might not be done, that however he should be irrevocably deputed for his Life Vicar of the Empire, as to the Lower Part thereof; that by reason of the Neighbourhood he might the more opportunely and powerfully infest the Kingdom of France.

[g] Extant apud Odoric. Raynald. ad An. 1337. §. 12.

King [h] Philip of Valois was not ignorant of all this Diligence of King Edward's both at home and abroad: But it chiefly fretted him, that he had made so great Progress among the Flemings; whom he repented he had not more early by way of Prevention sought to fasten to himself. But remembring how [i] firm the Earl of Flanders was to his side, he did not wholly despair of bringing them over, especially knowing them to be a People inconstant, mercenary, and likely to turn any way for Advantage. He therefore sends to Gaunt the Bishop of St. Denis with Others, to propose on his behalf very advantageous Offers both to that and other the good Towns of Flanders; of which one was, that King Philip would release unto them all such Seignories and Lordships of theirs, as either he, or any of his Progenitors, had taken or withheld from them. But he came too late; For now Jacob van Arteveld bore such sway, that none durst contradict his Opinion, and the [k] Earl himself had been already forced to withdraw his Wife and Children into France for their Security: So that Gaunt and Bruges, Ipre, Courtray and Cassel with other Towns thereabout, rejected utterly the Offers of the French King, and adhered firmly to King Edward; especially bearing an [l] old Grudge to King Philip for the War he made against them in the beginning of his Reign, whereof we made some mention in the Second Year of this our History.

[h] Froiss. c. 30.
[i] Fabian p. 205.
[k] Froiss. c. 30.
[l] Fabian p. 205.

VIII. The mean while in the Isle of [m] Cadsand (lying between the Haven of Sluce and Flushing) certain Knights and Esquires of Flanders, who held with the Earl against the Towns, made a strong Garrison by command of King Philip, and their Lord Earl Lewis. The chief Captains were Sr. Guy of Rijckenburgh, Bastard-Brother to the Earl, Sr. Duras Halvin, Sr. John Rhodes, Sr. Giles Son to the Lord Lestriefe, Sr. Nicholas Chauncy and Others. These Men kept the Passage in hopes to meet some English, against whom already they made Covert War: Whereof the English Lords in Heinalt having Notice, knew they should receive no very kind Salute, if they went home that way: But while they were in Flanders they rode about at their pleasure, for Jacob van Arteveld had assured them of all Respect and Honour. But however becaus King [n] Edward understood that the Flemings and French not only kept this Garrison in Cadsand, but also had set out several Men of War to Sea, to wait for his Ambassadors in their Passage home, he directed his Writ to John Lord Roos, Admiral of the Fleet from the River of Thames Northward, to fit up a Convoy of 40

[m] Froiss. c. 30. & Holinshead p. 901. & Stow p. 234. & Walsing. hist. p. 132. n. 1.
[n] Ashmole p. 647.

An. Dom. 1337. An. Regni XI.

Stout Ships, well Mann'd, and to be with them at Dort in Holland, on the Monday after Midſummer-day, to ſecure their Return. They lay ready for them at Dort, and ſo took ſhip at their leiſure for England, having effectually perform'd their Buſineſs: In their paſſage [o] homeward they took two Flemiſh Men of War, with an hundred and fifty Scots on board, among whom was the Biſhop of Glaſcow, Sr. John Stuart, and other Noblemens Sons of Scotland, as Sr. David Hay, Sr. Hugh Gifford, Sr. John de la More, Sr. William Bayly, Sr. Alexander Fraſier, with two Clerks, Thomas Ferguſon and William Muffet, and a Monk of Dunfermlin; beſides certain Noble Ladies. Theſe with 4000 Souldiers for their Guard, were ſent by the French King to aid the Brucean Scots with Arms, Horſe, Gold and Silver to the value of 15000 l. all which was now taken by the Engliſh Admiral, the Souldiers being moſt ſlain, and the reſt all made Priſoners, and the Biſhop by chance wounded in the Head ſlightly, thô being brought into Sandwich, thrô that and his grief together, he died ſoon after.

[o] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 118. & Dug. 1 Vol. p. 531. & Knighton p. 2570. n. 30.

Beſides this ſmall Succeſs, the [p] Merchants of Briſtow, about this time took in fight a French Ship called the Chriſtmas; of which Sr. Thomas Lord Bradeſtan had a Grant from the King in requital of his good Services.

[p] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 138.

Now upon the ſafe arrival of the Ambaſſadors in England, and their Complaint of the Garriſon in Cadſant, [q] King Edward ſaid, "He would very ſpeedily provide a Remedy againſt that: And accordingly ſoon after he ſent the Earl of Darby, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord [r] Reginald Cobham, and divers other Knights and Eſquires, with 500 Men of Arms, and two thouſand, ſome ſay, [ſ] four thouſand Archers, who all went on Board at London in the River Thames. The firſt Tide they went to Graveſend, the ſecond to Margate, and with the third they took the deep Sea, and made directly for Flanders. They had Wind and Tide at will, and ſo being come before Cadſant, they prepared themſelves for Battle, and having placed the Archers on the Decks before them, in the Name of God and St. George they ſounded their Trumpets and ſailed toward the Town. The Men of Cadſant ſaw their Approach, and knew well who they were, but like good Warriers they ranged themſelves along by the Dikes on the Sands, with their Banners waving before them, having for encouragement ſake made 16 new Knights. They conſiſted of 5000 Men of War, valiant Knights and Eſquires with their Retinues (beſides the Inhabitants) their Chief being Sr. Guy the Baſtard of Flanders, who was an expert and hardy Captain, and now earneſtly deſired all his Company to have regard to their Honour, and to do their Devoire. With him, beſides thoſe mention'd before, were preſent Simon and John Bouquedent, and Peter of Anglemonſter, who were then and there made Knights, with many other valiant Gentlemen. The Engliſh were reſolved to aſſail, and the Flemings were as reſolutely bent to defend.

[q] Froiſ. c. 30. & Holinſh. p. 901.

[r] Dugd. 2 Vol. 67. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 784.

[ſ] James Meire.

But when the [t] Engliſh Archers with a great Shout began all at one inſtant to ſend among them a thick Flight of deadly Arrows, they that kept the Shore recoyled back in great diſmay, leaving many dead, but far more grievouſly wounded, upon the place. Inſomuch that the Engliſh immediately took Land in very good Order, and ſo came to Handy-Stroaks with their Enemies, who fled not before them, but having recovered their late Diſorder, came bravely forward to diſpute their Landing. Here the Earl of Darby behav'd himſelf worthy of the Royal Stock from whence he came, but in the firſt Shock adventur'd ſo forward among his Enemies, that in the Preaſs he was at laſt fell'd down to the Ground, thô without any hurt, for he was arm'd at all Points, after the Manner of that Age: Sr. Walter Manny was not far behind, but ſaw when and where he fell, and inflam'd with generous Valour prick'd forward ſo boldly, and laid about him with his Battle-Ax ſo furiouſly, encouraging alſo his Men to the Reſcue with theſe Words, "Lancaſter for the Earl of Darby! that he clear'd the place by fine Force, raiſed his General from the Ground, and ſet him ſafe in the head of his own Guard, crying all the while "Lancaſter for the Earl of Darby. On the Engliſh Part, beſide the foreſaid Henry Plantagenet Earl of Darby, and Son to the Earl of Lancaſter, and the valiant Lord Walter Manny who thus reſcued him, there were the Lord Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord Robert Bourchier, and the Lord John Norwich, the Lord William Beauchamp, Brother to the Earl of Warwick, and Sr. Lewis Beauchamp his Coſin, with other good Captains. Upon this Reſcue of the Earl of Darby, both Powers joyn'd again with more Animoſity than before; the Engliſh to revenge the former Affront, and the Flemmings in hope to ſucceed better now. The Battle was ſurely fought on both Hands very well; for the Flemings were Choſen Men, and the Engliſh reſolv'd not to part Stakes by any means, but to win all at this their firſt Setting out or periſh: Many therefore were ſlain on both Sides, but the greater number fell to the Flemings ſhare. But all the while the Archers of England, flanking their Men of Arms, ſhot with ſuch violence, and ſo wholly together, that they were not to be endur'd; ſo that at laſt the Enemies Ranks being made thin and broken, they began to fly. Sr. Guy the Baſtard was taken Priſoner; there were ſlain Sr. Duras Halvin, Sr. John Rhodes, the two Brethren of Bouquedent, Sr. Simon and Sr. John, who but a little while enjoy'd their Knighthood, Sr. Giles Leſtriefe, and above 36 Knights and Eſquires more, and of the Common Souldiers more than 3000, what in the Haven, Streets and Houſes: Beſides all which about [u] 3000 more of the Inhabitants being fled for ſafety into a Church, were by the enraged Welchmen burnt together with the Church it ſelf. For after the Battle they took the Town, plunder'd it, and then ſet it on fire; and ſo with much Prey and many Priſoners return'd for England without any [x] conſiderable Damage themſelves. King Edward received Sr. Guy the Baſtard reſpectfully (for he was a valiant Man) and only taking his Oath to continue true Priſoner, permitted him to walk abroad at his pleaſure. But [y] he was ſo won with the Kings Goodneſs, that that very Year of his own accord he became a Leigeman to him, and ſwore Faith, and gave him Homage, as one who heartily embraced his Service. However for him and for the reſt of the Priſoners, about two Years after, King [z] Edward gave to the Lord Walter Manny the ſumm of 8000 l. Sterling. This Battle between the Engliſh and Dutchmen was fought on the 9 of November, being a Sunday, and the day before St. Martin.

[t] Froiſ. c. 31. fol. 19.

ting

AN. DOM. 1337. An. Regni XI.

[u] Stow p. 234. Walſing. hiſt. p. 132. n. 10.

[x] Froiſ. c. 31. f. 19.

[y] Froiſ. ibid.

[z] Holinſhead p. 901. E. Lit. Dom.

Of this Diſcomfiture at Cadſant, * Tidings were immediately ſpread over all Flanders, and generally the Flemings ſaid, "They were e'ne ſerv'd well enough, ſince without "the conſent of the good Towns, nay and againſt their Wills, only in Obedience to "the Earls unreaſonable Humour, they had preſumed to keep a Garriſon againſt "their Friends of England. This was juſt as Jacob van Alteveld deſired, and thereupon he ſends Meſſengers to King Edward, to recommend him heartily to his Majeſty, and to requeſt him to take the Sea and come over, foraſmuch as the Flemings were impatient, till they had a Sight of Him: The effect whereof we ſhall ſee hereafter.

* Froiſ. c. 32.

Nor even here was King Edward the Firſt Aggreſſor; for it appears, that King Philip had * already hired many Ships of the Gibellines of Genua and the Guelfs of Monaco, which took much Booty from the Engliſh, and infeſted the Aquitanian Ocean; and alſo by his Royal Edict he had [a] recalled the Rights of the Dutchy of Aquitain to the Court of France, and had actually with an Army, which he ſent thither, ſeized on ſeveral Caſtles; beſides that he had fired certain Places on the Sea-Coaſts of England with his Navy which he ſent into Scotland.

* Foliet. hiſt. ſen. l. 6.

[a] Tom. 3. Epiſt. ſecret. 306. & Odoric. Rainald. ad an. 1337. §. 21.

IX. Now whereas the foreſaid [b] Ambaſſadors of the King of England, had in making all thoſe Alliances and Retainers, upon the Kings Account, obliged themſelves to pay ſundry great Summs of Mony; the King taking all upon himſelf indemnified them, their Heirs and Executors, of all thoſe Summs and other Things, whereto they were ſo engaged.

[b] Aſhmole p. 647. &c. ex Rot. Alman. 11. Ed. 3. m. 4.

But this great Affair of ſtrengthening the King with Alliances, was again ſet on foot, and to that purpoſe [c] another Commiſſion was iſſued to the foreſaid Biſhop of Lincoln and Earl of Salisbury, to whom was added Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, and John Lord Darcy Steward of the Kings Houſhold, with Power to any Three of them to treat thereupon with Lewis the Emperour. Another [d] Commiſſion of the ſame Date, was made out to them and to Richard Winkele, John Hufford, Paul de Monteflorum, John Montgomery and John Waweyn, impowring them to treat with and to retain all Perſons, as well Nobles as Others, for the Kings Service.

[c] 3 Octob. Rot. Alman. 11 Ed. 3. n. 10.

[d] Ib. d. n. 11.

And yet as the King did by theſe Means endeavour to enable himſelf for the Recovery of the Crown of France, ſo did he not neglect all Methods of Peace: Particularly he conſtituted the foreſaid Biſhop of Lincoln, the Earls of Salisbury and Suffolk and John Lord Darcy, his Agents, to treat with the Magnificent Prince the Lord Philip, the Illuſtrious King of France (as he is ſtiled in the Commiſſion) or his Deputies, touching his Right to the ſaid Crown; to wit, whether it ought to remain to him or King Edward: And by another Commiſſion of the ſame Date, they were empower'd to treat upon all Controverſies and Demands whatſoever, relating to the Dukedom of Aquitaine or other Parts beyond Sea, and alſo of an Happy and Perpetual Peace. But in caſe his juſt Demands ſhould not find an agreeable Anſwer, on the ſame Day he prepared [f] another Commiſſion for John Duke of Brabant and Lorraine; whereby he conſtituted him his Lieutenant, Captain and Vicar General in the Kingdom of France: Where it is worthy Note, that the King in this Commiſſion (where he challenges challenges the Crown of France, as devolved to him by Right of Succeſſion, and conſequently become his Lawfull Inheritance) did aſſume the Title of that Kingdom, and Stiled himſelf, Edvardus Dei Gratiâ, Rex Angliæ & Franciæ, Dominus Hiberniæ, & Dux Aquitaniæ: And by another Commiſſion, bearing even Date, made of theſe Officiary Dignities to the ſaid Duke, he put France in the Firſt place, thus, Edvardus Dei Gratiâ, Rex Franciæ & Angliæ, &c. but ſoon after he voluntarily laid this Title of France aſide, nor did he ſolemnly aſſume it again, till the Fourteenth Year of his Reign over England, as we ſhall ſee in due place.

[e] 7 Octob. Ib. n. 13.

[f] Ibid. m. 1.

An. Dom 1337. An. Regni XI.

[g] Ibid.

By ſeveral other Commiſſions of the ſame [g] Date, (wherein alſo the Titles of England and France were in like manner tranſpoſed) did the King appoint to the ſame Dignities William Marqueſs of Juliers, William Earl of Heinalt his Brother in Law, and William Bohun Earl of Northampton; and by another then Dated and directed to the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Dukes, Marqueſſes, Earls, Barons, and all other Perſons in the Kingdom of France (having therein the Titles of France and England tranſpoſed as before) they are commanded to receive the ſaid Duke of Brabant, as if it were the King in his own Perſon, as alſo the ſaid Marqueſs and Earls. And further the ſaid Marqueſs and Earls were by other Commiſſions, ſeverally conſtituted the Kings Special Ambaſſadors, to make known his Title to all whom it ſhould concern, to challenge and proſecute his Right; to require every Unjuſt Detainer to render unto the King whatſoever he ſo withheld from him; to Diſplace and Puniſh ſuch as they ſhould think meet; and laſtly to Do and Execute all other Things, which ſhould be moſt neceſſary for the Recovery and Preſervation of his Right.

[h] Clauſ 11 Ed. 3. p. 2. m 29. in Dorſo & Knighton p. 2569. n. 10.

Now it is to be remembred (thô we alſo ſpake of this before) that in the beginning of [h] this Year King Philip had ſent Forces into Gaſcoign, and thô not without conſiderable Loſs to himſelf, ſeiſed upon many of the Kings Caſtles and Fortreſſes; notwithſtanding that the Lord Oliver Ingham King Edwards Seneſchall of Gaſcoign, a noble, wiſe and valiant Captain, behav'd himſelf commendably againſt the French in all his Actions, conſidering his ſmall Forces: Upon notice hereof King Edward gave [i] Command to arreſt twenty Ships in the Port of Southampton and thereabouts, and to preſs Men to be ready at Portſmouth to ſet forward for Gaſcoign on Whitſun-Eve following, to reinforce the Lord Oliver Ingham his Seneſchall. But it muſt not here be forgotten, what is recorded of Sr. [k] Raymund Cornely, Lord of Abertha, a Gaſcoigner, that he made an Offer to the French King to fight with any Man living, in Defence of King Edwards Right to thoſe Countries; for which he [l] ſent him great and particular Thanks.

[i] Rot. Vaſcon. 11 Ed. 3. m. 40.

[k] Rot. Vaſc. 11 Ed. 3. m. 4.

[l] 6 Jan. ibid.

Yet thô accordingly the King had raiſed a great Army to ſend into Gaſcoign, he made withall ſeveral Fair Applications by his Ambaſſadours to the Court of France, for Reſtitution of what had been ſeiſed on, and Prevention of a War. His Offers were theſe, [m] Clauſ. 11 Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 28. Dorſo.

1. To Marry his Eldeſt Son the Duke of Cornwall to the King of France's Daughter without Dowry.

2. The Marriage of his Siſter, the Counteſs of Gueldre to his Son, with a great Summ of Money.

3. The Marriage of his Brother (i. e. his Uncle's Son) [n] John Earl of Kent with any of the Blood Royal.

4. To make Reſtitution for any Dammage, he tender'd to King Philip as much Mony as he ſhould in reaſon demand.

5. He alſo proffer'd to take a Voyage to the Holy Land with the King of France, if he would reſtore his Lands unto him.

6. To go the Voyage, if he would reſtore but Half or Some of thoſe Lands.

7. To take the Voyage with him, if he would but make Reſtitution after his Return: Or

8. Laſtly, to take the Voyage ſingly by Himſelf, ſo that at his Return he would reſtore him his Right.

[n] Hear the Learned Eſquire Aſhmole reads---his Brother the Earl of Cornwall, whereas 'tis plain, that the Earl of Cornwall died the Year preceding, as we have ſhew'd, and alſo upon the Death of the Earl of Cornwall, that Earldom was converted afterwards into a Dukedom, and confer'd upon Prince Edward. Nor is it ſtrange that I here am forced not only to read Kent for Cornwall, but Brother, for Fathers Brother's Son, ſince we find in the Records, that this very King calls Richard the Son of his Eldeſt Son, Prince Edward, his own Son, as thus---* Rex Chariſſimo Filio ſuo Richardo Principi Walliæ, &c. But I believe this Place being thrô Age obſcur'd, and ſo left to Conjecture, was for haſt miſtaken in that manner.

* Summonitio Parliamenti 51 Ed. 3. vid. Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgment of the Records p. 143.

These Overtures with many others, which the King or his Council could think of, were offer'd to the King of France, in Order to a Peace; with this General Propoſal beſide, That if any one could think of any other way, tending to an Accommodation, He would be ready to accept thereof: But all was in vain; for King Philip on the contrary, not only ſtill held his Lands beyond Sea, but excited and main-maintained the Scots againſt him, and alſo by his Navy did much Miſchief at Sea. AN. DOM. 1337. An. Regni XI.

I wholly here paſs by the Matters of Scotland, till a more convenient Opportunity, for fear of interrupting the Thread of our Hiſtory, eſpecially becauſe all was done there by ſnatches, and fits, and intervalls, King Bailiol with various Fortune contending to keep on his Head a Crown more full of Thorns, than of Jewels.

X. Now the [o] Pope perceiving that the ſtorm of War was ready to break forth, to the great Hazard of the Intereſt of Chriſtendom, ſent into England about the Feaſt of St. Martin, [p] Pedro Prieſt Cardinal of St. Praxedis, and [q] Bertrand Deacon Cardinal of St. Mary in Aquiro, to uſe their beſt Endeavours to compoſe the Differences now growing High between the two Kings. For the more Honourable Reception of theſe Chriſtian Peacemakers, according to the Kings Order, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of Wincheſter, Ely, Chicheſter, Coventry and Lichfield, with the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London went forth and met them on Shooters Hill. The young Duke of Cornwall with the Earl of Surrey, and many other of the Nobility received them a Mile without the City; and the King himſelf met them at the leſſer Hall-door of his Palace at Weſtminſter, and carried them into the Painted Chamber, where they deliver'd their Meſſage. Hereupon the King cauſed a Parliament to be ſummon'd to meet him at Weſtminſter on the Morrow after Candlemas day; [r] till which time upon the Cardinals Mediation, (thô Peace could not be effected) a Truce was agreed on. Nor [s] yet was Peace the only buſineſs about which theſe Cardinals came, but the Priviledges and Immunities of the Church; as appears by the Popes Letter to the King, bearing Date IX Kal. Julii An° Pontificatûs III. However theſe Cardinals (thô they came to make Peace) were not yet rightly prepared for the Work: For they made it evidently appear, that they were more concern'd for the King of France, and ſo not fit to be as indifferent Compoſers of Matters between the two Kings: And this was notoriouſly demonſtrated by [t] Bertrand the French Cardinal, in a Sermon of his ad Clerum, wherein he could not forbear putting a falſe Gloſs upon King Edward's Actions, and Adorning, and Gilding King Philip's cauſe; till the Archbiſhop of Canterbury not able to endure his Inſolence, roſe up and confuted all his Arguments, and Publiquely declared his Aſſertions to be vain, falſe, and frivolous. And from that time it was the Common talk in England, that the King of England had a Right to the Crown of France, which he intended to claim and purſue.

This [u] Year on the third of June, there was a certain Fryer named Franciſcus de Piſtorio, of the Order of the Minors, deliver'd over to the Secular Power, and burnt as an Heretick at Venice, for perſiſting in this Aſſertion, That Chriſt and his Diſciples poſſeſſed nothing either in Proper, or in Common, the Contrary to which Pope John XXII had determin'd in the Conſtitution, which begins, Cum inter Nonnullos.

[o] Aſhmole p. 649.

[p] Victorellus & Ciacon. 1 Vol. p. 862. §. 24. & p. 857. §. 4. Holinſhead Engl. Chr. p. 901. &c.

[q] Vid. Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1337. §. 15. ubi Papalis Commiſſio his Cardinalibus facta.

[r] Aſhmole p. 649.

[s] Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1337. §. 20.

[t] Walſing. Hiſt. p. 146. Edit. Franc. n. 20.

[u] Geſta PPæ Benedicti XII. apud Boſqu. & M.S. Bibl. Vatican. ſign. n. 3765. in Ben. XII. & Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc An. §. 30.

CHAPTER the ELEVENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. A Parliament, the Cardinals return into France, together with Commiſſioners from King Edward. II. Whoſe Overtures being by the French rejected, King Edward with a Fleet of 500 Ships, ſets ſail for Flanders, and arrives at Antwerp, whither he Summons his Allies, with whom he holds a Parliament, which begets another at Halle. III. King Edward ſends from thence an Embaſſy to the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, and invites his Queen to come over from England to him: ſhe is ſoon after her coming deliver'd at Antwerp of her Third Son, named Lionell: Prince Thomas of Brotherton the Kings Uncle dies: An Engliſh Lord's Son, that was Born beyond Sea, Naturalized. IV. An Enterview between the Emperour and the King of England, the latter being made Vicar-General of the Empire by the Former. V. King Edward calls a Parliament of his Allies in Brabant, with the effects thereof. VI. A day appointed, whereon all the Confederates are to come with their their ſeveral Quota's to the King of England, who keeps his Court the mean while at Antwerp: The Duke of Brabant keeps fair with the French King. VII. Prince Edward of England, Duke of Cornwal, holds two Parliaments in the King his Fathers Abſence: For whom he obtains a Mighty aid: The Engliſh Navy reinforced with ſixty Sail.

An. Dom. 1338. An. Regni XII.

I. ON the third of February, or the Morrow after Candlemas-day, the Parliament began; where the Truce was Prorogued [a] to the Firſt of March following: [b] The Laity at the ſame time granted to the King the One half of their Woolls throughout the whole Realm, for the next Summer, which he received Graciouſly, and alſo he Levied of the Clergy the whole, cauſing them to pay nine Marks of every Sack of the beſt Wooll; but after the Rate of the One half he took, in whoſe hands ſoever it was found, as well Merchants, as others, according to the foreſaid Grant: So that of the Abbey of Leiceſter only, as [c] Knighton, one of that Houſe, witneſſes, he had no leſs then 18 Sacks. After [d] this he took a fifteenth of all the Commonalty of his Realm in Wooll, the Price of every Stone, Rated at fourteen Pound per Stone, at two ſhillings. And yet before this, [e] about the Feaſt of all Saints, he had ſent the Biſhop of Lincoln, and the Earls of Northampton and Suffolk with ten Thouſand Sacks of Wooll into Brabant to make Retainors in High Germany, and there at the ſame time they ſold all their Wooll, every Sack for fourty Pounds; which amounts in all to 400000 Pounds.

[a] Aſhmole p. 649.
[b] Holinſhead p. 902.
[c] Knighton p. 2570.
[d] Holinſhead ibid.
[e] Knighton p. 2570. n. 10. & 20.

Beſides all this he is ſaid about this time to have ſeiſed on the Wealth of the Cluniacks and Ciſtertians Aliens (of which we ſpake in the former Chapter) and of the Lombards, and all the Triennial Tythes, which were firſt intended for the Holy War. Nor was the French King behind him in theſe Arts of Raiſing Money, for he alſo laying Uſury to their Charge, confiſcated all that the Lombards had, Coyned Moneys both Gold and ſilver of a leſs Value, and drain'd the Clergy Exceedingly.

[f] Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1337. §. 21.

On the Firſt [g] of March, at the Cardinals Inſtance the King Prorogued the foreſaid Truce to Midſummer following, in caſe rhe King of France ſhould conſent to it, and give Security that it ſhould be obſerved; after which on the 21 of the ſaid Month, the Cardinals (who [h] coſt the Church of England fifty Marks per diem all the time of their ſtay here) took Sea at Dover, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London bearing them Company, with intent to further the Treaty between the two Kings; but becauſe all their Endeavours brought forth no Accommodation, we ſhall ſay no more of their Proceedings: But haſten to the Matter in Hand.

[g] Rot. Alman. 12 Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 36. vid. Pat. de eod. an. p. 1. m. 24.
[h] Knighton p. 2570. n. 20.

King Edward when it was underſtood, [i] that the French King refus'd to give Security for the obſerving the Truce inviolably, being adviſed to revoke the latter Prorogation, did ſo on the ſixth of May, and immediately ſet himſelf about a Journey into Flanders, there Perſonally to confer with his Allies, in purſuance of his Deſign againſt France. But before he went, upon the Cardinals further importunity, a Commiſſion was iſſued * to John Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Richard Biſhop of Durham, Robert Earl of Suffolk, Sr. Geoffry Scroop Knight, and Mr. John Hufford Archdeacon of Ely, with Power to Treat and agree touching all things in Difference between the two Kings, in Reference to a full and final Peace. And by another Commiſſion bearing the ſame Date of the 21 of June, the Duke of Brabant, the Earls of Heinalt and Gueldre, the Marqueſs of Juliers, and Sr. William Dunort Lord of Oſtervandt, Knight, are added to them. Theſe Commiſſions were double, and of two ſeveral Styles, in the One the King calls King Philip, only Philippus de Valois, Conſanguineus noſter Franciæ; but in the other---Excellentiſſimus Princeps, Dominus Philippus, Rex Franciæ, Illuſtris, Conſanguineus noſter Chariſſimus.

[i] Aſhmole p. 649.
* 21 Jun. Rot. Aleman. 12 Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 5.

II. But theſe Offers being all rejected, and Jacob [k] van Arteveld urgently requeſting his Preſence in Flanders, the King at laſt on the * 16 of July, took ſhipping at the Port of Orewell, near Harwich in Suffolk, with a Royal Navy of [l] 500 Sail, and many great Barons of England in his Company; among whom were [m] Henry Earl of Darby, William Montague, Earl of Salisbury, Robert Earl of Suffolk, the Lord John Fauconberg, Norman Lord Darcy, Hugh Lord Meinill, John Lord Beaumont, Son to Henry Vicount Beaumont, Earl of Buqhan in Scotland, Nicolas Lord Cantilupe, Sr. John Beauchamp, a younger Brother of Thomas Earl of Warwick, Sr. Robert Benhale of Norfolk that vanquiſhed Turnbull the Scot, Sr. Otho [n] Grandeſſon, Son of Gilbert or William Grandeſſon, who was Brother to the Great Otho, Lord Grandiſon, deſcended of the Ancient Houſe of the Grandeſſons, Dukes of Burgundy, Sr. Walt. Manny, & many others of High Birth, Youth

[k] Froiſ. c. 32.
* Aſhmole p. 649 & Walſing. hiſt. 119.
[l] Avesbury: 300 alii.
[m] De his omnibus vid. Dugd. Bar. ad ſingulorum nomina & hunc an. Ed. 3.
[n] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 181. vid. Bp. Godw. Catal. Bpps p. 406.

Youth and Courage; for King Edward choſe the moſt Perſonable of all his Nobility to accompany him in this Expedition, thereby to gain the greater Reverence to the Engliſh Nation from Strangers, who ſhould ſee their Proportion, Shape, and Stature. Theſe were all with their Retinues Men of Arms; beſides whom, the King had a great [o] Multitude of Archers and Welchmen, with all whom he arrived at Antwerp, belonging then to the Duke of Brabant, on the 22 of July. While he reſided here, People came flocking from all Parts to ſee him, and to obſerve the Royal Magnificence of his Court: He for his part upon his firſt Landing had ſent out his Summons to his Coſin the Duke of Brabant, to his Brother-in-Law the Earl of Gueldre, to the Marqueſs of Juliers, to the Lord John of Heinalt, Uncle to the young Earl, and to all others, in whom he had any confidence; ſignifying unto them, that he would gladly confer with them at Antwerp. They accordingly came all thither within two days after; at which time King Edward [p] expreſly revoked all the Power which he had given formerly to his ſeveral Commiſſioners to Treat with Philip of Valois, as King of France; and then he deſired to know their Minds, and when "they would "in good Earneſt perform what they had undertaken in his behalf: He earneſtly al- "ſo required them to diſpatch what they intended with all poſſible Expedition; [q] for "to that purpoſe he ſaid, he was come thither with his Forces ready prepared to be- "gin the War, and that it would be an infinite damage to him to protract the Mat- "ter much longer. The Lords having conſulted among themſelves, return'd this Anſwer. "Sir, our coming hither at this time was rather to give your Majeſty a Vi- "ſit, then for any thing elſe, we are not yet prepared to give a Determinate Anſwer "to your Demands: But by your leave we ſhall go back again among our Subjects, "Friends and Allies, and return hither at what time you ſhall pleaſe to fix us; when "we ſhall give you ſo direct and poſitive an Anſwer, that it will nor appear other- "wiſe, but that We ſhall well have done our Devoirs. The King ſhew'd them "what Charges he had been at, and ſtill was like to be with theſe Delays; that "he expected to have found all ready at his coming thither; but ſince it was not "ſo, He for his part reſolved not to return to England, till he had a plain Anſwer "from them one way or other. He therefore would expect them all there again on the Third of Auguſt following at the fartheſt, becauſe the time of Action began to wear away. To this Appointment having all agreed, they took leave of the King, who tarried ſtill at Antwerp, being lodged in the Abbey, ſome of his Lords tarrying with him to bear him Company, while others rode about the Country at great expence, to negotiate the Kings Affairs, and to gain the favour of the People, as alſo to divert themſelves, and ſatisfie their Curioſity. As for the Duke of Brabant, he went to the City of Louvaine, about ſeven Leagues Eaſt of Antwerp, from whence he ſent frequent Meſſages to the French King, "Requeſting, that he would not enter- "tain any Suſpicion of him, nor give Credit to any idle Rumors: For he aſſured "him, that he would by no means make any Alliance or Agreement to his "Diſadvantage; Thô as he ſaid, the King of England being his Coſin-German, "he could not in Honour refuſe him the Civility of his Country. Thus the Duke of Brabant endeavouring to keep in with both Kings, was really a Friend to neither; but we ſhall ſee how he behaves himſelf now to King Edward. The Third of Auguſt came, and all the other Lords return'd to Antwerp, except the Duke; whereat the reſt taking occaſion, ſaid, that as for their parts, they and their Men "were ready, provided the Duke of Brabant would be as ready on his Part, "for he was nearer than they, that being his Country: That therefore when they "ſhould underſtand that he was fully provided, they would not be one jot behind "him. With this tergiverſation of theirs, King Edward was inwardly very much diſpleaſed, [r] for he found no ſincerity nor Honour in any one of them, except the Earl of Gueldre, and he privately told the Biſhop of Lincoln and his Council, that he had not been well adviſed hitherto. However, he immediately ſent this their Anſwer to Louvain to the Duke of Brabant, urging the Matter home to him, and requiring him as his Friend, Kinſman, and Ally, and as a Chriſtian, and a Man of Honour, to deal "ſincerely and heartily with him; for hitherto, he ſaid, he very well perceived that he was but cold in the Matter; and that he juſtly feared, unleſs he grew "more warm, and ſhew'd more concern for the Cauſe, he ſhould looſe the Aſſiſtance "of all the other Lords of Almaine.

The Duke being thorougly awaken'd with this Alarm, began to conſider more ſeriouſly on the Matter, that King Philip had been ſevere and cruel to him, King Edward his Friend, and able to be his Protector, that he was ty'd to him not only

AN. DOM. 1338. An. Regni XII.

[o] Knighton p. 2571. n. 20. & Joh. Villan. l. 11. c. 83.

[p] Aſhmole p. 649. ex Rot. Alman. fact. apud Antwerp. (Julii 22.) 12 Ed. 3. m. 7. & 3.

[q] Froiſ. c. 32.

[r] Knighton p. 2571. n. 50.

An. Dom. 1338. An. Regni XII.

on the account of Allyance, but in Honour, having paſſed his Word, and contracted to be on his ſide; only he fear'd, that if the Reſt of the German Lords ſhould fall off, he might be left a Prey to Philips anger: Wherefore he at laſt declared to King Edward, [f] that now he was fully determin'd to be as ready as any One in his ſervice; only he deſired once more to ſpeak with the foreſaid Lords altogether: So that they were ſent for again, the time of their meeting fix'd about the middle of Auguſt, the Place to be [t] Halle, a ſtrong Town of Hainalt on the very Borders of Brabant, diſtant from Bruſſels but four Engliſh Miles, thrô which the River Senne ſends a ſmall current; and this Place was judged the fitteſt, becauſe the young Earl of Hainalt, and his Uncle Lord John of Beaumont might be there. In ſhort, the Reſult of this Parliament at Halle was this, the Lords having again conſider'd on the Premiſes, found themſelves ſo bent on King Edward's Service, that they thought they never ſhould deſert him, unleſs compell'd by the Emperour, to whom only they ow'd Allegiance: Wherefore in the Name of himſelf and all the Reſt, the Duke of Brabant ſpake thus to King Edward, "Sir, we of our ſelves cannot find any juſt "Cauſe, all things conſider'd, to defie the French King, without the Conſent of the "Emperour, our Soveraign Lord, or that he would Command Us ſo to do in his "Name. For long ſince in a Covenant mutually Sworn and Sign'd between France "and Germany, there is an Article, that no King of France ſhould take, or hold a-"ny thing belonging of Right to the Empire: Notwithſtanding which Obligation "this King Philip hath taken the Caſtle of Creveceur in Cambreſis, and the Caſtle of "Alves in Bailleul ([u] Palencour) and alſo the City of Cambray it ſelf: So that the "Emperour has good Reaſon on his ſide to break with the King of France. And "Sir, if you can obtain his Conſent, it will be more for our Honour; otherwiſe the "World will ſay, that without the Imperial Authority, the Lords of Almaine Com-"menced an unjuſt War, having no Provocation thereto.

[f] Froiſ ibid.

[t] Engl. Atlas 4 Vol. p. 234.

[u] Mezeray.

III. This Requeſt appear'd but reaſonable to the King; wherefore he appointed the Marqueſs of Juliers with certain Engliſh Knights, and Men Learned in the Laws, together with ſome of the Earl of Gueldre's Council, to go to the Emperour about the Premiſes: Only the Duke of Brabant would by no means ſend any body in his Name, becauſe he would not be known to ſtir in the buſineſs, till things ſhould be ripe; He ſtood in ſuch fear of the King of France, ever ſince that Quarrel about the Lord Robert of Artois, of which we ſpake in the 7th Year of King Edward: But yet however he freely Reſign'd his ſtately Caſtle of Louvain to the King of England to lie in, and to uſe as his own, during his Royal Pleaſure.

The Marqneſs and his Company found the Emperour at Flourebeche, where they did their Meſſage to him ſo well, that together with the Perſwaſions of the Lady Margaret, the Empreſs, who was Siſter to Queen Philippa of England, he was willing to grant King Edward's Requeſt; for which end he deſired an Enterview with him, and immediately created the Earl of Reginald Duke of Gueldre, and the Marqueſs William Earl of Juliers; thô [x] ſome ſay, this was done afterward by King Edward their Kinſman, when he was Vicar of the Sacred Empire.

[x] Speeds Chron. p. 564. §. 81.

King Edward the mean while kept his Court with great Splendor at Louvain, being lodged himſelf in the Caſtle for his better ſecurity, ſince the City was Commanded thereby: From hence he ſent a conſiderable Part of his Forces into England, as having little occaſion for them yet, to defend the Frontiers againſt the Scots. At the ſame time he kindly invited his Beloved Queen to come over to him, if ſhe ſo pleaſed, for he ſent her word, he was determin'd not to leave thoſe Parts for the ſpace of a Year at leaſt. The Queen ſhortly after went over to the King her Husband, being then Great with Child, of which, being a Male, ſhe was happily deliver'd at [y] Antwerp (while the King held a Noble Turneament there) on the Vigil of St. Andrew, or the 29 of November 1338. The Infant was Baptiſed with the Name of Lionell, and ſirnamed from the Place of his Birth, Lionell of Antwerp, who became in time Earl of Ulſter, Duke of Clarence, and a Perſon of Extraordinary Features of Body and (which is a more aimable Beauty) Valour, and other Princely Endowments. But as the Queens Fecundity did on one hand make the Royal Family to flouriſh, ſo on the other, Fatal Neceſſity was buſied in lopping off a Princely Branch from that Regal Stem: For this very [z] Year, the Kings Uncle Thomas Plantagenet, ſirnamed of Brotherton, from a place of that Name in Yorkſhire, where he was Born, being Earl of Norfolk, and Marſhal of England, departed this Life, and was [a] buried in the Choire of the Famous Abbey at St. Edmunds-Bury in Suffolk; where there was a goodly Monument erected to his Memory; but it is now wholly buried in the ſame Ruines,

[y] Walſingh. Hypod p. 114 Hiſt. p. 132. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 167. Leland Coll. 1 Vol. p. 802.

[z] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 64.

[a] Weevers fun. Mon. p. 726.

Ruines, into which the Fatal Diſſolution caſt both that and many other Religious Houſes. He left Iſſue by the Lady [b] Alice his firſt Wife, Daughter of Sr. Roger Hales of Harwich, two Daughters his Heirs, the Lady Margaret, and the Lady Alice; the former, firſt Married to the Lord John Seagrave, and after to the Famous Sr. Walter Manny; the latter to Sr. Edward Montague, Brother to the Earl of Salisbury. He is [c] ſaid to have had alſo a Wife named Anne, before the Lady Alice, by whom he had a Son Edward who died without Iſſue, and alſo another after her, by whom he had a ſecond Son, named John, who became a Monk in the Abbey of Ely. Upon his Death however, the Earldom of Norfolk, and Office of Marſhal for want of Iſſue Male, fell into the Kings hands by Eſcheat: But the Lord William Montague Earl of Salisbury, in conſideration of his many Eminent Services both in War and Peace, abroad and at home, obtained preſently after a [d] Grant (bearing Date at Antwerp the 15 of September) of the Office of Marſhal of England.

AN. DOM. 1338. An. Regni XII.

[b] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 65.
[c] Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 510.
[d] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 646. ex Pat. fact. apud Antwerp. 12. Ed. 3. p. 3. m 7.

During this the Kings Stay in Brabant, the Lady [e] Eleanora Plantagenet, Fifth Daughter to Henry de Torto Collo, the old Earl of Lancaſter, and Siſter to Henry Earl of Darby, brought forth to her Husband, John Lord Beaumont of England (Son to Henry Vicount Beaumont Earl of Buquhan) a Son called Henry: Whereupon two Years after Sr. John the Father obtain'd the Kings Special Letters Patents, declaring, That notwithſtanding the ſaid Henry the Son was begotten and born in Foreign Parts; yet ſince it was occaſion'd by Sr. John's and his Lady's Attendance on the King and Queen, he ſhould be reputed a Lawfull Heir, to inherit his Father's Lands, as well as thô he had been born in England.

[e] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 52.

Now that it may appear, how King Philip was much more in the Pope's Books than our Edward, it is obſervable; that when he heard of King Edwards Arrival at Antwerp, as one that ſaw a Dreadfull Tempeſt of War hanging over France, he wrote a [f] Letter to King Philip, bearing Date at Avignon V. Id. Auguſt Anno Pontificatûs IV. Wherein piouſly indeed he ſtirs him up to implore the Divine Aſſiſtance; and to the end he might obtain the Favour of God, to put away all things that might offend his Majeſty; and firſt to pacifie his own Conſcience, leſt he ſhould nouriſh a War within himſelf, to deſiſt from Oppreſſing the Clergy and the Poor; laſtly, he adviſed him to admit of honeſt Conditions of Peace, and upon Occaſion to offer the like: For whereas in that War much Chriſtian Blood was like to be ſhed, he would then appear clean of the Sin of all that ſhould be ſhed both before God and Man; but that he ſhould not put his Confidence in the Power of his Forces, but in the Divine Aſſiſtance: As for his Part, that he together with the Whole Church would power forth his Prayers unto God for him.

[f] Extat apud Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc annum §. 55.

IV. King [g] Edward the mean while according to the Emperors Requeſt, went forth Royally attended to give him a Meeting, he being then in High Germany about 7 Diets beyond Colen: But when he heard of the King of England his Brother-in-Law's Approach toward that City, he alſo ſet forward with Imperial Pomp, till he came to [h] Cologne, where he was met by King Edward. The Enterview was very Glorious and Magnificent, the Emperor greatly Honouring the King of England, thô ſome [i] ſay, at the firſt Meeting he took it ill, that King Edward refus'd to ſubmit himſelf to the Kiſs of his Feet (as it ſhould ſeem Kings were wont to do to Emperours) but our Edward gallantly [k] anſwer'd; "That He Himſelf was a King Sacred "and Anointed, and had Life and Limbs in his Power, being accountable to none but "God, as Supream and Independent of all Others, being alſo Lord of Sea and Land, "and Wearing no leſs than an Imperial Crown: Wherefore he ought not to abaſe "himſelf to any Mortal Potentate whatſoever. This Anſwer was accepted; And preſently [l] two Royal Thrones were erected in the open Market-place, One for the Emperour, the Other for the King; the Emperour took his Place firſt, and King Edward ſate down by him: In which Honourable Enterview there were for Aſſiſtants four Great Dukes, three Archbiſhops and ſix Biſhops, thirty ſeven Earls, and of Barons, Banerets, Knights and Eſquires, according to the Eſtimation of the Heralds, Seventeen Thouſand: The Emperour held in his Right Hand the Imperial Scepter, and in his Left the Golden Mound or Globe, which denotes the Government of the World; a Knight of Almain holding over his Head a Naked Sword. And then and there the Emperour publiquely declared the Diſloyalty, Falſhood and Villany, which the King of France had uſed towards him; whereupon he defi'd him and pronounced, that both He and his Adherents had forfeited the Protection and Favour they might expect from the Empire, and had juſtly incurred whatever Diſpleaſure might be done unto him thereby. And then He [m] made, ordain'd and conſtituted King Ed-

[g] Knighton p. 2571. n. 50. & vid. Rebdorfii Annales de hoc anno.
[h] Alii dicunt locum fuiſſe Confluentias, alii Francofurtum.
[i] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 132.
[k] Selden's Titles of Hon. part. 1. c. 3. p. 29.
[l] Knighton p. 2571. n. 60.
[m] Aſhmole p. 649. Froiſ. l. 1. c. 34. f. 19.

An. Dom. 1338. An. Regni XII.

ward his Deputy and Vicar General of the Sacred German Empire, granting unto him full and absolute Power over All on this side, as far as Cologne: Of all which he gave him his Imperial Charter in sight of all that were present. The next day these two Illustrious Persons, with the Great Lords and Prelates, met again in the Cathedral of Cologne; where they heard Divine Service, and after High Mass, the Emperour and all his Barons swore to the King of England, "That they would stand by him, help "and defend him against the King of France and all his Adherents, both to live and to "die with him for the space of Seven whole Years to come; provided the War to be "between the said Kings should not be compounded before that time. It was also fur- "ther sworn, that all the Barons of Almain from Cologne and on this Side, should pre- "sently enter the King of Englands Service, and should always be ready to come un- "to him, as often as they should be summoned thereto, against the King of France, "as well where the King of England should be in Person, as to any other Place to "which he should assign them. And if it should happen, any of the said Lords of Al- "main should refuse to obey the said King of England in the Premises, that then all "the other Lords of High Germany should rise in Arms against that Man, till they had "destroy'd him.

[n] Nicolaus Minorita M.S.Bib. Vatican.sign.n. 4008. apud Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc annum §. 68.

[n] At this time also there was a certain Sanction, formerly made, repeated in King Edwards Presence, containing these two Points; the First, That the Administration of the Empire belongs to the King of the Romans, as soon as ever he is Elected by the Seven Electors, without the Pope's Confirmation; and the Other, That those are Proscribed, who do not obey him, or, as Rebdorf says, that whosoever for the future shall esteem Lewis to be Excommunicate, or shall omit Divine Service for any Papal Sentences, shall be Proscribed in Body and Goods. Which latter Clause chiefly respected the Bishop of Cambray, who upon that Account had left the Emperor and revolted to the French King.

These matters being thus fully contracted and established, after many enterchangeable Caresses and Magnificent Entertainments, the King of England took his leave of the Emperour, and return'd with all his Company to Brabant.

[o] Froiss. c.34.

[o] The mean time several great Lords of England, rode about Flanders and Heinalt at their pleasure, being wonderfull Magnificent and Liberal in their Expences, freely bestowing Gifts of Gold and Silver, and other Jewels to the Lords and Ladies of the Country, to purchase their Good Wills: And truly they obtain'd the very Hearts of the Country; but especially they were extolled among the common Sort, because of the splendid Shew they made wherever they came.

All these things must needs have been matter of incredible Expence and Charge to that Mighty Monarch: And indeed it seem'd that he had made good Progress in his Affairs, having succeeded so well with the Emperour and the Lords of Germany: But those Friends that are made by Money, commonly fall off at the appearance of a greater Interest, and when they have got what they could expect; as within a while all these did: Thô as it chanced, he gain'd more Glory thereby, performing afterwards of himself, what had been no such great matter to have done, with the help of the Empire's Forces: As we shall see hereafter.

[p] Froiss. c.34. fol. 19.

[q] Novemb. 11

[r] Knighton p. 2572. n. 30.

[p] V. Now King Edward upon his Return into Brabant, sends his Summons to the Duke of Gueldre, the Earl of Juliers, and all other his Allies in those Parts, to come to him about [q] the Feast of St. Martin the Bishop to his Parliament, to be holden at Arques in the County of Leuze near Brabant; or as [r] One says, at Malines in Brabant. Against which time the Town Hall was as richly adorn'd with Hangings and other Royal Furniture, as if it had been the King's own Chamber of Presence. Thither at the time appointed came the Duke of Brabant, and the Duke of Gueldre, the young Earl of Heinalt, the Earl of Juliers, the Lord of Valkenberg, or as the French pronounce it Faulquemont, and all other Barons on this side Cologne; except only the Bishop of Liege, who had no less than [s] twenty four Cities (as they call them) subject unto him, both as a Secular Prince, and as a Bishop.

[s] Ferrarii Lex. in Leodium.

[t] Froiss. ibid.

In this Parliament [t] King Edward, in his Royal Robes, with a Crown of Gold on his Head, sat on a Stately Throne five foot higher than any other, and there the Emperours Letters Patents were openly read; wherein was declar'd, "That King Edward "of England was made Vicar General, or Lieutenant for the Emperour; and as so, had "full Power to make Laws, and to administer Justice to every person in the Empe- "rours Name; and to coin Money, both Gold and Silver at his own Pleasure, with his own "Stamp and Inscription. It was also commanded by these the Emperours Letters "Patents, that the Lords and other Subjects of the Empire, should yield Obedience

"and

"and pay Homage to the King of England, his Vicar, as to himself. And the Lords of Germany there present, [u] promised in all things to obey him, according as their Liege Lord the Emperour had commanded, and that they were both willing and ready to attend his Service to the utmost of their Power. Immediately hereupon certain [x] Claims were made, and judgment given between Parties, as before the Emperour himself; and at the same time a Statute (before-time made by the Emperour) was renew'd, being to this effect, "That whoever design'd War or Combat, or a-"ny other Harm against any Person, Kingdom or Country, should make his Chal-"lenge or Defiance at least three Days before he began any Hostile Deed; other-"wise, that the Author should be look'd on as a Malefactor, and the Deed Villanous. Then the King [y] sent forth his Summons to the Bishop of Liege to come in, according to his Duty; but he absolutely refus'd to obey him, for his Heart was French all over: Whereupon the King sent Henry Burwash Lord Bishop of Lincoln, to make Complaint of him before the Emperour, and to require Justice against him; to which it was answer'd, "That the Emperour himself would shortly come in Person "to the Aid of his most Dear Brother-in-Law the King of England; for it was expected, that a great War would begin the next Spring between the two Nations.

AN. DOM. 1338. An. Regni XII.

[u] Knighton p. 2572. n. 40.
[x] Froiss. ibid.
[y] Knighton p. 2572. n. 40. & 50.

VI. After this the Lords of Almain departed, having first agreed upon a Day, wherein they were all to appear before Cambray (which was at that time in the French Hands, thô belonging to the Empire) there to lay their Siege, to wit, on the 8 of July the Year following, being Wednesday, in the Third Week after the Feast of St. John Baptist. King Edward went back to Louvain to the Queen, who as we said before, was newly come thither out of England, well accompanied with Ladies, her Maids of Honour and other Gentlewomen, who went over as well to wait on the Queen, as to visit their Fathers, Husbands and Brethren then with the King. King Edward soon after remov'd his Court to Antwerp, as more commodious for the Queen to lay her Belly in, and there he kept a most Honourable Court all that Winter, and as Vicar of the Empire [z] set up his Royal Mint at Antwerp, where he coined great plenty of mony both Gold and Silver. Yet all this while the Duke of Brabant, who had once been so greatly humbled by King Philip, as we shew'd before, never ceased sending Messengers to him, to excuse him, and to assure his Majesty, that he would undertake nothing prejudicial to the Crown of France. The Chief of this Embassy was the Lord Lewis of Travemund, one of his Council, who was frequently sent upon this Errand, and at last was made his Lords Resident in the Court of France, that he might be the more ready at hand, always to excuse him against whatsoever informations might be given of him or his Designs.

[z] Froiss. ibid.

VII. The mean while in England, the young Prince [a] Edward Duke of Cornwall, by Commission from the King his Father, held a Parliament at Northampton, which began on the 26 of July; wherein a Mighty Aid was granted unto the King towards the Maintenance of his Wars; as may be conjectur'd by this Proportion, the three Counties of Leicester, Lincoln and Northampton only being taxed in 1211 Sacks of Wooll. Besides which he had an Aid of the Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Rectors, Vicars, and Justices, who went not with him to the War; of some 100 l. a piece, of others two Hundred, according to their Estates and Abilities: And moreover at Michaelmas following, a Tenth was granted of the Clergy for two Years to come. About this time there were [b] Sixty Sail of Stout Ships appointed for the defence of the Cinque-Ports, beside the present Fleet; and Sr. William Clinton Earl of Huntington and Constable of England, was made Lord Lieutenant of Suffolk, and the Lord [c] Robert Morley, Lord Lieutenant of Norfolk.

[a] Knighton p. 2571. n. 30.
[b] Knighton p. 2573. n. 10.
[c] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 26.

CHAPTER the TWELFTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward with his Allies prepares to open the Campagne, not in the meanwhile neglecting his Endeavours to compose Matters. II. He writes to the Pope and Cardinals, setting forth his Right to the Crown of France, the many undeserved Provocations vocations of the French King, and his own Reasonable Offers, which he had often made, and was yet ready to make, with the Copy of the Letter at Large. III. The Popes Answer at Large, being an indirect expostulation, wherein he shews that Lewis of Bavaria (the Emperour) being under the Sentence of Excommunication, was not, nor ought to be accounted Emperour: That all his Friends and Abettors were Actually Excommunicate, and so concludes, partly excusing himself from abetting the French King against England, and partly (unless he withdraws from his Correspondence with the Emperour) threatning to proceed judicially against him also.

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

I. NOW the unactive Winter was passed over, and the vigorous Spring began to open the Earth and the Wars together; the Feast of St. John Baptist approaching, when the Lords of England and Germany began to prepare themselves for the appointed time of Action. King Edward had made his Recruits from England, whence those Men of War he expected, came over to him about the beginning of June. And the Duke [a] of Gueldre and Earl of Zutphen, had done Homage unto him, as Vicar of the Empire and King of France, for which the King granted him a 1000 l. per annum during his Life; and he had further made an Alliance with Albert and Otho, Dukes of Austria, Stiria and Carinthia, and received their Homages. But yet before he began his March, at the Instance of the Cardinals Pedro and Bertrand, of whose endeavours for Peace we spake before, John Archbishop of Canterbury, Richard Bishop of Durham, Henry Bishop of Lincoln, the Earls of Darby, Salisbury and Suffolk, with some Others, were by the King [b] impowred to Treat once more with Philip of Valois or his Deputies, concerning the Dignities, Honours, Lands and Rights belonging to King Edward, and all other Controversies whatsoever: The Deputies on the other Part being the Archbishop of Roüen, the Bishops of Langres and Beauvais, and the Places of Treaty first Compiegne, and then Arras: But nothing of Peace being thereby effected, the King prepares now roundly for the War.

[a] Ashmole p. 649. 16. Febr. Patentes inter Regem Angl. & diversos Magnates German. de anno 13 Ed. 3. m. 2. & 4.

[b] Ashmole p. 649. 1 Julii, Pat. concess. hominib. Angl. & Vasc. 13 Ed. 3. m. 17. & Knighton p. 2572. n. 60.

II. And yet before he began his March, he wrote to the Pope and the College of Cardinals, setting forth his Title to the Crown of France, and the great Necessity that lay upon him as well to vindicate his Right, as to preserve his Lands and Honour, both which were injuriously invaded by Philip of Valois his Adversary: The Tenor of which Letters from the Original [c] Latine is as followeth, [c] Walsingh. hist. p. 119. Editionis verò Francofurtianæ p. 136. & Adam Murimouth M.S. & partim apud Odoric. Rainald. ad an. 1339. §. 17, & 18. & M. S. Dr. Stillingfleet n. 5. à princip. ad finem.

"To the Venerable College of the Beloved Fathers in God, the Cardinals of the "Holy Roman Church: EDWARD, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord "of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitain, Greeting. We have written to the most Holy "Father, the Chief Bishop, after due Recommendation of our Respects in these words: "The Law of Nature, which is the Guide of all living Creatures, hath granted to eve"ry one a Liberty of Defence against injurious Violence, generally allowing that to "be justly done, which any one doth in his own Defence, repelling of Force and In"jury. Truly, since great and hazardous Wars and injurious Violations have been "moved and done against Us, which being notorious to the whole World, having al"so by our frequent Intimation fully been made so to the Apostolick See, we take it "for Granted, that to your Holiness they cannot be unknown. Now We being Lo"vers of Peace (God knows) that we might avoid Contention and introduce Amity, "have freely offer'd to our Persecutor, respectfully indeed, and perhaps too humbly, "the desirable Methods of Peace, not without a great Resignation of our own Rights and "Interest; that omitting at present a too eager Prosecution of our Personal Quarrels in this "season of just Sorrow, wherein the Fury of the Soldan of Babylon, and other Enemies "of the Cross, being highly enflamed, because an Expedition was sworn against them, "and solemnly proclaim'd in Parts beyond the Sea, hath and doth daily harass and "destroy many Christian Souls: So that horrible despight and reproach is cast up"on our Crucified Lord, we might, as indeed we ought, and most earnestly desire, "joyntly intend to the Cause of our Saviour, which is neglected, and may there"by be attributed to the great shame and ignominy of every Christian King, thô ne"ver so well deserving. But we know not for what Offence it happens, that from "the meek Offers of Peace (from whence Friendship ought to arise) there hath "grown a Swelling of greater Anger and Obstinacy in our Persecutors Mind against Us: "Thô (God and our Conscience bearing Us witness) We have not provoked Him, "by any one fact or attempt made by Us against Him. Nay the Eyes of all the World "our publique Witnesses, do see with how many and great Indignities our foresaid Per"secutor (who stiles himself King of France) doth daily wound and defalcate Us and "our Rights.

He

AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"He is at this Preſent an Invader and unjuſt Uſurper of the Realm of France it "ſelf (which is known to belong to Us by all true Right of Succeſſion) not having "been aſham'd to withhold by Force that Crown (which he ought rather to claim by "Law and Equity, We being called and heard) thô We were a Male, and it could "no way be doubted, but that We were a Perſon principally concern'd in the Mat-"ter; and Our Right was as Notorious in that very Realm, as it is founded on the "Law of Nature: The matter of Fact being Evident, that Philip of Famous Memo-"ry, late King of France, Father of Charles King of France, laſt-deceaſed, and of the "moſt Serene Lady Iſabella, Queen of England, Our Mother, was our Grandfather. "And that to the ſame Charles, at the time of his Death, no Male living of thoſe, "who together with him, deſcended from the ſame Philip, was nearer than Our Selves. "And thô the Female Perſon by Cuſtom Anciently obſerved in that Kingdom, be "rendred uncapable of inheriting that Crown, this Law being principally intended for "the Good of the Realm, that under a frail Womans Government the Kingdom "ſhould not fall to ruine; thô it excludes the Perſon of the Woman, doth not yet "exclude the Perſon of the Male, deſcending from the Woman thus excluded. [d] Be-"ſide, by the foreſaid Law the Female Frailty is excluded from the Kingdom, that "the Realm may be more Advantagiouſly provided for, and the neareſt Male be ad-"mitted. Or elſe let him be admitted rather to that Right, who doth not prima-"rily proceed from the Mother ſo excluded, but is to be look'd on, as a Nephew "propagated Originally from the Grandfather; otherwiſe there would follow another "abſurdity of Injuſtice, that the Collaterals of the ſame Line ſhould be excluded, and "a more Remote Kinſman call'd in, when by the very Natural Law of Nations, Bro-"thers and Siſters, and their Children, are in mutual Succeſſion ſtill Prefer'd to other "Collaterals of another Line. And thence the ſaid Law aroſe in Favour of Kings, "and Hate of the Females Inability to Reign, not that by the Injury done to the "Female, an Occaſion alſo ſhould be taken of Injuring the Male Deſcendant. Nor yet "is it to be thought, that the intention of this Law could be ſo unjuſt, as to con-"demn the Mother and the Son, being of another Country. Nay rather on the con-"trary, by that very Judgement of the Law, whereby the Mother is remov'd from "the Succeſſion, the Son being ſeated in his Mothers Place, and ſupplying her de-"ficiency, the Succeſſion devolves unto him. Juſt as a Son ſteps into the Right and "Degree of his Father, deceaſed, ſo as to be admitted to the Succeſſion of his Fa-"ther among his Fathers Brethren. Then well may the diſconſolate Mother, thô "by the foreſaid Rigour of the Law, diveſted of her Royal Inheritance, Rejoyce again and "be Comforted, that her Son is ſo ſubſtituted in her Place. Nor then is Affliction added to "Affliction, which the Sacred Conſideration of the Law abhorreth, as we ſee, even where "the Law hath not laid an eaſie Burden of Affliction; but a caſe in the Law, which "condemns that cuſtomary Law, that yields the goods of ſhipwrack'd Perſons to another: "Becauſe it there expreſly corrects it by this reaſon, that we ſhould avoid adding to Afflicti-"on; much more for that very Reaſon is it forbid. Let it therefore ſatisfie this Law of "France, that from a Mother more then Pregnant (who yet was not made a Woman "by any of her own fault, but by neceſſity of Nature) it fully cuts off the Root of "Royalty; And that ſo the Mother by the Law of her Diſheriſon, doth expreſly ſuffer as "it were a certain Shipwrack: But let it not alſo be cruelly, and againſt all Right concluded, "that ſhe is in the Perſon of her diſinherited Son, to ſuffer a ſecond and a worſer Ship-"wrack, or that without a Fault the Puniſhment ſhould be doubled; when even where a "Fault is, the Puniſhment ought to be mitigated.

[d] Here a Clauſe, of which I can make no good Senſe, is left out

"Otherwiſe, if becauſe the Mother is not Lawfully admitted to the Throne, "the Son muſt be underſtood to be Lawfully expelled from the Throne: Then had "not the Kingdom of the Jews of Right belonged to the Holy Jeſus; which is a-"gainſt the Foundation of our Faith to aſſert. Who notwithſtanding he was the Son of God "begotten in a Myſtery, without the Company of a Man, of a Female of the Royal "Stem of David, even of the Virgin Mary (who her ſelf was not admitted to the "Kingdom, nor perhaps ought ſhe to be admitted) yet by the undoubted certainty "of Faith, became the True and Lawfull King of the Jews. And God forbid, that "this Royal Succeſſion of King Jeſus, ſhould be either an untying or breaking of the "Legal Obſervance; ſince he came not to break the Law, but to fulfill it. Where-"fore this moſt Excellent Inſtance of Lawfull Succeſſion (by Right of the Mother) "may reaſonably put to ſilence the pretended Reaſons of the Enemies of our Right "in the ſaid Kingdom of France: That the Saviour of the World, and We (a Poor "Mortal Sinner) whom parity of reaſon, as to this, reconciles together, may not be ſe-

"para-

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"parated, as to Our Lawfull Degree and Order of Succeſſion, by any vain Conſtitution, "or forced Interpretation of humane Laws.

"And yet for all this there was not only not any due Citation of Us made, nor "our Defence (thô in a Matter ſo highly Prejudicial to Our Right) admitted; but "alſo Our Proctors, who inſtantly deſired that they might Legally appear for Us and "Our Title, were ſo far from being allowed an equitable Hearing, as that they were "rudely and unjuſtly repelled with horrible Menaces of no leſs than preſent Death. "Wherefore their Procedure (thô the Deed of the Twelve Peers of France) hinders "Our ſaid Title nothing at all; ſince, as to Us, who were then Weak, and in Our "Minority; they laying by the part of indifferent Judges, perform'd the Office of "Thieves and Robbers: Whoſe Proceſs thus made againſt Us to Our Prejudice, e-"ven Our very Minority renders invalid in the Law. For neither could it have been "effectual, had it been made againſt an Adult Perſon; that Juſt Defence being ſo deny'd, "which to every Freeman is allow'd even by the Law of Nature, which neither any Prince, "nor any Law ought to infringe.

"Beſides, it is now publiquely known every where, how in Our Dukedom of A-"quitain, he has invaded and violated Our Rights, flying upon our Lands, and waſting "thoſe he could take: Which having joyned to thoſe he had ſeiſed before, and without "any Fear of God, ſaying, that he has Law at Will, he ſtill moſt injuriouſly detains.

"As for the Scots, whom the Rights of Ancient Times had made ſubject to Our "Crown, they by the Diſloyal madneſs of Rebellion, kicking againſt their Natural "Lord, were guilty of High Treaſon, a Fault which they have continued down from "Our Predeceſſors, even unto Us. Yet with theſe, that they might be the more "enabled to offend Us, he has in deſpight of Us, enter'd a League, Cheriſhing and "Maintaining them in ſo ungratefull and black a Crime againſt Us, thô by Right of "Blood and Nature, he ought rather to ſtand on our ſide. And when all theſe Pre-"miſes did not ſatisfie his unſatiate deſire of abuſing Us, having collected all the "Forces he could poſſibly bring together, he prepared unawares to ſwallow Us up "with the torrent of his Anger, deſiring to remove Us out of the World; becauſe per-"haps by his own evil Deſigns againſt Us, he meaſured Ours againſt him: Thô none can "juſtly collect or meaſure Our Intentions by meer Conjecture, ſince we have not done any "Act meriting ſuch an Opinion.

"Moreover, not well reſenting the Gift of Divine Providence beſtowed on Us, he "ſeems to reckon it an Injury done to him, that we live and Reign in Our King-"dom of England, and over what elſe the Lord gave Us to Rule in Proſperity; at "leaſt, but for him, in Peace. And all this we imagine he hath done, only becauſe the "People that ſerveth Us, or rather whom we by Our indefatigable Cares do conſtant-"ly ſerve, have hitherto by the Gift of God, continued in Great Glory and Re-"nown. Yet theſe things, thô heard and known, did not preſently move Us, but "we paſt them by with a Charitable diſſimulation, ſparing no Labour, nor coſt to ap-"peaſe his Perſecuting Violence againſt Us, and to make, as much as in Us lay, Our "Reign to paſs peaceably with him: Until we ſaw his Sword even ready unſheath'd "for the Deſtruction of Us and Ours, and prepared for Our utter Extermination. And "now will any Body perſwade Us, that ſuch an Uncle, ſo well known to Us, and "a Prince of ſuch Power, thô We were then buſied in other Wars, ought to be neg-"lected: Who being armed with the Right of his own Will, and ſurrounded with "a Mighty Power, collected from all Parts, that he might more freely perſecute Us "at his Pleaſure, deſerts even the Cauſe of Chriſt, which he had ſworn to maintain. "What therefore ſhould not a King, that even now ſees himſelf and his State in ap-"parent Danger, endeavour to do for his own Right and Security? Surely he only "can tell, who knows what ſuch a Man ought not to do, who contends only to avoid "Injuries and Loſſes, eſpecially in thoſe things, that ſo nearly concern his very Life & being. "Or can that be ſaid to be a light and idle Fear, which could ſhake the Conſtant Courages "even of Noble and Valiant Princes Our Allies, only for Our Sakes. Much more then ought "it to Alarum Us, whom only the Preparations of all theſe terrible things did concern.

"For this Cauſe therefore, even by Natural Impulſe being made not voluntary, but "neceſſary Defenders of Our own Rights, and thoſe of Our Subjects, and ſeeking for "the moſt Prudent Courſe of Proceeding, according to the Military Precepts of the "moſt Illuſtrious Captains of Antiquity, ſince Hoſtile Preparations are more danger-"ouſly expected at our own Doors, than repelled to thoſe of our Enemies, We thought "it better to meet them, that they might not fall upon Us unprepar'd, but be ſtifled "where firſt they had their Birth: Not only following the advice, but uſing the "Assistance of those whom Consanguinity and Affinity hath joyned unto Us, and to "whom it as well belonged to prevent, together with Us, Our Downfall, which "would even to them have proved little less than Fatal. According to these Coun- "sels, and by these Aids We resolvedly endeavour to secure Our Selves, committing "into the Hands of God our Righteous Cause (which once We were willing to "have refer'd to Your Apostolick See, or to any other Good Men, indifferent and "free from prejudice) nothing doubting, but that He, who sees all things from on "High, will give a most just Sentence, and bring it to pass with the Power of his "Sword. Nor do we believe, Holy Father, that any Equal Umpire, or Just Judge "can so Interpret or wrest this our Act, that what We have done for Our own De- "fence, and the Security of Our Just Rights, [r] he should esteem an Injury or Of- "fence: Nay rather, we believe, and are sure, that the true Intention of Our heart "will be consider'd, and that such a One will weigh in the Balance of unbyass'd judge- "ment what we go about, and why we undertake this arduous Affair: That, as the "Sanction of the Law teacheth, the Deed may not be censur'd from the Words, "but from the Deed the Words may be consider'd. [s] Let therefore all vain Surmises "about our Actions be laid aside, and let them only take Place in what appears certain, "but not in uncertain Matters.

Aſſi-

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

[r] One Clause (of which I could make no sense) left out.

[s] Hic etiam Clausulam omitto, eâdem ratione ductus.

"And now perhaps an Accuser, who is but a bad Interpreter of Our Actions, because "We have enter'd Friendship with a Man, against whom the Church, or the Vicar "thereof is said to have proceeded, will be apt to say, that We do not perform the part "of a Brother, or an Ally; because forsooth We are gaining to Our side such ne- "cessary Power, whereby We may defend Our Selves from the Dangers that threaten "our Ruine, and may be enabled to contend for the just obtaining of Our Rights. "But in the mean time such a One forgets to say, that We intend to defend Our "Selves, and to strive for what is Our own; which is the real Truth of the Matter: "For We are so far from opposing him, or favouring any of his Opposers, that We "should rather of Our Selves, without any respect of Danger, expose Our Selves for "his Honour, as becomes the Catholick Piety of Kings. Yet thus He accuses Us; "when yet, as the intention of all Equity allows, the Final Cause of every Action or "the Reason is to be principally attended, and from a Knowledge of the Will and Pur- "pose, there should arise a distinct and certain Knowledge of the Deed call'd in que- "stion; and as to humane Actions, only the Real Act, not the Verbal Conception "ought to be weigh'd. He forgets to say, that of this Matter We only make a shield "against him, who levell'd a deadly blow at Our Head: And that We have done "after the Example of a Wise Physician, who by his Skill, diverts that deadly Matter, that "is hastening to those Parts of the Body, where the Receptacle of Life is, to other Parts, "where that very Poyson which was design'd for present Destruction, cannot be suspected. "At this Our Care he Storms, Holy Father, he Storms, is uneasie, and complains, he, who "sought by his subtle Devices to find Us unadvised, and unprepared: But without "doubt it was more Discreet for Us, according to the Theory of War (which teaches, "that he more avoids the Inconvenience of War, who carries it further off from his "own Country) to go forth into another Realm, to fight against our Notorious Ene- "my, with the joynt Power of our Allies, than alone to expect him at Our own "Doors. Let not therefore the Envious Information of Our Detractors find Place "in the meek Mind of Your Holiness, or create any sinister Opinion of a Son, who "after the Manner of his Predecessors shall always firmly persist in Amity and Obe- "dience to the Apostolick Seat. Nay, if any such Evil suggestion concerning your "Son, should knock for entrance at your Holinesses Ears, let no Belief be allow'd "it, till the Son, who is concerned, be heard; who trusts, and always intends both to "say and to prove, that each of his Actions is just before the Tribunal of Your Holi- "ness, presiding over every Creature, which to deny, is to maintain Heresie. And "further this we say, adjoyning it as a further Evidence of our Intention, and greater "Devotion, that if there be any One, either of our Kindred, or Allies, who walks "not, as he ought, in the way of Obedience towards the Apostolick See, We in- "tend to bestow Our Diligence (and We trust to no little purpose) that leaving his "Wandring Course, he may return into the Path of Duty, and walk Regularly for "the future.

"Again there is One thing, which by Your Holinesses leave, having heard of many, "We must declare; thô the more We think of it, the more cruelly it stings Our "Mind; and that is, that the Hand of Our Adversary, who notoriously Labours now, "as formerly, for Our Destruction, when no Body made War against him, nor he a-

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"gainſt any Body but Us, was even at that time armed out of the very Patrimony of "Chriſt. Which unkindneſs, that the Kings of England, Our Predeceſſors, thoſe Il- "luſtrious Champions of Chriſt, thoſe [g] DEFENDORS of the FAITH, thoſe "zealous Aſſertors of the Right of the Holy Roman Church, and Devout Obſervors "of her Commands, that either They, or We, ſhould deſerve this Unkindneſs, We "neither know, nor believe. And thô for this very Reaſon many do ſay (We ſay not "ſo) that this Aiding of Our Enemy againſt Us, ſeems neither an Act of a Father, "nor a Mother towards Us, but of a Step-Mother; yet notwithſtanding We con- "ſtantly avow, that We are, and ſhall continue to Your Holineſs, and Your Seat, a "Devout and Humble Son, and not a Step-Son. Hence We hope, not without Rea- "ſon, that Our Humility being made Greater and Firmer by this, that it deſerved not "any Ill-turn from Your Fatherly Charity, will receive a more exuberant Encreaſe "of Favour; that what it laid upon Us, who were Innocent, Your tender Compaſ- "ſion, which at firſt was wanting, will now endeavour to Recompenſe unto Us with "Goodneſs.

[g] Fidei Athletas.

"And this Account of Our Right, and of the Injuries thus multiply'd againſt Us, "We intimate to the Preheminence of Your Sacred Dignity; that Your Holineſs, who "beſt know the Meaſure of Good and Juſt, and in whoſe Hands are the Keys to o- "pen and to ſhut the Gates of Heaven upon Earth, as the fulneſs of Your Power, "and Excellence of Your Judicature requires, if there ſhall appear Reaſon, may favour "Our Right, We being ready, not only from Your Sacred Tribunal, which is over "all, but from any Body elſe, Humbly to receive Information of the Truth, thô "contrary to Us, if any one knows it: And We, who freely ſubmit to Reaſon, "will embrace any other Truth, which ſhall be given to Us to underſtand, with Full and "Humble acknowledgements.

"But becauſe You, ô Fathers, are ſuperſcribed in theſe Our Letters, who are "for Your condign Merits, called to partake in the Cares and Counſels of our "Lord, the Chief Biſhop, and aſſiſt by his ſide to give the Knowledge of Sal- "vation to the People of Chriſt, We are willing to open theſe things alſo to "Your Knowledge; that knowing the Juſtice of Our Cauſe, You may pay that "Duty unto Truth, which You owe, and to which with urgent Requeſts We excite "Your circumſpect Wiſdome, which is wont equally to weigh the Rights of every "Man, without accepting of Perſons.

"And if in any thing that we have done, there ſhall be found any flaw, We "Requeſt herein better Advice from You, and deſire to be profitably informed, "being ready in all our Actions to yield to Reaſon. Given at Antwerp the 16 of "July, An. Dom. 1339.

III. This Letter of the Kings was ſhortly after thus Anſwer'd by the Pope, whoſe Name was Benedict the XII.

[h] Hæc Epiſtola extat etiam apud Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1338. §. 59. ex Tom. 4. Epiſt. Secr. 380. iiſdem verbis, quibus apud Walſingh.

"BENEDICT the Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his moſt Dear "Son in Chriſt, Edward King of England, Greeting, and Apoſtolical Benediction: "Being long ſince Deſirous that You ſhould follow the Commendable Footſteps of "Your Progenitors, Kings of England, who were Famous for the Fulneſs of their "Devotion, and Faith towards God, and the Holy Roman Church, and have ſhew'd "forth the Splendour of their Nobility untainted; And wiſhing that theſe Qualities "might ſhine more Eminently in You, thrô that Fatherly Love and Charity, where- "with We affect both You and Your Realm, We remember how We directed Our "Letters to Your Highneſs, among other things recounting unto You, that thoſe Ex- "ceſſes, which had been wickedly perpetrated with a complication of manifold and hei- "nous Offences, by the Noble Lord Lewis of Bavaria, long ſince, as was told You, "thrô Diſcord Elected King of the Romans againſt God, and the ſaid Roman Church, "and againſt Pope John the XXII, Our Predeceſſor of Happy Memory, could not e- "ſcape Your Notice, which as being Notorious to the whole World, We took Care to "recite in Our Letters; not all, ſince the Repetition thereof would have been too long and "tedious, but ſome of them, as follows.

"For the ſame Lewis (contrary to the Proceſſes of our ſaid Predeceſſor, and his In- "hibitions, made and had by the Advice of his Brethren the Cardinals of the ſame "Roman Church, containing divers Spiritual and Temporal Penalties and Sentences) en- "ter'd Italy, and openly admitted into his Familiarity ſeveral Hereticks Publiquely and "Notoriouſly condemn'd of Hereſie, himſelf alſo Aſſerting manifeſt Hereſies, and up- "holding and maintaining Hereticks, who openly taught the deteſtable, and horrid Er- "rors of the foreſaid Hereſies, and knowingly, or rather madly approving Heretical O"pinions, ſent an Evidence of that his Approbation by divers Letters Sealed with his "own known Seal, to the Peril of other Nations: And afterwards by a Deteſtable te- "merity, preſum'd to Uſurp unto himſelf the Imperial Name, and to exerciſe the Of- "fices of the Empire in Italy and Almaine, contrary to the Proceſſes and Prohibitions "aforeſaid, incurring thereby, beſides other Penalties, the Sentences of Excommunica- "tion and Anathema; And finally, adding Preſumption to Preſumption, and Exceſſes "to Exceſſes, he doubted not to March to the City of Rome, where he brake forth to "that Madneſs of Impiety, that deſigning to ſtir up the Miſchief of a General Schiſm, "both to the City and the World, he attempted to ſet up a certain Hypocrite, a Man "of Devilliſh Preſumption, Peter de Corbariis by Name, as the Image of horrid Abo- "mination in the Apoſtolick Seat, for Biſhop of Rome. And that as much as in him "lay, was by force effected; He honoured him as Pope, and then, and there upon his "Conſecration, or rather Execration, received de Facto the Imperial Crown; To ſay no- "thing of the many other Mad Proceedings, or rather Deteſtable Receedings by the ſaid "Lewis and Peter, done thrô Heretical Preſumption: For which our ſaid Predeceſſor "pronounced the ſaid Lewis to be deprived of his Power, Honour, and Dignity, and "uſing againſt him (who was enſnared in the Errors of ſuch Hereſies and Schiſms) the "Sword of Apoſtolick Power, as alſo againſt all others, who ſhould adhere unto him, "or afford him Help, Counſel, or Favour, or knowingly have, hold, or call him Ro- "man King, or Emperour, He Publiſhed not only the Penalties and Sentences of Ex- "communication and Anathema; but alſo all other Penalties and Sentences, as againſt "Favourers of Hereticks and Schiſm, and declared them to be by Law Enacted, as in "divers Proceſſes, by Our ſaid Predeceſſor had, is more fully contained: As to all "which Penalties, however by the ſaid Lewis deſerved, and againſt him by the juſt "Sentence of the Church promulged, if being truly Penitent he had Humbly ſubmit- "ted himſelf to Mercy, he might have found the ſaid Church Gracious, and that ſhe "would have received him as the Prodigal Son, returning from far, with open Arms "into her Boſom, ready to ſacrifice for him, in her large Returns of Praiſe to God, the "Fatted Calf.

"pini-

AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"Again, We added in the foreſaid Letters, that althô of all the foreſaid Exceſſes "by the ſaid Lewis committed (againſt the ſaid Proceſſes by our ſaid Predeceſſor "made againſt the ſaid Lewis, Juſtice ſo requiring) we had and alſo have notice; yet "that we might ſnatch him from out the Jaws of Eternal Death, being deliver'd from "the bonds of his ſins; after that we were taken up to the Heighth of the Chief "Apoſtleſhip, We gratiouſly received his Meſſengers, ſeveral times ſent unto Us, and "had many Conferences with them about his being Reconciled, which was to be ob- "tained by his bringing forth the Fruit of true Repentance: And thereupon the "matter hung to be conferr'd on further on Terms aſſigned; wherein certainly it was "not our Fault, that there was no further Progreſs made in the Affair of his Recon- "ciliation.

"Wherefore (moſt Dear Son) we then thought fit to require Your Highneſs by "thoſe Letters and to entreat You, that prudently conſidering and calling into your "moſt inward Meditation, the weight of thoſe Penalties, into which they ſhould fall, "and of thoſe Sentences, which they would incurr, and with what Dangers and "Difficulties they would enwrap themſelves, who to the ſaid Lewis, ſo notoriouſly "by all condemned of Hereſie and Schiſm, ſo odious to all Chriſtendom (before he "had obtain'd the favour of Reconciliation from the ſaid Church) ſhould raſhly pre- "ſume to afford any Help, Counſel or Favour, or ſhould knowingly and wittingly give "unto him, as unto an Emperour, or King of the Romans, the Honour or Title of a "Royal or Imperial Name, you would take care to withdraw your ſelf, and wholly "abſtain from contracting Leagues of any Familiarity or Friendſhip with him, or ren- "dring unto him any Reverence and Honour, as unto a King or Emperour, untill the "ſaid Lewis ſhould merit to obtain the Grace of the ſaid Churche's Reconciliation; "that ſo the integrity of your Good Name, and the unſpotted Brightneſs of your "Race might be preſerved. But when an unwelcom and unpleaſing Rumour was "lately brought unto us, That You, O Son, thô you had heard our Reports and "wholſom Advice, which proceeded from the Fountain of Charity, have not only "preſumed, to the hazard of your Safety and Reputation (which with Grief we ſpeak) "to enter a League and Confederation with the ſaid Lewis, and to him to adhere, and "to give him Favour, Help and Counſel, thô he is not yet reconciled to the Church, "nor acquitted of thoſe Penalties and Sentences, wherein, becauſe of the Premiſes and "many other Offences he is known to have been by our Predeceſſor involved; and

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"althô the Proceſſes of our ſaid Predeceſſor are not releaſed, but remain yet in their full "Force, whereby, as is premiſed, heavy both Spiritual and Temporal Penalties and Sen- "tences are inflicted upon all and ſingular, of whatſoever Preheminence, Dignity, State "or Condition, even thô they excell'd in the Pontifical, or Royal, or any other Ec- "cleſiaſticall or Secular Dignity whatſoever, who ſhould adhere unto the ſaid Lewis, or "afford him, directly or indirectly, publiquely or privately, Counſel, Aid or Favour, "or to him as Emperour, or King of the Romans, yield Obedience, or aſſign and "aſcribe the Stile of King or the Name Imperial: Nay, which (alas!) is known "to be more pernicious and damnable (if there be any Truth in theſe Relations) "You have de facto accepted from the ſaid Lewis, under the Name of Empe- "rour, the Office of Vicarſhip thrô all Almain and Germany, and all and ſingular the "Provinces or Parts thereof: Whereas the ſaid Lewis is neither King nor Emperour, "as is premiſed: On pretence whereof You are ſaid to have commanded by your Mi- "natory Letters, and more ſtraitly to have enjoyned on ſevere Penalties, ſeveral Pre- "lates of Churches, and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, beneficed in the Lands of the Empire, "but perſiſting in due Devotion and Fidelity to Us and to our See, that they ſhould "appear before You, as Vicar of the ſaid Lewis in Almain, Germany, and the Parts a- "foremention'd, to hear the Equity of his the ſaid Lewis's Sentences and Judgments, "and of your Commands, and to yield unto the ſaid Lewis, or to You in his Name, "their Recognitions and Homages for their Lands, Goods and Rights, which they hold "of the Empire. Concerning You therefore, O our Son, conſidering the Wiſdom "of You and your Council, we cannot ſufficiently admire, that when You (as we "have heard) in order to the Recovery of thoſe Rights, which you ſay belong to "you, have travelled toward the Parts of Almain, not without the detriment of ſun- "dry Great Perſons, and the exceeding profuſion of Expences, and have made many "Preparations to that purpoſe, now at laſt you have deſpiſed the Proceſſes of our ſaid "Predeceſſor, and damnably brought into contempt the Penalties and Sentences afore- "ſaid, into which You have moſt manifeſtly involved your Self (if what we hear of "You be true) not without moſt horrid Scandal, which ſullies the Glory of your Fa- "mily. And all this notwithſtanding, we have never offended You, nor have done a- "ny thing againſt You; althô we have alſo underſtood, that it hath been falſly and "deceitfully ſuggeſted to you by thoſe who neither love You, nor your Safety, nor "your Honour, how we gave out of our Chamber, a great quantity of Money, to "our Moſt Dear Son in Chriſt, the Illuſtrious King of France, in Aid of his War, and "alſo granted unto him the Inſtitution of all Eccleſiaſticall Perſons in all Churches "of his Dominions, which Matters are known to be void of all manner of Truth; "For ſuch things were never demanded of Us, nor ſhould we by any means have "granted them, had they been never ſo inſtantly requeſted of Us; nor did we grant "the Tythes to the King of France againſt You, but againſt the Germans adhering "to Lewis, and Enemies to the foreſaid Roman Church, who were then even ready "to invade the Realm of France (as the common and known Report went) as is "expreſly contained in the Grant of the ſaid Tithes. For it was not our Intention "to adminiſter fuel of Diſcord againſt You, or to help them with any Supply; but "rather extreamly deſiring, that both your Kingdom and the Kingdom of France ſhould "enjoy Peace and Concord, Unanimity and Proſperity, We have to that purpoſe by "our Letters directed to your Highneſs, and to the ſaid King of France, and by our "Legats de Latere, Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, ſent to thoſe Parts, with "moſt ardent Deſires travailed, and ceaſe not yet, nor ſhall ceaſe to travail, that be- "tween You and the ſaid King, and both your Realms, the ſerenity and brightneſs of "Peace may ſhine forth.

"Yet You, O Moſt Dear Son, giving as it ſeems, credit to the foreſaid falſe and ly- "ing Suggeſtions, have ſhew'd your Self an Enemy and Perſecutor of Us and of the ſaid "Roman Church, and do invade and uſurp the Honours and Rights of Us and of the "ſaid Church, (to whom the Government and Adminiſtration of the Roman Empire, "it being void, as now it is known to be, do of full Right belong) by moleſting the "Prelates and Eccleſiaſticall Perſons, who perſiſt as is premiſed, in due Devotion and "Fidelity to Us, and by endeavouring to withdraw them to the Obedience of the ſaid "Lewis, being as is premiſed, ſententially condemned of divers Hereſies, Schiſms and "other Crimes; and by the juſt Judgment of God and the Church, deprived of all "Kingly and Imperial Right (if ever any hath, or did belong unto him) to perform a "Recogniſance and Homage, or to You in his Name, by attempting to induce them by "coactive Methods and Comminations.

"But

AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"But I would to God (O Son) before you involve your self any further in these "most dangerous and detestable Matters, that you would seriously consider, and set "before the eyes of your Mind with mature Deliberation, the hazardous Labyrinths and "knotty Snares, into which some, who are more sollicitous about their own, than your "Affairs, by their subtle and most exquisite Arts, endeavour to involve You, and to "lay a Burthen upon you (which by all means they desire to rid themselves of) not "easily supportable, if you diligently attend the Circumstances, nor without the ha-"zard of your utter Ruine.

"Nor would We have you ignorant, how that our foresaid Predecessor, in a cer-"tain Constitution made formerly by him with the Advice and Counsel of his said "Brethren, did promulge Excommunications and other heavy Sentences, against all and "singular, of what State, Dignity or Condition soever they should be, whether Patri-"archal, or any other Superior, as Pontifical or Royal, who without the special Li-"cence of the Apostolick See, should presume to assume the Name of Vicar, or of a-"ny other Office within the Lands of the said Empire, (it being void, as then it was, "and now also is void, as was premised) or being assumed to retain it beyond the space "of two Months, or being laid down to reassume it any ways; if they should remain "refractory, and would not obey and intend to the same.

"We therefore, who toward You, O Son, could not shut up our Bowels of Fatherly "Compassion, but are inwardly touch'd with Grief of Heart, seeing such things de-"vised, as tend to the detriment of You, and of your Honour and Estate, Fame "and Safety, do entreat your Magnificence, require and more earnestly exhort you in "the Lord, nevertheless persuading you by sound and fatherly Counsel, that taking "the Premises, together with what else may occurr unto you, into serious Conside-"ration; and moreover, holding for certain, and remembring, that the said Lewis, "as we premised, is neither King nor Emperour, and that nothing, which he hath done, "or shall do, as long as he hath been and shall be bound by the said Processes, Pe-"nalties and Sentences, was or is valid, or of any Authority, Stress or Moment, and "that it is dangerous and very much to be feared by You, to commit your Self to the "uncertainties and hazards of War, especially being involved in all the foresaid Pro-"cesses, Penalties and Sentences, from which you cannot be deliver'd, but only by "the Apostolick See, (which has expresly kept in her own hands the Absolution there-"from) and so becoming a Persecutor and Enemy of God and the said Roman Church: "From which things the Lord of Mercies protect and defend You.

"You should also consider diligently, that thô it is natural for Man to sin, yet per-"severance in Sin ought to be reckon'd Diabolical and proper to Devils, and that from "these horrid Errors, to which perhaps you have declined, being seduced by the Serpents "subtlety, before they grow more deadly, and stink worse and putrifie in the sight of "God and Men, We desire You to hasten back, and to direct your feet in the right "Way, pleasing God, and agreeable to your Condition, Safety and Honour, and ra-"ther than despise the Decrees of the said Cardinals, who sincerely love You and your "Realm, to acquiesce in the mutual Reformation of Peace between You and the said "King, it being a thing so pleasing to God and desirable to Men.

"And surely it seems to Us, that althô the Office of the said Vicarship might now "have lawfully been assigned, yet it would not become your Honour (who are such and "so Great a King and Prince, and are known in the world to be ennobled with such a "Royal Name and Title) to be called the Vicar of any Temporal Lord whatsoever. "How much less then did it, or doth it become your Eminence, to be called his Vi-"car, who (as often aforesaid) hath no Authority at all; but is, alas! defiled with the "blemish of so many Crimes, and involved in such and so many heavy Penalties and Sen-"tences, together with all his Adherents.

"And now know, O most Loving Son, that if you shall acquiesce in these our "wholsom Admonitions, thô You have been so moved as to fall, We will effectually "reach forth our Gracious Hand (as far as by Gods Assistance we shall be able) to "raise You up again: But otherwise, We cannot forbear, since the very Duty of our "Apostolick Employment requires so much of Us, but take Order to provide the best "Remedy, as to the Premises, by proceeding against you (which will be very trou-"blesom and ungratefull to Us) if it shall (which God forbid) be necessary, as, Ju-"stice so requiring, both ought and may be done.

Given at Avignion under the Seal of the Fisher, &c. in the [1] v Year of our Pontificate, on the Ides of November.

[1] iv. apud Odoric.

CHAP-

CHAPTER the Thirteenth.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward ſummons the German Lords to meet him at Mechlin in Brabant. II. Upon their Meeting the King and They ſend their ſeveral Defiances to King Philip. III. The Lord Walter Manny begins the War, and takes Thin l' Eveſque, which he garriſons for King Edward: The Earl of Salisbury makes an Incurſion into the Biſhoprick of Liege. IV. The King of France's Preparations. V. The French Navy burn Southampton. VI. King Edward lays Siege to Cambray. VII. But on News of King Philips Preparations, riſes and goes forth to meet him, putting all to Fire and Sword, as he goes. VIII. The two Kings face one another at Vironfoſſe in Cambreſis: A Day appointed for Battle with the Order and Number of both Armies. IX. The true Reaſons why the French declined to fight, and the ſudden Departure of King Philip. X. King Edward returns to Antwerp, where having ſent for his Son the Prince to come to him, he keeps his Chriſtmas. XI. A Copy of the Pope's Letter to King Edward to move him to Peace. XII. King Edwards Anſwer thereto. XIII. Two notable Parliaments held at Weſtminſter, one by the Prince before his Departure out of England, and the other by Commiſſioners empowred thereto by the King.

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

I. BEfore the Return of this Anſwer from the Pope, King Edward immediately after the Date of his own Letters, began his March to [a] Villenort in Brabant, where he lodged his People partly in the Town, and partly without in Tents and Pavilions, along the River ſide: Here he tarried from the 20th of July till the middle of Auguſt, ſtill expecting the Coming of the Lords of the Empire his Allies, but eſpecially of the Duke of Brabant, on whom chiefly the reſt did depend, as to their reſolution in this Matter. But when his Patience was almoſt tired with fruitleſs expectation, he was fain to ſend once more his ſpecial Summons to each of them, commanding them to come and meet with him at [b] Mechelen, the Metropolis of Brabant, on St. Giles his Day following, and then and there to ſhew him the Cauſe of thoſe ill-boding Delays. Now all this while that the King waited thus at Villenort for his Confederates, he maintain'd idly at his own Coſts and Charges 1600 Men of Arms all Engliſh, and 10000 Archers of England, beſides all other neceſſary Proviſions for his Court, and beſide the great Armies and Garriſons he had in other Places, and upon the Seas, and beſide the vaſt Summs of Mony, which he had diſpos'd of to the Lords his Confederates.

[a] Froiſ. c. 35.

[b] 1 Septemb.

The French King for his part was not unpurvey'd of neceſſaries for Reſiſtance; for beſide his formidable Preparations in France, Normandy and Aquitain, he had ſet forth a Mighty Fleet of Ships, conſiſting of French, Normans, Bretons, Picards, and Spaniards; who had Orders, as ſoon as ever the War ſhould be once open, and the Defiances made, to land on ſome of the Sea-coaſts of England, where they could to their beſt advantage, and to put all to Fire, and Sword, and Rapine. So honourable in thoſe days were Chriſtian Princes, as (thô they manifeſtly prepared againſt each other) not to begin open War, till they had given mutual Warning thereof.

II. On the firſt of September, or St. Giles his day, according to King Edward's Summons, theſe tardy Lords of Almain came all at laſt to Mechelen unto him, where they immediately enter'd upon conſideration of the preſent Affairs: There was much Debate among them, but in the end it was reſolved, that the King of England ſhould ſet forward within fifteen days at fartheſt, and to the intent their Cauſe ſhould not appear unwarrantable, they all agree'd to ſend their particular Defiances to the French King. Firſt the King of England, then the Duke of Guerles or Gueldre late Earl, and William Earl of Juliers late Marqueſs, but now advanced to higher Dignities by King Edward; then the Lord Robert of Artois, the Lord John of Heinalt, the Marqueſſes of Nuys and Blanckeberg, the Lord of Faulquemont or Valkenberg (as the Dutch call it) Sr. Arnold of Baquehen, the Archbiſhop of Colen, Sr. Galeace his Brother, and the reſt reſt of the Lords of the Empire. All theſe had their particular and ſpecial Defiances, written, ſigned and ſealed, excepting, of all the Confederates, the Duke of Brabant only, who ſaid, "He would do the like by himſelf at his beſt Convenience. Henry Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, was choſen to carry theſe Defiances into France, being attended with the Herald Windſor (who was Principal King at Arms of England in thoſe days) Theſe preſently carried them to Paris, and there Windſor (after the Defiances were deliver'd) openly defi'd King Philip of Valois, in the Name of the King of England his Maſter, and then having Both performed their Buſineſs ſo diſcreetly, that they could not juſtly incurr any reproach or blame, thô inwardly King Philip boiled with Fury; they demanded and obtained a ſafe Conduct, and ſo return'd to the King their Maſter, who tarried for them at Mechlin. AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

[c] Froiſ. ibid.
[d] Knighton p. 2574. n. 30. & 40.

III. That very Week that the Lord Walter Manny underſtood for certain how the Defiances had been made, he took to him fourty Spears, and rode thrô Brabant Night and Day, till he came into Heinalt, and entred the Wood of Blaton: His Reſolution and Deſign was not as yet known to any of his Followers, but thoſe few of his Friends only, to whom he thought it neceſſary to Communicate his Purpoſe; and to theſe he privately confeſſed, "how he had promiſed before ſome great Ladies in England, "to be the very firſt, that after the War was Proclaim'd, ſhould enter the Confines of "France, and perform ſome notable Exploit of Arms: That now therefore in purſuance "of his Vow, he reſolves for Mortagne, a Town and Fortreſs on the Confines of Hei- "nalt, two Leagues from Tournay, towards Valenciennes, which belonged then to King "Philip; and that therefore this he would endeavour to ſurpriſe. So having paſſed thrô the Wood of Blaton, he came early one Morning before Sunriſe to Mortagne, where by chance he found the ſmall Door of the Great Gate of the Town ſtanding open: Hereupon alighting immediately from his Horſe with all his Company, having appointed certain to ſtand ſtill and Guard the Gate againſt his Return, he enter'd with all the reſt, and went thrô the High-Street with his Banner before him in good cloſe Order, till he came to the chief Tower: But here he found the Gate and the Wicket faſt cloſed againſt him. When the Watchman of the Tower heard the noiſe of Men of Arms, he ſtraight ſounded a Trahee, Trahee, ſignifying Treaſon thereby: At which the whole Caſtle took the Alarm, and preſently came to their Defence. But the Lord Manny was not prepared with Engines ſufficient for an Aſſault, only he hoped to have broke down the Gate before the Alarm might be given, which now failing of he Retreated, and ſet fire however to the Street adjoyning to the Caſtle, and ſo burning about 60 Houſes, put the whole Town in a fright, but would not ſuffer his Men to ſcatter abroad for Murder, Spoil, or Plunder: Becauſe the Garriſon was entire. [c] Froiſ. c.36.

Thence therefore taking Horſe again, he rode back directly toward Condè, where they paſſed the River of Hayſne, as he is falling into the [f] Skell: Thence he took the road to Valenciennes, and coaſting on the Right hand came to Aveſnes, whence by the Abbey he proceeded to Bouchain, which ſtands on the Banks of the Skell, between Cambray and Valenciennes: Here he paſſed the River over the Bridge, the Captain either not daring, or caring, to Impeach their paſſage. After this he came before a ſtrong Caſtle, upon the Sambre called Thin l' Eveſque, becauſe it belonged to the Biſhop of Cambray, not ſtanding above [g] three Leagues from Cambreſis. This Place they took by ſurpriſe, with the Captain and his Lady therein: And here the Lord Walter Manny placed a good Garriſon, whereof he made his Brother Sr. Giles Manny the Captain, who afterwards proved but an ill Neighbour to the City of Cambray. This done Sr. Walter return'd into Brabant unto King Edward his Maſter, whom he found ſtill at Mechlin, and there he ſhew'd what he had done, for which the King gave him Thanks and approved of his Service. [f] Scaldis Lat. [g] Knighton p. 2573. *n.*60.

At the ſame time the Earl of Salisbury made an Inroad into the Biſhop of Liege his Country, with a Thouſand fighting Men, where having waſted all before him for ſeveral Miles together, he return'd ſafe again, laden with Spoil and Glory. [h] Knighton ibid.

IV. Nor was the King of France an idle Spectator of all theſe Preparations and Hoſtilities; For he muſt needs be well aware aforehand of a Storm, which he himſelf in a manner Raiſed, and was ſufficiently, as to all humane Probability, provided againſt it: His Navies, Magazines and Treaſures, were well furniſhed, his Garriſons and good Towns well ſtock'd with Men of War, and Proviſions, and his Allies ſtood all ready, as in a Race, to run the ſame Courſe together with him. But as ſoon as ever he had received the Defiances from King Edward and his Confederates, he immediately addreſſes himſelf to put Life and Vigour into all his former Preparations: He ſtraight began on all hands to retain Men of Arms, and others in his Service, and firſt he ſent the Lord [i] *Froiſ. c.*37.

Galeas,

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

Galeas de la Bauſine, a Valiant Knight of Savoy to be Captain of the City of Cambray, and with him two more Couragious Gentlemen, the Lord of Roy, and Sr. Theobald of Marnel, with above two Hundred Spears both French and Savoyans. At the ſame time he ſent ſufficient Forces to ſeiſe into his Hands the County of Ponthieu in Picardy, which belonged to King Edward in [k] Right of his Grandmother Eleanor, ſiſter to Alphonſo, King of Caſtille and Leon, Daughter of Ferdinand III, and only Child by his ſecond Wife Joan, Daughter and Heir of John Earl of Ponthieu and Provence. He directed alſo his Letters to the young Earl of Hainault his Nephew, to the Duke of Lorrain, the Earl of Bar, and the Biſhops of Mentz and Liege, deſiring either their friendly Aſſiſtance in theſe his Wars, or at leaſt, that they would remain Neuters, and forbear all Hoſtility againſt him and his Realm. The Earl of Hainalt wrote him a very courteous Anſwer, "That for his part, He would be always ready to Aſſiſt his Uncle the King "of France, againſt any Perſon whatſoever. But foraſmuch as the King of England "made his War, as Vicar of the Sacred Roman Empire, he ſaid he could not in Rea- "ſon, Civility, or Duty, deny him entrance into his Country, nor refuſe to ſhew him "Reſpect, and gratifie him in his Lawfull Demands, becauſe he held part of his Lands "of the Emperour. Moſt of the other Lords anſwer'd to King Philip, "that they "would never commit, or undertake any thing which ſhould be to his diſpleaſure. Beſides [l] he had John Earl of Luxemburgh, and King of Bohemia, whoſe Daughter, the Lady Bona, was Married to King Philip's Eldeſt Son, John Duke of Normandy, engag'd firmly on his ſide, and by his means Henry Count Palatine of the Rhine, undertook to ſerve him with 300 Men of Arms for 56000 Florins of Florence. In like manner he engaged Albert Biſhop of Metz (then a Free City, now under France) Otho Duke of Auſtria, Theodore Marqueſs of Monferrat, Amè Earl of Geneva, Geoffry Earl of Linanges, Valeran Earl of Deux-Ponts, Henry Earl of Vaudemont, John Earl of Sarburg, Prince Humbert, Son and Heir to James Humbert the Old Dauphin of Vienna, beſides the Duke of Lorrain aforemention'd, and many other Lords and Captains of Almain, Spain, la Franche Comtè, Dauphinè, Savoy, and other Countries; beſides the Scots, who were able to give Powerfull Diverſions, and beſides the Towns of Fuenterabia, or Fontarabie, St. Sebaſtian, St. Ander and Laredor in Biſcay.

[k] Sandford Geneal. hiſt. p. 130. l. 2. c. 1.

[l] Du Cheſne l. 15. p 646.

V. The mean [m] while Sr. Hugh Quiriel, Sr. Peter Bahuchet, and Sr. Nicolas Barbenoire (ſo called of his Black-Beard) being joynt Admirals of King Philip's Navy, and having full Commiſſion to Intercept our Merchants, and to burn, kill, and ſlay in England without Pity, were ſcouring the Seas in ſeveral Squadrons, as they ſaw occaſion for Advantage. Among other Particulars, One Detachment from this great Fleet, conſiſting [n] of Thirteen Sail Great and Small, met with 2 Great Ships of England, full of Riches and Money, received for Woolls in Flanders, and well Mann'd alſo, being accompanied with two leſſer Barks, and one Caravel only: The two Ships were Named the Chriſtopher and the Edward. Now when each ſide knew their Oppoſites to be Enemies, they both with equal Ardour addreſſed themſelves to the Fight: Neither ſide ſpared their ſhot from Engines, from their long Bowes, and Arbaliſts; for Guns, that are actuated with Sulphur and Fire, were not as then known in Europe. So there began a moſt Cruel Fight, thô not on equal Terms, the French almoſt thrice exceeding them in Number of Veſſels, but more than four times in Number of Hands, they being all fitted up ready for War, ours being but Merchants, thô well Convoy'd. Wherefore the three ſmall Engliſh Veſſels, being unfit for Fight, and Laden more with Merchandiſe, than neceſſaries for War, made off, and eſcaped by their Nimble Sailing; but the Edward and the Chriſtopher ſtood ſtiffly to their Tackling, and fought fiercely more then 9 Hours, inſomuch, that on both Parts more than 600 Men were ſlain, before the Victory could be decided: But in the end wearied with Labour, Wounds, and Slaughter, and oppreſt with Number, they were both taken, and brought into the French Havens, moſt of the wounded Engliſh being unmercifully thrown overboard, too baſe a Recompence for their Great Valour. On the [o] 5 of October, being a Sunday, 50 Galleys of Normans, Picards, Genoans, and Spaniards, all well Mann'd and Furniſh'd with Habiliments for War, at 9 of the Clock in the Morning, while the People were at Church, came ſuddenly to Southampton, where they ſacked the Town, the Inhabitants running away for fear, but they plunder'd all they could lay Hands on, and ſlew the poor people they met with, and raviſh'd Women, and waſted the Victuals at a heavy rate. Thoſe of the Nobler ſort, whom they could light on, they hung up in their own Houſes, and upon their Departure ſet the whole Town on Fire: But by the Break of next day, before they were half got to their Ships, Sr. John Arundel, a Valiant Gentleman of Hantſhire, came in upon them, being accompanied with a goodly ſmall Band of

[m] Froiſ. c. 37. & Knighton p. 2573. n. 20. &c.

[n] Fabian p. 206. & Holinſhead p. 904.

[o] Froiſ. c. 37. f. 21. Stow p. 235. Holinſhead p. 904. Knighton p. 2573. a n. 1. ad n. 10. Walſing. hiſt. Edit. Franc. p. 146. n. 5. Fabian p. 206. &c.

of Choice Souldiers, and thoſe Townſmen who had fled from the French the Day before; who thô they came too late to ſave their Friends, came yet ſoon enough to Revenge them, and ſo falling ſuddenly upon the Barbarous Pyrates, before they could recover their Confuſion, which their ſpeedy Departure put them into, they ſlew no leſs than 300 of them upon the ſpot, together with a Chief Captain of theirs, the King of Sicily's Son; to whom the French King had granted, whatſoever he ſhould Win or Conquer in England. But for all his High hopes, he was in this ſurpriſe beaten to the ground by a rough Clown, who laid about him with a Flail like a Mad-man; the Prince not being able to ſpeak a Word of Engliſh, cry'd [p] out in French, Rancon, Rancon, meaning that he deſired to be taken to Ranſome: But the Clown nothing underſtanding either his Language, or his Coat-Armour, anſwering him "I know thou art a Francon, and therefore thou ſhalt die, ſtill laid on, till he had thraſh'd him to Death. The reſt of the Pyrates fled as faſt as they could to their Ships, but the Purſuers cut many of them ſhort, and not a few were drowned thrô their too great haſte, as they confuſedly endeavour'd to recover their Veſſels, moſt of the Ships being hal'd off for fear the Engliſh ſhould board them. After this the Townſmen of Southampton encompaſſed the place about with a great Wall, and [q] in the Parliament (of which we ſhall ſpeak in due ſeaſon) the Lord Richard Talbot was appointed Captain of the Town with 20 Men of Arms, and an 100 Archers at the Kings Wages: whereby they were ſecur'd from the like diſtreſs for the future.

AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

[p] Speed's Maps in Hantſhire f. 13. §. 10.

[q] Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 20. §. 16, 17. M.S. p. 27. §. 16. &c.

Another time Eleven [r] of theſe French Gallies approaching to the Town of Harwich in Eſſex, caſt fire among ſome of the Out-houſes, the force whereof was ſo abated by reaſon of a ſtrong Contrary-Wind, that no great harm was done: But the Town it ſelf was too ſtrong to be attempted with any probability of Succeſs. Thus the French Navy ſought Advantages along by the Sea-Coaſts; once they ſailed to the Iſle of Wight, but here they gain'd nothing, being ſtrongly reſiſted by the Inhabitants: Thence therefore they coaſted about for ſome more eaſie adventure; at Haſtings they burnt Fiſhers Cottages with their Boats, and ſlew many Poor Labouring Men; they alſo made great ſhows of a Deſign againſt the Iſle of Thanet in Kent, and againſt Dover and Folkeſton; but here they were able to do no great harm, except to Poor Fiſhermen. Thence ſailing about to the Havens in Cornwall and Devonſhire, every where they Deſtroyed the Fiſhermen and their Boats, and whatever Ships they found at Anchor, they fired. At length they enter'd Plimouth-Haven, where they burnt ſome Great Ships, and a good part of the Town: But here at laſt they were met with by Hugh Courtney Senior, Earl of Devonſhire, an old tough Souldier of Fourſcore, who came upon them with the Trained Bands of his Country, and ſeeing at the firſt Brunt a few of his Men fall by reaſon of the French Quarrels, which they ſhot from far, he made his Men to cloſe immediately, and fall to Handy ſtroaks with them, whereupon he ſoon overcame them, beating them down by Heaps, and ſo Chaced them eagerly to their Gallies, when being not able to reach their Fellows by wading (for they were now drawn off, and ſtood aloof) there were drown'd of them about 500.

[r] Stow p. 235.

About this time there [s] came a Fleet of Frenchmen conſiſting of 20 Great Ships, 15 ſmall Ones and 32 Gallies, riding before Sandwich-Haven; but they durſt not take Land, becauſe they ſaw the County-Militia ready drawn up to receive them. Thence therefore they tack'd about to Rye, where they did much Miſchief; but while they were there, a Squadron of Engliſh came up with them, whereupon the French hoiſed Sail and fled before them, the Engliſh all the while making after them with full Sail, till they came to Bologne, where they ſet fire to part of the Town, and hang'd 12 Captains of the Fleet, whom among others they had taken.

[s] Knighton p. 2573. n. 40.

VI. The News [t] of theſe Hoſtilities of the French, and eſpecially of their Succeſs at Southampton, were brought to the King of England in Brabant, while the two Cardinals, [u] Pedro de Gomez of Spain, Titulo Praxedis, and Bertrand de Monte Faventio, Titulo Sanctæ Mariæ in Aquiro, were yet in his Preſence, debating of Matters between the two Realms, and urging the King to a Peace with France; whereupon the King with Great Indignation turning to the Earl of Juliers, and other his Friends there Preſent, asked them "If he had not great Cauſe to break with France? If only to Revenge their "Inhumane Butchery, and extream Cruelty to his Poor Subjects, who fell into their "Hands? At which the Cardinal Bertrand replyed in this Manner, not without a ſmile, betraying his Haughty Conceits, "My Lord, ſaid he, the Realm of France is encom-"paſſed about with ſo ſtrong a Line of Silk, that it cannot be broken by the ſtrength "of the Kingdom of England: Wherefore my Lord, ô King, you will do well to ſtay "firſt for the Arrival of the Dutchmen, and others Your Friends and Confederates;

[t] Stow p. 235.

[u] Victorellus 1 Vol. p. 862. §. 24. & p. 857. §. 4.

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"the greater Part whereof You ſtill want, and I believe will not find them here in haſte. The King extreamly diſdaining theſe Proud Words, immediately Anſwer'd, "That he "would however ride forth into France with Banner diſplayed, and that there he would "demand a View of thoſe Invincible Frenchmen, and that He would either win "that Realm againſt whoſoever ſhould oppoſe him, or honeſtly leave his Body in "the field.

[x] Froiſ. c. 38.

The next day He [x] departed in this Reſolution from Mechlin, and went on to Bruſſels, another Chief City of Brabant, his people paſſing on by the Town: Thither at laſt came now the long expected Aid of Almaines to the Number of 20000 ſtrong, with their Leaders; but only the Duke of Brabant appeared not as yet. Wherefore once more King Edward ſent, and demanded of him, Whether he intended to let him have his Company to the Siege of Cambray, or no? The Duke anſwer'd, "that as ſoon as "he knew for certain, that Cambray was actually Beſieged, he would upon his Honour "come thither, with 1200 Spears, all good Men of War. Satisfied with this, King Edward marched on five Leagues Farther, till he came to Nivelle, a Town near the Borders of Hainault, where he lay one Night, and the next day went to Mons, a chief Town in Hainault, and of great ſtrength; and there he found the young Earl of Hainault, his Brother-in-Law, who received him gladly. The King was attended by the Lord Robert of Artois, who was of his Privy Council, and always about him, with about 16 or 20 more of the moſt Noble Barons of England, who ſtill waited on the King both for the Honour of his Perſon, and to be ready to adviſe with him about any ſudden Emergency: Together with whom was Doctor Henry Burwaſh, Brother to the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, Senior, and Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, who purchaſed much Praiſe of all Men, for the great Wiſdom, Conduct, and Courage he at all times ſhew'd, but eſpecially in theſe Grand Affairs of the King his Maſter. The Army lay without the Town in the Fields and Villages thereabout, where they found plenty of Proviſion of all ſorts for their Money; thô as ſome paid truly, others made bold to do otherwiſe: It being next to Impoſſible, abſolutely to reſtrain a whole Army from all kind of Licence. When the King had tarried thus at Mons the ſpace of two Days, he went thence accompanied with the young Earl to Valenciennes, which was ſeven Leagues further, ſtanding on the Skell: And here he met with the Lord John of Hainault, the Earls Uncle, the Lord Eagimelles, the Lord Verchin, the Lord of Havreth, and others, who were about the Earl their Maſter. The King to ſhew his Generous Confidence in the Earl, went into the Town only attended with twelve more of his Nobles; the King and the Earl his Brother-in-Law, going hand in hand thrô the Court of the great Hall of his Palace, which is called La Salle du Comte. But as they were going up the Stairs of the Hall, the Biſhop of Lincoln Proclaimed aloud theſe Words---- 'O Yes, William "Biſhop of Cambray, I Henry Biſhop of Lincoln, as Procurator to the Mighty Lord "Edward King of England, Vicar of the Sacred Empire of Rome, do here Warn and "Admoniſh You the ſaid William, that You open the Gates of the City of Cambray to "Our ſaid Lord the King of England: Which if You refuſe to do, You ſhall forfeit "Your Lands, and We will enter by force. To this Proclamation no Anſwer was given, for the Biſhop of Cambray was not there Preſent, but in the City of Cambray it ſelf, looking to the Defence thereof. Then the Biſhop of Lincoln Proclaim'd again--- "O Yes, You Lord William Earl of Hainault, We here Warn and Admoniſh You in "the Name of the Emperour, that You come and ſerve the King of England his Vi- "car, before the City of Cambray, with ſuch a Number of Souldiers as You ought to "do. The Earl anſwer'd, "With all my Heart, I am ready to ſerve him, according "to my Duty. Upon theſe Words, they enter'd into the Hall, after which the Earl Led the King into his Chamber, where they ſupp'd together. The next day the King departed to Haſpre upon the Salle, where he tarried two days, viewing his Men as they paſſed onward before him, and thence he went to Cambray, which immediately he began to inveſt round, and daily his Forces encreaſed. For thither came the young Earl of Hainault, and John Lord of Beaumont his Uncle in Great array: Theſe had their Quarters Aſſign'd them near the King; there were there alſo the Duke of Gueldre and his Men, the Earl of Juliers, the Earl of Mons, the Earl of Savenier, the Marqueſs of Nuys, the Lord of Faulquemont, Sr. Arnold of Baquehen, with other Lords of the Empire, Allies of England. And now at laſt, the ſixth day after the Siege was laid, came thither the Cautious Duke of Brabant with 900 Spears in his Company, and he took up his Station on the ſide towards Oſtervandt, on the River Skell, over which he flung a Bridge, to maintain Communication between the Hoſts for their mutual ſecurity. As ſoon as he was come, he alſo ſent his Defiance to the French King, who was then at [y] Engl. Atl. 4 Vol. p. 233.

Compiegne

Compiegne in Valois, whereat his Reſident Sr. Lewis of Travemund, who had always confidently affirmed that his Lord meant nothing leſs, was ſo aſhamed and confounded, that he would never after that return into Brabant, but died in France of ſorrow and vexation. AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

During this Siege, there were many Skirmiſhes and Rencounters; for the Town was well repleniſhed with good Men of War, the Biſhop [z] having lately received into the Walls John Duke of Normandy, King Philips Son, with 500 Men of Arms, beſides the ordinary Garriſon and the Forces ſent thither before, upon the Defiances of King Edward and his Allies. And many times there went forth from the Army ſtrong Detachments to fetch in Proviſion, or to ſeek for Adventures abroad; among whom the Lord John of Hainault, and the Lord of Faulquemont, with their Men, rode conſtantly together as Companions in Arms, and burnt and waſted greatly the Country of Cambreſis. One day among others the two foreſaid Lords with 500 Spears and a 1000 other Souldiers in their Company, went and preſented themſelves before the Caſtle of Oiſy in Cambreſis, which belonged at that time to the Lord of Coucy, and made there a very vigorous Aſſault: But the Beſieged defended themſelves ſo well, that they received little or no Diſadvantage; ſo that the Lords were fain to return again without obtaining their purpoſe.

[z] Mezeray 2. part. 3 tom. p. 15.

But the Aſſaults that were given to the City of Cambray it ſelf were ſurely both many and very fierce, thô not much more ſucceſsfull: Once eſpecially the young Earl of Hainault, with ſome Troops of Engliſh mixt with his own Men, on a Saturday, gave a terrible Aſſault at the Gate of Cambray, that looks towards St. Quintins; there was a young luſty Engliſh Eſquire of honourable Parentage, called John Chandos, who afterwards became a great Lord and a Noble Captain, of whoſe rare Valour and wiſe Conduct this our Hiſtory will produce many famous Inſtances. This valiant Eſquire caſt himſelf firſt of any between the Barriers and the Gate, where he was preſently taken up by an Eſquire of Vermandois, called John of St. Dizier; and ſo between theſe two there were performed many notable Feats of Arms, that it was a gallant ſight to behold them, till new-comers on both ſides parted them: For John Chandos was ſo well follow'd by others both Engliſh and Hainalders, that the Barriers were clearly won by force, the Earl himſelf being now entred, with his Marſhals, Sr. Gerard of Verchin and Sr. Henry Dantoigne and others, who adventur'd their Bodies couragiouſly to crown their Names with Immortality. At another Gate called the Gate Robert, the mean while fought Sr. John of Hainault the Earls Uncle, with the Lord of Faulquemont, the Lord of Engien, and the Lord Walter Manny and their Companies, who maintained a fierce and honourable Aſſault: But Cambray was not to be won eaſily, the French King had ſo well furniſhed the Place with valiant Knights and Eſquires, who delighted in Arms, and defended themſelves and the City ſo bravely, that the Aſſailants got nothing that day but dry Blows, and at laſt returned to their Lodgings weary and well beaten. For the Duke of Normandy's Preſence, and the hopes of a ſpeedy Relief from the King his Father, was an invincible Bulwark to them againſt Deſpair, and the Biſhop of Cambray preached well to the Souldiers chiefly for his own Sake: For he was the firſt Occaſion of betraying the City to King Philip in hate to the Emperour, who was excommunicate by the Pope. To this Siege came John the young Earl of Namur at the Earl of Heinalts deſire, to ſerve the King of England: But he at his firſt coming declared, "That he would uſe his Utmoſt endeavours in the King of Englands Service, while he "ſhould continue within the bounds of the Empire, but as ſoon as ever he ſhould en- "ter the Realm of France, he ſaid he muſt take his leave of him, and go to the Ser- "vice of the French King, who had retained him before. Of the ſame Reſolution was the Earl of Hainalt, for he had privately commanded his Captains on pain of Death, that none of them ſhould preſume to act any thing of Hoſtility within the French Pale.

VII. While thus the King of England held Siege before Cambray with 40000 Men of Arms, beſides Archers and Footmen, and hardly preſſed the Beſieged with continual Aſſaults, King Philip made his General Rendezvous at Perone in Vermandois a Tract of Picardy, 5 leagues from Cambray, and news came daily to the Camp of his great Preparations to raiſe the Siege. King Edward hereupon conſulted with the Lord Robert of Artois, in whom he repoſed an entire Confidence, demanding of him, whether it were better to March forward toward Perone, and bravely meet his Adverſary in his own Realm, or ſtill to lie before Cambray till he ſhould win it by Force. He, as he was a Perſon of rare Wiſdom, concurred with the Lords of England in this Opinion, "That "ſince the City was ſtrong and well furniſhed with Warriers, Victuals and Ammuniti-

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"on, so that it would require much time to constrain it, and that they were not "sure to win it at last, since especially the Winter season drew on apace, and they as "yet had done nothing worthy the Fame of so gallant an Army, but lay in a man- "ner idle at much Charge and Expence: Upon these Reasons they judg'd it best for "his Majesty, to leave an uncertain and unprofitable Siege, and to set forward into the "Realm of France, where they might find more Forage, and plenty of all things, "and in all likelihood presently obtain a Battle. This Advice prevailing, the Army was order'd to rise from before Cambray, and to follow the Marshals Banners: Then their Tents and Pavilions, and all manner of Harness being truss'd up, they departed thence in good order toward Mount St. Martin on the Borders of France: The Marshals of the English Army were William Bohun Earl of Northampton, and Hugh Audely Earl of Gloceſter, with Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk; the Lord High-Constable was Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick; and thus they all passed the River of Skell on [a] St. Matthews day, at their ease, the whole Country of Cambresis being destroyed as they went along, with Fire. But when the Earl of Hainault had accompanied the King of England as far as the Empires Bounds reached that way, and that he should pass the River and enter the Realm of France, he then took leave of the King his Brother-in-Law, saying, "He would ride no further with him at that time, for King Phi- "lip his Uncle had sent for him, and he would not incurr his Displeasure, but inten- "ded now to serve him in France, as he had done to King Edward in the Empire. So he and the Earl of Namur with their Men rode back to Quesnoy in Hainalt, at which place the Earl for the present dismist most of his Men, commanding them to be ready when he should send for them; for he said, that shortly he design'd to go and help his Uncle King Philip: But the Dukes of Brabant and Gueldre, and the other German Lords with all their Troops went over the River with King Edward; as did also the Lord John of Heinalt and his Brigade, by the express Leave of the Earl his Nephew.

[a] Knighton p. 2574.

As soon as the Army was got over the great River of Skell into the Realm of France, [b] among many others, whom King Edward Knighted at that time, one whereof was John Chandos aforesaid, he called unto him a young lusty Esquire, a Native of Brabant, whose right Name was Henry Eam, thô commonly called Henry of Flanders; and there presently he Dubbed him Knight, assigning him at the same time for his better maintenance 200 l. Sterling per annum, to be raised of certain Lands in England. This Gentleman was of great Nobility and Valour, but above all of singular Loyalty to King Edward, and of extraordinary strength of Body, and of a promising Aspect; whereby he purchased such esteem from this King, who was a wonderfull Judge of mens Persons, that he was afterwards by him chosen to be one of the First Founders of the most Noble Order of the Garter. But in this our History he shall go by the Name of Sr. Henry of Flanders, that being his more usual Title in Froisard, his Name of Eam or Esme, seldom occurring: Which gave occasion to the learned Esquire Ashmole to say, that he could meet with little or nothing relating to him, whereas we shall find frequent mention of his Honourable Actions under the foresaid Title, but indeed nothing under his true Name of Eam. Thô 'tis worth our Observation, that as here Froisard says truly, how he was now first made a Knight by the King of England with a Grant of 200 l. per annum; so we shall find, that he was again Knighted by the Prince of Wales his own Hands, with an Allowance from him of an 100 Marks per annum more, as will fully appear from an Instrument made unto him [c] eight Years after this by the Prince himself, and two Years after confirmed by the King: Thô the second Knighthood was as I suppose, that he was then made Banneret. After this King Edward marched forward, till he came to the Abby of St. Martin, where he tarried two Days, his People lying abroad in the Country, where they made great Havock of all things, and the Duke of Brabant was lodged in another Abby hard by.

[b] Froiſ. c. 39.

[c] Vid. ad An. Reg. 23.

The King of France being [d] still at Compeigne a City of Valois, when he heard of King Edwards approach towards him, enforced his Summons, and presently dispatch'd away the Lord Ralph Earl of Ewe and of Guisnes, his Constable, to St. Quintin, a chief City of Picardy, to keep the Town and Frontiers there against his Enemies; the Lord William de Coucy he sent to defend his own Lands, and the Lord of Hesdin unto his, besides many other Men of Arms, which he sent to Guise and to Ribemont, to Bethune and the Fortresses joyning to the Frontiers: He for his part went for Perone, intending there to make his general Rendezvous.

[d] Froiſ. c. 39.

Now while King Edward lay at the Abby of Mount St. Martin, his Men overran all the Country as far as Bapaume, and almost to Perone it self, and to St. Quintin:

They

They found the Country rich and plentifull; for it had seen no War of many years. It chanced among many other Adventures too long to be rehearsed, that the young Sr. Henry of Flanders, being desirous to behave himself worthy of the Knighthood he had lately received, together with other Knights, whose chief Leader was the Lord John of Hainalt, and in his Company his Friend the Lord Faulquemont, the Lord of Begues, the Lord of Landrecy, the Lord of Lens and divers Others, the whole amounting to 500 Men of Arms; these altogether took notice of a Town thereabouts, call'd Hondecourt, wherein many of the Country People were gather'd together in trust of the Strength of the Place, and had thither convey'd all their best Moveables. Sr. Arnold of Baquehen, and Sr. William of Dunnort with their Men had well view'd the Place before, and had given it o're, as not hoping to do any good there: For the Captain of the Place was an Abbot of great Wisdom, Strength and Valour, and he had caused to be set overthwart the street without the Town strong Barriers of Timber in manner of a Grate, every Bar being about half a foot thick and near a foot distant from each other: Within which were great quantities of Stones, Quick-lime, and other Ammunition, and sufficient numbers of good hardy Souldiers to defend the Place. But when the foresaid Lords came thither, they alighted from their Horses and came boldly on foot to the Barriers with their Swords in their Hands, where they made a brave Assault, and were as resolutely received by them that were within. There stood the Abbot himself arm'd at all points, who gave and took many a shrew'd Blow that day; and they within cast out stones, pieces of Timber, Pots full of burning Lime, Pitch and Tarr, wherewith they hurt many of the Assailants: But Sr. Henry of Flanders was still close at the Barriers foyning and striking lustily with his good Sword, till the Abbot with his Gauntlets took hold of his sword in both his hands so forcibly, that at last he laid hold on Sr. Henry's Arm, and drew it to him thrô the Barriers up to the shoulder; nor is it to be doubted, but he had drawn Sr. Henry's Body thrô had the space been wide enough; he was of so great strength. Yet for all this Sr. Henry would not let go his Sword, thô to save his Life, which he valued not equally with his Honour: But at the same time the other Knights and Esquires that were next him, laid all at once at the Abbot, so that by long contending at last they rescued Sr. Henry, but the Sword was left behind: "Which Sword, says Sr. John Froisard, as I passed that way "sometime after, the Monks of the Abby shew'd me as a Rarity, in memory of so va- "liant an Abbot. This Assault endured thus till Night, and many were slain and hurt on both sides, especially a Knight of Holland belonging to the Lord John of Hainault, whose name was Min Heer van Herment; he among Others was slain and many were wounded grievously: After all therefore, when the Flemish, Heinalders, English and Almains, saw the great Obstinacy and Resolution of those that were within, and how they were like to get nothing there but what would cost them very dear, they withdrew from the Assault toward night and returned to the Camp.

AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

Now on Monday the 4 of October, at the instant request of the Duke of Brabant to admit of a Treaty of Peace with France, at Mount St. Martin [c] the King grants unto the said Duke Power in his Name, to give safe Conduct to such Persons as he should think fit, to come on the French Kings Behalf, and meet with his Commissioners at any Place within two or three Leagues from his Camp, to treat of Peace; the same Power to continue till the Friday following, being the 8 of October, and all that day; but nothing to purpose being then effected, I shall pass this matter by.

C. Dom. Lit.

[c] Ashmole p. 650. ex Pat. Concess. hominib. Angl. & Vascon. 13 Ed. 3. m. 12.

While King Edward lay here (among Others, whom he advanced to divers Honours, as well Foreigners as English) conceiving [f] a great Hope from the forward Youth, Strength, Air and Beauty of Sr. Lawrence Hastings, a noble Baron of this Realm, at that time but just arrived to full Age; he resolved to spurr on his promising Vertue by the incentives of Honour: Wherefore considering, that he was descended from the Lady Isabella, Eldest Sister, and at last Coheir with Emery de Valence Earl of Pembroke, he declared and by Charter constituted him Earl of Pembroke, with the Prerogative and Honour of a Count-Palatine, as appears by the Letters Patents, bearing Date apud Montem Martini, 13° Octob. Anno Regni 13. Anno Domini 1339.

[f] Ex aptis Juventutis ejus auspiciis circumspectionis & elegantiæ præsagium concepimus, Lit. Patent. apud Selden. Titles of Honor p. 644. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 576.

The * next Morning King Edward went from Mount St. Martin, commanding on pain of Death, as well in piety towards God, as in gratitude to the Monks his Hosts, that no man should presume to do any harm or injury to the Abby. Then they entred Vermandois, and that day took up their Quarters betimes on the Mount of St. Quintin in good Order of Battle. The Men of War and others in St. Quintins might easily discern their Banners; but they had no great desire to disturb them. They thought it sufficient if they might preserve themselves: So that thô the Van-currours of the * 14 Octob.

English

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

Engliſh Hoſt came riding up to the Barriers to skirmiſh, none yet came out againſt them. The next day the Lords of the Kings Council debated which way they ſhould proceed, and by advice of the Duke of Brabant they reſolv'd for la Tieraſche; becauſe that way their Proviſion came in moſt plentifully: And if King Philip followed them, as they thought he would moſt certainly do, then they were determin'd to expect him in the plain Fields, and there to give him Battle.

Thus they marched forward in three Great Battalia's, the Engliſh Marſhals and the Germans made up the Firſt, the King of England led the Main, and the Duke of Brabant brought up the Reer: In this Order they rode forth burning and waſting the Country for three or four Leagues a day, but always they took up their Lodgings betimes. One Brigade of Engliſh and Germans paſſed the River of Somme by the Abby of Vermand, and waſted and overran the Country all above: Another under the Lord John of Hainault, the Lord of Faulquemont, and Sr. Arnold of Baquehen rode to Origny St Bennet, a good Town and a rich, but it was not greatly fortified; ſo that it was preſently taken by Aſſault and Plunder'd, an Abby of Nuns being violated and the Town it ſelf fired. Then the Army proceeded toward Guiſe and Ribemont, but the King lodged at Vehortes and ſtaid there one day, while his Men overran and deſtroy'd the Country all about. The next Day the King took the way to la Flemenguere to go to Leſthe in Tieraſche, and the Marſhals and the Biſhop of Lincoln with 500 Spears paſſed the River of Oyſe and entred into Laonnois, toward the Lands of the Lord William of Coucy, where they deſtroy'd St. Gawen and the Town of Marle with Fire. At night they lodged in the Valley beſide Laon, and the next Day they drew again to the main Hoſt; For they had found by examination of their Priſoners, that the French King was come to St. Quintins with an Hundred Thouſand Men, and intended there to paſs the Somme, and follow King Edward to fight him. But in the return to the Army they fired a great Town called Creſſy ſur Serre, with many other Towns and Hamlets thereabout. As for the Lord John of Hainault and his Company, who were 500 Spears, they went to Guiſe, where they burnt the Town and beat down the Mills: And thô Sr. John found within the Fortreſs his own Daughter, the Lady Jane Wife to Lewis Earl of Blois, who begg'd of him to ſpare the Inheritance of his Son-in-Law, the Earl her Husband; yet for all that he proceeded in what he had begun, and utterly deſtroy'd all but the Fortreſs, and then returned to the King, whom he found at the Abby of Sarnaques, and ſtill his Men rode about to fetch in Prey for the Army, and to ſpoil the Enemies Country. Among others the Lord of Falquemont with an hundred Spears, went to Plommion, a conſiderable Town in Tieraſche, which he found empty; for the Inhabitants were fled into a great Wood, having carried all their Goods with them, and had fortified themſelves in the Wood by felling of Trees round about them. The Almains having firſt ſet fire to the Town, rode thither and beheld their manner of Defence; but here they met with Sr. Arnold Baquehen and his Company, who joyning together aſſayled them there in the Wood: The Townſmen defended themſelves to their power, but theſe were Men of War, and by removing the Timber on one hand, and offering to ſet it on fire on the other, preſently drove them to flight, having in the Medly ſlain and grievouſly wounded little more than 40 or 50 of them, but all that ever they had was left behind, a prey to the Conquerour: Thus on all hands was the Country overran; for they did what they pleaſed, and as yet found no manner of impeachment, [g] thô they had burnt near a 1000 Towns and Villages.

[g] Walſingh. hiſt. p.128. n.30.

When this Havock began to be made in France, on [h] St. Matthew's Feſtival at night, the Lord Geoffry Scroop Lord Chief Juſtice of England, led the Cardinal Bernard de Monte Faventio, who had ſo boldly inſulted to King Edward of the ſtrength of France, up into an high Tower, ſhewing him the Frontiers of that Kingdom, where for about 14 or 15 leagues together, it ſeem'd as if all the Country was on a light fire: Whereupon Sr. Geoffry ſaid to the Cardinal, "My Lord, what thinketh your Eminence now? "Doth not this Silken Line, wherewith you ſay France is encompaſſed, ſeem to you in "great danger of being crack'd, if not broken? The Cardinal was ſo amaz'd, that he anſwer'd nothing, but fell down as Dead for ſorrow and fear.

[h] Knighton p. 2574. Stow p. 235.

About this time there was [i] brought to King Edward in his Camp a Letter from the Pope, bearing Date from Avignon the iv. of the Ides of Octob. Anno Pontificatus v^to^, the Subſtance whereof was, to let him know the great Propenſity of the Roman See to his Perſon and Welfare; the Edicts and Sentences ſet forth againſt Lewis of Bavaria, and how aſſiduouſly he had ſought to reduce him to the Boſom of the Church; and adviſing him not any longer to cleave or adhere unto Him or his Intereſt, till he ſhould be reconciled to the Church; becauſe of thoſe heavy Penalties, which were denounced againſt againſt Him and his Adherents, into which himſelf was thereby plunged: That Lewis was not really Emperour, nor any of his Actions valid, or done by Imperial Authority; that he moved War unjuſtly againſt the Biſhop and People of Cambray, to which he then laid Siege; that therefore he muſt not ſuffer theſe things in ſilence, but unleſs he would reform himſelf and forbear thoſe Courſes, he ſhould be obliged, thô unwilling to proceed againſt him, according to the extent of his Apoſtolick Power. By that time this Letter was received, King Edward had, as we ſhew'd, rais'd his Siege from before Cambray, and was now enter'd into the French Pale with Fire and Sword. AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

[i] Odoric. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 10 ex Tom. 5. Epiſt. ſecr. 417.

VIII. In this manner King Edward paſſed through France for about the ſpace of 5 Weeks, and he ſo ſcoured the Country with his Armies, that in a manner all the Lands of [k] Cambreſis, Vermandois, Tieraſche and Laonnois, and other Parts of Picardy and Artois, were wholly waſted, except thoſe Cities which were ſworn to him, with Churches and Monaſteries, which he ſpared for Devotion, or Caſtles, which were too ſtrongly fortified. The Inhabitants of the Country fled on all hands, nor was there any that offer'd to reſiſt him: Thô the French King had gather'd ſeveral great Armies, ſome being diſperſed about in Walled Towns, and he himſelf with the reſidue of his Standing Forces lying now in and about the ſtrong City of St. Quintin. After this King Edward went from Sarnaques to Morevil, where he tarried one Night only; the next Day he reached la Flamenguere, where he lodged his Men all cloſe about him, being in number more than Fourty Thouſand ſtrong: And here it was reſolved in Council, that King Edward ſhould abide his Adverſary and give him Battle. King Philip on the other hand being removed from St. Quintin with all his Army was gone to Vironfoſſe in Cambreſis, where he tarried (his Forces dayly encreaſing) and proteſted, "That he would "not ſtir thence, till he had fought with the King of England and his Allies, ſince they "were now within two Leagues one of another. [k] Stow ibid. [l] Froiſ. c. 40.

When the young Earl of Hainault who was ſtill at Queſnoy, ready provided with Men of War, underſtood that the French King his Uncle, was with an Army Royal at Vironfoſſe, reſolved to give battle to the Engliſh, he rode directly thither with 500 Spears, and preſented his Service to King Philip. But he might even as well have ſtay'd away, for the Thanks that he had now, or the Reward that he found after: For King Philip was in his heart extreamly diſguſted at him, becauſe he came but lately from the Service of his Adverſary the King of England, with whom he had been during the Siege of Cambray. But the Earl excuſed himſelf ſo diſcreetly, ſaying, "That "what he did then was of meer neceſſity, becauſe he was bound to ſerve the Empe"rour or his Deputy within the Bounds of the Empire; but what he did now, was of his "meer Choice, and therefore ought to be taken as a token of his Good-will; ſo that at laſt the King and his Council either was, or ſeem'd to be content: And ſo the Marſhals of France order'd him his Station, which, either in ſpight or policy, they appointed in the Main Battle, thereby to fight againſt King Edward his Brother-in-Law.

Thus theſe two Puiſſant Monarchs, lay both with their goodly Armies in the plain Fields between Vironfoſſe and Flemenguere, within two Leagues one of another: But as yet neither Army advanced. King Edward therefore adviſing with his Lords in a Council of War, asked them what they thought beſt to do; for he ſaid, that his Intention was to fight it out without any more delay. Then the Lords beheld each other, and at laſt deſired the Duke of Brabant firſt to open his Mind: He like a Gallant Souldier preſently advis'd to fight; "for otherwiſe ſaid he, we cannot part without ſome "Blemiſh upon our Honour: Wherefore I would counſel you to ſend Heralds to King "Philip to demand of him a Day of Battle. Accordingly an Herald of the Duke of Gueldre's, being well-skill'd in the French Tongue, was ſent on this Errant; he rode forth till he came to the French Hoſt, where being admitted before the King and his Council, he ſpake aloud theſe Words, "Sir, the King of England is here hard by in "the Fields, and deſires to fight you Power againſt Power: And if you pleaſe to ap"point him a Day, he will not fail to meet You upon the Word of a King. This Meſſage being thus deliver'd on a Wedneſday the 20 of October, King Philip yielded either to give or take Battle two Days after, to wit, on the Friday enſuing; and in token of his acceptance of the News, richly rewarded the Herald with Furred Gowns and other Gifts beſtow'd on him, as well by himſelf, as other the Princes and Lords of his Hoſt, and ſo diſmiſſed him again. Thus was the Day of Battle agreed on, all the Lords and Captains on both Sides being informed thereof, and commanded to be ready accordingly. C. Lit. Dom.

On the Thurſday Morning, being the 21 of October, two Knights belonging to the Earl

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

Earl of Hainault, the one the Lord of Faginelles, and the other the Lord of Tupenay, Mounting their Horſes, rode forth together without any other Company from the French Hoſt, with a Deſign to view the Engliſh Army. So they rode along coaſting from far the Engliſh Camp, till upon their approach almoſt within ſhot of the firſt Battail, the Lord of Faginelles Horſe chanced to take the Bridle in his Mouth ſo ſtrongly, that his Maſter could not rule him: Wherefore much againſt his Will he was carried by the Horſe into the Engliſh Army, among the Lords of Almaine, who well ſaw he was not of their ſide, and ſo took him Priſoner. He and his Horſe were taken by five or ſix Gentlemen of Almaine, who ſtraight began to examine him, in order to appoint him his Ranſom. And when they underſtood he was of Hainault, they asked him if he had any acquaintance with the Lord John of Hainault, he anſwer'd, yes; and deſired them for Godſake to carry him into his Preſence; for he ſaid he knew well that he would acquit him of his Ranſom. The Almains did not care how ſoon their Money came, wherefore they willingly carried him before the Lord of Beaumont, who knew him preſently, and bought him of his Maſters. Thus was the Lord of Faginelles eaſily redeemed, having his Horſe alſo reſtored unto him at the Requeſt of the Lord Beaumont, Sr. John of Hainault. No other Adventure worth our Notice happen'd that day.

[m] Froiſ. c. 41. *f.*23. *Du Cheſne l.*15. *p.*648.

On the Fryday early in the Morning, [m] both Armies prepared for Battle, and every Lord heard Maſs among his own Men; making their Confeſſions, and obtaining Abſolution. The Engliſh drew forth in the Field, all ranged in three Battails on Foot; their Horſes and Baggage being put aſide in a little Wood behind them, which they had fortifi'd. Their firſt Battail was led by the Duke of Gueldre, the Marqueſs of Nuys, the Marqueſs of Blankeberg, the Lord John of Hainault, the Earl of Mons, the Earl of Savenier, the Lord of Valkenberg, Sr. William du Fort, Sr. Arnold of Baquehen, the whole Body conſiſting for the moſt part of Almains, (except 4000 Engliſh) to the Number of 8000, in all 12000 Fighting Men, ranged orderly under twenty two Banners, and ſixty Penons, or Streamers. The ſecond Battail (which in the March was the laſt) the Duke of Brabant brought up, accompanied with many Lords and Knights of his own Country, as the Lord of Kuck, the Lord of Bergen op Zoom, the Lord of Breda, the Lord of Rhodes, the Lord of Boſleduc, the Lord of Burgivalle, the Lord of Stonenort, the Lord of Wenden, the Lord of Elka, the Lord of Caſſuben, and Sr. John of Caſſuben his Brother, the Lord of Duysburg, Sr. Thierry of Walcourt, Sr. Ralph van Gratz, Sr. John Iliffe, Sr. Giles of Krainburg, Sr. Walter of Horburg, the three Brethren of Harlingen, Sr. Henry Eam, commonly call'd Sr. Henry of Flanders, and divers other Barons and Knights of Germany, who were all under the Duke of Brabants Banner that day, as the Lord of Hailbrun, the Lord of Guiten, Sr. Hector Vilain, Sr. John of Rhodes, Sr. William of Strasburg, Sr. Goſwin de la Mulhauſen, Sr. Vauflart van Guiſtle, and many others: In all, the Duke of Brabant had 12000 Men under 24 Banners, and 80 Penons, or Streamers. The third and Greateſt Battail of all was led by King Edward of England, ſurrounded and attended by his Engliſh Captains, the Chief whereof were theſe, Henry Plantagenet Earl of Derby, the Kings Coſin; Henry Burwaſh, the Noble and [n] Warlike Biſhop of Lincoln, Richard Bury Biſhop of Durham, the Kings Tutor, William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, William Bohun, Earl of Northampton, Hugh Audley Earl of Gloceſter, Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, the Lord Robert of Artois, who was called the Earl of Richmond at that time (becauſe the Duke of Bretagne for being on the French Kings part, had lately forfeited that Title) the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord Henry Percy, the Lord William Roos, the Lord John Moubray, the Lord Ralph Stafford, the Lord John de la Ware, the Lord Ralph Baſſet, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord Nicolas Cantilupe, the Lord John Tibetot, or Tiptot, the Lord Fulk Fitz-Warine, the Lord John Liſle, the Lord Robert Benhale of Norfolk, Sr. Otho Grandiſon, Brother to the Lord Peter Grandiſon, Sr. Lewis Beauchamp, and Sr. John Beauchamp, which latter was younger Brother to the Earl of Warwick; and laſtly, Sr. John Chandos, lately Knighted by the King, of whom much Honour is to be ſpoken in this our Hiſtory. The King had with him in all, beſides his Royal Standard, 28 Banners, 80 Penons, or Streamers, 6000 Men of Arms, Knights, and Eſquires, and 12000 Select Archers. Beſides he had ſet by another Choice Battail, as on a Wing, whereof the Earl of Warwick, Thomas Beauchamp was Chief Leader, and with him were Lawrence Haſtings the young Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Thomas Barkley, the Lord John Multon of Egremont, and others: This Battail conſiſted of 5000 Men of Arms, all on Horſeback. When thus every Lord ſtood under his Banner among his own Men, as the Marſhals had Commanded, the King of England Mounted on a large White [n] Knighton p. 2577. n. 40.

White Palfrey, and only attended with the Lord Robert of Artois, the Lord Reginald Cobham, and the Lord Walter Manny rode about before all his Battails, and in the Head of each of them, with a very cheerfull Countenance, ſweetly deſired all the Lords, and others, "that they would that day do their utmoſt to defend his Honour, and their own; and they all unanimouſly promiſed him ſo to do. After this he returned to his own Battail, and ſet every thing in good Order, Commanding that none ſhould preſume to go before the Marſhals Banners. AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

In the mean while the French [o] Army was in like Manner diſpoſed into Three Great Battails, each whereof contained 15000 Men of Arms, and 20000 on Foot, in all 35000 Men; the whole Three amounting to 105000 Warriers: Among whom were Four Kings, five Dukes, Twenty ſix (or as [p] others ſay, Thirty ſix) Earls, more than Four Thouſand Lords and Knights, and above 60000 of the Commons of France. The Kings that were there, were Philip himſelf, King of France, John of Luxemburg King of Bohemia, Charles King of Navarre, and David King of Scotland; The Dukes were John Duke of Normandy, King Philips Eldeſt Son, John Dreux Duke of Bretagne, Lewis the Great Duke of Bourbon, Reginald Duke of Lorrain, Walter de Brenne Duke of Athens: The Earls, Charles Earl of Alencon King Philips Brother, Lewis of Creſſy Earl of Flanders, William Earl of Hainault, Gaſton Phœbus Earl of Foix, John Earl of Armagnac, Amè Earl of Geneva, Amè Earl of Savoy, Lewis Earl of Blois, the Earl of Foreſtes, the Earl of Bar, the Earl Dauphin of Auvergne, the Earl of Longeville, the Earl of Eſtampes, the Earl of Vendoſme, the Earl of Harcourt, the Earl of St. Pol, the Earl of Guiſnes, the Earl of Boulogne, the Earl of Rouſſy, the Earl of Dampmartin, the Earl of Valentinois, the Earl of Auxerre, the Earl of Sancerre, the Earl of Dreux, the Earl of Gaſcoigne, the Earl of Languedoc, and many more Vicounts and others, too tedious to enumerate.

[o] Froiſ. c. 41. ad fin. & du Cheſne l. 15. p. 648.

[p] Sala apud Du Cheſne ibid.

It was a Glorious and Raviſhing ſight no doubt, to behold theſe two Armies ſtanding thus Regularly embattel'd in the Field, their Banners and Standards waving in the Wind; their proud Horſes barbed, and Kings, Lords, Knights, and Eſquires richly Armed, and all ſhining in their Surcoats of Sattin and Embroidery.

IX. And now it may be juſtly expected, that a Bloody Battle ſhould enſue upon theſe vaſt Preparations of theſe two Puiſſant Monarchs: But we ſhall ſee all come to nothing, upon theſe Reaſons, which now I ſhall more diſtinctly ſet down. King Philip of Valois was, no doubt, a Man of ſingular Courage, and as the Sequel ſhew'd, rather too Raſh, than Timerous. He had all along anſwer'd the Engliſh Ambaſſadors, when they offer'd Peace upon eaſie Conditions; [q] "that the King their Maſter ſhould never Re- "joyce of two Foot of Ground in all the Realm of France: And had often ſworn by "his Meſſengers, that King Edward ſhould not tarry one Day in his Realm without "Battle, let him come when ever he would. The [r] Conſtable of France alſo, by Command of the King his Maſter, had ſent Letters to King Edward, containing among other things, that if he would chooſe out a Place not Fortified with Trees, Ditches, or Bogs, the King of France without fail would afford him Battle: Which ſame thing was alſo affirmed by the King of Bohemia, and the Duke of Lorrain in their ſeveral Letters under their Hands and Seals; beſide King Philips late Promiſe to Windſor Herald, whereby he Obliged himſelf to come and give him Battle on this Day, ſufficiently ſhew'd his Reſolution. But [s] all the Lords of his Council were not of the ſame Mind: For thô ſome urged, "that it would be an indelible Stain of diſhonour, if now they "ſhould decline to come to the puſh, ſeeing their Enemies were ſo near them in their "own Country, and had both demanded, and been promiſed Battle: Yet others of deeper Judgement replyed; "That it would be the moſt Unwarrantable Indiſcretion "in the World, to Commit all to the Hazard of One Engagement: For (ſaid they) "if Fortune prove adverſe to Us, Our King is in Jeopardy of looſing his Crown; and "thô he ſhould Conquer his Enemies, yet will he never be the nearer to gain the Crown "of England, or the Lands of any of King Edwards Allies. Beſide (which gave the "Greateſt Suſpicion to King Philip) who knows, ſaid they, whether all your Subjects "are firm to You or no; and that no Lords here preſent may Prefer King Edward, or "Revolt to him, as the Lord of Artois hath done already? With theſe Debates time ſlipt away, till Afternoon: When of a ſudden there [t] ſtarted an Hare near the Frenchmen, whereat thoſe that ſaw her, rais'd a Loud ſhouting; ſo that the Hindermoſt thought thereby, that the Armies were now upon the Point of Engaging; Wherefore haſtily they clap'd on their Helmets, and took their Spears in their Hands, and (after the Manner to Encourage their Men to the Battle) many New Knights were thereupon made, eſpecially Fourteen were then Created by the Earl of Hainault, who were afterward

[q] Knighton p. 2574. n. 50. & 60.

[r] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 128. n. 30. & 40. & Knighton p. 2574 n. 60. & 2575. n. 1. ad n. 10.

[s] Froiſ. c. 42.

[t] Froiſ. ibid. & Du Cheſne p. 649.

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

ward in Derision called Knights of the Hare: And some have made more Abusive Observations thereupon.

But all this while both the Armies stood still; King Edward, because he was unequal in Number, and had beside a Promise to have Battle, presented unto him, if he would abide in the open Field; and also, because he could never imagine, that so Glorious an Army with Four Kings their Leaders, and such a Number of the Prime Nobility of France, should ever refuse an Enemy that expected them, took no thought of being the Aggressor; and King Philip, as yet, doubted on the foremention'd Reasons, whether he should proceed or no; just at which time there were brought in to the Host Letters of Recommendation from Robert King of Sicily, and Naples, to the French King and his Council, which dash'd the whole business. Now this [a] King was look'd upon in those Days to be the most Famous of all Men for his extraordinary Skill in Astrology; whereby with the help of a good Genius, he could shrewdly (to say no more) guess at many Notable Events: He therefore, when he saw the Wars between France and England open, and that with all his own Personal Endeavours and Travels with the Pope at Avignion, he could no way prevent it, set himself to seek out earnestly some foreknowledge of the Event, if he might by any means comprehend any thing of the Fortune of these two Princes. Whether, from consideration of their several Nativities, both which are attainable (and as for Our King Edward's, together with that of his Son the Black-Prince, I think to present them to the Reader in the Close of this Work) or from what else he took his Opinion, I know not, but surely, he succeeded so well, that either he found out, or thought he did, "that if the French King should "Fight with King Edward of England in Person, he must infallibly expect to be discom-"fited; and that he saw those many ill Consequences, which would fall on the Noble "Realm of France by so Fatal a Miscarriage. Wherefore being a Prince extreamly addicted to the Interest of France, as one, who had not only adventur'd, but lost his Only Son in the Quarrel of that Kingdom, as I shew'd in the Battle of Southampton, he sent frequent Letters to King Philip his Cosin, and to his Council; (of all whom he was held in great Esteem for his Piety, Learning, and Knowledge in Judicial Astrology, as well as other Curiosities of Nature) earnestly desiring, "that by no means they would "adventure to give Battle to the English, whenever King Edward should be Personal-"ly present, especially at this time, that he saw many Dreadfull Calamities to be threat-"ned to France. I take no notice here of the pitifull Cavils of the Ignorant, or Prejudicated Critick, but reckon it my Duty to relate Matter of Fact, attested so credibly, as this is; and I am ready to believe, that such a thing might proceed from the Infinite Goodness of Almighty God towards Christian People, that by these Warnings King Philips fierce Mind might be rendred more susceptible of Offers of Peace, and all those Miseries, which were else to follow, be thereby prevented. Yet for all this King Philip was not absolutely perswaded from giving Battle, he was too Wise to give an Implicit Faith to things apparently of no great Authority: But however, as the Morning was wholly spent in the former Debates, so upon occasion of these Letters, and the Discourses ensuing thereon, the Afternoon was also taken up, and the Day in a manner quite worn out: So that at last leave was given for every Man to withdraw to his former Lodgings in the Camp. When the young Earl of Hainault saw by this Dishonourable delay, that now no Battle was like to happen, he immediately went off with all his Men in Displeasure, and that Night reach'd Quesnoy. Now toward the [x] Evening of this Day, three French Spies being brought before King Edward, and separately examin'd, declared, that King Philip Design'd on the Saturday following to Present him Battle, and that he was not encamped above a League and an half off. On the Saturday therefore, King Edward descended into the Field again, as before, and in the Forenoon there were taken certain of the French Scouts, who said, that the French were ready ranged in the Field, and Resolved to give them Battle. At which Report, the English were well pleased, as desiring above all things to bring the Matter to a full Tryal. But in the mean time some of our Scouts were taken, and among them a Knight of Almain, who confessed in Order the whole Array of the English Army, and their Ardent Desire to Fight. Hereupon the first Battail of the French was Order'd to Retreat, and they began to set up their Tents, and to encompass the Camp with a Ditch, and to cut down great Trees to lay between them and the Enemy, to hinder all sudden approach. But the English on the other Hand stood all Day in the Field on Foot, always looking for the coming of the French, but in vain: Wherefore toward the approach of the Evening, the Marshals of the Host, and others, considering, that they had waited enough that Day of all Reason, and that it was better to encamp by Daylight; commanded

to

[a] Froissib. c.42. Mezeray p.15. Du Chesne p 649. Asmole p. 650. P. Æmyl. p.275. & cæteri ferè omnes.

[x] Knighton p. 2575. n. 10.

to Horſe, and ſo went off on the Right hand towards Aveſnes en Hainault. But at the time of their removal King Edward ſent to the French King, telling him, that all the Sunday following he would expect him, as before, in the ſame place: Which alſo he did do. But he heard no more of him, but that on the Saturday, when the Engliſh took Horſe, with Deſign to go into their Night Quarters, the French Scouts without conſideration believing that they intended to fall on their Army, return'd in all haſte with ſuch a Report; ſo that the King of France thinking fit to retire to a more ſecure Place, there happen'd in the Reer ſuch a [y] Panick Terror, that for preſſing over haſtily on one another, there were loſt in a certain Miry Place more than a Thouſand Horſe. Yet when after this the Army was disbanded, becauſe being late in the Year, little more could now be done, when King Philip reflected on the whole Matter, he was extreamly diſpleaſed with himſelf, that he had thus declin'd fighting: But the Lords of his [z] Council told him, "that he had not loſt one jot of his Honour, ſince "he had Couragiouſly ſought out his Enemies, and Faced them boldly for ſeveral days, "and finally (for by that time King Edward alſo was return'd to Antwerp) had made "them quit his Realm without any Great Advantage. And they moreover ſaid, that "the King of England muſt be fain to make many vaſt and expenſive Voyages, before "he ſhould be able to Conquer France, unleſs the Frenchmen by their own heat and "raſhneſs would fling their Country away. King Philip however went the next day to St. Omers, and thence placed his Men of War in Garriſons, eſpecially at Tournay, Lille and Douay, and to other Towns bordering on the Empire. Sr. Godmar du Fay, a Norman Lord, was now made Captain of Tournay, and Sr. Edward Lord of Beaujeu was ſent to Mortagne confining on Hainault near the Skell: And having thus ſettled Affairs King Philip returns to Paris.

AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

[y] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 128. & Knighton ibid.

[z] Freiſ. c. 42.

X. The mean while King Edward, who knew nothing of the Departure of the French Army, ſtood after his uſual manner embattled'd in the Fields the next Sunday, on which Day the Lord of [a] Andelys was taken by the Engliſh: Then the King heard that the French Army was marched off, and retired to their own homes: Whereat he was extreamly amazed. But on the Monday the Marqueſs of Brandenburgh Son to the Emperour, the Marqueſs of Nuys his Son in Law, the Duke of Brabant and the other Germans diſpoſed themſelves for home, becauſe of the ſharpneſs of the Weather, the Winter being already pretty well enter'd. King Edward gave them his leave to depart, and he himſelf went ſtraight to Antwerp in Brabant, where he had left his Queen, and her young Son Prince Lionel: Upon his Return to Antwerp he iſſued out another [b] Commiſſion to John Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Richard Biſhop of Durham, Henry Biſhop of Lincoln, William Earl of Salisbury, Sr. Bartholomew Burwaſh, and Sr. Geoffry Scroop Knights, and John Hufford Archdeacon of Ely, to treat of Peace with Philip of Valois (as he is called in the Commiſſion) or with Commiſſioners from him; and a Month after, to wit on the 16 of December, the ſaid Commiſſion was renewed, upon adding Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk to the forenamed Commiſſioners. The mean while the King kept his Chriſtmas in great Splendour at Antwerp, together with his Queen and her Ladies and many German Lords, moſt part of his Army remaining ſtill about him. To adorn the Solemnity the better, he had ſent for his Eldeſt Son Prince Edward, Duke of Cornwall and Earl of Cheſter (for he was not yet created Prince of Wales) whom he had left his Lieutenant or Warden of England, being now a Proper, Hopefull, Young Gentleman of almoſt ten Years of Age. His great Grace and exact Shape made him as acceptable to the Ladies Eyes, as his large and well-proportion'd Limbs rais'd a full Expectation of his future Manhood among the Lords both of England and Almain. And here it ſeems by what follows in the next Year, that a Match was, if not fully concluded, yet at leaſt propounded and well-nigh agreed on, between the ſaid Young Prince, and the Duke of Brabants Fair Daughter the Lady Margaret, at that time but four Years old; thô indeed the ſame thing had been projected the Year foregoing, as appears by [d] the Rolls. About the ſame time Prince Otho Duke of Auſtria, ſtirred up with the Fame of King Edward, with whom he had enter'd an [e] Alliance this Year, ſent and required the Lady Iſabella his Daughter in Marriage for his Young Son; the Letters beginning thus, "[f] To the moſt Excellent and Mag- "nificent Prince, the Lord Edward, the moſt Illuſtrious King of England, his Sincere and "moſt Dear Friend, "Otho by the Grace of God, Duke of Auſtria, Stiria, Suabia and "Carinthia, Lord of Carniola, Moravia and Portænaon, Earl of Hapsburgh, and Chi- "burgh and Landtgrave of Alſatia, with all Hearty and Devout Affection, wiſhes a good "Succeſs of his Deſires, and a continual Encreaſe of Health and Felicity, &c. But neither [g] of theſe Matches took effect, the Pope by the King of France's underhand-

[a] Knighton p. 2575. n. 50.

[b] Aſhmole p. 650 ex Pat. inter Regem & diverſos Magnat. German. 15 Novemb. 13 Ed. 3. m. 3.

[c] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 132.

[d] Rot. Aleman. 12 Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 17. vid. Aſhmole p. 675. & Sandford p. 184.

[e] 16 Febr. Patentes inter Regem & diverſos Magnates German. de anno 13 Ed. 3. m. 2.

[f] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 133.

[g] Aſhmole p. 675. & 676.

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

dealing, ſtill refuſing a Diſpenſation for the Firſt (they being within the Third Degree of Conſanguinity) and the Other being otherwiſe hindred, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

At the End of this Year there came from the Pope to King Edward this Letter following, the like whereof He alſo at the ſame time ſent to King Philip of France.

* Walſingh. hiſt. p. 129. Conſimiles Literæ Regi Franciæ directæ, exſtant apud Odoric. Rainald. ad an. §. 1339. 14.

"* Benedict the Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his moſt Dear Son in Chriſt, "Edward the Illuſtrious King of England, Greeting and Apoſtolick Benediction. While we "ſeriouſly conſider and deeply revolve in our Minds, how great hath been the Bounty of "the moſt High and Eternal King, and the Abundance of his moſt merciſull Goodneſs, that "when lately your Army (moſt Dear Son) and the Army of our moſt Dear Son in Chriſt, "the Illuſtrious King of France, ſtood ſo near together confronted in Battle Array, furiouſly "diſpos'd to a terrible Conflict on both ſides, thoſe miſerable Effects did not enſue, "which thoſe warlike Preparations and Force of Armed Men did threaten, to him we "pay the tribute of our Praiſe, ſince it ought to be eſteemed as the greateſt Gift of Al-"mighty God, and no leſs than a Miracle, gratiouſly wrought by the Goodneſs of the "Wiſdom of God, which never fails in its Diſpenſations. And ſurely it may be more "evidently gather'd, that ſo great an Effuſion of Blood of thoſe who had been re-"deem'd with the precious Blood of our Lord, as muſt needs have followed, if the "ſaid Armies had come to Battle at that time, to the great loſs and ſcandal of all "Chriſtendom, and to the hazard of many Souls, was by no means pleaſing to the moſt "High, who maketh Wars to ceaſe, and by the Prophet threatens to ſcatter the Nati-"ons, that delight in War. Your Royal Wiſdom alſo may conſider, how deeply both "You and the foreſaid King muſt have incurr'd the Divine Anger, if you had procee-"ded to hazard ſo many of thoſe, whoſe Souls and Bodies he hath ſo dearly ranſom-"ed: And it is to be feared, that without doubt God Almighty will moſt ſeverely "animadvert againſt him eſpecially, who of the two ſhould be moſt forward in pro-"moting ſuch Miſchief, whereby ſuch Slaughter and Confuſion would follow, that all "Chriſtendom would be ſhook thereby, and a Reformation of Peace and Concord, "would not only be rendred difficult, but which God of his infinite Mercy avert, im-"poſſible. And moreover it doth not ſeem leſs worthy of conſideration, how migh-"tily by occaſion of the preſent Wars, your Majeſties Subjects are, as it is ſaid, many "ways exhauſted of their Mony and other their Goods, and are like upon continuance "of ſuch Burthens (which God forbid) to be further grieved: And that the E-"vent of War is doubtfull, but eſpecially upon the Divine Indignation to be feared.

"Wherefore We more earneſtly in the Lord require and exhort your Royal Mag-"nificence, nevertheleſs beſeeching You by the Mercies of God, that taking the Pre-"miſes, and what elſe may occurr to your Royal Wiſdom, into your Princely Conſi-"deration, you may by taking Truce with the ſaid King and renewing the Peace, ob-"viate the dangers both of your Self (moſt Dear Son) and of your People; and ſo "pleaſe God, who loveth Peace, and delighteth in Peace-makers, rendring thereby your "ſelf more acceptable unto Him, and confirming the ſtrength of your whole Kingdom: "And that therefore you would incline to the wholſom Admonitions and Perſwaſi-"ons of our dear Sons Peter of the Title of St. Praxedis, Prieſt, and Bertrand of St. Ma-"ry in Aquiro, Deacon, Cardinals of the Apoſtolick See, our Nuntio's, who are zea-"lous of your Royal Honour and Succeſs, and whom we have lately by Advice of our "Brethren ſent to thoſe Parts for that purpoſe.

"Truly, conſidering the Premiſes, and that we might prevent the like dangers, and "innumerable more, which are ready to follow from the ſaid Wars, and that between "You (our moſt Loving Son) and the ſaid King, who is by the near Tye of Blood "and Affinity joyned unto You, the fulneſs of Peace and mutual Charity may flou-"riſh, We wiſh with moſt ardent deſires a Reformation of this Peace; and if perhaps "it cannot be obtained by the Inſtance of the ſaid Cardinals, yet if You (O moſt Dear "Son) and the ſaid King, diſpoſing your ſelves to mutual Concord, accceptable to God, "amiable to Men, profitable to Chriſtendom, and many ways the beſt for both of "You, will but conſent, that We alſo in our own Perſon ſhould intend, as Friendly "Moderators to the Reformation of Peace, taking a mutual Truce, and granting a Ceſ-"ſation from Arms for a convenient time, wherein the Treaty of Peace may be be-"gun, continued, and if the Lord of Mercies grant, brought to an happy End; We, "thô we are continually occupied with weighty and importable Affairs even above "our ſtrength, do notwithſtanding thrô Deſire of the ſaid Peace, hereby offer Our "ſelves ready, as far as conveniently and with honeſty may be done, effectually to in-"terpoſe in the Reformation of this Peace, to the Quiet, Profit and Honour of each "Party, our ſhare of Sollicitude, as it ſhall be adminiſtred unto Us from above. Con"cerning all which we requeſt your Royal Majeſty, upon the moſt mature Deliberation, "to write unto Us, your Pleaſure. Given, &c. at Avignon x Kalen. Jan. Anno Pon- "tif. iv.

"cerning

AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

To this Letter of the Popes, the King of England wrote this Anſwer. * "To the moſt "Holy Father in God, Benedict, by Divine Providence Biſhop of the Holy Roman "Church; Edward, by the Grace of God, King of France, and of England, and Lord "of Ireland, Devout Kiſſings of his Holy Feet.

* Walſingh. hiſt. p. 130.

"We received with due Reverence and Devotion, the Letters of your Holineſs, "ſent laſt unto Us, wherein your Goodneſs perſuades us to renew the Peace, or take "a Truce, with the Lord Philip of Valois, graciouſly adding, that You in your own "Perſon would intend to the Reformation thereof, as a Friendly Moderator, if We "and the ſaid Philip would conſent thereto. Surely We, conſidering in the Lord "your Holineſſes Affection, which is ſo ſollicitous for the quiet of your Sons, do hum- "bly return You all poſſible Thanks, for that your wholſom Perſuaſion, and an Offer "ſo condeſcending and ſo pious, and in a firm love and confidence of your Integrity we "deſire to follow your Counſel, and particularly to conform Our ſelves to your Holy "Pleaſure.

"But it is now notoriouſly known, how the ſaid Philip contrary to Juſtice hath u- "ſurped unto himſelf the Kingdom of France, lawfully devolved unto Us, by the "Death of the Lord Charles of Famous Memory, the laſt King of France, our Uncle: "And not content with this, he hath ſeiſed into his hands our Lands in the Dutchy "of Aquitain, as many as he was able, in Hoſtile manner invading our Iſlands in the "Sea, and alſo our Kingdom of England, with that very Fleet, which under colour of "an Holy Expedition beyond Sea, he pretended to rig forth, having ſworn for the "Cauſe of Chriſt. He hath alſo excited the Scots to rebell againſt us, deſigning alto- "gether to oppreſs us; that ſo according to his unſatiable Deſire of Sovereignty, he "may the more freely withhold from us our ſaid Kingdom of France, and other our "Hereditary Lands. To whom (as we remember we have written before to your Ho- "lineſs) We have offer'd many deſirable Methods of Peace, willing even to pur- "chaſe Quiet of him, thô with no ſmall Reſignation of our own Rights: But he long "holding us in ſuſpenſe by divers ſpecious Treaties, and expoſing us to vaſt Expences, "that ſo he might drain our Exchequer, and render us thereby unable to recover our "Rights, hath at laſt took no care to give us any Satisfaction, but ſtill his Perſecu- "tion encreaſed and rag'd againſt Us: Wherefore neceſſity ſo compelling, We are "now come to the Parts beyond Sea, to take unto us the Aſſiſtance of our Friends, "to revenge the Injuries done, and to repulſe thoſe, that would have been done, by "him unto Us, and to obtain our Hereditary Rights: Which certainly we intend not "to neglect, but will purſue them (when we cannot by any other agreeable way) by "Force of Arms, God being our Help.

"And althô in Preſence of the Reverend Fathers, Peter of the Title of St. Praxedis, "Prieſt, and Bertrand, of St. Mary in Aquiro, Deacon, Cardinals and Nuntio's to "your Holineſs, who have laudably and ſollicitouſly labour'd in the Affair of Peace, "the ſaid Realm of France, which by all Right is known to belong to Us, hath been "demanded, and We have, under certain ways of Peace, cauſed our ſaid Will to be "ſincerely open'd to the foreſaid Cardinals, always offering Our ſelves ready to em- "brace any reaſonable Method of Peace, on condition the Adverſe Party will agree "thereto: Yet neither by the ſaid Cardinals, nor by Others, could we know to this "Day, that he the ſaid Philip would do or offer any thing of Satisfaction unto Us. "And truly if then he had made but never ſo ſmall Offers, to ſhun the hazards of "Wars and the profuſeneſs of Expences, we ſhould have made a reaſonable Anſwer "thereupon, but now we ſee not what we can do farther with our Honour in the way "of Peace.

"But for all that if it ſhall now pleaſe the foreſaid Lord Philip to offer us any Reaſona- "ble Way, or if your Prudent Conſideration, or the ſaid Lords, Cardinals, ſhall o- "pen unto us any agreeable Method of Peace (to which the ſaid Philip ſhall con- "ſent) preſently (when we ſhall be once aſſured thereof) we will take Deliberation "thereupon, and with all ſpeed return ſuch an Anſwer, as ought to ſeem reaſonable "and acceptable to your Holineſs and to All, that have a ſolid, right and ordinate "Reaſon.

"And if perchance in the foreſaid Method of Treating, the Conſent of our Friends and "Allies ſhould ſeem requiſite to be obtain'd, We our ſelves will put too all poſſible "Diligence, inſomuch, that it ſhall appear, not to be our Fault, that a firm Peace

"doth

An. Dom. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

"doth not follow thereupon, if the other Party will but condescend to Reason.
"We therefore heartily beseech your Clemency, that if it please you, you would "duly weigh our Justice and Intention founded upon Truth, and incidently cherish
"Us, who continue in all fulness of Devotion to You and the Holy Roman Church,
"with the favour of solid Love and Charity, esteeming of Us, as of a most Devout "Son. For God, the Lord of Consciences, is our Witness, that We desire to aug"ment the Honours and Liberties of the Church, and if God shall grant us to pro"sper, with devout and humble Affection we aspire to fight his Battles against the E"nemies of his Faith. God preserve your Holiness, &c. Given, &c.

XI. Before this there were two Parliaments this Year held at Westminster, One being called by the Duke of Cornwall, who had Commission thereto from the King his Father: The Other by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Others, who in the Absence of the King and his Son, Prince Edward Duke of Cornwall, had the same Commission.

* C. Lit. Dom. [h] M.S. Rot. Parl. p. 23. & Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 17. §. 1, 2, 3. &c.

The First was held on the Quindene of St. Michael, or the 13 of October, * which then fell on a Wednesday. At the Opening [h] whereof its Causes were declared to be Three: First to take care for a strict Observation of the Kings Peace: Secondly, to provide for Defence of the Marches toward Scotland: For that People, being thereto instantly urged by their Kings Letters from France, and the promised Assistance of the French King, began to stir again notwithstanding the Truce: And the Third and last Reason was for the better keeping the Sea: To all which was added a Demand of a Supply for the King in his Wars.

After this the Archbishop of Canterbury, who together with Dr. Richard Bury Bishop of Durham, and Sr. Michael de la Pole came from beyond the Seas, as the Kings Messengers to the Parliament, made a Narration of the Kings Exploits, which he had atchieved in those Parts at that time, and the present Hazards both He and his Men were exposed to, without liberal and speedy Supplies out of England. The King, as then lay near St. Quintin, accompanied with 15000 Men of Arms, and of Archers and Others more than 30000, as appeared by his Letters to the Lord William Clinton Earl of Huntington, who was then [i] Admiral of the River Thames, and Warden of the Cinque-Ports, and to the Merchants at Pearch; besides what we have related before of this Expedition. It was also further declared, that the King and Others about him, for the procuring of his Allies to assist him thus far, and for his own necessary Expences in this War, stood bound in Three hundred thousand Pounds, which in Honour he could not but pay before he left those Parts: Wherefore the Result was, he wanted liberal Contributions. Hereupon the Young Prince Edward, Duke of Cornwall, and Warden of England, with the other Lords, granted unto the King the Tenth Sheaf of all the Corn of their Demesnes, except of their bound Tenants, the Tenth Fleece of Wooll, and the Tenth Lamb of their own Store, to be paid for two Years: Desiring withall, that the Maletoste, or Wrong set upon Wooll, be revoaked, and that this Grant turn not into a Custom: All which was allow'd by the Prince in the Kings Name. For he had full Commission by the Kings Letters Patents to grant what should appear reasonable to the Lords and Commons.

[i] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 531.

The Lords demand, that the Keeping of the Kings Wards Lands may be committed to the next of Kin to the said Ward: And that Remedy be provided against those, who dying pass away their Lands to defraud the Lord of the Wardship, or the King himself. To this the Commons answered, that as they knew well, so they heartily tendred, the Kings Estate; and were ready, according to their Duty, to maintain the same: But this being a new Point, they durst not determin about it, till they had further conferred with their Counties that sent them; And so desiring Respite till another time, they promise to travel and enquire throughout their several Counties.

To the Three Causes of their Assembling at this time, the Commons answer'd thus, First, as to the Keeping of the King's Peace, that would be kept sacred; if good and couragious Justices were appointed in every County, and such as were permitted to Main-prise, do put in good Sureties, as Esquires or Gentlemen, and if no Pardon were granted but by Parliament: These Matters once established, they humbly conceive, the Peace could not be violated. Then as to the Defence of the Northern Marches, they thought that would best be performed; if all, who had Lands in those Parts, were obliged to live upon them. As for the Keeping of the Seas, they proposed, that the Cinque-Ports, or other Haven Towns, which are discharged of all other Contributions, should look to that especially, and also, that those, who had Lands either there, or elsewhere upon the Sea coasts, should repair thereto and dwell upon them.

them. Then the Commons demanded a few things, First, that the King will pardon all Felonies, Escapes, Trespass for the Forests and otherwise, all Aids to make the Kings Son a Knight, or to Marry his Daughter. That all Purveyors, as well with Commission as without, shall be arrested, if they make not present Pay. That the King would pardon old Debts and Duties from any time to before his Coronation. That all Customs of Wooll and Lead may be taken as they have been, and not as lately enhanced, with Common Assent, and that if they be, Resistance may be made. And lastly, that knowledge may be had, how these things may be assured. But their Art to provide against the Scarcity of Mony was this, that every Merchant for every Sack of Wooll exported, should be obliged to bring in at least 40 s. of Bullion to be coined within the Realm. AN. DOM. 1339. An. Regni XIII.

For the upholding the Kings Navy, it was Enacted, that the Navy of the whole Realm, except what should be Actually in the Kings Service for the time being, should remain in some certain place, without any scattering by any private Men, till further Order be taken. 'Tis agree'd, that the Archbishop of Canterbury, and other Nobles should by their Letters require the Archbishop of York and his Clergy, largely to contribute for the Defence of the North, even as they had already done: And then several were appointed to follow this device, and to prepare the Commissions for Array into divers Countries.

It is agree'd, that the Inhabitants of Holderness in Yorkshire, should be Arrayed, and grant Aid for the Defence of those Marches, as well as others of the County of York, altho they be appointed by Commission to keep the same. It is agree'd, that the Commissions of Sr. William Wallingford, and all other Commissioners for Purveyance for the King, be utterly void: And that all Officers of the Ports by the Kings Writ, do refrain the exporting of [k] Corn. That the Earl of Richmond, the Lord Clifford, the Lord Roos of * Werke, the Lord Moubray, and Sr. William Daubeny, should be commanded by Writ to repair towards their Lands, for the Defence of the North Marches, or if unable, or otherwise occupy'd in the Kings Service, then to send their Quota's thither to the Lords, who were Captains there. That the Writs of Summons for the next Parliament should charge every Sheriff to return for his County two Knights girded with Swords. That every Archbishop and Bishop do before the next Session of Parliament take a Certificate of all Benefices, being in the Hands of Aliens, of the Value of each of them, and of Residence, or Non-Residence thereon. That two Writs be issued out, the One to call a Convocation of the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, and the other of York, against Hilary Term following. It is also determin'd, that the Parliament should be Summon'd against the Octaves of St. Hilary then ensuing: Of which we shall now take leave to discharge our selves, that our following Discourse may find no Interruption.

[k] Alii legunt Coyne.
* M.S. Wake, malè.

When the time of the next Sessions of Parliament approached [l] because the Duke of Cornwall, Warden of England, was busied about the Kings Weighty Affairs (being as I shew'd with his Father beyond Sea) there were appointed to preside in Parliament John Stratford Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Chancellour, and William de la Zouch, Archbishop of York, [m] Lord Treasurer, with the Dean of York, and Sr. John Willoughby, Deputy Lord Chief Justice, Sr. John Stonore Justice of the Kings Bench, and Sr. John St. Paul, any Four, Three, or Two of these, by the Kings Letters Patents were appointed to begin, continue, and end the Parliament, for, and in the Name of the King, and the Lord Warden of England, and there to do all things, which the said Guardian should do, until his, or the King, his Fathers coming. The Commission began Edwardus D. Gr. &c. and ended---Teste Edwardo, Duce Cornubiæ & Com. Cestr. Filio nostro Charissimo, Gardiano de Angl.

[l] Rot. Parl. M. S. ibid. p. 25. Sr Rob. Cotton p. 19.

[m] Philipot's Catal. p. 33.

These [n] Commissioners aforesaid caused sundry of the Lords and Commons to assemble in the Presence Chamber, before whom, because several of both Houses were not yet come, they continued the Parliament from day to day, till the * Monday next after the Octaves aforesaid, during which time, Merchants, Owners of Ships, and Mariners, did attend. That [o] same day the Causes of the Parliament were declared to be the same, as before, namely, for Granting the King an Aid, for keeping of the Sea, and for Defence of the North Marches, whereunto the Commons require Respit until Saturday the 19 of February: And then they unanimously offer'd to the King for Aid 30000 Sacks of Wooll, on certain Conditions expressed in a pair of Indentures. But for the better Expedition, after some Debate, they yielded to give the King presently 2500 Sacks of Wooll; so, as if the King liked the Conditions aforesaid, the same should go in part of Payment, if not, they were freely offer'd unto him. The Lords promised, to send unto the AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni XIV.

[n] Jan. 20.
* Dom. Lit. B. A.
[o] Jan. 24.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni XIV.

the King to know his Pleasure, and in the mean time, they also for their Parts, grant, that such of them, or of their Peers, as hold by a Barony, should give to the King the Tenth of their Grain, Wooll, and Lambs, and of all their own Demesnes.

[p] i.e. 6 Martii nam Pascha hoc an°. 16. April.

As for the Merchants, their Day was put off till [p] Monday, in the First Week of Lent, but the Mariners of the Cinque Ports promised to make ready their Ships before [q] Midlent, viz. 21 Ships of their own, and 9 of the Thames, and to bear half the Charges themselves, the other half the Privy Council promised to bear of their own good Will to their King and Country, but not of Duty, or that it should stand for a Precedent. The Mariners of the West promise to set forth 90 Sail and 10 Ships of the Burthen of one Hundred Tunn or more, and to bear the whole Charges, if they could. Two Sufficient Scholars were appointed to compute the Charges, the One for the West, and the Other for the Cinque Ports. It was here order'd, that all Ships of Portsmouth, and from thence toward the West, of the Burthen of one Hundred Tunn, or upward, should ride at Dartmouth, the Admiral to be Richard Fitz-Alan, Earl of Arundel; and that the Ships of the Cinque Ports, and the Thames, being of that Burthen, should ride at Winchelsea, the Admiral to be William Clinton, Earl of Huntington: The whole Fleet to be ready before the end of Lent. Command was given to the Admirals, to stay all other Ships which might pass the Seas, and to warn them to go into safe Harbours: And to Furnish this Fleet with Souldiers, beside those, whose Duty was to attend, and also those, who were prest, general Proclamation was order'd to be made, that all Persons who had received of the King Charters of Pardon, should now repair to the Sea-coasts for the Kings Service, on pain of forfeiting the same.

[q] i.e. 26 Martii.

The Lord Richard Talbot, that Noble Warrier, some of whose Valiant Acts we have mention'd in the Scotch War, having in Parliament undertaken for the security of the Town of Southampton, is now appointed Captain of the Town, and allow'd for that Service 20 Men of Arms, and an 100 Archers extraordinary at the Kings Wages, and more upon occasion. All which Souldiers to have one Months Pay beforehand, and Sr. Richard one 100 Pounds by way of Gratuity: Being also appointed to see the said Town forthwith fortified, according to Covenants, in a pair of Indentures, and to levy the Charges of the Neighbours, bordering thereabouts, and if that shall not suffice of the Inhabitants. The Bishop of Winchester (who at that time was Adam Orleton the Traytor) the Prior of St. Swithens, and the Abbot of Hyde, were order'd to keep at their Mannors near Southampton, with all their Powers, to be ready to assist the said Sr. Richard at his Call: Also, that two Pinaces, the one at [r] Milbrook, the other of Roger Normans, do constantly attend the Pleasure of the said Richard in the Port of Southampton. Further, that all the Inhabitants should remain still upon the Place to Defend the same on Pain of loosing all they have. Sr. Richard was to have all the Ammunition and Warlike Furniture of the same Town, to be deliver'd into his Hands by Indenture, and was endued with a like Power in all things as the Earl of Warwick had been, when he was Governour there; The Sheriff of Southampton having a Writ of Attendance on him for Victuals, and other Necessaries, Mr. Stephen Butterly, and Mr. William Weston Serjeants at Arms, were to provide sufficient Timber, Boards, and other Necessaries for the said Town, by Indenture.

[r] Ita corrigo pro Welbrook in M. S. & Sr. R. Cotton.

Thus much for the Sea, and the Sea-coasts: Now as for the Defence of the Marches of Scotland, and the Places thereabouts, which might want Strength or Provision; William Snoring, and John at Fennes, Merchants of Lynn-Regis, Robert of Bayon, and Henry Smith, Merchants of Barton upon Humber, do undertake at a certain Price, and by a certain Day, to deliver Ten Thousand Quarters of all kind of Grain at the Town of Barwick, and in the Road of Leigh: Every Quarter of Wheat and Malt at 9 shillings; of Oats, Beans and Pease at 5 shillings: To which there was added a Caution, that under Colour of this Licence they should not serve the Kings Enemies. Sr. Thomas Rokeby (who, for finding out the Scotch Army in the first Year of this King, was by him Knighted, as we shew'd in due place) being now a Person of great Reputation for Valour, Wisdom, and Fidelity, took upon him to keep the Castles of Edenburgh and Sterling, till Midsummer next ensuing. And the Division of all the Grain aforesaid, and of other Victuals for the said Castles, and the Town of Barwick, being proportionably made, the greatest Share was allotted to the Castles.

Next in Order to preserve the Isle of Wight, this Wise and Great Assembly provided, First, that the inhabitants of the same, during the War, should be respited the Payment of any Aid to the King; and that None of them should by any Means be dispensed with to travel abroad, or to absent themselves out of the said Isle; nor should be impannel'd, or warned at any Aſſiſe, or Inqueſt, during the ſaid War. Alſo, that due Proviſion of Wine, Grain, Coals, and other Neceſſaries for the Caſtle of Caresbrook in the ſaid Iſle be forthwith made; the Kings Butler being appointed to deliver the Wine to Sr. John Langford, Conſtable of the ſaid Caſtle, and William of Rewinock was commanded to provide the reſt of the foreſaid Neceſſaries. AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni XIV.

or

Sr. John Ferrers Captain of Jerſey Iſland, was now appointed to ſend thither a ſufficient Deputy; to whom like Rules were ſet, and Proviſion allow'd for Defence of the ſame: Command being alſo ſent to Bayliffs there to ſeiſe upon the Goods of one William Payne, late Jurate of that Iſle, who Revolted to the Enemy, and to Chooſe another.

On the back-ſide of this Roll are ſeen the Numbers of ſuch Souldiers, as were arrayed, and ſet out by certain Nobles, Knights, and Gentlemen of the Counties of York, Nottingham, Derby, Lancaſter, Weſtmorland, and Cumberland, by their particular Rates, which in the whole amounted to 7400 Men of Arms, 200 Archers on Horſeback, and two Thouſand Halberdeers. Thoſe of the three firſt-named Counties were order'd at the Coſts of the Country to March to Newcaſtle upon Tine only; and they of Weſtmorland, Cumberland, and Lancaſter, to Carlile only: And the Captains and other being together ſhall lie and forrage upon Scotland, and not upon the Marches of England. A Clergyman was appointed for the defraying of their Wages, having the Lords Percy and Nevile to overſee his Accounts, and to ſpeak with the Nobles, Knights, and Captains, to execute theſe Orders, and to bargain with Merchants for Shifts and returns of Money. The Lord Richard Talbot, who was late Captain of Barwick, upon his undertaking the Charge of Southampton, was now diſcharged for a while thereof, Sr. Walter Clark being appointed to keep the ſame till Eaſter next enſuing.

Thoſe, who had directed unto them the Commiſſions of Array for Souldiers for the County of York, were Thomas Lord Wake, William Lord Roos, Sr. Thomas Vghtred, Sr. William de la Pole, and Sr. Michael Wath; only afterwards, [f] becauſe the Lord Wake had been appointed Guardian of the Sea-coaſts in Lincolnſhire, and had in that Service many Souldiers under him, for whoſe ſupport he had been at great Expences, he was in conſideration thereof, diſcharged from finding ſuch Men at Arms, Hobelers, and others, as for his Lands in Yorkſhire, he had elſe been lyable to be charged with. Thoſe, who had Commiſſions of Array for Nottingham and Derby, were the Lord Nicolas Cantelupe, Sr. Richard Willoughby, and Sr. Thomas Longvillers, all Noble Barons of the Realm. For the County of Lancaſter, Sr. Henry Heydock, and Sr. Robert Radcliff: For Weſtmorland and Cumberland, Anthony Lord Lucy, Sr. Pierce Filliol, Sr. Hugh Delowthrey, and Sr. Robert Perning: For Northumberland, the Lord Henry Percy, and Ralph Lord Nevill of Raby, Ranulph Lord Dacres, of the North, Sr. John Fenwick, and Sr. Thomas Helpſcots, all who were empower'd to Place and Diſplace Captains upon Reaſonable Cauſe. This is the Subſtance of the Parliament held at this time, eſpecially in Matters Relating to Scotland, (the Diſcourſe whereof we ſhall refer to another Place) and alſo to France.

[f] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 541.

CHAPTER the FOURTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward holds a Parliament of his Allies at Bruſſels in Brabant: Where he takes upon him the Arms and Style of France, the Flemings entring an Alliance with him, and rendring him their Homage thereupon. II. The Queen of England deliver'd of her Fourth Son at Gaunt, with the Manner of King James the Second's Pedigree, by the Mothers ſide down from him. III. King Edward Publiſhes his Letters Patents Monitory to his Subjects of France, to own his Authority, as of their Right-full King, and to come to his Peace and Protection, with a True Copy of the Letters. IV. King Edward returns into England, with Deſign to hold a Parliament, the time whereof he fixes on the Wedneſday after Midlent-Sunday, which then fell on the Twenty Ninth of March. V. King Edward informs the Pope of his Reaſons, for Uſing the Style and Arms of France; with the Popes Anſwer.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni XIV.

I. THE Sacred Solemnity of our Saviours Nativity being now over, King Edward by Advice of the Lords of the Empire his Friends, went from [a] Antwerp to Bruſſels, the Chief City of Brabant, there to hold a Parliament, and to conſult with his Friends how to proceed farther in his French Wars. These Lords being there met accordingly, firſt perſwaded the King to require the Aid and Friendſhip of the Flemmings in this his Cauſe, and that for his Sake they would defie the French King, and March whither he ſhould lead, or direct them. For all which he ſhould Engage to Recover Liſle, Doway, and Bethune, which three Towns the French King withheld from Flanders. Upon King Edwards Requeſt therefore Jacob van Arteveld came to this Parliament at Bruſſels with a great Retinue, as if he had been Earl of Flanders, and at his Motion, all the Chief Burgeſſes of Gaunt, and the other Good Towns of that Country, by ſome, called the Hanſe-Towns of Flanders; thô properly ſpeaking, they belong rather to the Four Provinces of Lubeck, Cologne, Brunſwick, and Dantzick. All theſe were well pleaſed with the foreſaid Promiſe of King Edward, and thereupon deſired to take Advice among themſelves: When having Retired and Debated ſufficently upon the Point, they gave the King this Anſwer; the Contrivance and Menagement of all which is Attributed to Jacob van Arteveld: "Sir, You were pleaſed to require of Us, that which of Our ſelves We would moſt willingly do; if We might do it handſomly, and without Loſs, or Diſhonour: But alas! Sir, We are Obliged both by Oath, and a Bond of [b] 2000000 of Florens of Gold to be paid into the Popes Chamber, never to make War againſt the King of France, whoſoever he ſhall be: Which Forfeiture not only keeps Us in Aw, but alſo the Danger of being Interdicted by the Pope, if We break Our Oath made to him. But Sir, If You will but undertake to bear the Arms of France, and Quarter them with the Arms of England, and Own Your Self publiquely King of France, (as indeed You are, and ought of Right to be Accounted) then We will look upon You as the True King of France, againſt whom We are not to make War, and thereupon demand of You an Acquittance of Our ſaid Bond, which You may Grant Us, as King of France. By this means We ſhall be aſſured of Our Money, and acquitted of Our Oath, and then We will be ready to ſerve You in what You ſhall Command. This Fine Trick was thus Invented by that ſubtle Demagogue Jacob van Arteveld to ſatisfie the unthinking Commons of the Equity of ſtanding to King Edward againſt France, notwithſtanding all their Solemn Engagements to the Contrary. However, the King demurr'd at this their Anſwer: For thô he knew he might Lawfully claim the Crown of France, in Right of his Mother Queen Iſabella; yet he thought it neither Reaſonable, nor much for his Honour to take upon him the Arms, and Kingly Title of that Realm before he had made Conqueſt of any Part thereof; not being ſure, that ever he ſhould be able to bring thoſe Matters to effect. On the other ſide he was very loath to refuſe the Flemmings this their Deſire, becauſe they might prove ſo Inſtrumental in his Service. Whereupon he Advis'd in private with the Dukes of Brabant and Gueldre, the Earls of Juliers and Blankburg, Mons and Bergen, the Lords of Hainault and Valkenburgh, the Lord Robert of Artois, and his Engliſh Peers; by whoſe Advice he return'd this Anſwer, "That if they would Swear and Seal to this Covenant, and Engage to ſerve him upon all Occaſions in his War, he would then readily do all this, ſince in Equity he might, and further undertake to reſtore them thoſe three Cautionary Towns, of Lille, Doway, and Bethune, which they had deliver'd, as Pledges of their Faith to the French King. To this the Flemmings agree'd, and [d] ſo the 23 of January was appointed, firmly to Ratifie theſe mutual Covenants and Conditions at Gaunt; on which day the King and moſt of the forenamed Lords came to Gaunt, where he was met by the Chief Burgeſſes of all the Towns of Flanders, and then and there all the foreſaid Agreements being ready Engroſſed, were rehearſed, Sworn, and Seal'd to; and ſo the King took upon him the Style of France, and Quarter'd the Arms of that Kingdom with thoſe of England. But thô [e] afterwards, perhaps to gratifie the French Nation, or becauſe that was the more Ancient and Greater Monarchy, he placed the Flowers de Lis in the Dexter and more Honourable Quarter, yet it is highly probable, that at their Firſt Entermingling it was not ſo; as appears not only by the Figure of this King in Armour, trampling on a Boar by a Caſtle, ſignifying France, in a very Old Vellam M. S. now by me, where the Engliſh Lions are ranged in the Firſt and Laſt Quarters of his Shield; but alſo from [f] a Seal of Queen Iſabella, this Kings Mother, where the Arms of England,

[a] Froiſ. c. 43.

[b] Aſhmole p. 650. Fox p. 340. Sandford p. 160

[d] Joh. Villani l. 11. *c.*108. Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc annum §. 3. *Hocſem. l.*2. *c.*25.

[e] Speed p. 572.

[f] Speed p. 572.

England, as being those of the Husband's Line, and therefore to have Precedence, are Marshal'd where now the Flower de Luces shine. But to put this out of all Doubt, We shall further produce the Words of King Philip, spoken at this time upon occasion of this Action of King Edwards, to certain English Gentlemen sent to him about the present Affairs. "Our [g] Cosin, says he, doth wrongfully Quarter the Arms of England and France, which notwithstanding doth not so much displease Us, because indeed he is descended (thô by the Weaker Sex) of Our Kin; and therefore, as being a "Batchelour, We could easily be content to allow him part of the Arms of France; "but whereas in his Seals and Letters Patents, he Styles himself King of England "and of France in the One, and sets the Quarter of his Arms with Leopards, before "the Quarter, Charged with Lillies, in the Other, this is that which We disdain exceedingly: For thereby it should seem, he Prefers that Inconsiderable Isle of England "before the Mighty Kingdom of France. To this Complaint Sr. John Shoreditch, the King of Englands Agent, made Answer, "that it was the Custom of England to set "the Title and Arms of their Progenitors before the Arms and Title of a Right derived "from the Mother. And thus, said he, doth my Lord the King of England Prefer his "Paternal Coat, both out of Duty and Reason. But as it appears, soon after they were alter'd, even as now they stand at this Day; only, [h] that when Charles the Sixth of France, with Design to shew a Difference, changed the Semee Flours de Lize into Three, Our King Henry the V. also did the like, and so it hath continued ever since.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni XIV.

[g] Stow p. 236.

[h] Sandford p. 157. in Not. vid. eund. ibid. in Notis p. 270.

Either at this time or soon after, the King set at the Foot of his Shield, beneath the Arms of France and England thus quarter'd, this French Motto, DIEV ET MON DROIT, in English, GOD AND MY RIGHT, declaring thereby his Confidence to be only in God and the Equity of his Cause: Which Motto with the Title of France, hath been continued by the Kings of England his Successors, even unto this day.

That King Edward might justifie his Title to the Kingdom of France, whose Arms he thus undertook to Bear, he sent his Ambassadors to the Pope with these Instructions following, "[i] That it may be made evident to the Holiness of our Lord the Pope, "that our Lord the King of England, doth justly by Hereditary Right claim the Kingdom of France, the Information which follows, was given in by the Ambassadors of "the said King. The Matter whereupon the Lord Edward, King of England saith, "He hath Right to the Crown of France, is thus. It is and hath been notoriously "known, that the Lord Charles, the Younger Son of Philip King of France, commonly called the Fair, after the Death of the Lord Philip his Brother, at which "time the said Lord Charles immediately by Hereditary Right succeeded in the said "Kingdom, was true King of France, and that unto him the said Kingdom of France "was lawfully devolved by Right of Succession; and that he the Lord Charles held, "and peaceably and quietly possessed the said Kingdom of France, for the time that he "Reigned, as true King of France: And that at last the same Lord Charles leaving no "Brother then surviving, deceased without any Heir Male, begotten of his Body. It "is also certain de jure, that in Hereditary Successions, coming from one Intestate, the "next of Bloud to the Deceased, being able at the time of the Decease to Succeed, "doth wholly exclude all the more remote of the Blood of the said deceased, whether "he was allied to the Deceased by the Person of a Male or Female. And it is certain, "that at the time of the Death of the said Lord Charles King of France, as aforesaid, the foresaid Lord Edward, King of England, was his neerest Kinsman, as who "was Son of the Sister of the said Lord Charles, namely, of the Lady Isabella Queen of "England, being only removed from the same Lord Charles aforesaid in the Second "Degree of Consanguinity: But the Lord Philip of Valois, who occupies the said "Kingdom of France, was Son of the Uncle of the said Lord Charles, namely Son of "the Lord Charles of Valois, Brother to the foresaid Philip the Fair, and so notoriously removed from the said King Charles, in the Third Degree of Consanguinity: "And by Consequence, in common Right, the foresaid Lord Edward, King of England, Son of the Sister of the foresaid Lord King Charles deceased, [k] ought by Right "of Succession to be preferr'd, in the Succession of the said Kingdom, to the foresaid "Lord Philip of Valois, who only is near to the said King Charles in the Third "Degree of Consanguinity. [l] The Intention therefore of our Lord the King of England being founded on Common Right, nothing remains, but only to answer, what "may be objected.

[i] Odoricus Raynald. ad hunc annum §. 9. extat apud Benedict. Tom. 6. Epist. secr. 302. & M.S. Dr. Stillingfleet, sic incipiens, Ut Sanctitati Domini nostri Summi Pontificis, &c.

[k] The Original more full, debuit & debet,

[l] Hic in M.S. Dr. Stillingfleet multa adduntur ex Pandect. &c. ad Jus Regis stabiliendum allegata: tum quæ sequuntur hic.

"And first it is objected on the part of the Lord Philip of Valois, who bears him-

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni XIV.

"ſelf as King of France, againſt the King of England aforeſaid, that the ſame King "of England did unto him, as King of France, make Homage for the Dukedom of "Aquitain and for the Earldom of Pontive; and did thereby recogniſe him the ſaid Lord "Philip to [m] be his Lord and King of France.

[m] The Original more full, fore & eſſe.

2. "It is alſo objected to the King of England, that he made unto him Liege Ho- "mage and Oath; and that of theſe things the foreſaid Philip hath by him Letters "ſealed with the Seal of the foreſaid King of England; and moreover, that theſe "Letters were ſealed in England.

3. "It is alſo objected to the foreſaid King of England, that he is not of the Blood "of the Houſe of France, but by Means of a Woman, namely of the Lady Iſabell "his Mother: And that a Woman neither can, nor ought (an approved and lawfully "preſcribed Cuſtom in the Realm hindring) to be admitted to obtain the ſaid King- "dom by Right of Succeſſion, and by Conſequence by means of her, her Son is not "to ſucceed.

"To anſwer theſe Objections, the Information which follows was given in by the "Ambaſſadors of the King aforeſaid. Firſt, that the Homage made ought not in effect "to prejudicate the King of England, becauſe the ſame King of England at the time "of making the ſaid Homage was notoriouſly under Age, nor had then compleated the "18th Year of his Age; whereby he ought, as other Minors, when they are abuſed, "within the times provided by the Laws of Reſtitution to the full, to be aided by a "competent Judge, if there had been a Competent Judge, with the benefit of Reſti- "tution to the full. But upon Defect of a Competent Judge, the ſaid King of Eng- "land within the foreſaid times of Reſtitution to the full, uſed other Remedies of Law; "which ought to ſuffice him in this Part.

"Moreover the ſaid King of England, being under Age, as aforeſaid, did before the "making of his Homage, by one of his Procurators, eſpecially conſtituted for that "purpoſe, proteſt openly and expreſly, that for any Homage whatſoever, to be made "to the Lord Philip of Valois, then bearing himſelf as King of France, by the ſaid "King of England, for the Dukedom of Aquitain and the County of Pontive, he "did not, nor would intend, to renounce his Hereditary Right, which he had to the "Realm of France, or any way from the ſaid Right to derogate; althô thereupon "Letters ſhould thereafter be ſigned with either of his Seals: And he did proteſt, "that he made not any Homage to the ſaid Lord Philip of his own Free Will, but "only he ſhould do it for the juſt fear he had of Loſing the ſaid Dukedom and "County; and becauſe he feared, that unleſs he ſhould do ſuch Homage unto him, "he could not avoid other great Dangers and irreparable Loſſes. And to the Truth "of the Premiſes, the King of England cauſed by his ſaid Procurator an Oath to be "taken upon his Soul, by laying Hands on the Holy Goſpel, before many Witneſſes "called thereto.

"As to the Objection concerning the Oath, which the King of England in his Ho- "mage ought to have made, or that he ſhould have ſworn, ſo to have declared, ſa- "ving the Objectors Reverence, it is not true; becauſe neither the Lord, the King "of England, nor any of his Progenitors did ever ſwear in the Performance of any "Homage, as will evidently appear by the Inſpection of the Regiſters, containing the "Forms of the ſaid Homages; nor is it contained in any Letters ſealed with the King "of England's Seal, that ſuch an Oath hath been made. Nor can it be ſaid, that in "the Homage made by the ſaid Lord the King, an Oath was tacitly implied hereby, "that the Letters were ſealed with the King of England's Seal, wherein it was contai- "ned, that this Homage was Liege, becauſe the word Liege doth by its ſignification no "way import the ſame.

"And as to what is ſaid, that theſe Letters were ſealed in England, and ſo without "Fear; it is anſwer'd, that even ſo it was not without Fear, when there was a fear of "loſing the whole Dukedom aforeſaid, by reaſon of an Army then ready to invade "the King himſelf in the Dukedom, and in England by the way of Scotland; and that "the ſaid Letters were ſealed, while the ſaid King was notoriouſly under Age, as a- "foreſaid, not of the perfect Knowledge of the ſaid King, nor upon (due) Notice of "his Right or Prejudice, as neither by reaſon of the frailty of his Age could then be "had. Beſides he the ſaid King, ought to be reſtored in full in this Caſe, within the "Times thereto limited, if he had had a Competent Judge, and becauſe he had not a "Competent Judge, he uſed in due time other Remedies, whereby there was taken "better Proviſion as to his Right. And the King of England would have our Lord "the Pope to be more ſurely informed, that the ſaid King never did any thing on

"purpoſe

" purpose to the Lord Philip, bearing himself as King of France, for which he ought to " cease, or desist from the Prosecution of his said Right, or for which he thought, or " doth think his Conscience wronged in this part; and that it was so, He calls God to " Witness.

" As to the Objection, wherein 'tis said, that the said Lord, the King of England, " is not of the Blood of France, but by means of a Woman, who is not capable of " the Right of the Hereditary Realm of France; it is answerd, that althô by the " Custom of the Realm of France, a Woman of the Royal Blood be excluded from " the Hereditary Rights of the Realm of France, yet hereby it doth not follow, that " her Son being a Male, and able to Reign, ought to be excluded from the Succession " of his Forefathers devolved unto Lawfull Heirs; because the King of England claims " the Succession of his Uncle, the Lord King Charles deceased, according to the Pre- " rogative of his Degree, as next of Kin to the deceased King, who ought not to be " excluded from the Inheritance of his Uncle, or his Grandfather, by any Kindred more " remote in Degree, even althô the Mother of the said King by reason of her Sex should " be excluded, or put by.

" And if it be said, that some Nephews and Kindred, of the Lords Lewis and Phi- " lip, Brethren of the said Lord, King Charles, successively have been excluded from " the Royal Succession upon that Account, that they were only allied to the said " Kings by the means of Females, as also the King of England was allied to the said Lord " King Charles by means of a Female only, namely of his Mother; it is answer'd, " that not upon that account were the said Nephews excluded, but upon this, that " none of the said Nephews was in Being at the Time of the Death of the said King, " about whose Inheritance the Controversie was; and this will evidently appear by " matter of Fact underwritten. For it is to be known, that the Lord Philip the Fair, " King of France deceased, leaving behind him three Brothers, namely Lewis the El- " dest, Philip the Long, the Second Born, and Charles the Third and Youngest, and " one Daughter, namely Isabell, Queen of England; Lewis the Elder Son succeeded " his Father, Philip the Fair, immediately in the Kingdom of France, and got one " Daughter; after which King Lewis died, leaving the said Daughter (which had no " Issue during the Life of the said King Lewis) and his Wife impregnate, who after " the Death of the said King brought forth a Male Child named John, who after Nine " Days, wherein he was accounted King of France, deceased: And Philip the Long, " the Middle Brother of the said Three, succeeded him immediately in the said King- " dom. This King Philip begat three Daughters, but no Male, the Elder Daughter " whereof was coupled in Matrimony to the Duke of Burgundy, the Second to the " Dauphin of Vienna, the Third and Youngest to the Earl of Flanders. Of the First " Daughter, married to the Duke of Burgundy, was born a Male Child, called as is " said, Robert, during the Life of King Philip, but that Robert died before King Phi- " lip, his Grandfather, and so was not in Being at the time of the Death of the said Lord " Philip his Grandfather. Of the Second Daughter married to the Dauphin, there was " no Issue at all, during the Life of the said King Philip, as neither of the Other, " who was married to the Earl of Flanders. After the Death of the said King Phi- " lip, his Third and Younger Brother, namely the Lord Charles immediately succeed- " ed; who in the end leaving two Daughters unmarried, deceased without Issue Male. " From all which it is evident, that the said Lord Charles was True and Lawfull King " of France, and by Consequence, that the Lord the King of England, who was Son " of the Lady Isabella, Queen of England, Sister to the said Charles, as aforesaid, ought, " as his Neerest Kinsman, to succeed him in the Kingdom.

These Instructions were given to Nicolas de Flisco and his Son Andrew, who were to be fol- low'd by others with Letters from the King to his Holiness, sealed with the Arms of England and France, which New Seal was not yet made: But while the foresaid Nicolas de Flisco remained at the Court of Avignon under the Pope's Protection, certain wicked Persons, thinking to curry Favour with the King of France, about Midnight on Good-Fryday Eve, enter'd his House by Violence, broke open his Chamber, and hardly giving him time to put on one thin Garment, hurried Him and his Son, and one young Gentleman away, and carried them down the Rhosne to a certain Tower, where they kept them close till Saturday, and then convey'd them into the Parts of France. At which In- jury his Holiness was so moved, that he began to thunder out the most heavy Edicts against the Authors and Accomplices of that Crime, and put France under Interdict; as appears by an Expostulatory Letter of King Philips to the Pope, " Wherein cal- " ling God to Witness, that this Violence was neither done by his Command, nor " Will

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni XIV.

"Will or Knowledge, and that when he heard the Engliſh Men thus taken were with-
"in his Kingdom, he had given Order to make diligent Search for them, and to re"turn them to Avignon again; he complains that thoſe Proceſſes were too ſudden and "too rigorous, ſince he was wholly innocent of the matter, and ſo to the blackning of "his Honour, and that for the future he would not be ſo haſty in acting againſt him,
"without giving him Notice, &c. Dated at Moncell near Pont St. Maixence 21 of "Maii. To which the Pope return'd, That he could never think, the Knowledge of "that Fact did belong to him; however it was ſo horrid, that the Severity, which "he had uſed, was neceſſary: But that his Paternal Affection toward him was no "way diminiſhed thereby, nay he would rather conſpire with him in a mutual A"greement of Good-will and kind Offices. Dated at Avignon iii Kal. Jun. Anno
"Pontif. vi. Soon after at King Philips Command Nicolas de Fliſco and Andrew his Son, with the Gentleman their Servant, were brought back and reſtored to the Pope; whereupon he return'd his Thanks to the King of France, and took off the Interdict; but as the Author of his Life ſays, hang'd all thoſe of his own Family, who had a hand in the matter, before the Doors of the Houſe, which they had broke open. But as for his own Maſter of the Horſe, who was conſenting to the Deed, when being in Priſon, for anguiſh and ſhame he had ſlain himſelf, after it was found willfull Murder, he gave Order that his Body ſhould be expos'd on a Gibbet, to be devour'd by the Birds of the Air.

II. But to return to the King of England, who had lately taken upon him the Arms and Title of King of France, as we ſhew'd, He the mean while preſently found the expected Effects of this Contrivance of Jacob van Arteveld's; for now immediately upon the ſame, all the People of Flanders [n] yielded unto him, as True and Rightfull King of France, and conſequently their Superior Lord, their Homage and Fealty, and ſubmitted themſelves and their Country to his Government; and were long after in all matters obedient unto him, as to the King of France both by Right and Conqueſt. After things thus done, it was determin'd in this Parliament, that [o] the next Summer the War ſhould be hotly purſued in France, being to be begun with the Siege of Tournay: Which was the thing chiefly deſired by the Flemings. For they made ſure to be able to get it, and then they hoped eaſily to recover Lille, Douay and Bethune, with the Appurtenances. With this Reſolution the Council brake up, and the King within a few days returned to Antwerp; But the Queen, who was then big with Child, remain'd ſtill at Gaunt, where ſhe was very honourably entertain'd and viſited, eſpecially by Jacob van Arteveld, and the chief Lords and Ladies of Flanders: And within a while after was happily deliver'd of a Lovely and Lively Boy, her Fourth Son, who was named John, and ſirnamed of Gaunt, from the place of his Birth. This John of Gaunt in time became a Noble and Mighty Prince, himſelf being both Duke of Lancaſter, and King of Caſtille and Leon, his Son Henry of Bolingbrook was afterwards King of England, by the name of Henry the Fourth, who was Father to the Conqueroul Henry the Fifth, but that Kingly Dignity was extinguiſh'd in his Son Henry the Sixth: However from John of Gaunts Loins [q] by the Mothers Side was deſcended Henry the Seventh, who was the Son and Heir of [r] Edmund of Hadham Earl of Richmond, by his Lady Margaret, the only Daughter and Heir of John Beaufort Duke of Somerſet, Nephew of John of Gaunt by his Son John Beaufort. And he marrying the Lady Elizabeth, Daughter of King Edward the Fourth, who had the Blood and Right both of Prince Lionell and Edmund of Langele, Third and Fifth Sons of King Edward the Third, got of her the Lady Margaret, his Eldeſt Daughter, from whom the Kings of Scotland is deſcended our moſt Gracious Soveraign James the Second, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, whom God grant long and happily to reign.

III. But it muſt not be omitted, that before King Edward left Gaunt, [t] he ſent his Letters Patents to the Prelates, Peers and Commons of France, thereby ſignifying, that Charles late King of France, his Mothers Brother, being Dead, the ſaid Kingdom was devolved to him by manifeſt Law. And that Philip of Valois Son to the Uncle of the ſaid King, had by Violence and Injuſtice intruded into it, during his Minority, and even yet wrongfully detain'd it. Left therefore he ſhould ſeem to neglect his own Right, He now thought good to own the Title of France, and take upon him the Defence and Government thereof; and having offer'd the ſaid Philip divers Friendly Conditions of Peace, to which he refuſed all Condeſcention, he was therefore neceſſitated to defend himſelf, and recover his Right by Force of Arms: And therefore all ſuch Subjects, as would ſubmit to him, as True King of France, by Eaſter then next enſuing [n] Knighton p. 2576. and Stow p. 236.

[o] Froiſ. c. 43.

Walſingh. hiſt. p. 133. and Stow p. 236.

[q] Sandford Geneal. Hiſt. p. 248
[r] Mill's Catal. Nobility p. 613.

[t] Rot. Franc. 14 Ed. 3. m. 1. and Aſhmole p. 651.

enſuing ſhould be received into his Royal Grace and Protection. But here the Stile of France is ſet firſt, and the Title of Duke of Aquitain omitted, it being immerged in the more General Title of King of France. This is the Summ of his Letters, which he cauſed to be ſent [t] to the Frontiers of the French Dominions, and to be fixed upon the Doors of Churches and in other Publique Places: But to ſatisfie the Curious I ſhall adjoin a full Copy of the Letter it ſelf, the Tenour whereof was this. AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[t] Speed p. 572. a.

[u] Fox Acts and Monum. p. 346.

"[u] EDWARD, by the Grace of God, King of France and of England, Lord "of Ireland, unto all Prelates and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, and to the Peers, Dukes, Earls, "Barons, and to the Commons of France, Greeting.

"The High Lord and King above, althô his Will be in his own Power, yet is plea- "ſed to make that Power Subject unto Law, commanding every thing to be given "unto Him, which is His; thereby declaring, that Juſtice and Judgement ought to be "the Preparation of a Kings Throne. Wherefore ſeeing the Kingdom of France thrô "the Providence of God, is by the Death of Charles laſt King of France of Famous "Memory, Brother German to Our Lady Mother, devolved and fallen unto Us by "plain and manifeſt Law; foraſmuch as the Lord Philip of Valois, Son of the Uncle of "the foreſaid King, and ſo remov'd from that Crown by a farther Degree of Conſan- "guinity, thrô Force and Uſurpation hath intruded himſelf into the foreſaid Kingdom, "(while We were yet in Our Minority) and ſo contrary both to God and Juſtice, doth "ſtill detain and occupy the ſame: Now leaſt We ſhould ſeem to neglect Our own "Right, and the Gift which God hath given Us, or not to ſubmit Our Will to Gods "Ordinance, We have thought Good to acknowledge the Title of France, and by ſup- "port of the Almighty King have taken upon Us the Defence and Government of "the ſaid Kingdom, firmly purpoſing within Our Selves (as every Good Man ought to "do) Graciouſly to Adminiſter Juſtice to every One, according to the Rights and Lau- "dable Cuſtoms of the foreſaid Kingdom. Alſo to Renew the Good Laws and Cuſtoms "which have been in the time of Lewis Our Progenitor; moreover, adding thereto what "ſhall ſeem Expedient, according to the Condition and Quality of the time. But as "for any Change of Coin, or any Inordinate Exactions, We intend not to ſeek Our "Profit by Your Detriment: Becauſe (the Almighty be Praiſed) We have enough and "abound: And as concerning the Affairs of the Realm, Our Purpoſe is not to pro- "ceed raſhly, or by Our own Will, but by the Diſcreet Advice and Counſel of the "Peers, Prelates, Nobles, and other Our Faithfull Subjects of the kingdom, ſo far "forth, as ſhall make for the Honour of God, the Defence and Advancement of the "Church, (which in all fullneſs of Devotion We Reverence) and to the Advantage "both Publique and Private of all the Subjects thereof, with full Execution of Juſtice, "by the Grace of God to be Adminiſtred unto all and Singular Perſons, We being ear- "neſtly carefull for the Honour, Profit, and Tranquility of You all. For as the Lord "knoweth, nothing will be more acceptable to Us, than that by Our carefull Solici- "tude, Peace may be engendred in General among all Chriſtians, but eſpecially be- "twixt Us; ſo that by Our Concord the force and Strength of all Chriſtian Princes "may be united together, for the Recovery of the Holy Land, which Our Saviour and "Redeemer hath dedicated with his own Precious Blood; whereunto We will endea- "vour Our Selves thrô the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt. And foraſmuch as We have "offer'd to the foreſaid Lord Philip divers Friendly and Reaſonable Conditions of "Peace, whereunto he would neither condeſcend, nor agree to any Conformity, nay "rather he moveth againſt Us unjuſt War, to the Utter Subverſion of Our State; "We are of Neceſſity compelled to the uttermoſt of Our Power (for Our own Se- "curity, and the Recovery of Our Right) to Defend Our Selves by force of Arms: "Not ſeeking any ſlaughter of Good and Humble Subjects, but deſiring their ſafe- "guard and Profit.

"For the which Cauſe, all and ſingular ſuch Our Subjects of the Kingdom of France, "as ſhall ſubmit themſelves unto Us, as unto the True King of France, between this "and the Feaſt of Eaſter next enſuing, profeſſing unto Us their Fealty, and doing un- "to Us, as unto the King of France of Duty it appertaineth (ſo as Our beloved Sub- "jects of Flanders have done already) or ſhall be ready to offer themſelves ſo to do: "All ſuch We willingly Admit and Receive to Our Peace and Grace under Our Pro- "tection to be defended, them to maintain, as is convenient from all moleſtation and "trouble whatſoever in Perſon or Goods, hereafter to be inflicted by Us or by Our "Officers, upon whatſoever occaſion of Rebellion afore-paſſed.

"And foraſmuch as the Premiſes cannot eaſily be intimated to all and ſingular Perſons, "We have provided the ſame to be fixed upon Church Doors and in other publick Pla- "ces,

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

"ces, whereby the Manifeſt Notice thereof may come to all Men, to the Comfort of "You, that are to Us Loyal, and to the Information of thoſe, who thrô the Siniſter "dealing of Our Enemies, are otherwiſe informed of Us. Given at Gaunt the 8 day of February, in the Year of Our Reign over France the Firſt, and over England the Fourteenth.

IV. Preſently after King Edward had thus aſſumed the Arms and Style of France, and had cauſed his Great Seal to be Changed, leaving the Earl of Salisbury and the Lord Robert Hufford le Fitz, Eldeſt Son to the Earl of Suffolk, in Flanders, with his Queen and Children, he took the Sea for England, and Landed ſafe at [x] Orwell in Suffolk on the 21 of February, at Nine of the Clock in the Morning; on which very day, that his New Seal might be made more Publique, he cauſed [y] Impreſſions thereof, and of his Privy Seal (which was alſo alter'd) to be made, and ſent to all the Sheriffs in England, to be Publiſhed in the ſeveral Counties; in regard he intended at the meeting of the Parliament on the [z] Wedneſday next after Midlent-Sunday, to acquaint them with the Cauſe, wherefore he had added to his Style the Title of King of France. And on the Firſt of March following, he deliver'd his New Broad Seal to Sr. John de St. Paul, in the Cage-Chamber at Weſtminſter, the Old Great Seal being then deliver'd up to him by the ſaid Sr. John, which he gave to William de Kildesby to be laid up in his Wardrobe. But it is to be [a] remembred, that upon this Change, there were two Seals made alike in all things, but only One was circumſcribed Edvardus Dei Gratiâ Rex Angliæ, & Franciæ, & Dominus Hiberniæ. And the other was Edvardus Dei Gratiâ Rex Franciæ, & Angliæ, & Dominus Hiberniæ; the Style being varied in Reſpect of the Place, as Our King is now in Scotland called Rex Scotiæ & Angliæ, but in England, Anglia is put firſt. But of King Edward and his Affairs in Parliament We ſhall not yet ſpeak, till We have given ſome account of other Matters of no ſmall Conſequence in other parts, which fell after the two Armies had broke up at Vironfoſs without engaging.

[x] Clauſ. 14. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 42. dorſo.

[y] 21 Febr. ibid. m. 33. in dorſo.

[z] 29 Martii.

[a] Vid. hujus ſigilli Imaginem Sandford p. 124

V. Only here We ſhall remember, that the King of England upon this variation of his Seal, to ſet forth the Equity of his Cauſe, ſent his Letters to the Pope, wherein uſing the Style of King of France, and the Lillies quarter'd, he largely ſets forth, how the Realm of France, was devolved unto him by Hereditary Right; and that Philip of Valois had by Violence and Injuſtice uſurped it, to whom the Pope ſent an Anſwer, the Tenour whereof followeth, "Benedict the Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God to "his moſt Dear Son in Chriſt, Edward, the Illuſtrious King of England, Greeting, and "Apoſtolical Benediction. When lately the Letters of Your Royal Excellency were "preſented to Our Apoſtleſhip, and the Contents thereof more fully underſtood, as "ſoon as ever a New Title therein deſcribed, and the Impreſſion of a Seal engraven "with the Arms of France and England, did at firſt view appear, they Adminiſtred un-"to Us great Matter of Aſtoniſhment and Admiration. For by how much We Em-"brace You with the Preheminence of a more Ample Charity, by ſo much the more "grievouſly are We afflicted inwardly, while We perceive You to be led by Perverſe "and Deceitfull Counſels, and to be induced to ſuch things, as are neither Expedient "nor Decent. Nor doth our inward Affection permit Us to be ſilent or diſſemble; but "that We ſhould ſet before the Eyes of Your Mind theſe things, that You may be able "more Diſcreetly and Profitably to take Care to Your ſelf, as to the Premiſes.

M.S. Dr. Stillingfleet p. 1. & apud Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1340. § 4. ex Tom. 6. Epiſt. Secret. 255. in Vatican.

"For it is affirmed for certain, and undoubted; that whereas the Cuſtom hitherto "kept inviolably doth not admit the Succeſſion to the Realm of France by the Fe-"male Line, the Succeſſion is ſaid not to be due unto You, who, as You know are "deſcended of the Stock of the Houſe of France by the Female Line. And if no ſuch "Cuſtom did forbid the [c] Succeſſive Proceeding of the Female Line, to the Crown of "the ſaid Kingdom, there are however to the Kings of France of Famous Memory, who "gradually Succeeded unto Philip King of France, of Famous Memory, Your Grand-"father, Daughters, and their Children, who, as to the ſaid Succeſſion, as is reported, "are nearer unto the Kings, their Fathers, than are You and our moſt Dear Daughter in "Chriſt, Iſabella, the Illuſtrious Queen of England, Your Mother, Daughter of the "foreſaid King Philip: But the Cuſtom aforeſaid hath been of former time ſo invio-"lably obſerved, and ſtill is obſerved, that it admits not a Succeſſion to the ſaid Kingdom "by the Female Line.

[c] Succeſſone M. S. Succeſſionem Odoric.

"But to think that by the way of force You may obtain the ſaid Kingdom, conſi-"dering the Greatneſs and Power of the King and Kingdom of France, Your Forces "are by no means believed to ſuffice thereto: And that holding and poſſeſſing no-"thing in the ſaid Kingdom, You make Your ſelf to be called King of France, and have aſſum'd

"assum'd the Arms thereof, as is Premised, it is certainly reckoned to proceed from E- AN. DOM.
"vil and Unrighteous Counsell. But if those who perswaded You to such things, en- 1340.
"deavour to say for an Excuse, that You are Lord in Flanders, which is known to be An. Regni
"in Fee of the King and Kingdom of France; truly it is to be attended and consider- Angliæ
"ed, and Your Royal Wisdom may diligently examin who, and what Men, and of what XIV.
"Condition they are, who have brought You in there: For in them hitherto hath the Franciæ
"Vertue of Constancy and Loyalty never been Praise-worthy: For they have often I.
"basely ejected out of Flanders it self, Their Natural Lords, to whom they were bound "in the Debt of Loyalty, violating the Covenant of Their Faith, after the Pleasure "of Their own Wills; and if they have done this to them, whom they were Natu"rally Obliged to Reverence, what may be presumed of You, ô Son, and what kind "of Title may thence be taken or formed, We pray that Your Wisdom would discreet"ly consider.

"Again consider, even thô it did proceed of Good and Right Counsel, that (now)
"You cause Your self to be named King of France, during the Reign of Our most Dear "Son in Christ, Philip the Illustrious King of France, who, as King, hath for many "Years peaceably held and possessed the Kingdom of France, and to whom, as such,
"for the Lands within the said Kingdom to You belonging, by doing Fidelity and "Liege Homage, You have recognis'd him for King of France, and Your Lord for the "Lands aforesaid: Those that hear asmuch, are amaz'd, [d] ascribing it not to discre"tion, but rather to Simplicity and Vanity. Finally We judge it ought to be more "strictly consider'd, that such a Title, wanting both Reality and Advantage, (which "those are said to have perswaded You to, who love you not, but seek by Your Losses
"to make Their own Market, believing to attain thereto more fully, when they shall "have procured You to be insnared and involved in more deep Intricacies, and hazar"dous Necessities and Troubles) is feared to be a Poysonous Root, which will probably "(unless other Care be taken) bring forth Fruits of Bitterness and Sorrow.

[d] Ascribentes in M.S. quod malè legitur arbitrantes apud Odor. Rainald.

"Moreover We account, that You ought no less diligently to consider, how ma"ny, and how Great Kings, Princes, and Noblemen, who have proceeded from the "Stock of the House of France, or have Affinity, or Confederation therewith, who "opposed not themselves unto You about Your Affairs before, by this Name and Title
"You would provoke against You, and more directly incense, if (which God forbid)
"You should insist thereon. And the very Title might begin such a Matter (which God "avert) whereby the Reformation of Peace between You and the said King of France,
"might, as to all humane judgement, be render'd for ever impossible: And also the "Princes, and other Subjects of the said Realm (who, as the vulgar report goes, would "expose themselves to the hazards of Death, and the perpetual loss of Their Goods,
"rather than endure the Premises, would by the same Name and Title, be render'd more
"prompt, able, Valiant, and Couragious against You, [e] for the Defence of the said
"King Philip, and his Kingdom: Nor ought You, most Dear Son (as We remember "to have written unto You elsewhere) to repose much Confidence in the Germans and "Flemings; for You shall find them Affable and Kind unto You, as long as They can "have leave to drain Your Substance, but otherwise You may not confide in Their As"sistance. And if You peruse the Deeds of Your Progenitors, how the same Germans
"and Flemings behaved themselves formerly towards them, You will manifestly find how "far You may trust unto Them.

[e] Ad defensionem M.S. rectè, Odoric. ac defensionem malè.

"We therefore intreat Your Royal Highness, and earnestly in the Lord exhort You,
"that You would receive the Premises (which We write of a Fatherly Good Will and "Sincere Affection) with a favourable Mind, and taking them together with other Mat"ters, which as to this Point may occurr unto You, into a just and considerate Discussion
"and Examination, laying by the foresaid Title, would incline Your Royal Mind to the "way of Peace and Concord, whereby You may be able both to attain and peaceably to "keep those things, which shall be Your Right, a Mutual Agreement being made be"tween You and the said King; that as You are joyned with the Tye of Blood and Affi"nity, so You may be allied in the perpetual Bond of Confederation and Love. Dated Aven. III. Non. Martii An°. Pontif. VI.

Other Letters bearing the same Date were written to the King, wherein the Pope chid him, that being Admonished the last Year, IV Id. Octob. under Penalty of Ecclesiastical Censures, and other heavy Penalties, to break with Lewis of Bavaria, he had yet return'd no Answer to the Apostolick See; and as it appears, [f] those very Cardinals, who were Nuntio's of the Apostolick See upon the Account of Peace, wrote to the Pope, that those Censures he had once threatned the King of England with, might now [f] Odoric. Rainald. ad eundem Ar. §. 8. ex Tom. 6. Epist. Secr. 256.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

be inflicted on him, becauſe he ſtill kept the Lieutenantſhip of the Empire, but Benedict wrote Back unto them to abſtain from any ſuch Proceedings againſt Edward, till with the Cardinals he had more maturely weigh'd ſo important a buſineſs. But before things went ſo far, We ſhall find the Emperour himſelf to Repeal his former Commiſſion, given unto King Edward; ſo that there was no further Occaſion for that Papal Thunderbolt to ſtrike England at that time.

CHAPTER the FIFTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The French King ſends an Army into Gaſcoign, which the Lord Oliver Ingham, King Edwards Seneſchal of Aquitain, being too weak to match, overthrows by a Stratagem. II. King Philip reinforces his Navy, and ſends to waſte the Lord John of Hainalts Lands. III. Sr. Giles Manny, Brother to the Lord Walter Manny, ſlain by the Cambreſins. IV. The French King gives leave to the Bordering Garriſons to make an Incurſion into the Earl of Hainalts Territories: Whereupon the Earl ſends him a Defiance. V. After that the ſaid Earl Marches in Hoſtile manner into the French Pale, where being ſatisfied with Revenge for that time, he paſſes over the Sea for England to enter a ſtrict Alliance with King Edward. VI. The mean while King Philip orders his Eldeſt Son, John Duke of Normandy, to Revenge this ſeverely upon Hainalt, and he himſelf having try'd in vain to draw off the Flemings from England to his ſide, procures the Pope to Interdict Flanders, and Commands his Garriſons, that Border'd that way, to make ſharp War upon them, which is done accordingly. VII. Jacob van Arteveld in Revenge reſolves to go and lay Siege before Tournay, and invites the Earl of Salisbury, and the Earl of Suffolks Eldeſt Son to come to ſuch a Place, and joyn him: They in their Paſſage thither are intercepted, and taken Priſoners by the Men of Lille, and are ſent to the French King, who is hardly perſwaded by the King of Bohemia not to put them to Death in cold blood. VIII. The Duke of Normandy Invades Hainalt, with the various Rencounters thereupon. IX. He returning to Cambray, Mutual Inroads are made into France and Hainalt by the Garriſons of either Party. X. The Duke, when the ſeaſon of War was come, Marches again from Cambray, and goes before the Caſtle of Thine l' Eveſque: The Earl of Hainalt coming home, Marches with a great Army to raiſe the Siege.

I. NOW thô Philip the French King, had upon good Reaſons, as we ſhew'd before, declin'd to venture his whole Stock upon the chance of one Battle, yet was he not wanting to ſhew himſelf both Active and Provident, in offending his Enemy of England, where he imagin'd any probability of Succeſs. He [a] therefore appointed the Lord Gaſton Earl of Laille, who was a right Valiant Leader, and as then at Paris with the King, to undertake an Expedition againſt the Engliſh in Gaſcoign, and to act as his Lieutenant there; making war againſt Bourdeaux and Bourdelois, and all the Fortreſſes that held ſtill of King Edward. At that time the worthy Baron [b] Oliver Lord Ingham, was Governour of Bourdeaux and the Parts thereabout, who not much doubting any great matter from France in this juncture, when the King of Englands Forces were in Flanders (For King Edward upon his Departure into England had left in Flanders great Part of his Forces under the Command of the Earl of Salisbury, and the Lord [c] Robert Hufford le Fitz, eldeſt Son to the Earl of Suffolk) was notwithſtanding ſuddenly ſurprized to behold a compleat Army of Frenchmen approaching the Walls of Bourdeaux, to lay Siege thereto. He was not ready enough prepared to make good the Place by pure Force, nor had he ſufficient Power at that time (many of his Men being diſperſed into Winter Quarters) to man the Walls and make good all other Defences: Only this was his Comfort, that the Inhabitants were all entirely affected to the Engliſh Intereſt. Wherefore putting all his own Men, which were under 6000 into Arms in the moſt ſecret manner, he commanded the Citizens to ſhew no Fear or Diſtruſt, but to follow their Occupations, as in time of Peace. Then immediately he ſet the City Gates wide open, and rear'd upon the Walls both of Town and Caſtle the French Lillies. The Enemy nemy finding the Gates open, enter'd peaceably, but when they saw the Arms of France every where erected, and also upon the Castle it self, supposing the English Garrison fled; and so secure now, both they within and they without for the most part laid by their Arms, but all went in without Order, to rifle the Houses of the English, and to seize the Castle. But just then the Valiant and Politick Lord Ingham with his Men all well-arm'd and in good Order rush'd forth upon them, slaying them down by Heaps, and driving all before them. At which instant the Citizens fell in upon them from all Parts with their Weapons in their hands, so that it was impossible for them, tho never so numerous to rally again and recover any Order: Wherefore with great ease the Lord Ingham prevail'd and vanquish'd them utterly, so that they were all either slain or taken almost to a Man; the Earl of Laille hardly with a few escaping. King Edward upon News hereof, besides his Gracious Acceptance of Sr. Oliver's Service, sent his Royal Letters of Thanks to his Subjects of Bourdeaux, wherein he also promised them considerable Aid very speedily. They began thus. Edward, &c. "You ought, O most "loving and loyal Subjects of Bourdeaux, greatly to rejoyce, for that by your Cou- "rage and Loyalty, you have purchas'd unto your selves a Name, that will be crown'd "with immortal Honour: And we nothing doubt, but you will yet further endeavour "to exalt your Glory more high by perseverance in those laudable Beginnings. But "as for this last piece of your Service to Us, We shall take care to requite it with "such Bounty, that by example of your Rewards, obtained from Us, other of our lo- "ving Subjects may be rendred more prompt and willing to hazard in our Service both "their Lives and Fortunes, &c.

[a] Froiſ. c. 46. *fol.*26.

[b] *Walſingh hiſt. p.*133. Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*104. & Odoric. Rainald. ad An.1339. n. 15.

[c] *Dugd.*2 Vol. p. 48.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

When the News of this Succes was brought to King Edward, it was also shew'd unto him, that the Lord [d] De la Brett, and other Lords of Gascoign, who had lately yielded to the French King; had now, for want of sufficient Protection from him, return'd to the Obedience of the King of England, and wasted the Lands of the French King as far as Tholouse.

[d] Knighton p. 2575. n. 60.

About the same time the English [e] Mariners of the Cinque Ports, to revenge in part those late Affronts done to England by the French Navy, embarqued themselves in Pinnaces and small Boats well appointed, and after the Feast of St. Hilary, arrived at Boulogne upon the Sea-coast, from whence is the shortest Cutt to Dover: The weather was so misty, cloudy and dark, that they were scarce perceived when they were in the Haven. So that by the Lower Town they burnt 19 Gallies, 4 great Ships and 20 Small Boats with all their Tackling, beside those Houses near the Shore, among which one was the Block-House at that time full of Oars, Sails, Weapons, all manner of Rigging, and other Necessaries sufficient to furnish 19 Gallies and Men for them. After all which they slew many of the Townsmen in a skirmish on the [f] land, set fire to the Lower Town, hang'd twelve Captains of their Ships, whom they had taken, and so bad them farewell for that time.

[e] Stow p. 236.

[f] Knighton p. 2573. n. 50.

II. The mean while King [g] Philip bestirr'd himself, as One, who was sensible, how near all these matters concern'd his Honour and Estate Royal; he mightily enforced and strengthned his Navy, then on the Sea, under the Command of his three Admirals, Sr. Hugh Quyriel, Sr. Peter Bahuchet, and Nicolas Barbenoir, the Genoan. These were furnished with a notable Fleet of Genuans, Normans, Bretons, and Picards, who did this Winter no small damage to the Coasts of England, at Dover, Sandwich, Winchelsey, Hastings, and Rye: For they were more than 40000 Men in all. Beside this King Philip wrote to the Lord of Beaumont-in-Champaine, the Lord of Bresne, the [h] Vidame of Chalons, the Lord John de la Beau, the Lords John and Gerard of Loire, enjoyning them to furnish themselves with competent forces, and so make an Impression upon the Lord John of Hainalts Lands, burning, killing, and destroying without Pity, because he took King Edward's Part against France. These Lords did as they were Commanded, and enter'd the said Lands with 500 Men of Arms; appearing suddenly one Morning before the Town of Chimay, a strong Town of Hainalt, seated in a Wood, on the little River Blanche. Here they found a vast quantity of Cattle and other Prey, for the Country People never imagin'd the French could have come so far, without passing the Wood of Thierasche. The Place was too strong however, to be won by them, so that setting fire on the Suburbs, and the neighbouring Villages, they return'd laden with Spoil to Aubenton, and there divided the Booty.

[g] Froiss. c. 44. & c. 50. Ashmole p. 651.

[h] Qu. Vidome, i.e. Vicedominus.

At the same [i] time the Garrison of Cambray sent a small Detachment to a little strong House hard by, called Relenques, which also belonged to the foresaid Lord John of Hainault, and was now kept by a Bastard son of his, who had only 15 Men of Arms, and about fourty others in his Company. These few held out manfully one whole day a-

[i] Froiss. c. 44.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

gainſt a continual Aſſault of the Cambreſins; but becauſe the Ditches were ſo frozen, that there was free Paſſage for the Enemy to approach to the very Walls, about Midnight the Baſtard and his Men in great ſilence truſſed up all they had of any worth, and ſetting fire to the Houſe, departed for Valenciennes, whither they all came in ſafety. Next day, as the Cambreſins came thither again to renew the Aſſault, ſeeing all was reduced to Aſhes, they beat down the Walls and what remain'd to the ground, and ſo returned.

[k] C. 13. § 3. p. 135.

III. We ſhew'd before, [k] how the Lord Walter Manny had taken the ſtrong Caſtle of Thine l' Eveſque, ſo called, becauſe it belonged to the Biſhop of Cambray, over which he had ſet as Captain his Brother Sr. Giles Manny. This [l] Sr. Giles was a Valiant Knight, and very much incommoded the Garriſon of Cambray, both diſtreſſing them, that iſſued out of the Town, and alſo boldly braving them at their own Walls. Once particularly this Winter he Marched from his Garriſon in the head of Sixſcore Men of Arms, and came to the Barriers of Cambray; where the clamour roſe ſo high, and the skirmiſh grew ſo fierce, that great numbers within the City were fain to run to Arms, and come to the Gate to the aſſiſtance of their Fellows, who were hitherto too weak for Sr. Giles, and were ready to turn their backs. But now upon this reinforcement Sr. Giles cauſed a Retreat to be ſounded to his Men, and ſo began to draw off fair and ſoftly. The freſh forces of the Cambreſins iſſued out of the Barriers after him, as they might well do, both conſidering their own Numbers, and that ſo ſtrong a Place was at hand to ſecond them. Among the Frenchmen there was a young luſty Eſquire of Gaſcoign, named William Marchant, who came out among the foremoſt into the Field, well-mounted, his ſhield about his Neck, and his Spear in his Hand. Him when Sr. Giles beheld, he turn'd his Horſe and rode up fiercely to him, thinking to have ſlain or taken him: But the Eſquire held him tack gallantly, inſomuch that at laſt either by his Hands, or ſome others, (for the Medley and Confuſion was now at the higheſt) Sr. Giles was ſtricken thrô all his Harneſs, the Spear paſſing quite thrô his Body, upon which he fell down to the earth. Upon the fall of their Captain, his Men renew'd the skirmiſh more fiercely, but by continual Recruits from the Town they were finally overpower'd, ſlain, and put to flight. The Cambreſins took up the Body of Sr. Giles, wounded mortally, as he was, and brought him with great Triumph into the City, where preſently they diſarm'd him, and got skilfull Surgeons to dreſs his Wound, for they were very deſirous to ſave him to be Ranſom'd; but for all their Care, he died the next day after. Then they reſolv'd to ſend his Body to his Brethren, John and Thierry (for the Lord Walter the Elder was about King Edward's buſineſs) which two kept Garriſon at Bouchain in Oſtervandt: For thô at that time the Country of Hainault was not engag'd in any War (ſaving the late Incurſion made into the Lord of Beaumonts Lands) yet all the Frontiers toward France were Garriſon'd for fear of the Worſt, the times beginning to be troubleſome. So they prepar'd an Horſe, and Litter, and putting his Body therein, cauſed two Fryers to convey it to his Brethren, who received him with great ſorrow, and ſaw him decently interred at the Fryers in Valenciennes, where afterwards the Lord Manny [m] buried his Father, as in due place we ſhall ſee. This being performed, his two Brethren, John and Thierry, (who were alſo half [n] Brethren to the Earl of Namur) went to their Deceaſed Brothers Caſtle of Thine, whence they made ſharp War upon thoſe of Cambray, in Revenge of the Death of their Brother.

[l] Froiſ. ibid.

[m] Froiſ. c. 110.

[n] Id. c. 49.

[o] Froiſ. c. 44.

IV. At that time the [o] Lord Godmar du Fay of Normandy, was Captain of Tournay and the Country thereabout; the Lord of Beaujeu was Captain in Mortagne on the Skell, at the Confines of Hainault in Tournois, the Seneſhall of Carcaſſon in the Town of St. Amand on the Scarp, Sr. Emeric of Poictiers in Doway; and the Lord Galeas de la Bauſine, the Lord of Villers, the Marſhall of Mirepoix, and Sr. Theobald of Marville in the City of Cambray: All which Garriſons deſired nothing more than to make an Inroad into Hainault, there to rob and ſpoil the Country. This their Deſire was brought to effect by the Biſhop of Cambray, who being then at Paris with the King, complained "that the Hainalders had done him great Dammage, having de-"ſtroy'd and overran his Country more than any other: And that the Lord John of "Hainault was an apparent and known Enemy to France, and the Earl his Nephew "alſo, ſecretly a Friend to England. Whereupon King Philip (as one that conſider'd not how many Enemies he created to himſelf) preſently gave leave to the foreſaid Garriſons of Cambreſis and Tournois to make an Incurſion into Hainault, which they gladly did to the number of 600 Men of Arms. On a Saturday Morning they all began their March from Cambray, and were met by a Troop of Almains from the Caſtle ſtle of Mal-maiſon, which ſtood two leagues from Cambray; the Almains being Servants to the Biſhop of the ſaid City. So that all joyning together they went to the Town of Haſpre upon the Selle, which was rich and large, being much extended in the Suburbs without the Walls. The Inhabitants were all ſecure, as in the depth of Peace, for they had ſeen no War of many Years, and knew of none near them. Wherefore the French enter'd without reſiſtance, and found Men and Women in their houſes and at work, whom they took or ſlew, as many as they laid hands on, and having robbed the Town at their pleaſure, they ſet it then on fire and burnt it to the very ground, that nothing remain'd but the bare Walls: Nor did they ſo much as ſpare the Great Priory of Black-Monks within the Walls, of large Buildings, beſide the Church, which being all within the Walls was a Cell to St. Waaſt or Vedaſt, an Abby of Arras; but this alſo being firſt robbed, they burnt to the ground, and ſo return'd laden with prey to their ſeveral Garriſons. The News of this was brought to the young Earl of Hainault, when he was a bed in his Palace at Valenciennes, called la Salle du Comte: Whereupon he aroſe ſuddenly, buckled on his Armour and haſtily call'd for all thoſe Knights who were about his Court; but their Lodgings were ſo ſcatter'd, that they could not all be ready ſo ſoon as the Earl: He for his part not tarrying for any Man, rode into the Market-place and cauſed the Bells to ring an Alarm: At the ſound whereof all the Men of War, then in pay in the City, aroſe, put on their Armour and follow'd the Earl their Lord, who with a few was already ridden out of the Town in great haſte towards Haſpre. He was ſcarce well out of Town, when news came to him, that the Frenchmen had atchieved their Enterpriſe and were gone home. Then he rode in a great paſſion to the Abby of Fontaine, where the Lady Joan de Valois, his Mother was retir'd in Devotion, [p] as we ſhew'd before, upon the death of her Husband the Earl. To her he related this Affront of her Brother King Philip, with the moſt bitter Invectives imaginable; ſhe good Lady! took much pains to appeaſe his Anger, and to excuſe his Uncle of being concern'd in ſuch an unnatural Cruelty to him: But he ſaid with an Oath, that the Deſtruction of Haſpre ſhould be ſoundly revenged in France. So after a ſhort Viſit he return'd to Valenciennes, and preſently ſent out his Writs of Citation to the Prelates and Knights of his Country, to come and give him their Counſel in this Affair. When his Uncle the Lord John of Hainault heard this News, he took horſe and rode to the Earl his Nephew to Valenciennes, whom as ſoon as the Earl ſaw, he ſaid, "Ah! Dear Uncle, your Abſence from us hath made the Frenchmen "preſumptuous. "Sir, repli'd he; that you have received any Trouble or Dammage, "I am very ſorry, I aſſure you; and yet in a manner I cannot but gather thence ſome "kind of ſatisfaction: For now you are fitly rewarded for the love and ſervice you "ſhew'd to the French King, when you left your Brother-in-Law, the King of Eng-"land, to go and aid him at Viron-foſſe. Conſider now, whether you had beſt ſtay "for a little more Provocation; till you ſee all your Country overrun, as ſome of my "Lands have been already. "Ah Uncle, ſaid the Earl, do you but adviſe into what "Quarter we had beſt to March, and I'll ſee it ſhall be ſhortly done with a Witneſs.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[p] C. 10. §. 6. p. 114.

Now the Day of the Parliament being come, which the Earl had ſummon'd to Mons, thither came all the Burgeſſes of Hainault, Holland and Zealand, among whom were divers Opinions: The more Cauteous adviſ'd, "That certain Perſons of Quali-"ty ſhould be ſent to the French King, to know whether he conſented to thoſe Ho-"ſtilities done in Hainault, or no; and if ſo, upon what Pretence he made War in "the Earls Land without Defiance. Others more warm were of the mind, that the "Earl ſhould immediately ſeek Revenge, in the ſame manner as he had ſuffer'd the Injury, "to wit ſuddenly, and without giving any Notice at all. But at laſt a third Opinion "prevail'd above theſe, "that indeed the Earl could do no leſs in Honour than make "War in France; but it was reckon'd more generous and agreeable to the Law "[q] made by King Edward at Arques in Brabant, to defie the French King firſt, and "then to paſs into his Realm with an Army. Accordingly the Defiances being there written and ſealed by the Earl and all his Nobles, the Abbot Theobald of St. Criſpin was preſently diſpatch'd away with them to Paris. The Earl thanked all his Lords for their readineſs to maintain his Honour, and ſet himſelf with all his Power to prepare for the War. The Abbot of St. Criſpin went and preſented the Defiances to King Philip, who upon peruſal thereof, notwithſtanding his Quarrel with England, haughty as he was, made but ſport of the matter, ſaying, "His Nephew was but an Outragious "Fool, and that he was only taking the readieſt courſe to ruine his own Country. The Abbot return'd to the Earl and his Council, to whom he ſhew'd how he had ſucceeded: But the Anſwer enflam'd them all ten times more than before. The mean while [q] Vid. c. 11. §. 5. p. 125.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

while the Earl made great Levies from Brabant and Flanders, as well as in his own Countries, till he had gotten together a Formidable Army.

V. All things being ready, he [r] began his March towards the Lands of Chimay, for his intent was to go and destroy the Lord of Bresne's Lands, and the Great Town of Aubenton in Tierasche: The Inhabitants of Aubenton were in much doubt of these Preparations; whereupon they sent for Succour to the Grand Baily of Vermandois, who sent unto them the Vidame of Chalons, the Lord of Bresne, the Lord de la Bonne, the Lord of Löire, and Others to the number of 300 Men of Arms. So they all fell to fortifie the Town where it most wanted, determining to expect the Hainalders and to defend the Place, which was very considerable in greatness and riches, especially in Drapery. The Hainalders came thither, as was expected, early on a Fryday and view'd well the Town, to find in what part it was most assaultable: That same Morning they resolv'd to give a general Assault, and so approached in very good Order in Three Battalia's, with their Crossbows before them, and their Banners waving in the Wind. The Earl of Hainault himself led the first Battail, having in his Retinue a great number of Choice Knights and Esquires of his own Subjects: The Lord John his Uncle had the second Battail, consisting of many choice Bands of Men of War, English and Others; the Third and last was brought up by the Lord of Valkenburgh, which consisted for the most part of Almains and Brabanders. These 3 Battails assaulted the Town at one time in three several places, with much Vigour and Gallantry, the Archers all the while both from within and without letting fly their Arrows and Quarrels without sparing. The Earl with his Battail came up near to the chief Gate, which for a while was worthily defended by the Vidame of Chalons, who there and then Knighted three of his Sons, and obliged his Men by words and example to do gallantly: But yet at last both he and they were by the Earl beaten back again into the Town in some Confusion: The Earl carrying the Barriers by fine Force, and keeping them. The mean while his Uncle the Lord of Beaumont was fighting with like Valour and Success at the Gate toward Chimay, where after a sharp Conflict, which yet was well manag'd by the Lord de la Bonne and the Lord of Bresne, he forced the Enemy to retire into the Town, and thereby wan both the Barriers and the Bridge also. Yet what they had, as it was not cheaply won, was not easily maintain'd: For the Besieged being beaten into the Town, came now to revenge that Affront upon the Walls, whence they cast down barrs of Iron, Stones, Timber, Darts, and Pots of quick Lime, which did a great deal of Mischief. An Esquire of Hainault had such a stroke with a stone upon his Target, that it was quite cloven in sunder with the blow, and his Arm so shatter'd and broken, that it was long before it could perfectly be healed. The next morning being Saturday, the Assault was again renew'd on all sides with far more fury than before, so that althô they within did their utmost to defend themselves, at last all their Barriers and Defences were beaten down, and the Town was carried by Force. Sr. John the Earls Uncle, enter'd first with great noise of shouting and Trumpets, his Men of Arms beating down all before them. At this dreadfull sight the Vidame of Chalons, like a Noble Knight withdrew himself into a fair spacious place before the Minster, where he stood with his Men in a square Battail, resolved as it should seem to sell his Life dearly. But as for the Lord of Bresne, when he saw all was lost, knowing he had so much displeased Sr. John, by his late Incursion into his Lands about Chimay, that if he were taken no Ransom would be accepted for his Life, he determin'd to save himself by flight, and presently taking a good Horse fled away without any Order upon the spur. Sr. John hearing that his Capital Enemy was escaped, immediately with a good Brigade of Horse sped after him; but the Lord of Bresne had got the start of him so much, that finding the Gate of his Town ready open to receive him, he made shift to enter and close the Gates again, just as Sr. John came up to the very Walls, thrô eager pursuit with his Sword drawn in his hand. Wherefore seeing his Enemy had escap'd him, he return'd back to Aubenton; but in his passage thither, meeting with many of the Lord of Bresne's Men following their Master, he put them all to the Sword without mercy. The mean while in the Town, was the young Earl and his Men hard fighting with those who were drawn up before the Minster; and there the Vidame of Chalons did Wonders in Arms, and so did two of his Sons, and all his Company plaid this their last Stake gallantly and with honour; but the Hainalders were as cunning Gamesters, besides that they were more animated with Success; so that at last the Vidames Party being oppress't by numbers of Men no less valiant and desperate than themselves, were slain upon the spot every Man, not one was taken to ransom, and the Vidame indeed scorn'd to be taken, [r] Froiss. c. 45.

and

and his Sons were of his Mind, and so they all fell with their Swords in their hands. And of the whole Town not one escaped, but only those who fled away with the Lord Bresne, so that there died about 2000 People of the Town besides the Souldiers. After this bloody Execution the Town was rifled and plunder'd, and all the Goods sent away to Chimay, and the residue committed to the Flames. From Aubenton these incensed Warriers went to Maubert Fontaine, which they presently wan, and spoiled the Town, and then ras'd it to the ground; after that they took and burnt the Town of Aubigny, and Signy the Greater and the Less, and all the Hamlets thereabout, to the number of above 40. And then at last the Earl of Hainalt being (as the manner of War is) rather overrevenged of his wrongs, return'd to Mons well pleased, and having satisfied his Men with Thanks and Prey, gave them leave to depart for a while, because the season was not yet come to keep the Field.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

But considering, that these his Actions would shortly call a War upon him from France, having constituted his Uncle Sr. John, Deputy Governour of Hainault, Holland, and Zealand, he immediately shipt himself for England, with design to make an Alliance Offensive and Defensive with his Brother-in-Law King Edward; that so he might be the better able to withstand the Power of France. But the Lord John of Hainault staid at Mons, where like a good Provident Captain he took care for all Parts, and retain'd Souldiers, and strengthen'd all his Nephews Castles and Fortresses with Men and Ammunition. And first he sent to Valenciennes the Lord of Engien, the Lord of Vergny, the Lord of Gomegines, and Sr. Henry of Hofalize: To Landrecy he sent the High-Steward of Hainalt with an hundred Spears; to Bouchan in Ostervandt three Captains, Brethren, Knights of Almain named Courrars; instead of the two Mannys, who were removed to the Castle of Thine, as [t] we shew'd before: To Escandure he sent Sr. Gerard van Sanckins, and the Lord of Valkenburg to the Town of Avesnes; the like care he took of St. Amand and of every Fortress fronting on France.

[t] Hujus cap. §. 3. p. 164.

VI. But when King [t] Philip heard, how the Hainalders had wasted the Country of Tierasche, and had slain and taken his Captains, and destroy'd utterly his good Town of Aubenton, he presently in a great fury commanded his Eldest Son John Duke of Normandy, to make a notable Inroad into Hainalt, and there to harrass and destroy all the Country, that the Memory of his severe Revenge might remain for ever: And him we shall leave about his vast Preparations to execute his Fathers Command. His Father the mean while to provide against the Storm, which he expected from England, reinforced his Navy greatly at this time, and commanded his Admirals to cruise about the Coasts of Flanders, and by no means to suffer the King of England upon his return to set Footing there on pain of their Heads. And because he now understood for certain, that the Flemings had made homage and Fealty to the King of England his Adversary, he sent unto them a notable Prelate, who pretended to come from the Pope to shew them, "That if they would return to their Duty, and own themselves to hold only "of his Holiness and of the Crown of France, forsaking King Edward, who (as he "said) had enchanted them; then he would forgive them all their Trespasses, granting "unto them a General Absolution, and also quit them of 2000000 of Florens, in which "Summ they were bound unto him by a Former Obligation; and that he would fur"ther procure them many Advantagious Privileges and Franchises. The Flemings an"swer'd, "That they look'd upon themselves as fully acquitted already of whatsoe"ver they were bound in to his Holiness: Since they fought not against the King of "France, but the Usurper of that Crown. King Philip being nettled with this Answer, made his Complaint to the Pope, and so well handled the Matter with him, that (contrary to the Opinion of St. Austin, who says, [u] "That neither a Common-Wealth, "nor a Prince of a People, ought to be excommunicated) he too easily interdicted all Flanders, insomuch, that no Priest there durst say or sing any Divine Service, while they should continue unreconciled to the Church. Whereof when the Flemings complain'd bitterly to King Edward, he sent them word, "that when he should come among them "he would bring along with him Priests out of England, that should sing Mass, and "perform Divine Service among them, whether the Pope would or no: For he said, He "had Authority and Privilege so to do: And this Answer contented the Flemings.

[t] Froiss. c. 46. fol. 26.

[u] Neque Multitudo neq; Princeps Populi sunt excommunicandi. August. in Glossa ad Matthæ. c. 13.

But when King Philip saw he could not win them to his side by fair means, then he sent command to his Garrisons of Tournay, Lisle, Douay and other Frontier Fortresses, to make War on the Flemings and to overrun their Country. According to these Orders the Lord Godmar du Fay, Sr. John du Roy, Sr. Matthew du Trie Marshall of Mirepoix, and divers other Lords and Knights from Tournay, Lisle and Douay, collected lected a Body of 1000 Men of Arms, 3000 Croſsbows and Others; who all together one evening ſetting out ſecretly from Tournay, and riding about ſix leagues Northward, came early the next Morning before Courtray. By that time the Sun was riſen, they had gather'd together all the Cattel about the Town, while a Party of them rode up to the very Gates, and ſlew and hurt all whom they found without the Walls. Then they return'd homeward with all their Prey, which they carried clear off, and found, when they came to Tournay, that they had got more than 10000 Sheep, and of Swine, Beefs and Kine as many more.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

VII. The Flemings were extreamly fretted at this Inroad of theirs, but eſpecially Jacob van Arteveld, who ſwore to take a bloody Revenge within a little ſpace: And preſently commanded the good Towns of Flanders, to get ready their Quota's of Souldiers, and ſend them to him to Geertsberg or Mount Gerard directly between Antwerp and Tournay by ſuch a certain day, in order to go with him before Tournay. He wrote Letters alſo to the Earl of Salisbury and the Lord Robert Hufford, eldeſt Son to the Earl of Suffolk, being then at Ipres, deſiring them to come and meet him there at the ſame time. He himſelf againſt the Day prefixed went out of Gaunt with his Men of War, and made his Rendezvous at Mount Gerard aforeſaid, being on an Arm of the Skell; where he reſolved to ſtay for the Lords of England, and the Men of Frank and Bruges. The foreſaid Engliſh Barons thought it diſhonourable to delay a Matter of ſuch Importance, eſpecially the Flemings being ſo forward in what they themſelves on behalf of the King their Maſter extreamly deſired; wherefore they immediately diſpatch'd an Anſwer to Jacob van Arteveld, ſignifying, that they would not fail to be with him at ſuch a Day.

There was then at Ipre a Lord of Almain, named Sr. Vauflart de la Croix, who for a long time had made War againſt the Garriſon of Lille (by the Dutch called Ryſſel) whereby he was well acquainted with all the Avenues and Paſſages of that Country. Him now the two Engliſh Lords took for their Guide, and when the time appointed drew near, marched out of Ipre with 50 Men of Arms and 40 Archers in their Company: But as they came toward the Town of Lille, either by Treaſon of ſome among them, or by the Enemies Spies, their Approach was ſignified to thoſe of the Town, who ſent out beforehand 1500 Men both Horſe and Foot, in three ſeveral Bodies, that the Engliſh might by no means eſcape. It is likely they had at leaſt a ſtrong preſumption ſome time before of this their Coming; for in ſuch a certain place they had made a great Dike, where there never was any before, that their Paſſage might be the ſlower, and they might not ſlip quickly by unperceived. Sr. Vauflart had guided them well till they came to this Dike, but here he began to ſmell a Plot, and making an Halt, ſaid to the Engliſh Barons, "My Lords, now I ſee well you can-"not paſs without peril from the Garriſon of Lille. For this way is but newly thus ſtop-"ped, and without fail they have had notice of our Coming: Wherefore by my ad-"vice, you would do well to turn back again and take ſome other way. But the "Lords anſwer'd him, "Nay Sr. Vauflart, it ſhall ne're be ſaid, that we went out of "the way for fear of the Men of Lille; therefore ride on before in Gods-name, for "we have promiſed Jacob van Arteveld to be with him as on this day. And ſaying ſo, they began to move forward; but then Sr. Vauflart repli'd, "Gentlemen, you "have taken me in this journey for your Guide, and I have been with you all this "Winter in Ipres, where indeed for your kind Company and ſingular Favours, I have "been particularly obliged unto you: But if the Men of Lille once appear without "the Walls, never expect that I ſhould ſtand by you: For I deſign to ſave my ſelf "as ſoon as I may; becauſe, if I am taken by them I am ſure to die for it: And you "muſt pardon me, if I love my Life ſomething better than your good Company, thô "you are my Friends. The Engliſh Lords laughed heartily at him and ſaid, "Well "Sr. Vauflart, if it be ſo, we freely excuſe you from further Attendance. And truly juſt as he had imagin'd, ſo it fell out, for unawares they were even then in danger of the French Ambuſh, who cri'd out, "Hold Meſſieurs, you are not like to paſs this "way without our Leave, and at that inſtant they poured in a whole Flight of Arrows upon them, and came out in good Order againſt them. The Lord Vauflart had no ſooner eſpi'd them, but he turn'd his Horſe and got out of the Preaſs, as haſtily as he might, and ſetting ſpurs to his Horſe eſcap'd away: But the Engliſh Captains thought ſcorn to flinch, and ſo rode forward, till finding themſelves enclos'd with their Enemies, as it were in a Net, they alighted on foot and began to defend themſelves like Men; inſomuch that for all their great Diſadvantage, they ſlew and hurt many of their Enemies. But the Men of Lille were now both behind and before, and they were encloſed in a narrow ſtraight Paſſage beſide, ſo that on each Flank alſo they lay open to the Enemies ſhot, among buſhes, hedges and ditches, that they could neither turn backward nor forward, nor yet have convenient Ground to fight it out on: And however well they might behave themſelves, 'twas impoſſible they ſhould get off, becauſe perpetually freſh Men flow'd in upon them under the Conduct of the [x] Lord of Rambois; ſo after ſome Reſiſtance they were all taken of neceſſity, and with them a young Eſquire of Limoſin, named Raymund Rogerii, Nephew to Peter Rogerii then Cardinal, and ſhortly after Pope of Rome, by the Name of Clement VI. This young Gentleman having yielded himſelf priſoner, was afterwards ſlain in Cool blood by the Frenchmen, for greedineſs of his rich Arms and coſtly Apparel. This is the manner of the taking of the Earl of Salisbury, and the Earl of Suffolks [y] eldeſt Son (not as is commonly ſaid, of the Earl of Suffolk himſelf) as Froiſard hath deliver'd; and truly it would not ſeem improbable neither, but upon theſe accounts, that it is hardly credible, two ſuch Great Captains as theſe were known to be, ſhould erre ſo much againſt the Rules of War, in being ſo raſh and careleſs; and beſides the way from Ipres to Greetsberg by Ryſſel or Lille is the fartheſt way about by much, and ſhews that Sr. Vauflart had rather a mind to expoſe them to their Enemies, both of Lille and Tournay, than to guide them the neareſt and ſafeſt way: Which had been by paſſing from Ipre to croſs the Skell about Courtray, a Garriſon of their Friends, to keep the left hand till they came to the place of Rendezvous, which was not above 4 leagues beneath Aelſt or Aloſt, on another Arm of the Skell. Wherefore having a more probable Account elſewhere of the taking of theſe Men, I ſhall ſet that down alſo, leaving the Reader to judge, which Opinion ſeems moſt preferable. Immediately after Eaſter the Earl of Salisbury, and the Earl of Suffolks Eldeſt Son, called Robert Vfford le Fitz, went and laid Siege to the Town of Lille in Flanders, [z] ſo called from its Scituation among Lakes, which are now dri'd up, that Town holding then for the French; and being furniſhed with a good Garriſon. Hereupon full of Courage, one Day they made a vigorous [a] Sally upon the Beſiegers, but whether really overpower'd by the Engliſh, or only in Policy pretending ſo to be, they at laſt retir'd in great (ſeeming) Confuſion, much faſter than they iſſued out. The two Engliſh Lords, as the Nature of Man is, preſuming belike on their late frequent Succeſſes, hoped by purſuing them cloſe to enter with them Pell-mell, and ſo to be Maſters of the Place. With this Deſign they follow'd the Townſmen cloſe at their heels, themſelves being follow'd but by a few of their Troops, that were then in readineſs; thô greater Numbers were haſting on to ſecond them. But as ſoon as ever the two Lords with a few about them were got within the Gates, down fell the Armed Portcullis from behind them, and in their Face they met with a great number of Men of Arms; beſides that thoſe who lately fled from them return'd upon them now with greater vigour. So that immediately they were both taken and ſworn Priſoners (with their Men) and then clapt in Irons and laid in the Town-Hall Priſon or common Goal, till it might be reſolv'd what to do with them. At laſt it was determin'd, that theſe two Illuſtrious Captives, being fetter'd and ſhackled with Iron, ſhould be ſent and preſented to the French King, as a lucky Hanſel of his future Succeſs. As they were [b] convey'd to Paris, they were drawn in a Cart thrô the midſt of every Town, Village or Hamlet in their way, with great ſhouts and cries of the Vulgar, and ſcoffs and railings of the raſcal ſort of People. Being [c] at laſt brought into the King of France's Preſence, he moſt unworthily commanded they ſhould be put to Death; but to this the moſt Noble King of Bohemia, John of Luxemburgh, oppos'd himſelf with words to this effect.

and

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[x] Charles Alleyne in Creſſy fight p.7.

[y] Dugd. 2 Vol. p.48.b.

[z] Engl. Atlas 4 Vol. p.244.

[a] Walſingh. hiſt. p.133. Stow 236

[b] Dugd. 1 Vol. p.646.b.

[c] Stow p.236.

"Sir, if theſe Gentlemen your Priſoners, were not Perſons of as high Merit as Quality, I ſhould not take much notice of them at this time; thô I ſhould hardly allow of putting the moſt mean or undeſerving Enemy to Death in cold blood. They are indeed, as Matters now ſtand, open Enemies to your Majeſty; but they are Honourable Enemies however, and ſuch as never fought againſt you, but in their Liege Maſters Quarrel; nor then till open Defiance had been made. Nor were they taken ſo much by the Valour of your Subjects, as thrô an exceſs of their own, and that too by a ſubtle Contrivance of their Adverſaries; nor even then perhaps had they ſo tamely yielded, but that they believ'd, they ſhould not fail of being uſed like Priſoners of War. Let not the moſt Chriſtian King of France prove more ſevere and leſs juſt or honourable, than even his Enemies ſuppos'd him to be.

"Beſide, the Event of War is uncertain, and the King of England is not only himſelf of great Puiſſance, but has gained ſtrong Allies in the Empire; ſo that he may be ſuppos'd able to return like for like: If theſe Men therefore ſhould now die, who

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

"of your Lords would willingly fight in your Quarrel; since if taken, they must never "expect to be put to Ransom, but in Revenge of these Mens Blood, to inevitable "Death: Nor are your Enemies only like to resent this Action, if you proceed se- "verely; but the better Part of your Friends also, as you may guess from Me, who am "the First, that blame this Resolution of yours against them. To kill those that re- "sist is Valour and Justice; but to put those to the Sword, who have laid down theirs, "is both cruel and ungenerous: It may be any Mans fortune to be taken Prisoner; "but it will be an eternal Blot to that Conqueror, who destroys those in cold Blood, "whom the Law of Arms makes only Prisoners of War. My Royal Friend and Bro- "ther, let us resolve to be valiant Enemies but Mercifull Victors; at least let us forbear "these unreasonable Severities, till we are first provoked by the example of the English, "to use them.

King Philip being convinced by these Reasons of his Old Friend, the Heroick King of Bohemia, revoak'd the Sentence of their Death; but however [d] committed them to close Prison: He sent also to thank the Garrison of Lille, for this agreeable piece of Service, and promis'd them gratiously to take them into his Consideration. But Jacob van Arteveld, when he heard of their Taking, in great Displeasure broke up his Assembly at Mount-Gerard or Geertsberg, and laying aside all hopes of Succeeding as then against Tournay, went back again to Gaunt the Metropolis of Flanders.

[d] Walsingh. hist. p. 134.

VIII. The mean while John Duke of Normandy, King Philips Eldest Son, who as we shew'd before, had Orders from his Father to invade the Earl of Hainalt's Country, made his general Rendezvous at St. Quintin. There came to him thither Walter de Brenne, the Duke of Athens, Lewis of Cressy Earl of Flanders, who had now little or no Authority left him in his own Country; Ralph Earl of Eve and Guisnes, Constable of France, the Earl of Auxerre, the Earl of Porcien, the Earl of Grand-Pre, the Earl of Coucy, the Lord of Bresne, the Lord of Craon, and divers other Nobles of Normandy and of the Lower Marches. All these with their several Retinues being assembled at the Place aforesaid, a little after * Easter, in the Year of our Lord MCCCXL; The Constable and the two Marshals found the whole Number to consist of 6000 Men of Arms and 18000 Others. So they took the Field and began their March, passing by the strong Castle of Bouhain and Cambresis, and lodged in the Town of Montais on the River Selle. The Lord Richard Verchin High Seneschall of Hainault, being beforehand informed by his Spies, that the Duke of Normandy intended to lodge that Night at Montais, took with him certain Choice Men of Arms from several Garrisons, and about Sun-set, leaving his Castle of Landrecy, rode forth till he came to a Forest on the Confines of Hainault, a little league from Montais. It was now Night and very dark, but this Lord and his Men knew the whole Country perfectly. Wherefore in a field by this Forest the Lord Verchin made an Halt, and there first declared to his Company, "That he design'd to go and beat up the Duke of "Normandy's Quarters at Montais; whereat all his Men expressed much joy, and promised to live and die with him in the Undertaking. He thanked them heartily, and then gave them the Word and full Directions, thô they were all expert Captains; the Knights being Sr. James Sart, Sr. Henry of Hofalize, Sr. Oliver Guistels, Sr. John Chastellet, and Sr. Bertrand his Brother: The Esquires were Giles and Thierry Sommain, Brethren, Baldwin Beaufort, Colebrier Brule, Esquire Moreau, Soldat Stramen, John Robsert, Bridol Thyaulx and Others to the number of 56, who all rode secretly to Montais, and enter'd the very Town undiscover'd. The French were so secure they had set no [e] Watch, so that the Seneschall of Hainault alighted very silently before the chief House of the Town, for there they expected to find the Duke of Normandy himself: But whether by Chance, his own Discretion, or meer Providence, he was not lodged there; but two other Great Lords of Normandy had the Place assigned them to their no great advantage in the end, for now they were suddenly assailed by these unexpected Guests, and the Gate of the Lodgings broken down. But when they heard the Cry of Hainalt in the House they were extreamly amazed, and yet they defended themselves as well as they could, thô it availed but little; for they were but few within, and those but ill prepared; there one of the Lords was slain outright, as he fought valiantly, the other was taken Prisoner, but being naked was left there, when he had first given to the Seneschall his Faith and Troth, that he would not fail to yield himself Prisoner, within three Days after at Valenciennes. At this Noise the Army began to take the Alarm, and the Frenchmen came out of their Lodgings and made fires, and lighted up Torches and Candles, while others went to awake their Fellows; but the Duke of Normandy, at the first noise arose in all hast, put on his Armour, and order'd order'd his Banner to be displayed before his Lodgings, whereto his Men might repair; for it was not known what Numbers the Enemy consisted of, the Darkness of the Night making all things uncertain. But now the Hainalders, perceiving it high time to depart, retired in good Order to their Horses, mounted and went away with 10 or 12 Prisoners of Quality clear off, for the French durst not pursue them in the Dark, for fear of an Ambush. By the next morning they reached Quesnoy, where having rested a while to refresh themselves they rode to Valenciennes.

* Pasch. 16 April Dom. Lit. B. A.

[e] Froiss. c. 47.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

In the Morning the Duke of Normandy, being mightily incensed at this presumption of the Hainalders, and resolving a severe Revenge, gave Command to his Men to dislodge, and March into Hainault, and there burn and destroy without Mercy. So his Vancurrours consisting of two Hundred Spears, rode forth under the Command of Sr. Theobald of Marville, Galeas Lord of Bausine, the Lord of Mirepoix, the Lord of Ravenal, the Lord of Sempy, John Lord of Landas, the Lord of Angers, and the Lord of Tramels: Next these rode the two Marshals of the Army, with 500 Spears; then came the Duke himself with the other Lords, Knights, and Esquires, and the Gross of the Army. The Vanguard burnt Feresť, Bertran, Bertinginel, Sormaine, Vendegres in the Wood, Vendegres on the Sands, by the River Rouelle; the next day they burnt Osmenal, Wallers, Gomegnies, Marchiennes, Pestell, Anfroy, Pyeprux, Fresnoy, Obiez, the good Town of Bannoy, and all the Country as far as the River Honneau. That same day the Marshals with their Battail gave a Brisk Assault to the Castle of Verchin, but the Seneschal had so well provided for it, that they got no Advantage there. Thence the Army passed on, and encamped by the River of [f] Selle, between Aussy and Sancoy. Now at this time the Lord of Valkenberg, who had been sent at first to Avesnes, was Captain of the strong Town of Maubeuge upon the Sambre, having with him in Garrison an 100 Spears of Germans and Hainalders. When he heard how the French were about these Hostilities in Hainault, and saw the poor Country People daily flying away from before them, he was very much moved both with Indignation and Compassion; and so now leaving the Town to the Care of the Lord Beaurenoire and the Lord Montecuculi, he arm'd himself and his Company, whom for that purpose he had drain'd from several Garrisons, saying, he had a great Mind to find out these Frenchmen. So he rode carefully, and with secresie all day by the Forest of Mormaux; but in the Evening hearing by his Spies, that the French Army was encamped on the Selle, between Aussy and Sancoy, he said, he would go and give them a Camisade. So riding on till about Midnight, by the help of a Guide, he passed the River, and then gave the Word, and necessary Orders, making all things ready for the Exploit: So he rode on fair and softly, till he came to the skirts of the French Host, but then all in one instant set Spurs to their Horses, and dashed in with great Fury among the sleepy Frenchmen, crying out Valkenberg, and cutting down Tents and Pavilions, and slaying and wounding whomsoever they met with. The Alarm waken'd the whole Host, so that they began to Rise and Arm apace, and so flock'd to their Banners, moving as they were ranged, to that Part, whence the noise came. Of the French there were already slain the Lord of Picquegny, and the Lord Anthony Condom desperately wounded; the Viscount of Quesnes, and the Bourge of Rouvres were taken Prisoners, besides the Mischief done among the Common sort. But now, when the Lord of Faulquemont (which is Valkenburg) saw by the Lights in the Host, and the Banners approaching, that it was time for him to be gone, he went off in an instant with all his Company, and repassed the River of Selle without any Damage in the World; for he was not followed, because the French were unskill'd in the Country, and feared an Ambush. By Sunrise that Morning he got to Quesnoy, where he was let in by the Captain Sr. Thierry of Valcourt; who knew him for a Friend. About the same time also the Duke of Normandy went over the River after him, his Vanguard being enforced with 200 Spears more under the Lord of Noisiers, besides the Footmen arm'd with Brigandines, all who appear'd before Quesnoy, and made a shew, as if the Army was coming up to besiege the Place, or at least attempt it by Assault: But the Town was so well provided with Ammunition and Valiant Souldiers, that they would but have lost their Labour; which also the Enemy partly knew, but however they were resolv'd not to leave them unsaluted, and so came to the Barriers to skirmish. Tho they came on fast enough, they were soon obliged to withdraw much faster, for they were entertain'd by the Town with many pieces of Artillery, from whence were discharged huge quarrels of Stone, and mighty Weights of Lead and Iron, which kill'd whereever they fell, but especially made the Frenchmen unwilling to approach, for fear their Horses should be slain, now they were in a strange Country. Wherefore they turn'd off thence, and in their way set on fire Verchin the Great and the Leſs, Freſne, Samners, Artes, Semeriens, Sariten, Turgyes, Eſtines, Aulnoy, and ſo many Towns and Villages that way, that the ſmoak was ſeen at Valenciennes. After this the Frenchmen order'd their Battails on the Mountain Caſteres near Valenciennes, to ſee if by any means they could entice the Enemy to come forth againſt them. The mean while a Detachment of 200 Spears under the Leading of the Lord Craon, the Lord Mauliverer, the Lord of Mathelor, and the Lord of Dunoy, rode towards Montigny, and went and Aſſaulted a great Tower belonging to Sr. John Vernier of Valenciennes, which afterwards came to Sr. John Nevill. The Aſſault was fierce and continued long, even well-nigh an whole day, ſo that ſeveral of the French were ſlain and wounded before they left off: But they within behav'd themſelves ſo well, that they receiv'd no loſs at all. About the ſame time another Party of Frenchmen went to Tryche, thinking at their Pleaſure to paſs the Bridge, and ſo to approach the Town: But the Townſmen had already broke down the Bridge, and ſtood there to Defend the Paſſage: So that they could not hope for any Advantage that way. However having Guides among them, and ſuch as knew the Country, they made ſhift to Convey over at Denain two Hundred Men on Foot, who came ſuddenly upon the Men of Tryche: They therefore being but few in number, and not very Expert in Military Affairs, could not endure againſt the French in plain fight, and ſo they fled to the Town as faſt as they could, leaving ſeveral of their Friends behind, both dead and wounded. Upon this Succeſs of the French, another Body, both Horſe and Foot paſſed over, who joyning with the others, ſet themſelves all together to Aſſault the Town. That day the Seneſchal of Hainault went ſecretly from Valenciennes with an Hundred Men of Arms to ſuccour the Men of Tryche, and in the way a little beyond St. Waaſt, he met with 25 Forerunners of the French Army, whoſe Captains were the Lord Bouciquaut, afterwards Marſhal of France, the Lord Surgieres, and Sr. William Blandeau who had paſſed the Bridge by Valenciennes, called de la Rouelle. When the Seneſchal of Hainault eſpied theſe Men, he rode forth like a Valiant Captain in the Head of his Troop againſt them, and at the firſt ſhock bore down to the Earth with his Spear, the Lord Bouciquaut, whom he took Priſoner and ſent to Valenciennes, as one who was ordain'd to a Nobler Deſtiny: The Lord of Surgieres eſcaped away by the Goodneſs of his Horſe, but Sr. William Blandeau was alſo taken alive by Sr. Henry de Hofalize, and the reſt either all taken or ſlain. Then the Seneſchal proceeded on toward Tryche, but he had almoſt come too late; for the French had juſt taken the Town before he came, and were now beating down the Mills, and a little Caſtle that was hard by: When upon the Seneſchals approach, being ſuddenly taken, they had hardly the leiſure to mount their Horſes; ſo they were eaſily diſcomfited and put to flight, and purſued ſo narrowly, that many leapt into the River of Skell, and ſome were drown'd, eſpecially the Footmen, of whom very few eſcaped. Thus was Tryche ſav'd out of the fire, and moſt of the ſpoils recover'd again: After which the Seneſchal repaſſed the River at Denain, and rode to his Caſtle of Verchin to defend it, if need ſhould be.

[f] Ibid.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

All this while the Duke of Normandy was upon the Mount of Caſteres near upon all day, expecting that the Men of Valenciennes would have iſſued out to have fought with him: And ſo they would gladly have done, but that Sr. Henry Dantoing their Governour and the Provoſt of the Town, according to the Seneſchals Order, ſtood at the Gate which looks towards Cambray, and by fair Words and good Arguments us'd all their endeavour to ſtop them from ſallying out: For it was too Great, Populous, and rich a City to be hazarded at one caſt of Fortune; But while the Men of War remain'd within, both they and the Town were ſafe, being a mutual ſecurity to one another. When therefore the Duke of Normandy ſaw plainly that they would not come forth againſt him, he ſent the Duke of Athens, and the Marſhals of his Hoſt, the Earl of Auxerre and the Lord of Chaſtillon with 300 Spears to go and skirmiſh with them at the Barriers. All theſe rode forth accordingly in good Order and came to the Barriers on the ſide de la Rouelle, but they durſt not tarry there long for fear of the ſhot from the Walls, which ſlew their Horſes; the Lord of Chaſtillon notwithſtanding rode ſo near, that his Horſe fell dead under him, ſo that he was fain to leap upon another in great Danger of his Own Perſon. Then they return'd by the Marches, and burnt and beat down the Mills on the River Rouelle, and ſo came by Chartreux to their Hoſt again: But certain of their Company tarried behind at Marley to get ſtore of Forage for their Horſes. Now there was a conſiderable Caſtle not far off, formerly belonging to the Lord Robert of Namur, in Right of the Lady Iſabella his Wife, who was one of the Siſters of the Preſent Earl of Hainault, but now by exchange it was again reverted to the Earl. The Garriſon within this Caſtle perceiving how theſe Frenchmen loytred thus behind their fellows lows in great Security, and that the Army was now very far off before them, made upon them a ſudden and vigorous Sally, wherein they ſlew the greater part of them, recover'd all their Prey, and without any loſs return'd in Triumph to their Caſtle. AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

All this [g] while the Great Battail of the French was ſtill on the Mount Caſteres, till now at laſt, that all their Detachments were return'd from all Parts, thô as we have ſhew'd, not without loſs, they enter'd Conſultation how they ſhould proceed farther. In the end it was reſolved, that ſince they were not ſufficiently numerous to Storm ſo Great and Populous a City as Valenciennes, they ſhould content themſelves for the preſent with what they had already done, and ſo return to Cambray. So that Night they reach'd Monchau, and Fontaine au Tertre, and the Abbey pertaining to the Lady Jane of Valois, Counteſs Dowager of Hainault: There they lodged that Night, keeping good Watch, as being ſtill in the Enemies Country; But the next Morning they decamped betimes, ſome of thoſe in the Rear upon their departure ſetting fire on Monchau, and Fontaine, together with the foreſaid Abbey, thô it belonged to the ſaid Lady Jane, Siſter to King Philip of France. This when Duke John her Nephew underſtood, he was ſo diſpleaſed, that he commanded thoſe who began the Fire to be hang'd up immediately. After this they burnt the Town and Caſtle of Tryche, (ſo lately reſcued to no purpoſe) and beat down the Mills; alſo they ſet fire on Prony, Romeny, Thyaulx, and all the plain Country between Valenciennes and Cambray. Then the Duke proceeded to Eſcandure, a ſtrong Frontier Caſtle of the Earl of Hainalts, ſtanding on the River Skell; the Garriſon whereof had been a great Plague to the City of Cambray; Sr. Gerard van Sanctius being the Captain. But when the Duke of Normandy had lain before the Place ſix days, it was deliver'd up unto him; not without the Admiration of all who knew its ſtrength, and therefore vehemently ſuſpected the Captain Sr. Gerard, and an Eſquire of his, named Robert of Marmeaulx, to have play'd the Traytors in this Matter. However, ſhortly after they both ſuffer'd a ſhamefull Death upon this account at Mons in Hainalt: But the Garriſon of Cambray raſed the Caſtle to the ground, conveying the Stones and Timber thereof into their own Town to help them in their Neceſſary Reparations.

[g] Froiſ. c. 47. fol. 28.

IX. After [h] this Deſolation of Eſcandure, Duke John return'd to Cambray, where for the preſent he disbanded ſome of his Men, and others he ſent to reinforce the Garriſons of Doway, Lille, and other places. As ſoon as theſe freſh Aids came to Doway, the Garriſon was ſo encouraged, that they ſent forth together with them of Lille 300 Spears, whoſe Leaders were the Lord Lewis of Savoy, Amè Earl of Geneva, the Earl of Villers, Sr. Galeas of Bauſine, the Lord of Vaurain, and the Lord of Vaſiers. All theſe overran with fire and ſword, the fruitfull Country of Oſtervandt in Hainault, ſo that they left nothing untouch'd, but the ſtrong Caſtles. At this the Three Brethren, Captains of Bouchain, were extreamly concerned; as thoſe who daily ſaw the fire and ſmoak, and other ill effects of the Enemies Rage, but were not ſtrong enough to oppoſe it. Wherefore they ſent to Valenciennes, to tell the Governour, that if in the Night he would ſend forth 600 Spears to joyn him, they would moſt certainly take a Notable Revenge upon the Frenchmen, who lay ſcatter'd abroad without any Retiring place, or ſhelter in the plain Country: But whatever they alledged, thoſe of Valenciennes durſt not ſtir out of the Town, becauſe the Earl had ſtrictly enjoyn'd the contrary, during his abſence. Wherefore the French meeting with no Oppoſition, took great Booties, and fired the Town of Nyche, Deſcoux, Eſcaudan, Hery, Monteney, Senain, Verlain, Vargny, Ambreticourt, Lourge, Salx, Ruette, Neville, Lieu, St. Amand, and all the Villages of that Country, from whence they brought off much plunder. But as ſoon as they were return'd into Garriſon, thoſe of the Garriſon of Bouchain, went forth and burnt a Moiety of Deſcon, which was French, and the Town of Deſquerchine, and all the Villages that held with France, as far as to the Gates of Doway. Thus on both ſides were the Garriſons furniſhed with Men of War, and daily mutual Advantages and Loſſes were exchanged between both Parties.

[h] Froiſ. c. 48.

At the ſame time there was a Garriſon of Germans in the Fortreſs of Mal-Maiſon, which was but two Leagues from the Caſtle of Cambreſis on the Selle, being placed there by the Biſhop of Cambray, who held with France. This Fortreſs on the ſide toward Hainault look'd directly upon Landrecy, whereof the Lord of Poitrel was Captain; for thô the Earl of Blois own'd it once, yet on certain conſiderations he had lately parted with it to the Earl of Hainault, before the Earl had broke with France. Theſe Germans of Mal-Maiſon aforeſaid came one day to the Barriers of Landrecy, and in ſight of the Town began to drive away a great Booty of Cattle, that graſed thereabout. The Lord of Poitrel underſtanding thus much, Arm'd himſelf and all his Company, pany, and rode forth to the Reſcue in the Head of his Men, with his Spear in his Reſt, ſtill crying after the Enemy, "Sirs, it is a ſhame to fly away. Now the Germans of the French ſide had among them an Hardy and Couragious Eſquire of Almain, named Albert of Colen, who not enduring thoſe biting Words, immediately turn'd his Horſe, couched his Spear, and ran furiouſly againſt the Lord of Poitrel, giving him ſuch a ſtroak on the Target, that the Spear flew all to pieces, but having preſently recover'd another, he redoubled his ſtroak with ſo much Fury, that the Spear enter'd quite thrô his Armour into his Body juſt to the Heart; ſo that the Lord Poitrel fell dead from his Horſe. But his Companions, the Lord of Bauſiers, Sr. Gerard Maſtin, and Sr. John his Brother, with their Troops renew'd the Chace againſt the Frenchmen ſo briskly, that moſt of them were ſlain, all the Prey reſcued, and their own Priſoners recover'd, but a very few having the Good Fortune to eſcape. So the Hainalders return'd again to Landrecy, bringing along with them, as a Qualification of their Victory, the Dead Body of their Captain, the Lord of Poitrel, in whoſe place ſucceeded the Lord of Floron.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

Thus various were the Rencounters between the Hainalders and French; but the Country of Hainault was grievouſly waſted and afflicted with this War; and ſtill the Duke of Normandy lay on the Frontiers, no man knowing whither he would turn his Fury next: But the Greateſt Concern of all was, they could hear no tidings of the Earl of Hainault, their Lord. He for his part, as we ſhew'd before, had taken a Voyage into England; where he was well received by the King and his Barons, and there was made between the King and the Earl his Brother-in-Law, a mutual Alliance, Offenſive and Defenſive. From England the Earl went into Germany to the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, who had Married his Eldeſt Siſter the Lady Margaret, as King Edward had Married the Youngeſt, and with him alſo he made an Alliance, Offenſive and Defenſive: And theſe were the Occaſions that kept the Earl ſo long abroad. Beſides this the Lord John of Hainault his Uncle, having as well as he could, ſupply'd all Places of Strength, and given neceſſary Orders, ſince he had received peremptory Command abſolutely to decline coming to Battle, till the Earl's Return, was alſo gone now into Brabant, and other parts of Flanders, where he ſhew'd to the Duke of Brabant, and to Jacob van Arteveld, the Deſolation of his Country of Hainault, deſiring of them their Advice and Aſſiſtance, They anſwer'd, "How they were ſure, that ſhortly the Earl himſelf would return Home, and then they promiſed to be ready to go with him whither he would pleaſe to lead them.

[1] Froiſ. c. 49.

X. Now[1] while the Duke of Normandy remaind'd at Cambray, the Biſhop and the Burgeſſes of the City told him, how the Engliſh and Hainalders had gotten by Surpriſe the ſtrong Caſtle of Thine l' Eveſque, deſiring him for the Common good to endeavour its Recovery: Becauſe the Garriſon that lay there was ſo prejudicial to all their Country. Upon this the Duke began again his Muſters out of Artois and Vermandois, and having compleated a ſufficient Army went forth of Cambray, and came before Thine on the River[k] Sambre, and ſat down before it, pitching his Tents in the fair plain Meadows toward Oſtrevandt. The Duke had brought with him from Cambray and Doway ſeveral great Engines, but eſpecially ſix of extraordinary ſize, all which he reared up againſt the Fortreſs, caſting from them night and day mighty Stones, wherewith he beat down the Roofs of their Chambers, Halls, Towers and Houſes: So that the Beſieged were fain to lie in Vaults and Cellars for their better Security againſt theſe Engines; the Captains of the Fortreſs at that time were Sr. Richard Limeſi, an Engliſh Man of honourable Extract, and two valiant Eſquires of Hainalt, John and Thierry, Brethren to the Lord Walter Manny, and to the Earl of Namur: Theſe three Captains, thô infinitely moleſted by theſe Engines, would often ſay to hearten their Company: "Surely Fellow-Souldiers, one of theſe Days the Earl of Hainalt will "come againſt theſe Frenchmen and deliver us with Honour, and fully acquit us of "our preſent Danger: Nor will he then fail to give us both great Rewards and "Thanks for having ſo truly defended this Place ſo long. But after that the Engines caſt in upon them dead Horſes and Dogs, and other ſtinking Carcaſſes, which annoyed them much more than any other thing; for it being about the time of Midſummer, thrô the heat of the Air the ſtink became ſo abominable, that they ſaw at this rate they ſhould never be able to hold out any longer. So by good Advice they concluded to deſire a Truce for 15 Days, in which time to ſend and inform the Lord John of Hainalt (who was Governour of the Country in the Earls abſence) of their State and Condition; and if he ſhould not afford them any Succour in that ſpace, then they would yield up the Fortreſs to the Duke. This Treaty being agreed to by the Duke,

[k] Mezeray p. 16.

the

the Three Captains ſent forth an Eſquire of Hainalt, named Eſtrelart de Sommain, to John of Beaumont, to whom the Eſquire, finding him at Mons, related the whole Meſſage, not forgetting to aggravate the ill Condition of his Friends at Thyne. Sr. John thereupon ſhew'd him the Letters he had newly received from his Nephew the Earl, wherein he wrote, "That he was coming homeward into his own Country, and "that he had been with the Emperour and King of England, and with ſeveral Lords "of the Empire, with all whom he had made a ſtrict Alliance. "And, ſays he, go "and tell our Friends at Thyne, that they be of good Courage; for the Earl will be "here within a Day or two, and without doubt they ſhall be relieved effectually upon "his Return.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

During this term of Truce the Earl returned home accordingly; at which time the Lord of Beaumont his Uncle, gave him an exact Account of all publique Tranſactions during his Abſence; how the Duke of Normandy had lain on the Frontiers, and how he had burnt and waſted his Country. The Earl anſwer'd, "that it ſhould be dearly "paid for, adding, how the Realm of France was rich, and large enough to make ample Satisfaction for all their Treſpaſſes done againſt him: But for the preſent, he reſolv'd to addreſs himſelf immediately to the Aſſiſtance of thoſe who were beſieged in Thyne, ſince they had hitherto defended themſelves in ſuch Difficulties with ſo much Honour. Whereupon he ſtraight ſends out his Summons to all his Friends and Allies in Germany, Brabant and Flanders, and thrô all his own Country, himſelf went to Valenciennes, where he made his General Rendezvous, and preſently he had a gallant Army. This done, he marched from Valenciennes in great Array with many Carriages, Tents and Pavilions, and other Neceſſaries, following the Army, and went and encamped by Sar on the Plain along by the River Sambre. He had in his Company theſe Lords Hainalders, John Lord of Beaumont his Uncle, the Lord of Engien, the Lord Verchin Seneſchall of Hainalt, the Lord Dantoing, the Lord Barbancon, the Lord of Lens, the Lord William Bailleul, the Lord Havereth, the Chaſtelain of Mons, the Lord Montecuculi, the Lord Barbais, Sr. Thierry of Walcourt Marſhall of Hainalt, the Lord Dalmed, the Lord Gomeygnes, the Lord Briſuell, the Lord Roiſin, the Lord Triſagines, the Lord Lalain, the Lord Maſtin, the Lord Sars, the Lord Vargny, the Lord of Beaurien and many Others, all ready with their Men to ſerve their Lord the Earl. Beſide of his Allies there came thither to his Aid, the Earl of Namur with 200 Spears, after whom came the Duke of Brabant with 600 Spears, and the Duke of Guerle with 400, William Marqueſs of Juliers was now in England with King Edward; but there was the Earl of Mons, the Lord of Valkenberg, Sr. Arnold of Baquehen, and divers other Lords and Captains of Almain, Weſtphalia and Flanders. All theſe with their ſeveral Troops were encamped along by the River Sambre, over againſt the French Hoſt, and Plenty of Victuals and other Proviſion was daily brought to them out of Hainalt.

When the Duke of Normandy, who lay on the other ſide of the River with a goodly Army, ſaw how theſe Lords his Enemies were thus lodged between Sars and Auſne, he ſent Word to the King his Father, letting him know how great the Earl of Hainalts Forces were, and how they ſtill encreaſed daily. King Philip being then at Perone, ſent preſently 1200 Spears to the Reinforcement of his Son, and he himſelf ſoon after went to the Army, but Incognito and like a private Souldier; for he was under an Obligation, made by Oath to the Emperour, never to come againſt any Lords of the Empire, or thoſe that held thereof, without the Imputation of flat Perjury: Which by this pittifull Salvo he thought now to avoid. Wherefore the Duke of Normandy, his Son, was ſtill look'd upon and named the Chief General of the whole Army; thô all the while he did nothing, but by the Advice and at the Command of the King his Father.

When thoſe, who were beſieged in Thine, ſaw the Earl of Hainalt come to their Aid with ſuch a Mighty Power, they were well refreſhed, as well with the Conſcience of having held out ſo gallantly, as with ſure Hopes of an eaſie Deliverance. But all their Friends were not come yet, for on the fourth Day after the Earls Arrival, there came to him a freſh Acceſſion of conſiderable Forces from Valenciennes, under the Conduct of Sr. John de Boſſu Provoſt of the City. Upon this Reinforcement the Earl of Hainalt began to skirmiſh with the Frenchmen couragiouſly: But neither were they wanting to do their Devoir; ſo that with Arrows, Quarrels and Engines many were ſlain and hurt on both ſides; but the Armies could not as yet joyn Battle, becauſe the River Sambre ran between them. [1] Only the Skirmiſhers fought daily together by means of four Bridges that lay over the River; which yet were well kept on both ſides, sides, that neither could pass over to the other without apparent Disadvantage. While thus the two Armies lay by the River Sambre, the French toward France, and the Hainalders towards their own Country, the Foragers on both sides rode forth daily to fetch in Provision for the Army; but they never encountred one another, because the River parted them. Only a strong Detachment of the French went forth and burnt in the Country of Ostervandt, where it had not been wasted before, as part of the Town [m] of Quesnoy, and other Villages thereabout; which the Hainalders requited by burning in like manner in the Country of Cambresis. While [n] both Armies stood thus confronting each other, there came to the Earl of Hainalts Aid, at the Perswasion and under the Conduct of Jacob van Arteveld 60000 Flemings, well-arm'd and in good Array. Wherefore now that the Earl found himself above an 100000 strong, he sent by his Heralds to the Duke of Normandy, demanding Battle of him; for he said, it could not but prove a shame to that Party of the two who should now decline the fight, when both Armies were so equally great and alike provided. The Duke said, he would ask Counsel of his Lords, but they were so long in Debate, that the Heralds were fain to come back for that time without any Answer at all. The third Day after therefore the Earl, having all this while received no Return to his Message, sent again to the Duke to know his final Resolution. The Duke repli'd, "That he "was not sufficiently convinced, that it was necessary to give his Enemies Battle at "their pleasure, but at his own rather: That the Earl was too hot and hasty, but might "perhaps be cooled some time or other. The Earl hearing this, took it but for meer Tergiversation and Delay, and so declared to his Chief Lords and Captains the Summ of his two Messages with the Answer, and that he was resolv'd to fling a Bridge over, and go and give them Battle in spight of their Teeth, demanding their Opinions thereupon. At this they all began to look on each other, every Man being unwilling to speak First; but by and by the Duke of Brabant spake thus for all: "To make "a Bridge and so to go over and fight the French (whatever I should think in other "Circumstances) is not my Opinion at this time. For I am most certainly assured, "that the King of England will very shortly come over the Sea, and lay his Siege be-"fore Tournay, and you know we have all sworn to aid and succour him to the ut-"most of our Power. If we should now fight the French, and have so ill success "as to lose the Field, King Edward would miss of his Purpose, and be wholly dis-"appointed of the help he expecteth of us. And if we should obtain the Victory, he "will have but small reason to thank us; since we shall seem to have prefer'd the "Gratification of our own Revenge to the care of his Welfare. So that my Opinion is, "that by no means, while it is in our choice not to be compell'd, we engage our selves "with the whole Power of France, without the Presence of him, who is chiefly con-"cern'd in this War. But when we shall lie before Tournay, with King Edward on "our side, and the French King in Person against us, I think it will be next to impos-"sible, that we should then miss of a Battle. Wherefore for this time my Advice "is, that we break up and depart, when we have secur'd the Lives of this Garrison "here, since our Lying in this place is so excessive chargeable and expensive. For I "am certain within these ten Days at fartherst, we shall hear, that the King of England "is come. The Major Part of the Lords present approved of this Counsel, as most reasonable, all things considerd; and especially the Brabanders, Citizens of Brussels and Louvain, when they heard of this Advice of their Lord, applauded it extreamly, as being desirous to return home as soon as might be. But the Earl of Hainalt prevail'd with much ado with the Leaders to tarry a little longer: In which time, since he had never before seen himself in the Head of so considerable an Army, as he was very Couragious, he thought to force the Lords, his Allies to an Engagement before their Departure, as Themistocles did the Grecian Confederates at Salamis. Wherefore privately he brake his Mind to the Lord John of Hainalt, saying, "Dear Uncle, I "desire you would please to ride down by the River side, and to call over the River "to speak with some Body of the French Army: And then desire him to shew unto "the French King and his Son from me, that if they will give me three Days Respit "and Truce, I will make a Bridge over the Water, and so go over and give him Bat-"tle: Or else let him do the like, and we will by no means hinder the Workmen "from making the Bridge. The Lord of Beaumont according to his Nephews Desire, rode presently down along the River side with Thirteen Knights in his Company, and his Banner before him to let the Enemy know who he was. At last he perceived on the other side a Knight of Normandy, whom he knew by his Arms, and so called unto him, naming him by his Name, "Sr. Maubousson, I pray let me speak with you a little.

[1] Fabian p. 269.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[m] Fabian ibid.
[n] Froiss. c. 49. fol. 29.

"little. Then the Knight drew near to the Bank side and said, Sir, what is it you "would have with me? Sr. John repli'd, Only that you will be so kind, as to go "to the French King and his Council, and tell them how the Earl of Hainault has "sent me hither to ask a Truce only, while he may lay a Bridge over this River, and "that then he will go over and give you Battle without fail: Of this if you will "please to bring an Answer, I'll tarry here till your Return. The Lord Maubousson, "having made signs of yielding to his Request, immediately set spurs to his Horse "and rode directly toward the Kings Tent, with whom at that time were the Duke of "Normandy, and many other Lords and Peers of France. Before all whom having declared his Message, he received a short Answer, being commanded to tell him that sent him thither, "That as the Duke of Normandy had held the Earl of Hainault all "this while, so he resolv'd to do, untill it should please him to do otherwise: And so "to put him to Charges, till he should be forced to sell all his Lands, which yet should "be either few or none, and what should be left worth but little: For he would "make hot War upon him on all sides. And (says King Philip) when We see Oc-"casion, we'll come over the River and invade Hainault with an Army Royal; till we "have utterly consumed all his Country. This Answer was brought by Sr. Maubousson to the Lord of Beaumont, who thanking him for his pains, return'd to the Earl whom he found playing at Chess with the Earl of Namur. But when the Earl saw his Uncle, he rose up hastily and went aside, and heard distinctly what the King of France had answer'd him; at which, thô outwardly he took little notice, he was extreamly displeased in his Mind, saying only this, "Well, well, but I hope things will not "fall out as he imagins.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

While thus the Castle of Thine was batter'd on one side by the French, and could not be effectually relieved by the Hainalders without a Battle, which it seems the French declin'd, as we have shewn, the [o] Three Captains of the Castle by secret advice from the Earl of Hainalt, having provided a good Ship and other Barks, into which they put all their Men and Provision, first set the Castle all of a light fire, and then immediatly departed to the Army of their Friends, by whom they were received with much joy. The French perceiving by the Fire, how the matter went, ran in all hast, and climb'd the Court Walls to quench the Fire, which at last with much labour they did, but the Castle was much endammaged thereby.

[o] Fabian p. 269

But before these things happen'd, King Edward had won a great Victory at Sea, and was arrived at Gaunt in Flanders, of all which we shall now take leave to discourse; only first we think it requisit to shew what Preparations he had made in England all this while, in order to those great Affairs, which then he was about to undertake.

CHAPTER the SIXTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward holds a Parliament at Westminster, with the Particulars thereof at large. II. Being warned of the Strength of the French Navy, he provides accordingly, upon his Setting forth for Flanders. III. He takes the Sea, and engages the French Fleet before the Haven of Scluce, with the particulars of his Victory. IV. Nele Loring, an English Esquire, Knighted for his Valour: King Edward goes to Gaunt, from whence he sends to his Clergy, with the Copy of his Letters. V. The Manner, how King Philip heard first of this Loss; the Use of Arrows prefer'd to our modern way of Guns. VI. The two Armies of Hainalt and France break up from before Thine l' Evesque. VII. King Robert of Sicily procures the Pope to write to King Edward to move him to accept of Peace. VIII. A Copy of the Popes Credence. IX. A Copy of King Edwards Answer, shewing how he had all along sought Peace to no purpose: And yet on certain Conditions was ready to admit of a Treaty.

I. ON the [a] Wednesday next after Midlent-Sunday, King Edward of England held his High Court of Parliament at Westminster, wherein he demanded of the Commons, towards his Charges in order to the Recovery of his Right in France, the [b] Ninth Part of all their Moveable Goods, the Customs of Wooll for Two Years to be paid aforehand; and the Ninth Sheaf of Corn,

[a] M. S. Rot. Parl. p. 29. &c. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 22. & Holinshead Eng. Chron. p. 907.
[b] Knighton p. 2576. a n. 30. ad n. 60.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

with the Ninth of all other Grain, the Ninth of Wooll and the Ninth Lamb to be levied in two Years, which Grant was reduced into the Form of a Statute, beginning, [b] "To the Honour of God, &c. Saving that thoſe Articles thereof which were but Temporary, were in a Schedule thereunto annexed, exemplified under the Great Seal and began thus, "Edvardus Dei Gratiâ Rex Angliæ & Franciæ, &c. [c] Know ye, "that whereas the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Commons of our Realm of England in "our Preſent Parliament, holden at Weſtminſter the Wedneſday next after the Sunday of "Midlent, the 14 Year of our Reign of England and the Firſt of France, have gran- "ted to Us of their good Gree and Good-will, in aid of the ſpeed of our great Buſi- "neſs, which We have to do, as well on this ſide the Sea as beyond, the Ninth Sheaf, "the Ninth Fleece, and the Ninth Lamb, to be taken by Two Years next coming "after the making of the ſame, and the Citizens and Burgeſſes of Burroughs the very "Ninth part of all their Goods, and the Foreign Merchants and Others, which live not "of gain nor of ſtore of Sheep, the Nineteenth of their Goods lawfully to their value: "We willing to provide to the Indemnity of the ſaid Prelates, Earls, Barons, and o- "ther of the Commonalty, and alſo of the Citizens, Burgeſſes and Merchants afore- "ſaid, do will and grant for Us and our Heirs to the ſame Prelates, Earls, Barons and "Commons, Citizens, Burgeſſes and Merchants, that the ſame Grant (which is ſo "chargeable) ſhall not another time be brought for an Example, nor turn to their "Prejudice in time to come: Nor that they be from thenceforth charged, nor "grieved to make any Aid, or to ſuſtain Charge, if it be not by the Common Aſſent "of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men and Commons of our ſaid "Realm of England, and that in the Parliament: And that all the Profits riſing of the "ſaid Aid, and of Wards and Marriages, Cuſtoms and Eſcheats, and other Profits ri- "ſing of the ſaid Realm of England, ſhall be ſet and diſpended upon the Maintenance of "the Safeguard of our ſaid Realm of England, and of our Wars of Scotland, France "and Gaſcoign, and in no place elſwhere during the ſaid Wars. Beſides which extra-ordinary Grant of the Lords and Commons, the Clergy alſo at the Motion of the Archbiſhop freely gave unto the King a Tenth. Here alſo, becauſe the King in his Style was called King of France, and had alter'd his Arms, whereby his Subjects might think themſelves in danger of becoming a Province to France, that being the greater Kingdom, the Kings Letters Patents of Indemnity were granted, beginning, [d] "Edvar- dus, &c. "Edward by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of "Ireland, to all thoſe, who theſe Letters ſhall hear or ſee, Greeting. Know ye, that "whereas ſome People do think, that by reaſon that the Realm of France is devol- "ved unto Us, as Right Heir of the ſame, and foraſmuch as We be King of France, "our Realm of England ſhould be in Subjection to the King and Realm of France in "time to come, We having regard to the Eſtate of our Realm of England, and name- "ly, that it never was, nor ought to be in Subjection, nor in the Obeiſance of the "Kings of France, which for the time have been, nor of the Realm of France: And "willing to provide for the Safety and Defence of the ſaid Realm of England, and "of our Liege People of the ſame, do will and grant, and eſtabliſh for Us, and for our "Heirs and Succeſſors, by Aſſent of the Prelates, Earls, Barons and Commons of our "Realm of England, in this our preſent Parliament ſummon'd at Weſtminſter, the "Wedneſday next after the Sunday in Midlent, the xiv Year of our ſaid Reign of our "Realm of England, and the Firſt of France, that by the cauſe or colour of this, "that We be King of France, and that the ſaid Realm to Us pertaineth, as afore is "ſaid, or that We cauſe Our Selves to be named King of France in our Stile, or that "We have changed our Seals or our Arms, nor for Commands, which We have "made, or hereafter ſhall make, as King of France, neither our ſaid Realm of Eng- "land, or the People of the ſame, of what Eſtate or Condition they be, ſhall not in any "time to come be put in Subjection, or in Obeiſance of Us, nor of our Heirs nor Succeſ- "ſors, as Kings of France as aforeſaid, nor be ſubject, nor obedient, but ſhall be free "and quit of all manner of Subjection and Obeiſance aforeſaid, as they were wont to "be in the time of our Progenitors, Kings of England for ever. In Witneſs where- "of, &c.

[b] vid. Statute Book 1 Vol. p. 78, &c.

[c] Statute Book 1 Vol. p. 82. c. 1.

[d] Vid. Statute Book 1 Vol. p. 82

Certain Biſhops and Lords require of his Majeſty to be ſaved harmleſs for thoſe great Summs of Money wherewith they ſtood bound on the Kings Behalf to the Duke of Brabant, in caſe the Duke of Cornwall ſhould not Marry with the Daughter of the ſaid Duke, which Requeſt was granted, and all with the Letters Patents aforeſaid was enrolled in the Chancery. The Petitions alſo of the Clergy by Aſſent were made into a Statute, beginning Edvardus, &c. and enrolled as above. After this certain fit Perſons there named, were appointed for ſeveral Affairs, ſome to hold Debate of matters concerning Flanders; ſome to ſpeak with the Merchants, touching Exchange to Bruſſels; and to confer with the Merchants of England; ſome to dilate with Priors Aliens, of which we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter; others to adviſe touching the Defence of the North Marches; others to treat about the Affairs of Gaſcoign; and others how beſt to preſerve the Iſlands and the Sea-coaſts. As to the Keeping of the Peace, and performing of Covenants between the Duke of Brabant and Others on the Kings Behalf, that was all to be debated in the Kings own Preſence. Concerning the raiſing of Money, that was refer'd to the Commons. But becauſe the Taxes laſt granted were not duly anſwer'd to the King, by thoſe who had been entruſted with the Care thereof; Certain Perſons were now appointed to take the Accounts of Sr. William de la Pole, Sr. John Charnells, and Paul de Monteflore and Others, who had received Money, Wooll, and other Goods to the Kings Uſe. Whereupon Sr. William de la Pole and the Reſt had Day given them to ſhew their Accompts, each of them finding their ſufficient Sureties: The Earl of Derby, and the Lord Wake were Sureties for Sr. William; the ſame Earl of Darby and the Lord John Montgomery for Sr. John Charnells: John Lord Dacres and Reginald Lord Cobham, Sr. John Shareſhull and Sr. John Stradling ſtood for Paul de Monteflore, Sr. John Sturmy and Sr. John Charnells were bound for William Welchborne; and the Earl of Huntington engaged for Pierce Dyme and other Merchants of Barton. Thereupon the Parliament was Prorogued till Wedneſday in Eaſter Week then enſuing.

fit

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

At which time certain were appointed to ſit on Petitions had before the King: When alſo the Biſhops at the Kings Requeſt, promiſed never to diſſent from the Kings Promiſe made for the Cuſtoms of Wooll, but by Common Aſſent of Parliament. A Motion to remember to Repeal a Commiſſion made to Sr. Robert Waterford of the [e] Oppoſer in the Exchequer: Alſo to remember to reſpit the Prior of St. Dennis near Southampton, and of Southwick, from paying of the Tenths and Fifteenths: And to direct a Commiſſion to Sr. Robert Popham to be Sheriff of Southampton during the Kings Pleaſure. It is Enacted, that the King may with the Aſſent of his Allies make any reaſonable Peace.

[e] Appoſer M.S.

In this Parliament in [f] conſideration of the many Good Services done by the Marqueſs of Juliers, the King made him Earl of Cambridge, and gave him in Fee a 1000 l. per annum, till he could provide for him ſo much of Hereditaments. Whence it appears, that the Learned Antiquary, [g] Mr. Cambden, was miſtaken, who ſays, that King Edward the Third, for the Love he bore to Queen Philippa his Conſort, created the Lord John of Hainault her Uncle, Earl of Cambridge. And that upon his Revolt to the French, he deveſted him thereof, and conferr'd it upon William Marqueſs of Juliers, Siſters Son to that Queen. Whereas the ſaid Lord John was not now, nor of ſome Years after, Revolted to the French, as We ſhall ſhew in due place, ſo that he could not yet forfeit with Edward, nor is there any thing at all in Our publique Records, that may give the leaſt Countenance to this Aſſertion of that Famous Man; as the Diligent Sr. William Dugdale acknowledges: Whereas it is moſt Evident, that at this time the Marqueſs of Juliers was created Earl of Cambridge, as We have ſhewn. But We have not made this Obſervation upon ſo Great and Venerable a Perſon out of Envy, or Oſtentation; rather thrô love of Truth alone, and to infer thereby, that if ſuch Mighty Men may ſometimes trip, if after all Our Diligence We alſo are found Tardy, the Candid Reader would reckon it to the account of Our frail Humanity. But to return, [h] It was alſo now Enacted, that Prince Edward, Duke of Cornwall, ſhould in the Abſence of the King his Father be Cuſtos, or Warden, of England, and that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Earls of Lancaſter, Warwick, and Huntington, taking for their Direction ſuch Juſticeers as they ſhould think fitting, ſhould attend on him, and be of his Council.

[f] M.S. & Sr. R. Cotton ibid. & Dugd. 2 Vol. p 113.

[g] Cambden Brit.

[h] M. S. ibid. & Sr Rob. Cotton &c.

That the Charter by Writs do pay the Merchants of Barton and Lynn for their Purvey of Corn. Such Merchants, Denizens, as by Writ were to appear, are commanded to attend the Day after the Aſcenſion.

Pardons ſhall be made to Sr. Robert Joice, and William Claxton, Pierce Tiliol, and Simon Rokeby, of all Debts: The like to be made to Thomas Brookhall for Thirty two Tunns of [i] Powder.

[i] Powder.

As to the Affairs relating to Scotland, We ſhall ſtill defer to ſpeak, till a more convenient occaſion, which will ſoon offer it ſelf: That We may not by dividing the Story diſtract the Reader: Only in ſhort We ſhall here remember, that the Scots this mean while taking Advantage of King Edward's being occupied in Foreign Affairs, had begun to ſtruggle for their Liberty with ſuch Succeſs, that King Bailiol was fain to Retire into England, as well for his own ſafety, as to require Succour againſt his Importunate Enemies, the Bruceans. However, as yet King Edward ſaw no ſuch great Matter, as might Oblige him to make a Perſonal Expedition that way; for they fought rather by Craft and Surpriſe, than by plain and open force: Wherefore he ſtill reſolves Himſelf for France, only in this Parliament takes Care beforehand thus to provide for Scotland. [k] Gilbert Umphraville, Earl of Angos, the Lord Henry Piercy, Ralph Lord Nevill, the Lord Anthony Lucy of Cockermouth, the Lord John [l] Segrave undertook altogether to ſet forth for Scotland at their own Coſts 210 Men of Arms, and 220 Archers. The Lord John Moubray, whom Hector ([m] as we obſerved before) aſſerts to have been ſlain 8 Years agone, being now found and well again for all that, was [n] conſtituted in this Parliament Governour of Barwick upon Tweed, being retained by Indenture to continue there from the Firſt of May, then next enſuing for one whole Year, having for Defence thereof 120 Men of Arms, one Hundred Halberdeers (or Hobelers) and 200 Archers, of the which he was to provide of his own proper Retinue, ſixty Men at Arms, whereof Ten to be Knights; beſide twenty Hobelers, and [o] ſixty Archers, and the King to find the Reſt. Of all which number it appears, that there were three [p] Bannerets, and ten Knights, and that One Thouſand Nine Hundred Eighty Nine Pounds five Shillings, being due unto the ſaid Lord Moubray by thoſe Covenants, Dr. Richard Bury Biſhop of Durham, with two great Barons of the North, Henry Lord Piercy, and Ralph Lord Nevill, were commanded to take Care for the Payment thereof: Beſides, he was to have an Hundred [q] Pounds Impreſt to help to furniſh him. At the ſame time the Lord William Felton, [r] who was Governour now of Roxborough Caſtle (and had been ſo [s] ever ſince the Eleventh of this King) was charged with 60 Men at Arms, 50 Halberdeers, and 50 Archers, to ride in Company of thoſe Lords that were to Defend the Marches; beſides 36 Men of Arms, and 40 Halberdeers for the Defence of his own Caſtle. King Bailiol only [t] undertook to find but 20 Men of Arms; for he was reduced ſo low now, that among other Methods for his Supply, the King of England was fain to grant him toward the Maintenance of his Eſtate, [u] together with the Mannor of Hexliſham, Three Hundred Pounds per annum out of the Deſmes, within the Dioceſs of York, during the vacancy of that Archbiſhoprick. For to the Eſtabliſhing of the Credit of this M.S. ſo often by me Cited, which agrees notwithſtanding exactly with that Abridgement of the Records of Sr. Robert Cotton, ſet forth by Mr. William Prynne, we are to underſtand, [x] that Dr. William Melton Archbiſhop of York, was now lately, to wit, in the beginning of April, Deceaſed, and for this and other Reaſons, we find that See kept void in the Kings Hands about two Years: But this by the by. Now beſides all the foremention'd Preparations, [y] the Lord William Roos of Hamlake, Ralph Lord Bulmer, the Lord John Willoughby of Eresby, the Lord Henry Fitz-Hugh, and the Lord Adam Welles were to ſet forth to the Wars of Scotland 550 Men. The Valiant Sr. Thomas Rokeby (of whoſe being Knighted we ſpake [z] in the beginning of this Our Hiſtory) undertakes for ſuch a certain number of Souldiers in time of Peace, and for a Greater in time of War, for the Defence of the Caſtles of Edinburgh and Striveling.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[a] A Commiſſion was order'd to be made to Mr. John Burden Parſon of Rothbury in Northumberland to be Chamberlain of Barwick, during the Kings Pleaſure, his Yearly Fee being one Hundred Marks, and that Robert Turchill, who had been both Chamberlain and Victualler, with one Hundred Marks Fee, ſhould have only fifty Marks Fee.

It is agreed, that every One who is of Power and Ability, ſhall be ready upon Warning, to go forth toward the North-Marches: That no Victuals be carried by Sea out of England into Scotland, and that a Commiſſion be made to the Earl of Angos, the Lords Piercy and Nevill, or any two of them to ſet forth the Arrays of Yorkſhire, Nottingham, Darby, and Northumberland, to puniſh all Rebels and Diſobedient, to determine of all Treſpaſſes done in Northumberland, and the Kings Lands in Scotland, to receive any Perſon to the Kings Peace or Pardon, and to grant a Truce: The like Commiſſion to be made to the Lord Wake, the Lord Anthony Lucy, and Sr. Pierce Tiliol, whereof the ſaid Anthony to be one of the Weſt-Marches.

The Biſhop of Lincoln is order'd to paſs the Seas with the King, and to be of his Council; and Proviſion of Victuals appointed to be made at Southampton and Sandwich for the Kings Navy: And thus all things being fairly Eſtabliſhed for the Defence of the Realm on that ſide, the Parliament was Prorogued till the Wedneſday next after the Tranſlation of St. Thomas Becket.

II. And

[k] M. S. p. 32. § 41. 14 Ed. 3.
[l] Malè ibi Greygrave vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 675.
[m] Hujus Operis l. 1. c. 5. §. 3. p. 67.
[n] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 127.
[o] M.S. ibid. & Sr. Rob. Cotton, &c. Vbi tamen 40 Archers, ſed 60 apud Dugd.
[p] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 127.
[q] M.S. ibid. § 46. & Sr Rob. Cotton, &c.
[r] M. S. & Sr. Rob. ibid.
[s] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 65.
[t] M.S. & Sr. Rob. ibid.
[u] §. 44.
[x] Godwin Catal. Bps of York 42 & 43. p. 599. Obiit 5to April.
[y] M.S. & Sr. Rob. ibid.
[z] L. 1. c. 1. § 6. p. 12.
[a] M.S. & ibid.

II. And now the King having by Wise Counsel settled his Affairs at home, resolves in all haste to cross the Seas in Pursuance of his War abroad, and therefore goes the first Opportunity to [b] Ipswich, where he kept his Whitsuntide, intending thereabouts to pass over into Flanders. While he lay here, his Brother-in-Law Reginald the Second, [c] Duke of Gueldre sent him word by way of Caution, "that he should take an "especial Care of his Person, for that King Philip had set a Price upon his Head, and "had withall given so strict a Charge to his Admirals, that they had sworn to present "him Alive or Dead at Paris: And to that end they were furnish'd with the [d] most "Gallant Armada that ever any Man living had seen. For there lay as then in the "Haven of Sluce near Bruges in Flanders, between the Isle of Cadsant and Blankeberg, "more than [e] 400 Sail, whereof 200 were Great Vessels, well stuff'd with French- "men, and all manner of Habiliments of War, besides Spaniards, Genoese, Normans, "and Picards, all Manned with above [f] 40000 Men: Wherefore it behoved him to "look to himself. Now John Stratford Archbishop of Canterbury, having also received before this, some Imperfect hint of the Strength of the French at Sea, [g] advis'd the King out of pure Love to his Person and Welfare, by no means to Adventure to cross the Sea without a Royal Navy: But he looking upon him, as one whose Blood Age had Frozen, and that so he was apt to be timerous without Reason, gave him an angry Check, and resolv'd to set forward with what Strength he had: Whereupon the Good Prelate resign'd his Chancellourship for sorrow, and withdrew himself, as one says, from the Council: Thô others [h] more probably say, that not till after this Expedition he was by the King in his Displeasure remov'd from his Office of Chancellour. But when the Lord Morley, his Admiral of the Northern Fleet, sent him Word of the same, and the foresaid Letters from the Duke of Gueldre, made the Matter no more to be doubted, then [i] althô he had already near two Hundred Sail, yet he sent the Bishop of Lincoln to the Southward Ports, and himself rode Northward to Yarmouth, where he caused so many Ships more of the Cinque-Ports to be immediately equipped, that now at last his Fleet consisted [k] of 260 Vessels, Great and Small, all well Mann'd with Archers and Men of Arms; besides those, wherein many young Ladies and other Gentlewomen were to go over to see the Queen.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[b] Stow p.237.
[c] Walsingh. hist. p.134.
[d] Knighton p. 2577. n.10.
[e] Fox Acts and Monum. p.347.
[f] Froiss. c.50. Ashmole p. 651.
[g] Fox ibid.
[h] Philipot's Catal. Chancellors p.39.
[i] Walsingh. hist. p.134.
[k] Stow p.237.

III. When he was thus provided, at last on the [l] 22d of June, being [m] the Thursday before the Nativity of St. John Baptist, about the first Hour of the Day, in the Name of God and St. George, he departed out of the Haven of Orwell in Suffolk, and set Sail for Flanders. The [n] next day, being the Eve of St. John Baptist, and a Friday about three of the Clock, they came to the Coasts of Flanders about Blankeberg, where [o] when King Edward [p] saw before him a Fleet so Numerous, that their Masts and Streamers made them resemble a great Wood, he demanded of the Master of his Ship, what People he thought them to be: To whom the Master reply'd, "May it "please Your Majesty, I take them to be Normans, and others, set out by the French "King to Rob and spoil Your Coasts, and if they may, to take Your Majesties Person: "And among these, I doubt not, but We shall find those very Men who burnt Your "Good Town of Southampton, and took Your two good Ships, the St. Edward and the "Christopher. "Ha! said the King, "I have a great while desired to Fight with the "Frenchmen, and now by the Grace of God and St. George, I shall Fight with some of "them, if I may: For surely they have done me so many Displeasures, that I shall "make them pay Dearly for all, if God shall enable me. Then * he commanded the Lord Reginald Cobham, Sr. John Chandos, and Sr. Stephen de la Burkin to take Land, and to ride along by the Shoar to view the Countenance of the Enemy: These Gentlemen rode so near, that they saw all their Order, and that the whole Fleet was divided into Three Squadrons, being as they guess'd, 400 Sail, more or less, all riding in the Harbour of Sluce, among which they saw 19 Ships so Large, they had never seen so many the like before, whereof the Chief they knew to be the Christopher, a Ship of England: And having made this Discovery at their leisure, (for all Flanders was then free for Englishmen) they return'd to the King (who would needs for that time be Admiral of the Fleet himself) and gave him an Account of what they had learn'd. But by this time the Evening began to approach, and therefore the King commanded to cast Anchor, resolving to have the Day before him, and to begin the Fight next Morning.

[l] Ashmole p. 651.
[m] B. A. Dom. Lit.
[n] Knighton p. 2577. n 50.
[o] Froiss. c.50.
[p] Adam Murimouth.
* Knighton p. 2577. n.50. & 60.

On the next day, being a Saturday, and the [q] Feast of St. John Baptist, early in the Morning, the French Fleet came forth of the Haven in good Order about the space of a [r] Mile; approaching towards the English, in Three Squadrons. The French Writers indeed say, that Sr. Peter Bahuchet would by no means permit them to quit the Haven;

[q] Knighton p. 2578. & Stow p.237.
[r] Adam Murimouth.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

Haven; but this is no way agreeable to the Fame of that Admiral, the Harbour being a place too narrow for them to accept of a Battle in, (* althô it is ſtill accounted capable of 500 good Sail of Ships) nor were they very ſecure there any longer than they were Maſters of the Sea: For the Men of Bruges, King Edward's Friends, were ranged in Warlike Order upon the Shoar to watch their Advantage: And we find that King Edward took a Compaſs about in his very Addreſs to the Fight, whereby they had their Liberty to come forth: So that their Opinion ſeems to me no better than a vain Pretence, thereby to palliate the Truth. About Nine of the Clock that Morning, the King of England who ſaw well what they did, and was prepared to Engage them, ſet forward towards his Enemies. He [f] had placed all his biggeſt Ships foremoſt, being well furniſhed with Archers, and other Souldiers; and always between two Sail of Archers, he Order'd One with Men of Arms: He had alſo ſet one Squadron to lie aloof, as well to keep the French, who elſe might encloſe his firſt Squadron, in ſuſpenſe, as to be ready to Aſſiſt them that were weary, when need ſhould ſo require. But ſince, as we intimated before, there were in the Engliſh Fleet a great Number of Counteſſes, Ladies, Knights-Wives, and other Gentlewomen, who were going thither to wait upon the Queen at Gaunt, and to viſit their Husbands and Friends in thoſe Parts, theſe Ladies the King comforted all he could, and cauſed them to be kept far off, with 300 Men of Arms, and 500 Archers for their Guard. And then he gave Order to hoiſe up the Sails, Deſigning to come with a Quarter Wind, to [t] get the Advantage of the Sun and Wind at his Back, and ſo at laſt they turn'd a little ſideways, having Wind at Will. When the French ſaw them do thus, they wonder'd what they meant, ſome ſaying; "They find we are too many for them, and ſo think it beſt to let us alone. But when they beheld the Banner Royal of England, and found that the King himſelf was there in Perſon, they then thought it worth their while to endeavour to take him, and ſo began to make up to the Engliſh. The French were all [u] Good and Expert Men of War, eſpecially upon the Sea, to which they had been long enured: For (whatever ſome Writers ſay, who in hopes to excuſe this loſs, aſſert, [x] how their Navy was filled with Peaſants, and Perſons of the Meaneſt Condition, as ſuch who would be contented with leſs Pay) their Admirals were certainly Men of Great Knowledge in Maritime Affairs, and as to the reſt we ſhall find by the manner of their Fight, that they wanted neither Courage nor Skill, but only Fortune. Before the two Fleets joyn'd, the Valiant [y] Admiral Barbenoire ſent forth four Gallies, which ſet upon a Good Engliſh Ship, called the Rich Oliver, and aſſailed her vigorouſly on all ſides, with Stones and other Shot from Engines: ſo that many of her Men were ſlain, and more wounded, and ſhe her ſelf in great Danger of being loſt; but at that Inſtant the Engliſh Navy came ſo near, that ſhe was Reſcued, and the Four Gallies Boarded and Won, before the French could come up to them. And now both the Fleets met fiercely together, the French joyning the Battle with many Trumpets, and other Inſtruments of Martial Muſick, and the Engliſh altogether giving a Mighty Shout, that ſounded horribly upon the Waters, the Shoar being not far off: And at the ſame Inſtant they ſent a Flight of Deadly Arrows from their Long Bows, which the French anſwer'd as liberally with their Croſs-bow Shot: But the Engliſh Arrows did the moſt Execution by far. Then the Men of Arms approached, and fought with Swords, Spears, and Axes, hand to hand: For on both ſides they had certain great Hooks faſten'd to Chains, called Grapling-Irons, to caſt from one Ship to another, which catching faſt on the Tackling or the Upper Deck, they were both held cloſe together. That day many Noble Deeds of Arms were done on both ſides, with aſſailing and defending, taking and Reſcuing again; but the firſt apparent Advantage, which the Engliſh by Obſtinate Valour obtain'd, was, that after a ſharp Conflict, the Chriſtopher, which the French had taken a Year before, and had now in their Forefront, was retaken by the Engliſh, before any other; for they knew the King was much diſpleas'd at the Loſs of that Good Ship: All the French within her were ſlain, except ſome Three or Four taken to Mercy; and now again, being furniſh'd with Engliſhmen, ſhe turns her Angry Foredeck againſt the Genoueſe. Then there was great Shouting, and Cries on both ſides, and the Battle began to be more hot than before; theſe Encouraged with their firſt Succeſs, and the Preſence of their King, thoſe in the Contemplation of their Numbers. This Fight was Mannaged with much Cruel Obſtinacy, for beſides the great Antipathy of both Nations, and the Mutual Provocations which highly incenſed them on both ſides, the Sea-fights are always more Dangerous and Terrible, than thoſe on the Land: No man there being able to flinch or fly, but to expect the Reward of his Valour, or the ſtroak of Fortune.

* Engl. Atl. 4 Vol. p. 243.

[f] Froiſ. c. 50.

[t] Adam Murimouth.

[u] Froiſ. ibid. fol. 30.

[x] Du Cheſne l. 15. fol. 651.

[y] Fabian. p. 211.

Moſt

Most certainly Sr. Hugh Quuriel, Sr. Peter Bahuchet, and Sr. Nicolas Barbenoire the Genoan, were most Valiant and able Captains. For they maintain'd the Fight from before ten of the Clock in the Morning, till seven in the Evening, for [z] Nine whole Hours: So that the English were very much put to it, for their Enemies were [a] Four to One, and all us'd to the Sea. There King Edward (who bare the Admirals Flag in his Ship that day) fought most Resolutely: For he was in the Flower of his Youth, being not full 28 Years Old, and in all the World either Heathen, or Christian, there was no King so Brave in those Days of that Age. With him in this Hazardous Enterprise were Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, with Sr. John Beauchamp his Brother (Earl Thomas being the Admiral, but for that Day the King taking the Place upon himself) Henry Plantagenet Earl of Darby, Laurence Hastings Earl of Pembroke, William Clinton Earl of Huntingdon, the Lord Roger [b] Northwode of his Retinue, Hugh Audley Earl of Glouceſter, Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex, and his Valiant Brother, William Bohun Earl of Northampton, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord John Chandos, the Lord William Felton, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord Henry Piercy, the Lord John de la Warre, the Lord [c] Ralph Basset of Sapcote, Thomas [d] Lucy Lord Multon, the Lord Robert of Artois, commonly called the Earl of Richmond, Sr. Stephen de la Burkin, Sr. Henry of Flanders, and Nele Loring a Valiant young Esquire of England, with other Barons, Knights, and Esquires, all who bare themselves that day with singular Courage; the first Squadron of the Enemies being entirely Beaten by fine Force, and the second very much shatter'd, the French of that Part leaping into the Sea to avoid the stinging Arrows, so that at last the Lord Morley coming in opportunely with part of the Northern Fleet, and some Succour from Bruges, the English obtain'd the Greatest Victory that ever was known on those Seas before. Only the Night coming on about 23, or 30 French Sail fled away; but one Great Ship, called the [e] James of Dieppe, intending to have carried away a Ship of Sandwich, belonging to the Prior of Canterbury, was stay'd from getting off by the Resistance and Noise of the Mariners; who being thereupon Assisted by the Earl of Huntington, defended themselves so stoutly, that they not only saved their own Vessel from the French, but also were occasion of Winning that: For after a whole Nights vigorous contending for the Mastery, the French by the next Morning being utterly overcome and taken, there were found in the Ship [f] 400 Bodies of Men slain.

The King about that time understanding of the [g] 30 Sail that had fled away, sent after them fourty Tall Ships, under the Command of Sr. John Crab; but we know nothing of the Success. The whole Number of the Enemies slain, came to 25000 at least, tho the best Account is [h] 30000, but however it is on all Hands confessed, that on both sides there fell no less than 30000, whereof at the most there were not above 4000 English, tho one says but [i] 400; among whom are said to be [k] Four Great Barons, Sr. Thomas Monthermer, called the Kings Nephew, who was Eldest Son to the Lord Ralph Monthermer, the Lord Latimer, Sr. John Butler and Sr. Thomas Poynings; of whom 'tis only certain, that Monthermer died at this time, for Sr. Thomas Poyning's Death happen'd in [l] October, a Year before this, according to the Records, and for the other Two we find them living after: Tho one Historian having first number'd them among the slain, all the rest blindly follow his Authority. Among those Ships that were taken by the English in the First Squadron, was the St. George, the St. Edward, and the Black Cock, all formerly belonging to England, beside the Christopher, together with which and the James of Dieppe, there was taken the St. Denis a mighty Ship of France, and others to the Number of 230 Sail; two [*] of the Admirals were slain in the Fight, only Barbenoir got away among those that fled. Indeed the French Writers tell us, that King Edward was wounded thrô the Thigh with a Spear, and that in Revenge he hang'd Admiral Bahuchet upon the Main-Yard of the Middle Mast of his Ship; as for the hanging of Bahuchet, it is either falsly reported, or unhandsomly at least, the reason of that Severity being suppressed: Which, if there was any, must have been in requital of the Barbarity and Rapes which he (to say no more) permitted to be done at Southampton: For as to what relates to the King's Wound, we shall find it so quickly healed, that neither the King himself mentions it in his Letters, nor did it any way hinder him in his Affairs, as it must needs have done, especially he going a Pilgrimage on Foot presently after, as we shall prove. Thô even they, who make him wounded, are fain in decorum to make him keep his Ship three days: But here I follow Froisard, as the most ancient, so by far the most probable Writer.

IV. The labour of this Honourable Day being over, King Edward [m] continued on Board

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[z] Du Chesne l. 15. p. 651. b.
[a] Froiss. c. 50. f. 30. a.
[b] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 70.
[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 382.
[d] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 564. & p. 569
[e] Adam Murimouth, &c.
[f] Adam Murimouth, &c.
[g] Knighton p. 2578. & Stow p. 237.
[h] Victorell. p. 883. Speed p. 573.
[i] Southwell.
[k] Stow p. 237. & Holinshead, Speed, &c.
[l] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 134.
[*] Knighton p. 2578. n. 10.
[m] Froiss. c. 50. f. 30.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

Board all night before Sluce with a triumphant Noise of Trumpets and Clarions. The next Morning came thither to visit Him, and to congratulate his Success several of the best Quality, and the Principal Burgesses of Flanders, that had heard of his Arrival: Of whom the King enquiring after Jacob van Arteveld, was informed by the Burgesses of Bruges, that he was gone at the Head of sixty thousand Flemings to assist the Earl of Hainalt against the Duke of Normandy, who lay then at the Siege of Thine l' Evesque. That Day being Sunday and the 25 of June, the King and all his Company, but those who were concern'd in the Navy, took Land, and having at the Town of Sluce heard Mass, and returned Thanks to God for the late Victory (which was his constant Custom to do) there he rested Himself and his People, both that and the next Day. For I find that upon his Dubbing Esquire Nele Loring a Knight, [n] for his remarkable Service in the late Naval Fight, he gave him by his Letters Patents a Donation of 20 l. per annum, for him and his Heirs Males for ever; the Letters bearing Date at Sluce, Teste Rege, 26° Junii, which was now on a Monday. On the Tuesday, or the 27 of June, his Majesty went [o] on Foot in a Pilgrimage to our Lady of Ardenberg, once a chief Town of Flanders; and wherein at that time was [p] one of the Finest Churches in the World, the Ruines whereof are yet to be seen; the Town it self standing but one league from Sluce toward the South-East, and something less from Middleburg. Here having heard Mass and Dined, he took Horse and rode to Gaunt, which was about four leagues further, the Carriages by little and little coming after; and here his Queen received him joyfully, presenting him with her Fourth Son John, of whom she had been lately Purified; to the Kings extream Satisfaction. But now to shew with what Pious Moderation, this Prince received so great a Victory, I shall here present the Reader with a Letter of his directed to the Bishops and Clergy of England, to exhort them to return both his and their Thanks to God Almighty, and to lend him their Prayers for his further Perseverance in Prosperity.

[n] Esq; Ashmole p. 700. vid. Commun. Ter. Trin. 15. Ed. 3. m. 3. dorso.

[o] Froiss. ibid.

[p] Engl. Atlas 4 Vol. p. 243.

[q] Fox Acts and Monum. p. 347.

"EDWARD, [q] by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord "of Ireland, to his Arch-bishops, Bishops and other Prelates, &c. Greeting. We "thought good to intimate unto you for your Certification and Rejoycing, the boun- "tifull Benignity of Gods great Mercy so lately poured upon Us: It is not unknown "to you, (We suppose) nor to other our Leige Subjects, who also have been Par- "takers with Us in the same, with what boisterous Wars We have of late been tos- "sed and shaken, as in the swelling Ocean. But althô the rising Billows of the Sea "are wonderfull, yet more Wonderfull is the Lord above, who turning the Tempest "into a Calm, hath in so great Dangers so mercifully respected Us.

"For whereas of late upon urgent Reasons, We prepared to pass into Flanders, the "Lord Philip of Valois, our Bitter Enemy understanding our Purpose, laid against Us "a mighty Navy, intending thereby either to take our Person, or at least to hinder our "Voyage, which voyage if it had been accordingly hindred, all our great Enterprises, which "We have taken in hand, had been dashed, and We our Selves brought to great Con- "fusion: The God of Mercies beholding Us so distressed, and in such Peril and im- "minent Danger, hath gratiously and beyond Mans expectation, sent unto Us suffi- "cient Succour and strength of valiant Souldiers, and a prosperous Wind after our own "Desires: By means and help whereof, We set out of the Haven into the open Seas, "where We soon perceived our Enemies, well appointed and prepared to set upon Us "with a main Multitude. Against whom notwithstanding on Midsummer-Day last "past, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ hath granted unto Us the victory, after a "sharp and terrible Conflict. In which Battle a mighty Number of our Enemies were "destroyed, and almost all their whole Navy taken, with some Loss also on our Part, "but nothing like in Comparison to theirs. By reason whereof We doubt not, but "that the Passage by Sea shall hereafter prove more quiet and safe, both to Us and "our Subjects: And also many other Commodities shall ensue thereupon, as we have "good cause to hope.

"Wherefore We, devoutly considering the Divine Favours so gratiously bestowed "upon Us, do render our most humble Thanks and Praise to Christ our Lord and Sa- "viour: Beseeching him, that as he hath been, and always is most ready to prevent our "Necessities in his own good time, so he will please to continue his helping Hand ever "towards Us, and so direct Us here temporally, that We may reign and rejoice with "him eternally in Heaven.

"Moreover We require your Charitable Assistance, that you also Rising up toge- "ther with Us, unto the Praise of God alone (who hath so favourably begun to work "with us for our Good) do instantly in your Publique Prayers and Divine Service, as "well

"well as in your Private Devotions, recommend Us to the Lord; since We are here "labouring in these foreign Countries, and not only studying to recover our Right "in France, but also highly to exalt the whole Catholick Church of Christ, and to "rule our People in Righteousness: And that You also call upon all your Clergy and "People (each one thrô his distinct Diocess) to do the same, altogether invocating "the Name of our Saviour on our Behalf, that of his Clemency he would please to "give unto Us, his Humble Servant, his Grace and a docible Heart, that We may so "judge and govern here upon Earth in Equity, doing what he hath commanded, that "at length We may happily attain to that which he hath promised, thrô our Lord and "Saviour Jesus Christ, &c. An. 1340. AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

V. This Letter was enclosed in another of the Kings, directed to his Son the Prince, who received them at Waltham: And then at last and not before, was the Fame of this Victory perfectly credited by the most Scrupulous. But thrô France the sad News of this their Loss flew more nimbly; thô as yet none durst undertake to be the hatefull messenger of such an unwelcom Relation to King Philip. Till at last his Lords prompted a pleasant Fellow, the Kings Jester, to do it; who is said to have revealed the whole Matter after this manner. [r] Running carelessly one time into King Philips Presence, he began to insult with much vehemence, and upbraid the English of flat Cowardise calling them Dastards and cowardly Poltrons, with many other Opprobrious Words to that effect: Which he repeated with great Bravery, till the King asked him the reason, why he so extreamly undervalued the Englishmen, "Why (said the "Fool) because the Cowardlike, Faint-hearted Rogues, had not the Courage to leap "into the Sea so gallantly, as our Normans and Gentlemen of France did. [r] Walsingh. hist. p. 134. n. 30. Fox Acts and Mon. p. 347. Sr. Rich. Baker, &c.

Certainly We are told by most Writers, that in this Fight the English Arrows fell so thick among the French, and did so sting, torment and fright them, that many Men, rather than endure them leapt desperately into the Sea: To which the Words of this Jester no doubt alluded. And without all question, the Guns which are used now adays, are neither so terrible in Battle, nor do such Execution, nor work such Confusion as Arrows can do: For Bullets being not seen, only hurt where they hit, but Arrows enrage the Horse and break the Array, and terrifie all that behold them in the Bodies of their Neighbours: Not to say that every Archer can shoot Thrice to a Gunners once, and that whole Squadrons of Bows may let fly at one time, when only one or two Files of Musqueteers can discharge at once; Also that whereas Guns are useless, when your Pikes joyn, because they only do execution point blank, the Arrows, which will kill at Random, may do good service even behind your Men of Arms: And it is notorious, that at the famous Battle of Lepanto the Turkish Bows did more mischief than the Christian Artillery. Besides it is not the least observable, that whereas the Weakest may use Guns, as well as the Strongest; in those Days your lusty and tall Yeomen were chosen for the Bow, whose [f] Hose being fastned with one Point, and their Jackets long and easie to shoot in, they had their Limbs at full liberty; so that they might easily draw Bows of great strength, and shoot Arrows of a Yard long beside the Head. But to proceed. [f] Fabian p. 392.

VI. About the same time that King Edward sent the forementiond Letters into England, he also directed others from [t] Gaunt to the Earl of Hainalt, and those who were besieged within the Castle of Thine, certifying them of his Arrival and Success. When the Earl heard this News, and that the French had received such a Blow at Sea, because he could not force the Duke of Normandy to a Battle, having at last brought off the Besieged in that manner as we related, he decamped, and giving his Souldiers leave to depart, return'd with all the Lords in his Company to Valenciennes, where he feasted them all most magnificently. There Jacob van Arteveld once or twice declared openly in the Market-place, in the Presence of the Earl of Hainalt, the Duke of Brabant, and all the Lords and Others, who were content to hear him, "What undoubted Right the King of England had to the Crown of France; and "of what great Puissance the Three Countries of Flanders, Hainalt and Brabant were "like to be, now that they were surely joyn'd in one indissolvible Bond of Allyance, "whereof King Edward was the Knot, Strength and Stay. And more he spake to this purpose, with so much Eloquence and Discretion, that all who heard him, highly applauded his smooth Language and weighty Reasons; Saying, that he was both a very good Orator, and a most sound and expert Politician, and therefore most meet and worthy to Govern all Flanders. After this the Lords of the Empire departed severally from Valenciennes, having first of all agreed to meet again within eight Days at Gaunt, to visit the King of England, which they did accordingly. He for his part received [t] Froiss. c. 50. f. 30.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

them gladly, and feasted them honourably, as also did the Queen in her Apartment: And here 'twas agreed between King Edward and the Lords of Germany, that a General Council should be held at Villenort about their present Affairs; for which a certain Day was appointed, and Notice given to all the Allies to meet accordingly.

Now the King of England, as he had formerly made a Promise to the Flemings, had brought over with him certain Bishops, and very many Priests and Deacons, [u] who being less scrupulous than the Priests of Flanders (notwithstanding the Popes Interdict) open'd the Churches there, and celebrated Divine Service without the least hesitation: Whereupon the Fears of the Flemings were abated, as such, whom the Pope himself, so much above all others, could not materially endammage.

[u] Mezeray. 2 part 3 tom. 16 pag.

The mean while the French King, having understood for certain of his great Loss at Sea, brake up and dislodged from before Thine, with his Son the Duke of Normandy (at the same time that the Earl of Hainalt departed on the other side) and drew towards Arras, the chief City of Artois, having dismist the greater Part of his Forces, till they might hear other news from him. But immediatly he sent the Lord Godmar du Fay with a good Number of Men of Arms to the City of Tournay, to look, that nothing was wanting there, for he had an Eye especially upon the Flemings. Wherefore he also sent the Lord of Beaujeu to Mortagne, to keep the Frontiers against Hainalt, and in like manner he provided for St. Omers, for Aire, for St. Venant, and all the Fortresses fronting on Flanders.

[x] L. 1. c. 13. §. 9. p. 146.

VII. It may be remembred, that we spake [x] a little before of King Robert of Sicily, of whom again we have something more to say, his Zeal for the House of France bringing him again in our Way. Now this Robert being the Son of Charles the Second, King of Sicily and Naples, was also nearly alli'd to King Philip of France [y] being his Uncle; for his Sister, the Lady [z] Margaret, being formerly given in Marriage to Charles Earl of Valois, was by him Mother to the said King Philip. This Robert at that time excelled all the Kings of Christendom in humane Learning, especially in the more recondite Parts thereof, but chiefly (as we have intimated before) he addicted himself to the Study of Astrology, which he did with so good success, that either from the Regular Conclusions of that Science (for certainly that Study cannot be called wholly trivial or vain, without as much Rashness as Ignorance) or by some Natural Impulse, or by Divine Direction and Inspiration, he drew this for an undoubted Maxim, "That it was given to King Edward of England to succeed "prosperously in all his Personal Undertakings: So that both before at Vironfos (as we have related) and now also again he warned the French King and his Council, that King Philip should by no means adventure a pitch'd Battle, where the King of England should be present in Person. And besides all this he had such a tender and friendly Regard to the fair Realm of France, that he us'd all the means possible to set the two Kings at Unity, and when at last he found his Endeavours prove unsuccessfull, was passionately concerned at the Destruction, which he foresaw was coming upon that Famous Kingdom. This Pious and Learned Prince was now with Pope [a] Benedict XII, and the College of Cardinals at Avignion, before whom with Tears he declared the great Miseries, that were like to fall upon France, by this War between the two Kings, most earnestly desiring them to use their utmost Endeavours to reduce them Both to some Friendly Terms of Agreement. The Pope and his Cardinals answer'd, "That for their Parts they both were, and always would be ready "with delight to promote so good a Work, and would willingly bestow their utmost "Labour therein; if by any means they might obtain a Hearing. Accordingly Letters were prepared and sent to the King of England by two Eminent Cardinals, Pedro of St. Praxede, and Bertrand of St. Mary in Aquiro, who had further Instructions to treat with him about a final Peace. But these Endeavours being as useless as many the like before, we shall say no more of them at this time.

[y] Odoric. Raynald. ad an. 1339. §. 39.

[z] Mezeray 2 par. 3 tom. p. 31.

[a] Labbé Chron. Techn. ad hunc ann.

CHAP-

CHAPTER the SEVENTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward holds a Council of his Friends and Allies at Villenort; where the Method of the War is agreed on, and St. Omers and Tournay appointed to be at one time besieged. II. King Edward sends a Challenge to King Philip, with the Answer. III. King Edward lays Siege to Tournay, where he is joyn'd by his Allies. IV. The Earl of Hainalts Exploits, and the Assault of the Flemmings upon Tournay. V. King Philip prepares to raise the Siege, and encamps at Pont a Bouvines. VI. The various Rencounters during the Siege. VII. An Account of a Parliament held at Westminster. VIII. Scotland recovers breath, and takes Edinburgh by Stratagem, other Places by Force. IX. The English Allies before St. Omers, raise their Siege, and in a Panick fear fly home. X. King Edwards and the French Kings several difficulties at the Siege, render them both uneasie, XI. Dr. Norwich comes with Instructions from the Pope to induce King Edward to a Peace: The Lady Jane of Valois obtains from the two Kings a time for a Treaty, with the manner thereof, and the Articles of the Truce. XII. Upon Proclamation of the Truce, both Armies break up, with divers Descants thereupon. XIII. In a Parliament at Arras the Truce between the two Kings prolonged for two Years. XIV. The Year concludes with the Death of sundry Great Personages, a Notable Victory obtain'd by the King of Spain over the Moors; and the Birth of a Princess of England, named Blanch of the Tower.

I. NOW the time being come, wherein the Great Council at Villenort was appointed to meet, there came thither accordingly King Edward with his English Nobles, as did also all his Friends and Allies in the Empire, and in Flanders; namely the Duke of Brabant, and the Duke of Gueldre, the Earl of Hainault, and the Lord John his Uncle, the Marques of Juliers Earl of Cambridge, the Lord Robert of Artois, the Earl of Mons, the Marques of Nuys, the Marques of Blankeberg, the Lord of Valkenberg, the Earl of Namur, Sr. William of Dunort, and Jacob van Arteveld, with many other Great Personages, and three or four Burgesses from every good Town in Flanders. In this Parliament there was a perfect Union, Alliance, and Concord made between the Three Countries of Flanders, Brabant, and Hainault, "that from thenceforward, each of them should be aiding and assisting to the other; and that if any one of them should either make War "against, or be warred upon by any other Prince, or State, then the other two should "take the Part of the Third: And that if any Quarrel happen between any two "of the foresaid Countries, then the Third should be taken as Umpire in the case; "and if so, they should not be able to adjust Matters fully, then the whole to be left "to the Decision of the King of England, to whom the last Appeal was to be made. And in Confirmation of this Triple League, there was a Law Ordained and Established to be common and current thrô the whole Three Countries, which was named the Law of the Allies.

Here also it was determin'd, that two Compleat Armies should be forthwith raised, the One consisting of the Men of Gaunt and Bruges, and other Flemmings, [a] with a certain Number of English Archers, [b] making up in all 55000 Men; which being commanded by the Lord Robert of Artois was to lay Siege to St. Omers: And the other consisting of King Edward's own Forces, with the rest of his Allies, was to sit down before Tournay in like manner. The Lord Robert of Artois was soon ready for his Task, and went accordingly; thô not so soon, but that King Philip before his Arrival had sent thither the Duke of Burgundy, named [c] Eudes the IV, with many other Lords, Captains, and Men of Arms, to the Reinforcement of the Earl of Armagnac: Who Arrived there accordingly [d] with two and fourty Ships furnished with Souldiers and Provision of all Sorts. As for King Edward, it was resolved that he should set forward with his Forces by [e] Magdalene-tide, then next ensuing, and lay

[a] Fabian p. 212.
[b] Du Chesne p. 651.
[c] Favine l. 4. c. 3. p. 6.
[d] Gaguin l. 8. p. 137.
[e] 22 Julii.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

Siege to the City of Tournay: And that thither all the Lords of the League ſhould repair to him with their ſeveral Forces; except the Lord Robert of Artois aforeſaid, Sr. Henry Eam of Flanders, and the reſt, who were to lie before St. Omers. All theſe things being thus fully Eſtabliſhed, the Council brake up, and every one addreſs'd himſelf to the performance of this Agreement.

[f] Froiſ. c. 53. fol. 30. b. & 31. a. & Du Cheſne.

Now King [f] Philip of France had preſently ſecret Information of the greater part of the Reſolutions of this Council: Whereupon, beſides his foremention'd Proviſion for St. Omers, he ſent to Tournay the Chief of all his Men of War, as Ralph Earl of Ewe, and his Son the Young Earl of Guiſnes, Gaſton Phœbus Earl of Foix, and his Brethren; Emery Earl of Narbon, Sr. Emery of Poictiers, Sr. Geoffry Charny, a Valiant Young Lord, of whoſe Exploits this Hiſtory will not be ſilent; with theſe he ſent the two Marſhals, Sr. Robert Bertrand, and Sr. Matthew de la Trie, Sr. Gerard de Montfaucon, the Lord of Caieux, Seneſchal of Poictieu, the Lord of Chaſtelan, and Sr. John Landas, and many other Valiant Knights, and Eſquires, to the Number of [g] 4000 Men of Arms, and [h] 10000 Footmen; the City it ſelf affording no leſs than 15000 Fighting Men effective. Now therefore when this Great Recruit was come to Tournay, the Captain thereof the Lord Godmar du Fay was wonderfully ſatisfied, and ſo joyning all together, they immediately took all Care poſſible to ſupply and furniſh the Place with Proviſion of Salt, Wine, Fleſh, Fiſh, Wheat, Oats, Artillery, and what elſe might ſeem Neceſſary for the Maintenance of a Town Beſieged.

[g] Fabian p. 212.
[h] Giovann. Villan. l. 11. c. 111. p. 769.

II. Nor was King Edward himſelf unwilling that his Intentions ſhould be known in France: But according to the Law formerly Eſtabliſhed with his Allies in Flanders, beſides his Defiance made laſt Year, he ſends [i] before he goes to the Siege of Tournay, his Charter of Defiance to King Philip, the Tenour whereof from the [k] Original French, runs thus.

[i] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 135. & Edit. Francf. p. 149. n. 21.
[k] Adam Murimouth.

"[l] Edward by the Grace of God, King of England, and of France, and Lord of "Ireland, to the Right Noble and Puiſſant Lord Philip Earl of Valois. Sr. Philip of "Valois, We have long and often peaceably demanded of You by Our Embaſſadors in "the moſt Reaſonable manner we could deviſe, that You would reſtore unto Us Our "Lawfull Right and Inheritance of the Crown of France, which all this while You "have with great Injuſtice and Violence detained from Us: And whereas We well "perceive that You intend to perſevere in the ſame injurious Uſurpation, without re"turning any Satisfactory Anſwer to Our juſt Demands [We give You to underſtand "that] We are entred into the Land of Flanders, as Sovereign Lord thereof; and "are now paſſing thrô the Country. And We further ſignifie unto You, that by the "help of Our Saviour [m] Jeſus Chriſt, and Our Righteous Cauſe, with the Forces of "the ſaid Country, Our Subjects and Allies, We purpoſe to recover the Right, which "We have to that Inheritance, which You by Your injurious Violence detain from "Us. And therefore are We now approaching toward You, to make a quick deci"ſion of this Our Rightfull Challenge, if You alſo will do the like. And foraſmuch "as ſo great an Army, as We bring with Us on Our part, ſuppoſing You alſo on Your "Part to do the like, cannot remain long in the Field without great Deſtruction both "of the People and Country, which thing every Good Chriſtian ought to avoid (eſpe"cially Princes and others, who have the Government of the ſame) We are deſirous by "as ſhort diſpatch as may be to meet, and therefore to prevent the Mortality of Chri"ſtians, ſince the Quarrel apparently belongs to You and Me, let the Controverſie be"tween Us be fairly decided by Our own Perſons, Body to Body, to which thing We "offer Our Selves for the Reaſons aforeſaid; that the Great Nobility and Valour of "each other may be ſeen of all Men. But if in caſe You ſhall not vouchſafe this way, "then let Us end the Diſpute by the Battle of one Hundred of the moſt ſufficient Per"ſons of Your Party, and as many of Mine, which each of Us ſhall bring into the Field. "But if You will not admit either of the One, or of the Other way, then that You will "Aſſign unto Us a certain Day before the City of Tournay, which Day to be within "Ten days next after the Date of this Our Letter, wherein to Combat both of Us, "Power againſt Power: We offering unto Your Choice theſe above ſpecifi'd Condi"tions, as We would have all the World to know, not of any Malice, Preſumption, "or Pride in Our Selves, but for the Cauſes aforeſaid, and to the intent that the Will "of Our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, being declared between Us two, Peace and Unity might "grow more and more among Chriſtians, the Power of Gods Enemies may be abated, "and the Bounds of Chriſtendom be enlarged and enfranchiſed. Wherefore conſider "hereupon with Your Self, which of Our foreſaid Offers You will accept, and by the [l] Hæc verba videntur alludere ad illud DIEU ET MON DROIT. i.e. God and my Right: which words are ſtill under the Arms of the Kings of England, &c.

"Bearer

"Bearer of these Our Letters send unto Us quick and speedy Answer. Given under Our Great Seal at Chyn upon the Skell, near Tournay, the [n] 17 Day of Julii, A. D. 1340. This Letter was some Days after thus Answer'd by King Philip. AN. DOM. 1340. AN. REGNI Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

"PHILIP by the Grace of God, King of France, to Edward King of England. "We have seen Your Letters brought to Our Court, and sent on Your Part to one Philip of Valois; wherein are contained certain Requests, which You make to the said "Philip of Valois. But because the said Letters came not unto Us, and the said Requests were not made unto Us, as by the Tenour of the said Letters it clearly appears, We do not return You any Answer to the Premises. Nevertheless, forasmuch as We understand by the said Letters, and otherwise, that You are entred into Our Realm of France, threatning great Damage to Us, and to Our Realm, more thrô Presumption, than Reason, and not considering the Duty, which a Liegeman oweth unto his Lord: For You have formerly entred Our Liege Homage, acknowledging Your self, as Reason is, a Liege-Man unto the King of France, and have promised unto Us such Obeisance, as is usually expected from Liegemen to their Lords; as more plainly appeareth by Your Letters Patents, which We have Sealed with Your Great Seal. And because You may know something of Our Intent, We give You to understand that it is Our purpose, when it shall seem good unto Us to drive You out of Our Realm to the Honour both of Us, and of Our Kingdom, and to the Profit and Commodity of Our People. And this to do, We have firm and assured Hope in Jesus Christ, from whom We derive all Our strength and Power. For by Your unreasonable Demand, proceeding more from Presumption than Reason, hath been hindred and laid aside the Holy Expedition beyond the Sea, whereby great Numbers of Christian People have perished, the Divine Service hath been diminished, and Holy Church less Reverenced. And as touching that which is noted, that You look to be Assisted by the Flemmings, We hope and believe surely, that the good People and Commons of that Country will so bear themselves towards Our Cosin the Earl of Flanders, their Lord, that it may not be to their dishonour, and that to Us, their Sovereign Lord, they will Respect their Faith and Loyalty. And as for what they have hitherto done otherwise than well, We are assured, that was occasion'd by the Evil Advice of such Persons, who neither had any Regard to the Publique Weal, nor to the Honour of their Country; but only to their own Private Advantage. Given in the Fields near adjoyning to the Priory of St. Andrew les Aire, under Our Privy Seal, in absence of Our Great Seal, 30 of July, in the Year of Grace 1340.

[n] Sandford p. 161. Fox 27 Julii. Fab. 15 Julii. Alii diem non assignant.

The French Writers say, that King Philip among other Matters return'd this Answer, "[o] that a Lord ought not to accept of a Defiance from his Vassal; and that he sent him this Condition by Word of Mouth, * that King Edward by that his Challenge hazarded nothing of his own, but only expos'd the Dominion of another, which was against all Reason; since the Stake ought to be equal on both sides: But if he would set his Kingdom of England, thô less considerable, against his of France, then he would accept the Challenge, and meet him in the field in single Combat, on Condition that the Conquerour might remain sole Master and Peaceable Lord of both the Realms: But this, they say, King Edward would not hearken to: For as he was Valiant to make the Challenge, so he was circumspect to weigh the Conditions. Yet I cannot admit of this Matter: For how know they, what King Philip sent by Word of Mouth? And how could King Philip imagine, that his Word should be taken in a Matter of such Consequence; when all Challenges ought to be confirmed by hand and Seal, unless made in the hearing of the Defendant? And how was not this an Answer to the Challenge of King Edward; when as King Philip in his Letter professes he would not Answer him, because he took not the Letter to be directed to him? Truth needs no such pitifull Salvo.

[o] Mezeray 2 Par. 3 Tom. p. 16. * Du Chesne p. 651. D. & p. 652. A. S. Rich. Baker, &c.

III. Toward the latter end of July, the Corn [p] being near ripe, King Edward, as We said before, began his March toward Tournay, which he intended to Besiege, with seven Earls of England in his Company, eight Prelates, Twenty eight Barons, 200 Knights, 4000 Men of Arms, and 9000 Archers on Horseback; besides Footmen: All these Forces were English, with whom were many Great Lords of the Empire, and their Troops; and the Imperial [q] Eagles were display'd among the English Lions, and the Crosses of St. George, in the Head of this Army, in token that King Edward was Vicegerent of the Sacred Roman Empire. Thus the King Marched from Gaunt, and passing the Skell, went and sat down before Tournay, at the Gate called St. Martin, where the Way being divided, leads both to Lisle and Doway. After the King, the Duke of Brabant came thither ther with more than 20000 Men in all; and he lodged at the Bridge of Aire by the River Skell, between the Abbey of St. Nicolas and the Gate Valenciennois. After him came the Earl of Hainault with a goodly Company of his Subjects of Hainault, Holland, and Zealand; and his Place was between the King and the Duke of Brabant. Then came Jacob van Arteveld in the Head of 60000 Flemmings from Gaunt, Ipres, Poperinghe, Caſſel, Bruges, and other Good Towns of Flanders, and theſe were lodged on the other ſide at the Gate St. Fountain. And laſtly, the Duke of Gueldre, the Marqueſs of Juliers, the Marqueſs of Blankeberg, the Marqueſs of Nuys, the Earl of Mons, the Earl of Savynes, the Lord of Valkenberg, Sr. Arnold of Baquehen, and the other Lords of Germany, were lodged on the ſide that look'd toward Hainault. Thus was the ſtrong City of Tournay cloſely begirt on all ſides, ſo that none could go in or out without the Danger of the Beſiegers; and things were ſo well order'd, that on occaſion each Part of the Hoſt could joyn the other by the help of Bridges, which they had flung over the Skell, for their mutual Communication.

[p] Froiss. c. 53.

[q] Du Serres & Speed p. 573.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

IV. All the time of this Siege, which laſted for about Nine Weeks, the King of England and his Allies had [r] good ſtore of all manner of Neceſſaries; for their Foragers brought in daily huge Booties from all Parts; and Proviſion came in from Hainault and Flanders at eaſie Rates. One Morning the young Earl of Hainault, who could never forget the Injuries lately done by the Frenchmen in his Country, took along with him the Lord [s] Walter Manny, and the Lord Reginald Cobham with 500 Spears, and leaving the Siege, rode forth by Lille, which he left on his Right Hand, and burnt the Good Town of Seclin, and many little Villages thereabouts, their Van-currours running up as far as the Suburbs of Lens in Artois. Then theſe Lords went another way, and rode to the Town of Orchies, which was taken and burnt, for it was not greatly fortifi'd; many other petty Towns they burnt alſo, and overran the whole Country; after which they return'd to the Army before Tournay, with much Pillage and Booty.

[r] Froiſ. c.54.

[s] Walſingh. hiſt. p.136.n.20.

The Flemmings that lay at the Siege, were ever the moſt Obſtinate of all others in moleſting the Beſieged, as well thrô the Encouragement of their Leader Jacob van Arteveld, as becauſe the hope of Gaining their Cautionary Towns of Lille, Bethun, and Doway, depended chiefly upon the Succeſs againſt Tournay at this time. One Aſſault among the reſt endured with great Pertinacy on both ſides, for one whole day without any Intermiſſion; during which ſpace many notable Adventures happen'd, for the Chief of the Captains, and Men of Arms in Tournay came to that part; the Fury of the Beſiegers flaming there moſt terribly. For they came by Water in Ships, and other Veſſels brought thither for that purpoſe, intending to break down the Barriers and the Poſtern of the great Arch. But it was ſo reſolutely defended, that the Flemmings wan nothing for all their Labour; but after all, having loſt a Veſſel with ſixſcore Men in her (which were every Man drown'd) they were forced to give over the Aſſault, being all Weary and ſoundly Beaten. Many Adventures happen'd in the time of this Siege, all which cannot be here enumerated, but ſome Particulars muſt not be omitted in ſo general and full an Hiſtory, as this is. On Land they had high Stages and Belfroys of Timber, in manner of Batteries, from whence the Archers would ſhoot upon the Defendants, while others fought at the Walls and Barriers: But Tournay was ſufficiently provided, and that King Edward knew well, and therefore reſolv'd to reduce them by Famine. When the Captains within ſaw his Deſign, they thruſt out of the Town all manner of poor People, Men, Women, and Children that were not fit for War; to make their Proviſion hold out the longer, being to ſerve fewer Mouths. They were put forth thus inhumanely in the open day expos'd to the Enemies Diſcretion, which was a moſt pitifull Object to behold: But the Noble Duke of Brabant gave them all leave to paſs thrô his Hoſt, allowing them moreover a ſafe Conduct, to carry them to Arras, where at that time the French King lay. It was thought that ſecretly the Duke of Brabant favour'd the French, either for fear of what might follow, or out of Natural Inclination, which ſurmounted his Private Quarrel againſt King Philip, or [t] thrô Bribes, or out of Envy to King *Edward*s Good Fortune, or out of meer Inconſtancy: But however this Action he did not at this time without the Conſent of the King of England.

[t] Villani & Mezeray 2 Par. 3 Tom. p.17.

[u] Froiſ. c.56. Du Cheſne p. 652. B.

V. King Philip had now in Order to Raiſe this Siege, amaſſed together a Mighty Army, the Chief Leaders whereof were John King of Bohemia and Earl of Luxemburgh, the Duke of Lorrain, the Earl of Bar, the Biſhop of Metz, the Biſhop of Liege, and the Biſhop of Verdun upon the Meuſe, the Earl of Monbiliard, the Lord John of Chalons, the Earl of Geneva, the Earl of Savoy, and the Lord Lewis his Brother: All theſe came to ſerve the French King with their ſeveral Troops. Thither alſo came John de Dreux Dreux Duke of Bretagne, the Dukes of Burbon and Athens, the Earls of Alenſon, Foreſtes, and Armagnac, Lewis de Creſſy Earl of Flanders, Guy Caſtillion Earl of Blois, with his Eldeſt Son the Lord Charles (who is to make a conſiderable Figure in this Hiſtory) the Earl of Harcourt, the Earl of Dampmartin, the Lord of Coucy, and many others of the Higheſt Quality. Thither alſo came [x] Philip the King of Navarre with a goodly Number of Men of War, raiſed in thoſe Countries, which he held of the French King, and for which he was obliged to ſerve him with ſuch and ſuch a Quota. Laſtly, there was King David de Bruce of Scotland, who led a handſome Number of Gallant Scotch Gentlemen, and other Troops, which he had hired with Money, deliver'd unto him by King Philip to maintain his Eſtate withall during his Exile from Scotland.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[x] Mezeray p. 21

While the French King lay with this great Army at Arras in Artois, the poor People that had been excluded out of Tournay, came thither, and by their heavy Complaints mov'd the hearts of all Men to pity, giving alſo [y] adviſe to King Philip of the great Neceſſity of the Beſieged: In whoſe name they deſired ſpeedy Succour, for elſe they were in danger to be loſt, the Engliſh aſſailed them ſo mightily, and their ſtock of Proviſion was ſo extreamly waſted. Hereupon King Philip ſent thither the Duke of Athens, the Viſcount of Thoüars, the Viſcount of Andelot, and other Lords to the number of 15, with a Detachment of 12000 [z] Men of War. Theſe marched directly to Mount Caſſel, but they found it already taken up by a Body of Flemings: So that being diſappointed of that Convenient Poſt, and knowing themſelves unable to make their way by Force, upon Conſultation had, they wheel'd off from Caſſel, and having done what harm they could in the Enemies Land, return'd to the French King, who was ſtill at Arras. They found him then in Conſultation, whether he had beſt in Perſon attempt to raiſe the Siege from before Tournay, or go into Flanders, and there make War upon the Towns, that held with the King of England. But it was reſolved by a Council of War, that it would be moſt for his Honour, for him to endeavour Perſonally to raiſe the Siege, and this being fully concluded on, King Philip immediatly began his March toward Tournay, with a mighty Power of his Allies, and Men of War drain'd from ſeveral [a] Garriſons, the like whereof for Number had [b] never been ſeen in thoſe Days; among whom were [c] Four Kings, Four Dukes and Fourteen Earls, beſides Viſcounts, Lords, Knights and Eſquires. With this Army he went from Arras, till he came to a [d] little River below Lille, about 3 leagues from Tournay: Where he found the Water ſo deep, and the Ground ſo uncertain, great Mariſhes lying all about, that there was no way to paſs but one, which could admit of not more than two or three Horſemen on a Breaſt: Wherefore not knowing how ſoon an Enemy might appear, King Philip durſt not adventure to paſs the River, but lay that night at a place called Pont a [e] Bouvines. The next Day the Army lay ſtill in the ſame place, as yet uncertain what courſe to take: and while certain Horſemen were ſent out to ſeek for a more convenient Paſſage, Others adviſed to fling ſeveral Bridges over the River, but that was found impracticable. Thoſe who had been ſent out to ſearch, return'd to the King telling him, that his only beſt way would be by the Bridge of Creſſin; and this way was reſolv'd on: but however he tarried a while where he was before, to conſider more maturely of the ſafeſt and moſt honourable Management of his Affairs.

[y] Du Cheſne p. 652. b.

[z] Fabian p. 214

[a] Mezeray p. 17
[b] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 135. n. 10.
[c] Fabian ibid.
[d] Froiſ. c. 57.

[e] Fabian p. 215.

VI. Now when it was nois'd abroad, that King Philip lay encamped with ſo great an Army between the Bridges of Creſſin and Bouvines, with intent to give the King of England Battle before Tournay; every Man of Honour, that either expected Glory or Prey, drew to one King or the other, as their Duty, or Affection and Intereſt led them. * Among the reſt there were in the Caſtle of Bouchain in Oſtervandt three valiant Captains, all Brethren and Germans, that held for the Earl of Hainalt, and conſequently for the King of England. When theſe Knights heard for certain, how the two Kings were ſo near encamped, that in all likelihood they would not part without Battle, then Two of them deſired the Third to ſtay behind for defence of the Fortreſs, while they went to the Camp before Tournay to King Edwards Service. The Matter was ſoon agreed on, and the two Knights whoſe Names were Courrat, departed from Bouchain, and rode forth till they came to Eſcaupont beſide Valenciennes, deſigning to paſs the River Skell at Condet. When they were now between Eſcaupont and Freſnes, they heard a great Tumult and Noiſe of Men, and ſaw ſome flying in great fear to themward: Wherefore the two Brethren asked the foremoſt of them, "What might be the matter that they fled in ſuch Confuſion? "In the "Name of God, Sirs (ſaid they) the Garriſon of Mortaign yonder hath iſſued out "upon

* Froiſ. c. 57. Du Cheſne p. 652. D.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

"upon us, and having already done much miſchief, and ſlain and taken many People, "they are now returning with a great Booty to their Fortreſs. Then the Brethren asked, if they could ſhew them where theſe Frenchmen were, and they ſaid Yes. So the Knights purſued after them by direction of theſe poor Countrymen, being themſelves *27 Spears in all, and they overtook the Frenchmen hard by Noſtre Dame Aux-Bois. The French conſiſted of an 120, who were driving before them an 100 head of great Cattle, and certain Priſoners, Men of the Country: Their Captain being a valiant Knight of Burgundy, named Sr. John de Frolois, who belonged to the Lord of Beaujeu, at that time Governour of Mortaign. As ſoon as the Germans ſaw theſe Men, thy cri'd their accuſtomed Cries, and rode in fiercely among them with great Courage: The Knight of Burgundy ſet himſelf valiantly to receive them, and ſome few of his Men with him; but the greater Part fled down right, they were ſo ſurpriſed with this unexpected Onſet. Wherefore Sr. John de Frolois, after a ſhort Reſiſtance was taken Priſoner, and all his Men either taken or cut in pieces; for even thoſe that fled were ſo eagerly purſued, either by the Germans, or thoſe of the Country, that not one eſcaped. Thus all the Priſoners were deliver'd, and all the Prey recover'd and rendred back to the Owners: And the two valiant Brethren came before Tournay, where they were Welcome to their Friends.

* Froiſ. & Du Cheſne ibid.

In this ſame ſeaſon, while the French King lay encamped at the Bridge of Bouvines, William Lord of Bailleul in Hainalt, and the Lord Vauflart de la Croix, (the ſame h German Knight, who left the Earl of Salisbury when he was taken Priſoner, for fear of the Men of Lille, whom he had exaſperated by his Hoſtilities) theſe two encouraged a Party of Hainalders to venture along with them, to go and rouſe the French Army; for they ſaid, they knew all the Avenues of the Country, and that they would bring them to ſuch a place where they ſhould not be much overnumbred. So very early one Morning they left the Camp, to the number of about Sixſcore Knights and Eſquires, and rode directly toward the Bridge of Creſſin, the Lord William Bailleul being appointed their Chief, to whoſe Banner upon Occaſion they were all to repair. Now that ſame Morning it chanced, that a certain Number of the Biſhop of Liege's Men had rode forth from the French Camp, under the Conduct of Sr. Robert Bailleul, who was Brother to this Lord William Bailleul, but held to the Contrary Party. The Leigeois had already paſſed the Bridge of Creſſin, and were ſeeking Forage for their Horſes, and ſome further Adventure if they might: But what of themſelves they could not find, Fortune offer'd into their Hands, preſenting them with a Succeſs, which they could not wiſh for. For it being a very miſty Morning, the Hainalders paſſed beyond them, and went over the Bridge on the other ſide, neither Party having yet the leaſt knowledge of other; a man being hardly able to ſee the length of a Spear before him. When the Hainalders were all over, 'twas reſolv'd, that the Lord William Bailleul ſhould tarry there with his Banner and fourty Spears on the Bridge to ſecure the Retreat of the reſt; who were to adventure farther under the Conduct of Sr. Vauflart de la Croix, Sr. Ralph de Monceaux, and Sr. John Verchin. Theſe conſiſting of Fourſcore Spears, rode ſo far, that they daſh'd in upon the Troops of the King of Bohemia and the Biſhop of Leige, who were encamped neareſt to that Bridge; juſt at which time the Lord of Rademach, who had kept Watch the latter part of that Night, was going off from Duty, for it was about ſeven of the Clock. Theſe Hainalders made a great Confuſion and did ſome Miſchief, but the Army began to ſtir preſently, and to draw that way in good Order; whereupon they retired again toward the Bridge with the Luxemburgers and Liegeois at their Heels. Then was the Lord William Bailleul adviſed to repaſs the Bridge, and expect his Men on the other ſide, becauſe they were ſo cloſely purſued, that there would be much confuſion if the Bridge was not clear at their Return. Sr. William leaving them ſpace accordingly, the Hainalders repaſſed after him, thô not without ſome difficulty, their Captains being fain to place the beſt Men in the Reer, who were yet much preſt upon by the French. The Lord Vauflart de la Croix particularly, ſtaid ſo long behind in hopes to bring off his Men, that being intercepted, he ſaw plainly there was no poſſibility for him to recover the Bridge. Wherefore with much ado getting out of the preaſs he took a way well known to him, down among the Marches; where he thought to lie hid among the Reeds and Ruſhes, till night, and ſo to eſcape: The reſt of his Friends fighting ſtill at the Bridge with no great Advantage. At which time Sr. Robert Bailleul, who held on the French Part, being allarum'd with the noiſe of the Scuffle, came thither on the Hainalders Backs with his Banner before him, when the Hainalders ſaw the Banner of Murrians, they verily took it for the Lord William's, who h Froiſ. & Du Cheſne ibid. vid. c. 15. § 7. p. 168.

who was of their Party, and so flock'd unto it: For there was but a small difference between the two Brethrens Banners; for the Arms of the Murrians are three Bars Counter-bars, a Chevron Gules, only in the Chevron of Sr. Robert there was a Croslet Or, which being but small, was not taken heed of by the Hainalders. But some applying themselves to Sr. William's, and some to Sr. Roberts Banner, being broken and divided by this Mistake, they were all routed, taken or slain, none knowing whither to turn in so strange a Confusion. Sr. John Verchin was slain, with Sr. Walter du Pont de l' Arche, Sr. William Piereport and many Others: Sr. John de[1] Solre, Sr. Daniel Bloss, Sr. Ralph Monceaux, Sr. Lewis Lamplugh and Others were taken; the Lord William Bailleul himself with much difficulty escaped, and hardly five or six more of all his Men. But as for poor Sr. Vauflart de la Croix, who lay in the Marish grounds in great fear, wishing that the Mist would not break up all that day, his evil Destiny betray'd him; for by the end of that Skirmish the Day being clear again, he was espied by some of those who rode by that way; and these presently made such a Shouting and Outcry upon him, that he was fain to come forth and yield himself their Prisoner. They that took him carried him into the Camp, and deliver'd him to their Master Sr. Robert Bailleul, who was very much concern'd for him, as one that knew the danger he was in, and that if the French King should hear of his Taking, he hated him so mortally, that it was impossible to preserve him. Wherefore Sr. Robert did what he could to stop the Report, and advis'd him to disguise his Name; but alas! 'twas too late; for King Philip having already heard, that Sr. Vauflart de la Croix, who had done so much Mischief to the Men of Lille, was a Prisoner in his Camp, sent his Officers for him, and forthwith order'd him to be carried under a Guard to Lille, giving the Inhabitants leave to do with him as they thought best. No Prayers, nor Promises of Gold or Silver could mollifie the minds of those Men, when they saw him in their Power; but immediatly they put him to a cruel Death, though he offer'd an incredible Ransom: so justly did he formerly fear to fall into their Hands, when the Earl of Salisbury, and the Earl of Suffolks Son were taken; but yet what so wisely he before avoided, being urged by his unhappy Destiny, he now fell into unawares.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[1] Salra Latin.

King Philip was wonderfully pleas'd with this Adventure of Sr. Robert Bailleuls, and no doubt gave him some good Tokens of his Favour: For small successes are a Refreshment to a Man after great and continued Losses; and besides he was glad that by the death of an Enemy, he had so highly gratified his good Subjects of Lille, as if he had given them large Franchises.

But the Earl of Hainalt was so extreamly[k] incens'd at this Matter, that immediatly he[l] sent to his Subjects of Valenciennes, that at such a time they should come and meet him before Mortaigne, appointing them to make their Assault between the Rivers of Scarp and Skell, and the Towns of St. Amand and Condet. Against the time limited He himself and the Lord John his Uncle, with the Seneschal of Hainalt and 600 Spears of Hainalt and Almain, departed from the Siege before Tournay, and went to Mortaign on the side of Condet, at which time also the Men of Valenciennes came on another Part in great Numbers, bringing with them several huge Engines for Battery. The Lord of Beaujeu, who was Captain there at that time, had all along expected a Siege, because the Fortress stood so near the River, and was so unwelcom a Neighbour to Hainalt: Wherefore on the Sides next the Land he had made strong Fortifications, and cut deep Trenches, and to secure himself on the River Side, he had caused twelve hundred Piles to be driven in, that no Vessels might pass that way. But for all these Preparations the Earl and his Men came thither on one part, and the Men of Valenciennes on another: And so the Assault began in Two places at once. But the Piles on one side hindred their Progress, and the Earl approaching the Barriers, found the Trenches on his side so deep and large, that he could not come near enough, and he wanted both Hands and Stuff, besides time, to fill them. Then he advis'd, and sent four hundred Men over the River Scarp, to that side where Chasteau l' Abbaye and St. Amand stood, commanding them to give an Assault at the Gate that looks toward Mauld. And now was Mortaign enclosed on three Parts; that being the weakest of the Three, which respected Mauld; but yet it prov'd strong enough: For thither came the Lord Beaujeu himself with the Flower of his Men to defend the Place. He for his part had in his hand a broad glittering Sword, sharp and well-steel'd, and above the blade near the hilt was fastned a sharp Hook of Steel, which Hook was made with such art, that it always took hold of what he strook, and he was so strong of Arm, that whomsoever he caught hold on, he either brought to him, or flung [k] Du Chesne p. 653.

[l] Froiss. c. 59. f. 33.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

him with great force into the Water, as he did more than a dozen at that time: However here the Aſſault was well carried on, being much fiercer than in any other place. The Earl of Hainalt on the other hand was contriving, how by force or art to pull out the Piles, that were ſtuck in the River, for then they might come up in their Veſſels cloſe to the Walls. At laſt he order'd to make ready a Ship, wherein was to be placed a great Engine to draw out the Piles one by one: And while the Carpenters were about this work, that ſame Day the Valenciennois on their Side had reared a great Engine, wherewith they caſt huge Stones into the Fortreſs to the no ſmall trouble of the Beſieged. Thus the firſt day and night paſſed in Aſſaulting and Contriving how to carry the Place. The next morning the Aſſault was renewed and continued on all hands till the Evening: And on the third Day the Ship was ready with the new-deſign'd Engine to draw out the Piles. But when they went to uſe it at that kind of work, they found their Labour to be ſo great, and to require ſo many Hands, and that it was ſo long e're they could pluck out one, that they deſpair'd of pulling out 1200 in a Year almoſt, upon which accounts they were ſoon weary of that Trade, and the Earl wiſhing he had never begun it, commanded them to leave off. However ſtill the other Engine of Valenciennes, that caſt Stones into the Fortreſs, play'd on luſtily and with good Succeſs: But at that time there was within Mortaign a ſubtle Mathematician, an Engineer, who ſaw there was much miſchief like to be done, unleſs he could diſable that Engine alſo. Wherefore with great expedition he raiſed a certain Machin within the Caſtle, which was not very bigg indeed, but it was well fitted and trimmed at all points: And with this he caſt but three times; the firſt ſtone fell within 12 foot of the Engin, the ſecond fell nearer, but the third ſtrack it ſo full, that it brake the Shaft or chief beam of the Engin clear in ſunder, and ſo rendred it uſeleſs: Whereat the Beſieged made a merry ſhout; but the Hainalders were ſo diſcouraged, that the Earl diſmiſſed his Men of Valenciennes, and return'd with the reſt of his Troops to the Siege before Tournay.

[m] Froiſ. c. 54.

[n] Ferrar. in tit. Fanum St. Amandi.

About this time the [m] Garriſon of St. Amand, which held for the French, and was diſtant [n] two leagues Northward from Valenciennes, and three leagues Southward from Tournay, iſſued out of the Town and went to Haynon in Hainalt, where they deſtroy'd the Minſter, robb'd the Abby, violated the Nunns, burnt the Town, and carried away the Spoil to St. Amand. Another day this ſame Garriſon ſent out a Detachment, which paſſing the Wood of St. Amand came to the Abby of Vicoign, where they began to make a great Fire near the Gate, intending to burn it down; for they had no other way to get an Entrance. When the Abbot ſaw what danger his Houſe was in, he took horſe preſently and at a back door rode out, going thrô the Wood to Valenciennes, where making a relation of his Neceſſity, he deſired the Provoſt to lend him a certain number of Croſsbows towards the preſervation of his Abby. His deſire was granted, and away he went with this Aſſiſtance, conducting them behind Rames, and ſo ſet them in the Wood toward the high-way that leads to Porcelet. From that ſtation they ſhot againſt the Genoueſe and Frenchmen, who were before the Gate of Vicoign: But when now they ſaw and felt the Shot from the Wood, they were ſo amaz'd that they return'd as faſt as they might, and ſo the Abby was ſaved from deſtruction.

[o] Froiſ. c. 60.

Now three days [o] after the Earl of Hainalt was return'd from before Mortaign, as we have ſhewn, Complaint was brought unto him to the Siege of Tournay, of theſe and other Outrages, committed by the Garriſon of St. Amand upon the foreſaid Places and others about the Frontiers of Hainalt. Hereupon he reſolv'd to ſeek ſome Reparation, and ſo went again from Tournay with 3000 Men and came before St. Amand; where he expected to find 12000 of his Subjects more, whom he had by Letters commanded the Provoſt of Valenciennes to ſend thither by ſuch a time to joyn him. On the ſide that looks towards Mortaign, the Town was not cloſed but onely with Pales; and therefore the Captain thereof, who was a good Knight of Languedoc, and Seneſchal of Carcaſſon, had before this, told the Monks and the Townſmen, "That the Place was not tenable againſt an Army; thô however he was reſolv'd to "hold out to the laſt, and by no means to yield or forſake the Place, which his Lord "the French King had once committed to his Truſt. He told them theſe words pro- "ceeded from no vain diffidence or Cowardiſe, but only being his real Opinion, he "gave them this Caution; that they might ſave their Goods, or what elſe they va- "lued in time: For he had nothing to take care of but his Honour, which he was re- "ſolved to maintain, whatever ſhould happen. The Townſmen would not believe theſe Words; only the Abbot and moſt of his Monks, as being more timorous and tenacious, tenacious, follow'd his counsel, and remov'd all the Jewels and Plate belonging to their Abbey to Mortagn, where also they themselves tarried for their greater Security. Now the day before the Earls Arrival, the 12000 Valenciennois, whom he had sent for, came thither, and placing all their Crossbows at the Gate that looks toward the Scarpe, began the Assault immediatly: But however nothing was gain'd all that Day but dry blows; wherefore the Besieged insulted upon them, "Crying, Sirs, get you gone "home again while you are well, and drink your good heavy Ale; for you are not "nimble enough to get in here. Toward night the Assault ceased, the Hainalders being extream weary, but chiefly their Hearts failed them, because the Earl, their Lord was not yet come as he had appointed them: Wherefore they presently withdrew homeward again in great displeasure. Next morning betimes the Earl departed from before Tournay and came to St. Amand, on the side toward Mortagn, where presently giving a fierce Assault, he wan the Pales and the Outworks, and so approached the Gate: Where the Earl and his Uncle were so forward, that both of them had their Helmets cloven and their Heads so disorder'd with the blows, that they were forced to withdraw for that time. At last one of the Captains said to the Earl, "Sir, this way we "shall never prevail, the Passage is so narrow and so well defended. But Sir, if we can "get strong Rams of Timber, sharpned like Piles, and run them against the Abby Walls, "we shall not fail of making there several Breaches: And the Abby once entred "the Town is ours. The Motion took and Rams were made accordingly, to every of which 20 or 30 Persons were appointed, who all together ran them with great force against the Walls: so that within a while there were several considerable Breaches made. At one of these Passages stood ready a certain Monk named Don Froisard, who defended his Post with great Manhood, and fought so lustily, that he kill'd or disabled no less than 18 persons with his own Hands: So that no entrance could be had that way. But when he saw how the Enemy rushed in at other Places, he was obliged to quit his Station, and had such good Fortune, as at last to escape the Town, and to carry the first news of its Taking to Mortagn. The mean while the Earl and his Men enter'd the Town by these Breaches in the Abby; and passed a little River that ran thereby, in battle Array. There he found the valiant Seneschal of Carcasson, with his Men about him, ready to receive him under his Banner: Which was Gules, a Chief Argent; Three Cheurons in the Chief, Bordur'd, Argent, Indented. And here he fought couragiously a considerable time: But the Hainalders flow'd in so upon him, that at last he was slain under his Standard, with 200 of his faithfull Men about him. For the Earl upon his entrance into the Town, had given Command to put all to the Sword, because they had done so much mischief in his Territories: So that very few escaped Death, but such who had fled betimes to Mortagn; or lay hid in Cellars and other secret places. At night the Earl returned to the Army before Tournay; and the next day the Men of Valenciennes hearing what their Lord had done, came again and burnt the Town, Abby and Minster, and brake all the Bells, which were very choice ones.

AN. DOM. 1340. AN. REGNI Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

Another [p] time the Earl of Hainalt went forth with a Detachment of 600 Men of Arms, and having burnt many small Villages which now have no Name, passed the River Scarpe hard by Haynon, and went into France to a great and rich Abby and Town called Marchiennes, which was defended by Sr. Emery of Vernaulx and certain Crossbows from Doway. Here the Earl began a fierce Assault at the First Gate, which the Captain had well fortified with large and deep Ditches, and now with his Frenchmen and the Monks defended the Place nobly. But as the Earl was fighting here, another Party of English and Hainalders went in Boats and Barges to another Quarter, where finding a more easie Entrance, they got all into the Abby, having only lost one German Knight, named Sr. Bacho de la Ware, of the Lord of Valkenbergs Retinue, who was by ill fortune drowned. The mean while the Earl, his Uncle, and the Seneschal of Hainault prevail'd also, thô with more adoe at the great Gate, so that the Captain and all his Men were either slain or taken; the Monks for the most part being taken alive; but the Abby and Town were plunder'd and burnt to the ground: After which the Earl return'd again to Tournay.

[p] Froiss. c. 60. fol. 33. b.

Thus during the Siege, the Englishmen and their Allies rode forth to seek Adventures; insomuch that they destroy'd, as some say, [q] 300 Towns and Villages, slew more than a 1000 Men of Arms, and took many more Prisoners, besides much Booty.

[q] Walsingh. hist. p. 136 n 20. & Hypod. p. 115. Fox p. 348.

Thô some Reader may already be offended with this Prolixity, yet I must not omit one more memorable Adventure, which happen'd at the Bridge of Cressin; both because the Lord Monmorency, a most considerable Person on the French Part, was there taken, and also because the late Success of the Lord Robert Bailleul's at the same place, was now well requited by those of the English Party.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

One day during this Siege before Tournay, [r] there was an Adventure undertaken by the Lord of Ronderendence, and Sr. John his Son, Sr. Arnold Baquehen, Sr. Reginald Descouvenort, Sr. Rorant Dastô, Sr. Baldwin van Basten, and Candrelyer his Brother, Sr. Stauren van Leurne, and an hardy Esquire, named John Randeberg, with many other Lords, Knights, and Esquires of the Dutchy of Gueldre, and the Marquisate of Juliers: Besides these there were certain Knights Batchelors, as Sr. Floren van Beaurien, Sr. Latas de la Hay Marshal of this Detachment, Sr. John of Hainalt the Bastard, Sr. Oliver van Guistells, Sr. Robert Cleves, and divers others of Hainalt, and the Neighbouring Countries, to the Number of 340 Men of Arms: All who rode forth one Morning early toward the Bridge of Cressin, which they passed without any Encounter. Being got over, they consulted what course to take, and it was resolv'd that the Frenchmens Quarters were to be beaten up: So the Lord of Ronderendence, Sr. Henry van Keukren, Sr. Tilman Soussy, Sr. Oliver van Guistells, Sr. John the Bastard of Hainalt, Sr. Robert Cleves, and Jaquelet of Thyaulx with his Brother, were appointed with 40 Spears only to go and perform that Exploit: And the other Knights and Esquires to the Number of 300 Spears, were to stay at the Bridge foot to make good their Retreat. Those that were appointed to that purpose, went forward accordingly, and strack suddenly into the Skirts of the Host, overthrowing Tents and Pavilions, and killing and wounding the Frenchmen.

[r] Froiss. c. 61.

That Night two great Barons of France, to wit, the Lord of Monmorency, and the Lord of Salieu had kept the Watch on that part of the Camp, which lay neareſt to the Bridge; who hearing the noise, came presently with their Banners before them to the Scuffle. Upon sight of them the Lords of Almain wisely drew off, and made back toward the Bridge: But the French follow'd them so closely at the heels, that the Lord Oliver van Guistells, who being purblind could not keep his course right, was taken Prisoner, and with him the two Brethren, Jaquelet and Mondrope of Thyaulx. And yet those in the Reer of the Almains could plainly hear the Language of the Frenchmen, calling after them, and saying, "Gentlemen, you must not think to escape thus. Whereupon one said to the Lord Ronderendence, "Sir, have a Care what you do; for I fear "the French will gain the Bridge before us. Well, said he, thô they know one way, "I know another; and therewithall he struck off on the Right hand, and took a by way, which brought him and his Company to the River: But by the late descent of Waters, the River was now so deep and environ'd with Marshes, that it was too Hazardous to attempt to pass over that way: Wherefore after a while they were fain to return toward the Bridge again. This mean while the Frenchmen had rode a full Gallop toward the Bridge, not caring to follow them in their by-way, as knowing they could find no Passage, but rather resolving to take the Bridge before their Return, and so to intercept them. But when now they came near and saw that great Company which were left to make good the others Retreat, at the foot of the Bridge, they were abashed, and said to one another, "We here pursue others too indiscreetly, since We thus may "lose more than We can possibly Win. Upon which consideration divers of them return'd back again, and particularly the Lord of Salieu with all his Men, and his Banner before him.

But for all this the Lord Charles of Monmorency rode still with his Banner and Retinue forward; saying, he would by no means retire, till he had tasted what kind of Men they were. So there began a fierce Rencounter between the French and the Almains; and many were overthrown on both sides: But as the Skirmish grew warm, and was yet doubtfull, there came on at the Frenchmens backs the other Almains, that had return'd from the River with the Lord Ronderendence, when they saw they could not get over because of the Marishes: So that now the Frenchmen were enclosed among their Enemies.

The Lord Reginald Descouvenort knew the Lord Monmorency by his Banner, under which he beheld him fighting valiantly; wherefore he came up suddenly on his Right side, and with his Left hand catch'd fast hold of his Horses Bridle, and so drew him after him out of the Preass: Yet all the while the Lord Monmorency strack at him many Weighty blows, some whereof he defended, and some he was fain to receive, being well Arm'd at all Points: But at last, he made shift to take him Prisoner with his own hands, for the Lord Monmorency had his Horse no longer in his own Government. Besides him the Almains took at this time no less than fourscore

Knights

Knights and Esquires; and after a full Victory return'd in safety to the Camp before Tournay. AN. DOM. 1340.

VII. Now during these two Sieges held by King Edward and his Forces at one time before Tournay, and St. Omers, a Parliament by Commission from the King, was held at Westminster [r] on the Wednesday next after the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr; The Reasons of their meeting being declared to be, 1. To consult what further course was best for the King and his Allies to take with France. 2. To provide for the Common Peace, and how to keep good Order at home. 3. To take Care for the Defence of the Northern Parts. 4. For the Dominion at Sea. 5. How to Answer the King the Subsidy last granted him. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[r] M.S. Record. Parl. p. 36. & St Rob. Cotton p. 27. &c.

The next day was openly declared in Parliament the great Victory, which the King had lately obtain'd at Sea: And that to go on so, as to perfect these happy beginnings, he must be further enabled with supplies of Money: The answer to which was respited till Saturday then next ensuing. At which time the Lords and Commons granted unto his Majesty, as in the last Preceding Parliament, the Ninth of their Corn, Wooll, and Lambs, and many Carefull Proviso's were made for the Answering the same.

On this Saturday came in the Earl of Arundel, and Sr. William Trussel, who were sent from the King with Credential Letters, under the Privy Seal, directed to the Lords and Commons, purporting his great Victory, and no less necessity of speedy Returns of Money. By which Letters, among other things, it appears, that the King got the said Victory on St. John's Day, in the Water of Swine, in the Port there. That the Kings Allies had carried him about Tournay with 100 Men; and that Sr. Robert of Artois had carried him at St. Omers with 5 Men. The said Letters, which are at large in the Records, conclude with the fear of much Damage, but especially loss of Honour to the King, without a speedy and undelayed Assistance, requiring their further Credit in the Bearers, for what they should say.

After this, certain Bishops and Knights, as John Stratford Bishop of Canterbury, Ralph Stratford Bishop of London, Ralph de Shrewsbury Bishop of Bath and Wells, Simon Montagu [t] Brother to the Earl of Salisbury, Bishop of Ely, Robert Wyvill, Bishop of Salisbury, with the Abbots of Waltham of the Holy Cross, and of Westminster, Sr. Ralph Shirley, and other Knights there named, freely undertook at their own Credit, to spare the King 20000 Sacks of Wooll, every Sack to be sold five Marks under the Price rated at Nottingham: So as for every Sack of the best sort, the King should be answer'd six pounds, for others five pounds, and for the worst of all four Marks; besides his Custom of 40 shillings for every Sack, and of all this, present Return to be made to the King. And it was order'd, that the Subsidy of the next Year should be employ'd for the Payment of these Woolls, and this to be confirmed by the Kings Letters Patents.

[t] Godwin Catal. Bps. p. 268.

Provision is order'd to be made for the King, two Parts at Sandwich, and the Third at Southampton, of Wheat two Thousand Quarters, of Beans and Pease five Hundred Quarters; of Bacon, eight Hundred Flitches, fourty Weighs of Cheese, and an Hundred Tunns of Wine: Ambrose de Newburgh being appointed Purveyor General for Sandwich, and Sr. John Hothersall at Southampton; and 4400 l. were Assign'd out of the Aid of Essex and Oxford, to the Kings Butler.

Such Parsons of Churches, as pay their Tenths, shall be excus'd now from paying their Ninths.

The Sheriff of Southampton is appointed to Repair to the Constable of Carisbrook Castle in the Isle of Wight, and there together with him to Muster the Islanders, and to choose a Keeper of the Isle, till further Order: Others being nominated to make the like Enquiry on this side Trent.

A Writ of Warrant was now directed to the Sheriff of York, to deliver up the Body of [u] John Randal Earl of Murray, to the Bishop of Durham, the Lord Henry Piercy, and the Lord Ralph Nevill: They to do with him according to their Commission.

[u] Hector p. 322 n. 75.

Order'd, that Priors--Aliens, and others, who have their Possessions in Farm of the King, shall pay no Ninths; as neither such Hospitals, as have not heretofore been Taxed.

A Writ to gather no Ninths of any Religious Person, who pays his Desme, and was not summon'd to the Parliament, untill Michaelmas next.

It was further Order'd; that every Sheriff by Writ should cause certain Merchants of every City and Town within their Bailywick, to appear before the Kings Council at such a Day: and that Proclamation be made, that no Person Presume to buy any Wooll, till the the King be ſerved; whereunto thoſe of the Cuſtom-houſe to have a ſtrict Regard. It was alſo Enacted, that the 20000 Wooll-Sacks granted to the King, ſhall be taken in whoſe hands ſoever they ſhall be found; or Agreement to be made therefore of the two Payments of the Ninths.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

The Merchants of Barton and Yarmouth, upon Security of the Ninths of ſeveral Counties mention'd in the Records, Engage to pay to ſeveral of the Kings Creditors beyond the Seas, the Summe of 28555.---15 s.---2 d. and that certain of the Kings Jewels lying in Pawn therefore, ſhould be redeemed. Sr. William de la Pole undertakes for his Complement of Wooll, or in Conſideration of the firſt Ninth in Suffolk, to pay to the King before Michaelmas Three Hundred Marks beyond the Seas.

Now of theſe Merchants that appeared before the Council, Henry Goldbeater, Thomas Grey, William Lancaſter, and John Lodington take 1500 Sacks of Wooll within the County of York, they to pay to the King for every Sack 4 Pounds ten Shillings, beſides the Cuſtom of 40 s. within three Weeks. So Bardolph Barton, Merchant of Hull, and Thomas Thirwit Merchant of Beverley, take a 1000 Sacks, half from Nottingham, and half from Darby, the firſt 500 at four Pounds thirteen Shillings and four pence per Sack, beſides the uſual Cuſtom of 40 s. and the latter 500, at three Pounds three Shillings and four pence, in like manner. So alſo Thomas Loveſhead, William Malleſtroit, and William Bambridge, Merchants of York take 400 Sacks out of Cumberland and Weſtmorland, at 4 Marks per Sack, beſides the Cuſtom. Walter Prieſt of Melton-Moubray, and Hugh Cogſhall Merchants of Barton upon Humber, agree for 500 Sacks of Leiceſter, for 8 Marks per Sack, and an 100 of Rutland for 4 l. 10 s. per Sack, beſides the Cuſtom. Thomas Collis, Richard Weſton, and Adam Hone, and John Retoun have 400 Sacks of Shropſhire, for ſix Pounds ſix and eight pence the Sack, and 400 out of Staffordſhire, for Twenty Shillings leſs by the Sack, beſides the Cuſtom. Then New Writs were ſent to the Sheriffs, to ſummon in more Merchants before the Council, becauſe they had ſtill more Sacks to diſpoſe of.

Now alſo 500 Sacks of the Woolls of Glouceſter were Aſſign'd to Queen Philippa toward the Payment of her Debts: Which was a Matter not the leaſt acceptable to the King, who always lov'd her to an High Degree; as indeed ſhe well merited. Then follow the Remembrances for the King to keep promiſe; as to keep the Sea, to purvey for the Navy, and to defend the Iſles of Jerſey and Garnſey. Sr. Anthony Bath was Order'd to ſee to the delivery of the Kings Jewells: And Conrade Clipping, and Godrick de Renley are Aſſign'd for the Cuſtoms of England. Then there is the Copy of a Letter ſent from the Lords of the Parliament to the King, by Sr. William Truſſel, containing the Grant of the Ninths, and their Policy in making preſent ſhift for ready Money by Woolls: In the Poſtſcript they direct him to buy at Sluce, and other Ports of Zealand, becauſe the greateſt ſtore of Woolls had been convey'd away by ſtealth: To which there is another ſecret Letter adjoyned, ſent (as it ſeems) from ſome of the Council, to the ſame Effect.

And here's the Subſtance of this Parliament, and the Summe of all the Aid, that came to the King, during the Siege of Tournay, thô it both fell ſhort, and came alſo too late, and as is highly probable, not till after the Treaty.

But We are alſo to remember, that in this Parliament King Edward Bailiol was appointed to ſerve at Carlile with 40 Men of Arms, being ſtill allowed, 300 l. per annum, together with the Mannor of Hexliſham, as in the laſt × Parliament. And the Earl of Angos, and the Lord Piercy were Order'd to ſet forth the Arrays of Yorkſhire, Nottingham, and Darby, to Newcaſtle upon the Tine, and ſo to the Marches: For about this time Scotland began to Raiſe up her Head again, of whoſe Affairs it will not be amiſs in this place to take ſome Proſpect.

× L. 1. c. 16. §. 1. p. 180.

VIII. About the time that King Edward Commenced his French Wars, the Lord Andrew Murray Viceroy of Scotland, Departed this Life, and was buried at Roſmarkie, being greatly deſired by the Scots for his ſucceſsfull Valour: After his Death the Young Lord Robert Stuart was continued Viceroy, till the Return of King David out of France. This Lord Robert took up, during his Viceroyſhip, the moſt Succeſsfull Arms againſt England, that ever had been ſince the Death of King Robert his Uncle: But in Proceſs of time, when he came to be King himſelf; he firſt wholly caſt off the Engliſh Yoke, and maintain'd that Kingdom in Proſperity and Honour, during his whole Reign, as in part we ſhall ſhew hereafter. But the uncertain and contradictory Reports, with the falſe Computations of the Scotch Writers, make it as impoſſible to give a ſuccinct and exact Account of every Action, as it is indeed unneceſſary. Let this ſuffice, ſ Buchan. p. 297. l. 9. & Holinſhead Scotl. p. 238. & Hector Boeth. p. 322.

that

that Scotland being now left more at Liberty by King Edward's Abſence, while he was buſied in the French Wars, did by Degrees recover many Great and Important Places, which before ſhe had loſt; thô as yet ſhe was unable to do any Notable Exploit upon the Borders of England. And firſt, by the High Valour of Sr. William Douglas, all Tividale was clean Recover'd out of the Engliſh mens Hands; for which piece of Service he was afterwards Rewarded with that Country. He alſo overthrew the Lord John Striveling at Cragings, Wan the Caſtle of Hermitage, baffled Sr. Laurence Vaux, and took Sr. William Abernethie Priſoner; and then by the Lord Robert Stuart was ſent into France to King David, to Requeſt his Counſel and Aſſiſtance in the War; becauſe a Tempeſt was expected from England. The mean while the Lord Robert Beſieges Perth, alias St. Johnſton, which was by the Engliſh Valiantly maintain'd againſt him for the ſpace of Ten Weeks: When the Lord Douglas on a ſudden Arrived from France, bringing with him into the Tay 5 Ships well furniſhed with Men, Arms, and Ammunition, the Captains whereof were two Knights, belonging to Galliard Caſtle in France, upon the Seyne, which was allotted for King Davids Reſidence, alſo two Valiant Eſquires, named Giles de la Hoy, and John de Breis, with a Pirate of great Renown, whoſe Name was Hugh Handpile, ſo that now the Captain of Perth, Sr. Thomas Vghtred, not being able to hold out any longer, after he had [z] deſtroy'd the beſt Ship, that Hugh Handpile had, and perform'd all that could be expected, was at laſt enforced to yield up the Town, thô not without [a] Honourable Conditions.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[z] Holinſhead p. 239.

[a] *Hector p.*322.

Now beſide the foremention'd Captains, who were on the Brucean Side, Patrick Earl of Dumbar, Kenneth Earl of Southerland, Sr. Robert Huſſey, Sr. Simon Fraſier and Sr. Alexander Ramſey (who were diſpos'd about in Garriſons of thoſe parts of Scotland, which the Engliſh had not won) during the ſpace of ſeven Years made continual War upon the Engliſh with various Succeſs, ſometimes looſing and ſometimes winning, as well by Open Force as by Surpriſe: Till at laſt King Bailiol being wholly tired out by theſe their importune Hoſtilities, retired into England, as we ſhew'd before: Thô others ſay, he was brought hither by King Edward, either for his own further Security, or hoping by his Removal to keep the Scots more quiet; or for ſuſpicion of his Loyalty. But now while King Edward lay at the Siege of Tournay, the French King ſent new Supplies of Men and Money into Scotland, requeſting withall the Lord Robert Stuart, to make ſtrong War upon England, that by ſuch a Diverſion King Edward might be forced to quit the Siege. The Scots taking heart upon this Reinforcement, not only wan many Fortreſſes in Scotland, but alſo adventur'd in ſeveral Bodies to enter England, where they deſtroy'd the Country almoſt as far as Durham, returning all ſafe again; ſaving [b] that the Earls of March and Southerland being encountred by the Lord Thomas Grey of Werke, Sr. Robert Manners, and John Copland, a valiant Eſquire of Northumberland, were utterly diſcomfited. In ſhort the Scots did ſo well uſe this Opportunity of King Edwards Abſence, that there was by this time ſcarce any Place of Moment left to the Engliſh in all Scotland, except [c] Barwick, Striveling, Roxborough and Edinborough. Which laſt Caſtle ſtands on a Rock, on an Hill ſo high, that a Man who is no way reſiſted, can yet hardly paſs up to the Top without Reſting; ſo that it is in a manner impregnable. The Captain of this Piece at that time was Sr. Richard Limeſi, who had ſo valiantly kept the Caſtle of Thine l' Eveſque againſt the Duke of Normandy, as we ſhew'd [d] before, and was thereupon Commiſſion'd by King Edward to undertake the Defence of this Place. But althô the Strength of the Hold and the Reſolution of the Captain were ſo notorious, the Lord William Douglas invented a ſubtle Device, wherewith to recover the Caſtle, and which he diſcover'd only to three of his chief Companions and Friends, Sr. Alexander Ramſey, Sir Simon Fraſier, and Earl Patrick of Dunbar. The Stratagem however is told two ways, and the leſs probable, by the [e] Scotch Writers themſelves, which is this: The Lord Douglas having acquaintance with one Walter Towers, a Merchant, called him into the Fryth, directing him to counterfeit himſelf an Engliſh Merchant, and to offer the Garriſon Wines to ſell. This Towers according to his Inſtructions provided two Veſſels of rich Wine and other Preſents for the Captain, deſiring his leave to ſell off the reſt of his Goods in thoſe Parts without any impediment or moleſtation: That in conſideration of this Favour, if the Garriſon wanted any thing which he had, upon knowledge, he would gratifie them therewith at reaſonable Rates. The Captain bidding him bring a certain quantity of Wine and Sea-biſket, promiſes Admiſſion at any time: He forſooth pretending to be afraid of the Scots, appointed to be there very early the next Morning. That night Douglas and 12 of the moſt choſen and valiant Men with him, diſguiſed themſelves with Seamens Habit

[b] *Holinſhead Scotl. p.*238.

[c] *Froiſ. c.*55. f. 31. b. &c.

[d] *Vid. l.*1. *c.*15. §. 10. p. 174.

[e] Hector p. 322. n. 20. *& Buchan. l.*9. p. 298.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

bit over their Armour, and having planted their Fellows in the neareſt place they could, with Order not to ſtirr till the Signal given, go along with the foreſaid Proviſion to the Caſtle. Sr. William Douglas and Sr. Simon Fraſier went firſt with the Cart, the other Eleven were commanded to follow at ſome diſtance. Being upon Call let in at the outer Gate of the Barriers, which was before the Caſtle Gate, as they eſpi'd the Keys of the Caſtle hanging on the Porters arm, they ſuddenly ſlew him, ſo that he died without one Word ſpeaking. Then in great ſilence they open the Caſtle Gate, and thence gave the ſignal to their Fellows by the ſound of an Horn, the mean while they caſt all their Carriages between the Doors, that they might not be cloſed before their Fellows ſhould come up. This is Buchanan's Relation, thô in ſome reſpects, I know not upon what Authority, different from Hector's who went before him: Wherefore I rather follow Froiſard, an Author of credit infinitely beyond them both, who thus tells the whole Matter. [f] That Sr. William Douglas with his Companions aforeſaid, took to them two hundred hardy Wild Scots, and went on board a Ship wherein was Proviſion of Corn, Oats and Fuell, and ſo they came peaceably into the Harbour of the Fryth or Forth, not far from the Caſtle of Edinburgh: That in the Night they armed themſelves and all their Company, diſguiſing ten or twelve of their Choice Men, and ſuch as they had moſt confidence in, with ragged Habits over their Armour, and Hats like Country Clowns, the reſt of their Men they beſtowed in an Ambuſh among the ruines of an Old Abby near the foot of the Hill. This done, they that were dreſs'd like Clowns, being yet well arm'd beneath their Rags, drave up the Hill about break of day twelve Galloways laden with the foreſaid Proviſion: Being little more than half way onward, Sr. William Douglas who could ſpeak Engliſh perfectly, without any mixture of the Scotch Dialect (as his Father the Lord James could do before him) and Sr. Simon Fraſier, diſguiſed as they were, went a little before and called to the Porter, ſaying, "Sir in great fear we have brought hither Corn, Oats and "Fuel, which, if you have any need thereof, we will ſell you good cheap. Why? "Marry ſaid the Porter, and we have great need thereof: But it is ſo very early that "I dare not wake the Captain nor his Steward: However let them come in; for I "ſhall open the outer Gate, where you ſhall be ſafe till the Steward riſes. Upon this the Gate being open'd, they all entred within the Barriers, Sr. William Douglas firſt, who heedfully caſting his eye about, eſpied the great Keys of the Caſtle hanging upon the Porters Arm. The two laſt Horſes being laden with Coals, were ſo order'd (be like their Hamſtrings ſuddenly cut) that they fell down juſt at the entrance of the firſt Gate; ſo that without much time and labour it could not be cloſed again. At that inſtant while the Porter, as he thought no harm, was careleſly looking to the unlading, Douglas from behind gave him ſo ſure a ſtroak, that without word ſpeaking he fell down dead. Then they took the great Keys and opened the Caſtle Gate, laying all the Sacks there upon the Groundſell, that it ſhould not by any ſtrength be cloſed againſt them; but the outer Gate they cleared, for their Men to come in with more eaſe. This done Sr. William ſounded an Horn, and all caſt away their torn Coats, and drawing their Swords ſtood cloſe together in ſhining Armour at the entrance of the Gate. Upon the Signal given, thoſe that lay in Ambuſh mounted the Hill with all expedition, being aſſured of Succeſs. The Watchman alſo of the Caſtle, being allarm'd with the noiſe of the Horn, look'd out and ſaw Men with their Weapons in their hands aſcending the Hill and running toward the Caſtle. Then he blew his Horn aloud, and cri'd out "Treaſon, treaſon, Riſe, riſe, to Arms, to Arms "quickly: For yonder come Men of War upon us. At this Alarm the Garriſon began to riſe and run to Arms in all haſt, they that firſt could, haſting down to the Caſtle Gates. But Sr. William Douglas and his twelve Companions ſo ſtoutly defended the Paſſage, by the help of thoſe Encumbrances, that lay on the Threſhold, that the Gate could not be cloſed again till the coming up of the Scots Ambuſh. Notwithſtanding they within endeavour'd to defend the Caſtle to the utmoſt, and hurt and ſlew ſeveral of the Scots, but at laſt by the obſtinate Valour of Douglas and his Men, joyned to the great Surpriſe the Engliſh were in and their Unpreparedneſs, many alſo giving all for loſt without Trial, the Caſtle was carried, all that oppoſed being maſter'd and ſlain, except the Maſter Sr. Richard Limeſi and ſix Engliſh Eſquires, who were taken Priſoners. The Scots tarried there all that Day to ſettle the Orders of the Caſtle, over which they made Sr. Simon Veſcy Captain, with a ſufficient Garriſon under him: The News of this Loſs with the Manner thereof, was brought to King Edward while he lay before Tournay.

[f] Froiſ. c. 55.

During this Siege before Tournay, Jacob van Arteveld had a Son born in Gaunt, to [g] Froiſ c. 379. fol. 257.

to whom Queen Philippa of England, who lay then in that City, was pleaſed to be Godmother, and gave him the Name of Philip: Which Philip van Arteveld in proceſs of time, became a famous Captain of the Rebellious Gantois againſt the Earl their Lord, as may be ſeen in Froiſard, and thoſe who write of the Wars of Flanders in that Age. AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

IX. Now it is to be remembred, that before we began to treat of the Siege of Tournay, we ſpake of another [h] Army of Flemings, which was appointed to ſit down in like manner before St. Omers, under the Conduct of the Lord Robert of Artois, commonly called the Earl of Richmond, and Sr. Henry Eam of Flanders: They were in all, what with thoſe from Ipres, from Poperinghe, from Meſſene, from Caſſel and Winoxbergen or Bergues St. Vinoc, 40000, or as others ſay 55000 Men. All who lay in the Vale of Caſſel in Tents and Pavilions to counter-garriſon the French, that were in St. Omers, Aire, St. Venant and other Fortreſſes thereabouts. In St. Omers eſpecially there was the Duke of Burgundy, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Kalingen, the Lord Montagne, the Lord Rochefort, the Vicount of Thoüars, and divers other Knights of Auvergne and Limoſin. And in Aire alſo and St. Venant, there were divers good Captains with ſufficient numbers of Men of War; who upon occaſion would frequently iſſue out and skirmiſh with the Flemings, when they found them divided.

[h] Vid. l. 1. c. 17. §. 1. p. 187.

One Day it fell out [i] that 6000 Flemings, whoſe Quarters were not aſſigned near the chief Commanders, of their own heads would needs go to the Suburbs of St. Omers; where they beat down divers Houſes and robbed them. When this matter was known in the Town, ſeveral of the Captains within armed themſelves, and privily iſſued out at another Gate with 6 Banners, two hundred Men of Arms and 600 Footmen. Who by an unknown way came ſuddenly upon the backs of the Flemings, at ſuch time as they were all ſcatter'd abroad, being wholly buſied in Robbing and Plundering the Town of Arques by St. Omers. The French came upon them in good Order of Battle, crying out couragiouſly, "Cleremont, the Dauphin of Auvergne! Whereat the Flemings being confounded, and having no time to rally, were beaten down by heaps. The Chace of them laſted for about two Leagues: So that in all there were ſlain above three Thouſand, four Hundred taken Priſoners, and led to St. Omers; and thoſe few, that by good Fortune and fleeteſt Horſes eſcaped, return'd to the Camp, where they made moſt heavy Complaint of their evil Adventure. When the Lord Robert of Artois, and Sr. Henry of Flanders heard of this Miſchance, they ſaid, "They were even ſerv'd well enough, for offering againſt the known "Rules of Martial Diſcipline, to go forth without Command, and without a good "Leader.

[i] Froiſ. c. 62.

That very Night, while all the Army was at reſt in the Camp, about Twelve of the Clock there fell upon the Flemiſh Hoſt a [k] Panick Terror and a general Conſternation without any viſible Cauſe: inſomuch that they all aroſe immediatly in great Fear, as it were with one conſent, and made ſuch haſt, as if they thought they ſhould never diſlodge: Wherefore they beat and cut down their Tents and Pavilions, and ſpeedily truſſed up their Carriages and ſo fled away, none waiting for another, but every one taking his readieſt way home without Order or Diſcretion. Surely had the French Garriſons thereabout known of this Affair, there had not one of them eſcaped away alive. But the Enemy could little imagin what their very Captains wondred at: For they at the beginning of this ſtrange Hurly-burly roſe haſtily, and made great Fires, and took Torches and mounted their Horſes, and came cheerfully before the Flemings, and call'd out to them ſaying, "Sirs what ails you? Do you want any thing? Doth any one "purſue you? Are you not ſecure of our Conduct? Come back again in the Name of "God; 'tis a great Shame to fly when no man purſues you. Many ſuch expoſtulations their Leaders had with them, but all in vain; for whatever they could ſay or do, every Man took the next way to his own Houſe. Wherefore the Lords and Captains alſo, when they ſaw there was no Redreſs, truſſed up their Harneſs and Baggage in Waggons, and returned to King Edward before Tournay, telling him of this ſtrange Adventure. The Accident made every Man wonder; ſome ſaid, they were mechanick and mean Spirits; others, that they were Sots and overcome with idle Dreams and Fancies: But the Truth is, they neither [l] lov'd their Chief Leader, the Lord Robert of Artois, nor were they willing at firſt to paſs out of their own Towns; but only to lie at home on the Defenſive Part; to which ill Humour their late Loſs adding a terror, which was heightned in their Fancies by the darkneſs and horrors of the Night, they might be eaſily diſpos'd to receive theſe Impreſſions.

[k] Vid. Peter de Loier's Treatiſe of Spectres. c. 6. p. 56. b. & 57. a. & c. 11. p. 110. &c.

[l] Holinſhead p. 911.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

Others relate this Matter otherwise; * namely, that a juſt Battle was fought between the Duke of Burgundy, and the Earl of Armagnac on the one Part, and the Lord Robert of Artois, and his Flemings on the other: Wherein the Flemings were at laſt worſted, and the Lord Robert of Artois after a ſtout Reſiſtance routed, with the Loſs of four Thouſand Men. But 'tis no way probable, that that Duke and Earl, who might hardly be ſuppos'd ſufficient to defend St. Omers, ſhould preſume to be able to give Battle to an Army of 55000 Men, under ſo good Leaders; at leaſt, unleſs at the ſame time, Detachments from all the French Garriſons thereabouts ſhould joyn them. And then 'tis ſo unlikely, that only 4000 of the Flemings were ſlain; that 'twould be a Miracle if ſo many eſcaped. But Indiſcreet and Partial Men, hoping to advance the Honour of their Country, fall upon ſenſeleſs and improbable Narrations, which others as careleſly Embrace upon their Authority: When as not only Froiſard, who lived in thoſe Days, and was both a Competent and Diligent Writer, but Reaſon alſo atteſts to the Truth of that other Account, which we have given: Nor is it a jot leſs Honourable for the ſaid Duke and Earl, with 800 Men to have ſlain 4000 of the Flemings, as we have witneſſed for them. But Our Sr. Richard Baker, after his uſual inconſiderate way, [m] ſays, that the Duke of Burgundy, and the Earl of Armagnac routed King Edward's Army, which conſiſted of 55000 Men before Tournay, and that two days after King Edward for vexation ſent his Chartel of Defiance to King Philip: When as 'tis ſo unfit a time for the Captain of a Routed Army to ſend a Challenge to a Prince, who is Victor, that 'tis Nonſenſe to imagine it: And theſe two Lords were by Teſtimony of all the French Writers in the Garriſon of St. Omers, and not at Tournay: And King Edward never had the leaſt ſign of Battle offer'd him all the Siege; and his Army conſiſted not of 55000, but of 120000, and the Challenge of King Edward, which he ſays, followed upon this Rout, preceded the very Siege, and this Rout too, as appears by the Date of King Edward's Letters, which bears the 17 of July; when Du Cheſne acknowledges the Rout at St. Omers to have fell ſo late as on the 25 of the ſaid Month: Thô [n] Giovanni Villani, a Perſon of more Credit, ſays it was on the 28 of July. But I ſhall hereafter take little Notice of that Mans Writing, becauſe the Authorities I ſhall bring, and the Contexture of the Story it ſelf will confute him among the Learned, and to others I write not: Thô I know he took this Account from Du Cheſne, and other French Authors, but even them he has corrupted and miſtook, as any Man may obſerve.

* Du Cheſne p. 651. &c.

[m] Sr. Rich. Baker p. 130.

[n] Villan. l. 11. *c.*110. *p.*769.

X. Theſe are the various Adventures, which moſt deſerve Memory, during the Siege of Tournay, that is for the ſpace of Nine Weeks and upward; King Edward all the while expecting to win the Place by Famine; for he knew well, there was a great Number of Mouths within, and not much Victuals; the Frenchmen as he knew, preſuming that the King of France would not ſuffer the Siege to continue ſo long, without endeavouring a Reſcue. Wherefore the King of England being ſtrongly encamped, and always prepared to give or receive Battle, reſolved to win the City by Famine: For this Wiſe and Pious Prince knew it would be too expenſive of Chriſtian Blood, to attempt ſo ſtrong a Place by Storm. Some thought however, that they could not have held out ſo long, had not the Duke of Brabant ſecretly favour'd them, and allow'd certain Quantities of Proviſion to be convey'd into the City thrô his Quarters; nay, there are, who ſtick not to affirm, that he was [o] brib'd and corrupted by the King of France's Money, and that being therefore ſuſpected by King Edward, he moſt willingly admitted of a Treaty, when 'twas offer'd him.

[o] Giovan. Villani l. 11. c. 111. *p.*770. & Mezeray 2 Part. 3 Tom. p. 17.

But it may be theſe were only vain and undutifull Reflections, caſt out by the idle People of Bruges and Louvain, and other Brabanders; who were both ill-affected to the Cauſe, and alſo grew ſo uneaſie with this long Siege, that they were not aſham'd openly to ask leave of the Marſhal of the Hoſt, to return home into Brabant. When the Marſhal heard ſuch an unworthy Requeſt, he told them, "that for his part he was very "well content they ſhould go; but then they muſt leave their Horſes and their Ar"mour behind them, leaſt thoſe, who ſaw them going home, ſhould ſay, there went a "ſort of Souldiers, who had left their General at a Siege, becauſe there were no Car"pets and Perfumes in the Field: With which nipping Retort they were ſo confounded, that they never more open'd their Mouths to their Captains about that Affair. And beſide this backwardneſs of the Brabanders, thoſe Officers, whom King Edward had entruſted to Collect his Taxes, and other Moneys in England for his Uſe beyond Sea, were ſo negligent and ſlow, if not falſe in that buſineſs, that they mightily perplext their Maſter thereby; and made him borrow vaſt Summs upon Uſury, and to enter into many Diſadvantagious Engagements for the Payment of his German Auxiliaries, and other Neceſſities conſequent upon the Siege.

Nor

Nor was King Philip of France without his Difficulties: For beſides, that it tormented his very Soul to ſee his Good Towns Beſieged, and ſpoiled in a manner before his Eyes, his Lords not ſuffering him to hazard a Battle for Revenging thereof; he is ſaid to have loſt, what by Skirmiſhes, and divers Rencounters with the Engliſh, and what by ill-diet and Famine (which may be wonder'd at, he being in his own Country) eſpecially for want of Water, by the [p] evil Air, hot Weather, and other Inconveniences, more than [q] 20000 Men: Without any ſet Battle.

XI. King Robert of Sicily being ſtill in thoſe Parts, was wonderfully aſſiduous in his Negotiations for Peace: The Pope by his Cardinals back'd him very cloſe; and eſpecially by an [r] Engliſhman, one of his Chaplains, named William Norwich Dean of Lincoln, and Auditor of the Cauſes of the Holy Palace, whoſe Credence from the Pope contained theſe Heads.

1. That he ſhould adviſe the King not to be too much puff'd up with his Victories, nor in confidence thereof, to ſhew himſelf ſtrange or difficult in admitting of Peace; by two Inſtances, of One who being 17 times beaten in War, yet the 18 time obtain'd an entire and abſolute Victory: And of Another, who having gain'd two Notable Victories, was the third time utterly Defeated and overthrown.

2. Secondly, To adviſe him of the Perfidiouſneſs of the Nation ally'd unto him, as the Flemings, who ſince they had deceived their own Natural Lord, would in all probabilitie much more deceive him, whom but accidentally, and for the preſent, they had received for their Lord. And that the Duke of Gueldre, and the Marqueſs of Juliers were like to ſerve him, only as far as they might ſerve their own ends: And leaſt of all ſhould he truſt to the Almaines, who always uſe to be accounted unſtable; and his Grandfather, the Good King Edward, found by Experience their Inſtability, in the time of his utmoſt Exigence.

3. Thirdly, Of the Exceſſive Power of the King of France, who thô he ſhould loſe Ten Battles in his Kingdom, could eaſily recollect People in abundance to reſiſt any body in all probability: Which yet in the King of England (being in another Kingdom, and in the Hands of Strangers, and not attended with his own People) is accounted Difficult, nay Impoſſible. And this appears by the Example of a certain King of England, who formerly had more in Revenues within the Realm of France, then the King of France himſelf had in his own Kingdom, and yet was quite expelled by Degrees. "And eſpecially, ſince the ſaid King of England's claim, as to the Realm of France, in "which he is reputed to have no Right, and as to certain Counties, in which by Pre"ſcription of an Hundred Years and more, the Kings of France have continually and qui"etly had Poſſeſſion, doth ſeem unjuſt: Wherefore it ſeems, that of Right he ought "to be content with the Dutchy of Guien, under that form, whereby the Lord Edward his "Grandfather held the ſame.

4. "Fourthly, To put him in mind of the Fear of God, which he always ought to bring "to Memory, by revolving in the Cloſet of his Breaſt, the Proceſſes and Cenſures made and "ſet forth againſt the Bavarian, which by the adhering to him, and aſſuming the Lieute"nantſhip of the Empire, he is known to have incurred: Upon which our foreſaid Lord "(the Pope) hath often writ to the ſame King, as well by Exhortation as Admonition, "and once intended Letters unto him, not as unto a Son, nor as one faithfull to the "Church; but as one that adhered to Rebells and Infidels. And eſpecially, becauſe "of the Incurſions of the Enemies of the Chriſtian Faith, who had begun on all Hands to "oppoſe Chriſtianity, as is particularly contained in the Letters of our ſaid Lord, he "ought to deſiſt from carrying on the ſaid War.

5. "Alſo in caſe that the King ſhould ſay, he not without Reaſon doubted, to put "himſelf unto the diſpoſe of our Lord (the Pope) eſpecially the Lords Cardinals be"ing his Aſſiſtants, the greater Part of whom, and in a manner all, are Natives of the "Kingdom of France, or there Beneficed, either in their own Perſons, or in the Per"ſons of their Nephews, and have Revenues as well in Temporals, as Spirituals, and "of whom a great part publiquely make againſt him as to the Affair now in Hand; "I ſhould in Anſwer thereto declare the Good Will which our Lord (the Pope) hath "particularly to the Perſon of the Lord, the King, and his Kingdom, and that in ſuch "Matters, not concerning the Church and its Patrimony, he is not wont to require "the Counſel of the Cardinals: And in this Affair, if it ſhould be refer'd to him, he "would not care to require Counſel of others. Beſides this, the Pope exhorted thoſe of the Privy Council to both Kings, to perſwade them unto Peace, particularly to the Engliſh Lords, among other things he wrote thus, "We deſire and require, and exhort "You all in the Lord, that having before Your eyes God alone, to whom all Hearts are "open,

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[p] Froiſ. c. 63. fol. 35.
[q] Fox Monum. p. 348. b. n. 60.
[r] Odoric. Rainald. ad An. 1340 §. 29.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

"open, and all desires are known, and from whom no secret is hid, as to such and such "hazardous Matters, concerning, as is premised, the state of all Christendom, what You "shall with Good and Right Consciences believe to be wholsome, profitable, and ex- "pedient to the said King, his Weal, Honour, and Profit, and also to Christendom a- "foresaid, You would endeavour to perswade and advise him. Dat. Avin. VII. Kal. Septemb. An°. Pontificatûs nostri VI. But all this had signified little to King Edward (who was sensible of the Loss he always suffer'd by these Treaties, which were then most vigorously offer'd, when some Great Advantage was in his Hands) had not there been a Lady of High Quality, and Wonderfull Vertue and Piety, whose Tears and Prayers could not be lost upon a Man, whose heart was acquainted with Pity.

This was the Lady [f] Jane of Valois, Countess Dowager of Hainault, Holland, and Zealand, Sister-German to King Philip, and own Mother to Philippa Queen of England. Who since the Death of her Husband William, the Good, late Earl of Hainault, had withdrawn her self from the World, and entred the Abbey of Fontaine au Tertre, resolving there to spend the Residue of her Life in Works of Charity and Devotion. This Pious Lady (as the Greek Poets Report of Jocasta, when Polynices and Eteocles were prepared for Battle, and as our [t] English Poets Relate of the Mother of Belinus and Brennus, two Brittish Princes, when they were ready by unbrotherly War to decide the Right of a Kingdom) went assiduously with great Zeal and Diligence between the two Kings, humbly kneeling to the King of France her Brother, whose Haughty and Resolute Temper she well knew, and sweetly, like a Vertuous Mother intermixing with her Son-in-Law King Edward, Commands and Prayers, and moving Tears, and convincing Arguments; at the same time labouring with the Duke of Brabant, whose Son was to have Married one of her Daughters, but for a Trick of King Philips; and also with her Son-in-Law the Marquess of Juliers, and with her late Husbands Brother the Lord John of Hainalt, to joyn with her to move King Edward to accept of a Truce, thô never so short. At last by the Aid and Counsel of the Lord Lewis D' Augemont, who was equally acceptable to both Parties, she so far prevail'd, that both the Kings agreed to send to a certain Place 4 or 5 Commissioners a piece, to propose and consider of some Moderate and Equal Way to decide the Matter: For which Treaty a Truce was to be had for three Days; the said Persons, the Commissioners from both Parties, to Meet and Treat each day about the Premises, in a little Church or Chappel, standing in the Fields of Spetelin.

[f] Froiss. c.63.

[t] Warner's Albion's England l.3. c.16. p.73.

On Saturday the 23d. of September there came accordingly to the Place appointed, on the French Part, the Venerable Old Prince, John King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburgh, Adolph Bishop of Liege, Reginald Duke of Lorrain, Amè Earl of Savoy, and John Earl of Armagnac; on the English Part, came John Duke of Brabant, Henry Bishop of Lincoln, Reginald Duke of Gueldre, William Marquess of Juliers, and Earl of Cambridge, and Sr. John of Hainalt Lord Beaumont. All these at their first Meeting in the Chappel aforesaid, began [u] with many Mutual Salutations, and endearing Caresses, as if they had been sworn Friends all their Lives: Thence they fell upon the Mater in Hand, and began to Propound and to Weigh divers Offers and Concessions, and all the while the Incomparable Lady Jane of Valois was by, earnestly entreating them for Godsake to lay aside all Prejudice, and only to consider the Publique Good, and the Weal of Christendom, and be ready to accept of what should seem just and indifferent. But for the first Day there was little or no Advancement made: However they brake up with a Mutual Promise to Meet again at such an Hour the next Morning, and in Conformity to the Day, to dispose themselves towards the Entertainment of Unity and Peace: Accordingly they Met, and did at last unanimously Agree on certain Articles and Methods; but not being able to draw them up at that time, and to Compleat the whole Affair, as it ought to be, they deferred the Consummation of all till the last Day. So being all Met again the Third Day, they fully Agreed to hold inviolably a Truce for them and their Allies, till the Feast of St. John Baptist following, during which Term [x] certain Commissioners on both sides were to be sent to Arras, whither also the Bishop of Rome was to send certain Cardinals, all these being to consult together about a Full Ratification of a Final Peace between the two Kings: The Form of the Truce was this.

[u] Froiss. c.63.

[x] Froiss. c.63. fol. 35.

[y] Knighton p. 2578. n.44. Atouz ceux que ceſtez preſentez lettrez verront oue oieront, Jean par la Grace, &c.

"John, by the Grace of God, King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburgh, Adolph "Bishop of Liege, Reginald Duke of Lorrain, Amè Earl of Savoy, and John Earl of "Armagnac, to all who shall see or hear these present Letters, Greeting. Be it known unto "all, that a Truce is given and confirmed between the High and Mighty Princes, the "Kings of France and of England, for Them and for all their Friends, by the Assent of "the

" the High and Mighty Lords, the Duke of Brabant, the Duke of Gueldre, the Mar" quess of Juliers, and Sr. John of Hainalt Lord of Beaumont, on the one Party, and
" of Us and of every of Us above-written on the other Party, By vertue of Power
" delegated to Us, and to those abovenamed from the said Kings: So that we have " drawn up Affiances with our own Hands, between the said Kings, their Friends and " Allies, whosoever they be, to endure to both Parties, from this time untill the Na" tivity of St. John Baptist next ensuing, and all that Day till the next Morning at " Sun-rise, in manner and form following, that is to say.

1. " That [a] during the said Truce, no evil Will or Mistrust of either Party of it self " shall be prejudicial to the said Truce and Respit.

[a] Knighton p. ibid. & Fox Acts and Mon. p. 348 Du Chesne. p. 653. c.

2. Item, That during the said Truce, either of the said Princes, their Helpers, Co-
" adjutors and Allies whosoever, shall remain in such Possession and Seisin, as they have
" at this Time, of all Goods, Lands and Possessions, which they hold and have con-" quer'd, howsoever.

3. " Item, It is accorded that during the said Truce, the said Princes, their Aiders,
" Coadjutors and Allies, may safely go from one Country to another, and all Mer" chants with all their Merchandise, and all manner of their Subjects, with their Goods
" and Purveyances, as well by Land as by Sea and by Water, freely, as they were " wont in the times of the Ancestors of the said Kings, only paying therefore the Cu-
" stomes anciently used: Except such banish'd Men, or any of them as have been ba" nished out of the said Realms for other Causes, than the Wars between the said Prin" ces. But that the Barons of Gascoign, and of the Dutchy of Guienne, and other Per" sons of Gascoign and of the Dutchy, that are banished, may be compriſed in this
" Truce, so as freely to come and go from one Country to another, during the said " Truce.

4. " Item, It is accorded, that the said two Kings shall not procure, nor cause to " be procured, either by Themselves or by any Other, that any new Practice or Grie" vance be made by the Bishop of Rome, or Others belonging to Holy Church whatso" ever, upon or against either of the said Kings, their Coadjutors or Allies, or upon " their Lands or Subjects, by Occasion of the said War, or any other Cause, nor for " Services, which the said Allies or Coadjutors have done to the said Kings, or either " of Them. And that if our Holy Father the Pope, or any Other, will do against " the Premises, the two Kings shall hinder him or them to their Power, without any " fraud, during the said Truce.

5. " Item, That the Truce be immediatly proclaim'd in both the Hosts, that all " who know and hear it, may be obliged to keep and observe it.

6. " Item, It is agreed, that within 20 Days, to begin from this day, either " of the Kings shall cause to be proclaim'd in Gascoign and the Dutchy of Aquitaine,
" in the Lands which they hold, the Articles of this Truce, that they may be known and " understood.

7. " Item, It is agreed, that if by either of the said Kings, their Subjects, Coadju-
" tors or Allies, any Siege be laid in Gascoign, in the Dutchy of Aquitain, or in the " Isles of the Sea, in Garnsey or Jersey, the same Sieges shall be raised, as soon as " this Truce shall come to their Cognizance. And that [a] Fourteen Persons, to wit,
" Seven for each of the Kings shall enter every Town, Castle and Fortress, where the " Sieges shall be, and shall view their Store of Provision both of Men and Victuals,
" to the intent, that on the Day when the Truce shall end, the said Towns, Castles,
" and Fortresses shall remain, and be furnished with the like Number of Men, and the " like Quantity of Victuals, as at first they were found to be by the foresaid fourteen " Persons.

[a] This is omitted in Fox, who also varies not a little from the Original French, both here and elsewhere, &c.

8. " Item, It is accorded, that the Banished and Fugitives of the Country of " Flanders, that have been on the Part of the King of France, [b] shall not return du" ring the Truce, and if they do, they shall forfeit all the Goods they have in Flanders.

[b] Here the old French a little imperfect.

9. " Item, It is accorded, that during the said Truce, all Prisoners taken in this War,
" shall be released from their Prisons, upon their Faith and Oath to return thither a" gain, if they shall not be ransomed within the term of the said Truce; so as if the " said Prisoners shall deny in their due times to return themselves back to Prison, the " said Truce failing, that then upon the failure of every Prisoner, his Lord shall con-
" strain him to come and make restitution of his Person: So that the Levies which " were made before this Truce in time of War, whether they be Goods Spiritual or o" therwise, shall remain without making Restitution during the Truce.

10. " Item, It is agreed, that a Truce be forthwith taken between the English and
" the

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

"the Scots, their Aiders and Allies, untill the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt aforeſaid: "And that certain Perſons ſhall be deputed by the ſaid Parties to be at a certain Day "on the Marches of England and Scotland, to vouch and ſtand to the ſaid Truce: "[c] But if the Scots, or any other of the Allies on either Side, ſhall refuſe to admit of this "Truce, let them be at their own Choice; however France, Picardy, Burgundy, Bre- "tagn and Normandy, ſhall be bound to this Peace without any Exception: So that "during the Truce however, the Scots ſhall obtain no manner of Aid or Reinforcement "from the French.

[c] Froiſ. c. 63. fol. 35.

11. "Item, It is accorded, that this Truce ſhall be proclaimed in England and Scot- "land, within 26 Days after the Date of theſe Letters.

12. "Item, it is accorded, that within this Truce ſhall be included and compriſed "the Spaniard, the Catalaunian, the Genoueſe, the Provincial, the Biſhop and Chapter of "Cambray, and the Caſtles in Cambreſis, as alſo the Lord of Albret, the Vicount of Fron- "ſac, Gaſton Lord of Lille, the Lord of Tricouleon, Sr. John Vernon, and the Lord of "Roye: In Witneſs whereof We the foreſaid John King of Bohemia, &c. on the one Party and on the other, have Sealed this Inſtrument of Truce and Peace, and deliver'd the ſame accordingly in the Church of Spetelin on Monday the 25 of September, in the Year of Grace MCCCXL.

B. A. Dom. Lit.

[d] Beſides there was at this time Conſideration taken of the Flemings, the Summ of Mony, wherein they ſtood bound to the Pope and the French King, being now releaſed unto them: And as by King Philips means they had before been Excommunicated, ſo now at his Requeſt the Interdict was repealed, and they again received into the Boſom of the Church; Lewis Earl of Flanders, being thereupon reſtored to his Country.

[d] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 912.

[e] It was moreover at this Treaty reſolv'd, that either Party ſhould ſend four or five Perſons, as their Commiſſioners to meet at Arras, whither alſo the Biſhop of Rome was to ſend 2 more, who all together were to conſult in order to a full Confirmation of the Peace between the Two Kings.

[e] Froiſ. c. 63. fol. 35.

XII. The Contents of this Truce were immediately proclaimed in both Armies, whereof the Brabanders eſpecially were wonderfull glad: For they came at firſt but with an ill Will to the War, and were now quite tired out with the length of the Siege: So that the very next Morning with the light, ye might have ſeen Tents taken down, Carts and Waggons lading, and People removing with all ſpeed imaginable.

The Brabanders therefore went away firſt, as being more eagerly bent upon home, the King of England, thô much againſt his Will departed alſo; but he was ſo earneſtly parſwaded to the Truce, both by his real and falſe Friends, and alſo by the neceſſity of his Affairs, that he could not but comply: And the King of France had ſo much of the bad Air and hot Weather already, that he was glad to make haſt away from that unfortunate Place.

Thus was the ſtrong City of Tournay wonderfully preſerved from utter Ruine, without Battle given, only by the power of a Ladies Tongue, and by the Providence of the Divine Goodneſs; which even yet ſeem'd deſirous to give further Warning to King Philip, and as it were to offer him one more Opportunity for Deliberation: Before it would reſign his Kingdom up to thoſe Deſtructions, for which already it was marked out. Yet notwithſtanding [f] the City had been ſo reduc'd, that their whole Proviſion of Victuals could not, as was ſaid, have held out above three or four Days longer.

[f] Froiſ. ibid.

So in France it was reckon'd, that King Philip had the chief Honour of this Expedition, becauſe he had, as he deſign'd, ſaved Tournay from ruine, and obliged her Enemies to forſake the Siege and to depart the Country. On the other Hand, the Lords of England ſaid, how they had the Honour only, becauſe they had tarried ſo long in the Realm of France without Battle, having for more than nine Weeks beſieged one of the beſt Towns thereof, waſting and deſtroying about in the Country all the while at their pleaſure; and that the French King had not once offer'd to relieve the Place at the time prefix'd in his Letters; but had in the end, without giving Battle, as he ought to have done, firſt himſelf ſought, and after agreed to a Truce with them, who had done him all this Diſpleaſure.

[g] Froiſ. ibid.

King Edward [g] went from Tournay directly for Gaunt, where he found his Vertuous and Beautifull Queen in good Health; with whom about two Months after he went privately for England, as we ſhall ſhew in due place, all his Men being Order'd to follow, except thoſe Lords, who were to be at the Parliament at Arras. King Philip for his Part diſmiſt the Main of his Army, and himſelf went firſt to Lille; whither the Burgeſſes of Tournay came to wait upon him: He received them very Graciouſly, and ſhewed shewed them much favour upon the account of their Hazard for his Sake, restoring unto them at this time all their former Privileges, and adding to them several New ones to their great Satisfaction; for a while before he had upon some Displeasure taken away their Charter, and set over them the Lord Godmar du Fay and other Captains successively to be their Governours. But now for their late approved Loyalty and Valour they had their old Form of Government restored, and leave to choose a new Provost and Jurats according to their Ancient Customs. All which being done and ratified, the King went from Lille to Paris.

AN. DOM. 1340. An Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

XIII. While King Edward tarried yet at Gaunt, he [h] wrote unto the Pope a Letter, wherein thanking him for his diligence in Labouring after a Peace between the two Realms, which he himself also mightily desired, that thereby he might be at liberty to prosecute the Holy War against the common Enemies of Christendom; and declaring, how at the importunate Instances of some, he had accordingly condescended to a Truce, even then when he had almost reduced Tournay to the last Extremity; he shews, that upon sight of his Holinesses Letters he had prolonged the Term of the Truce, that thereby he might give his Holiness fuller Information of his own Intentions, and also of the Equity of his Cause; requiring thereupon his Advice, which he should be ready to embrace: Also that he had sent his Envoys to the Apostolick See, to return Thanks to his Holiness for his Diligence in obtaining the Liberty of Nicolas de Flisco, desiring God Almighty to preserve his Holiness in the Government of his Holy Church many and happy Days. Datum apud Gandavum 19no Novembris, Anno Regni nostri Franciæ Primo, Regni verò nostri Angliæ Quartodecimo. At which time also he sent unto his Holiness the following Justification of Himself and his Cause, [i] "These are the things in effect, which are reported unto You, Most Holy "Father our Lord, by Us, William of Norwich Dean of Lincoln, John Hufford Arch-"deacon of Ely, and John Thoresby Canon of Southwell, on the Behalf of our Lord, "the Illustrious King of England: Most Holy Father and Lord, that your Holiness "may be more fully informed of the sincere and just intention of our said Lord the "King, which is ever prone and ready to accept of a Reasonable Peace, something "in Fact is to be opened. The Lord Philip, who now bears himself as King of France, "from the time that he first occupied the Realm of France, verily believing, nor "without Reason, that our said Lord the King directed the Eyes of his mind toward "the Kingdom of France, or at least would afterwards look that Way, was pleased, "what in the Parts of Scotland, by really Adhering to the Scots, and what in the Dut-"chy of Guienne, by there Usurping many Places, so continually and strongly to divert "him, that he should have no leisure to intend to the Recovery of his Rights in "France. And because he being under Age, and having no skill in the matter of his "Right, nor Experience as to what he was to do, especially because of the foresaid "Snares, as is premised, prepared for him, had not untill of late any way open of du-"ly prosecuting his Rights, as to his said Kingdom of France: Our said Lord the "King, desiring Peace and Quiet, offer'd unto the said Lord Philip the Methods here "under-named, only for the Recovery of the Dutchy aforesaid, and that he would "absolutely refrain from Assisting the Scots: Viz. First, the Marriage of his Eldest Son for a Daughter of the Lord Philip, to be Coupled with him in Matrimony without any Dowry: Secondly, the Marriage of his own Sister, now Lady of Gueldre, for a Son of the said Lord Philip with a great and excessive Dowry: Thirdly, the Marriage of his own Brother, the Earl of Cornwall, for some one Kinswoman of his: Fourthly, to redeem the Seisure of his Lands, he offer'd unto him a Summ of Mony to be adjusted at the Discretion of the said Lord Philip: Fifthly, because the said Lord Philip pretended, that he would cross the Seas to the Aid of the Holy Land, our said Lord the King, out of the great Zeal which he always had and hath to undertake this Holy Expedition, offer'd to be ready to undertake the said Expedition with him, and to grant a reasonable and final Truce to the Scots, on that Condition, that the said Lord Philip would faithfully promise him after their Return, to do him full Justice as to the Dutchy. But he, despising and rejecting Conditions so reasonable, nay more than reasonable, answer'd, That he would do nothing, untill he had given unto all the Scots, as well those that were Living, as unto the Heirs of the Dead, full Satisfaction for all Places which in his time he had by force taken in Scotland. And when the Messengers of our said Lord the King answer'd, that as to that Point they were not empower'd, nor did they believe, how their said Lord the King would do it; the Lord Philip answered in these Words, "It will never be well, untill there be one King of "both the Realms of France and England. This the Lord Arch-bishop of Canterbury declared [h] Odoric. Raynald. An. 1340. §. 33. ad §. 37.

[i] Extat apud Benedict. Tom. 2. Epistol. 114. in Bib. Vatican. & Odoric. Raynald. ibid.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

clared publiquely, before a great Number of Prelates, Earls, Barons and Others.

"Our Lord the King hearing theſe things, being then come to Years of Diſcretion, "cauſed a Parliament to be called; wherein by the Advice and Conſent of all the Pre- "lates, Earls, Barons, and other Nobles, and of the Commons there preſent, and eſpe- "cially of the ſaid Lord of Canterbury, particularly inſiſting thereupon, it was Ordain- "ed, that ſince by the way of Humility he could not obtain Peace; and by the Sen- "tence and Deciſion of the Doctors and Advocates, as well of the Court of Rome, "as of the Students of Paris and Oxford, and others, and alſo of all the more Expert "and Famous Prelates of England, with whom he had cauſed his Right to be carefully "diſcuſſed, the ſaid Kingdom of France, by the Death of his Uncle, the Lord Charles "laſt King of France, of Famous Memory, was Lawfully by Right of Succeſſion de- "volved unto him, as the next Heir Male: He ſhould take Care effectually to proſe- "cute even by a ſtrong Hand his foreſaid Right. And that this he might do more ſe- "curely and ſecretly, there were ſworn there-to the Lords, Canterbury, Lincoln, Lon- "don, Salisbury, Litchfield, and many other Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other No- "bles, Peers of the Realm, upon the Croſs of the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury "aforeſaid.

"Alſo among other things it was Ordained, that the Alliances ſhould be made in "Almaine, which are now made, and that the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, taking unto "him certain Noblemen of England, ſhould be conſtituted Agent for the perfecting thoſe "Alliances aforeſaid: Who by Ordinance of the ſaid Parliament, and by the Command "of our ſaid Lord the King, being ſo obliged, accepted the ſame Office of Agent, and "brought it to effect. Which done, our ſaid Lord the King, in purſuance of the Coun- "ſel aforeſaid, paſſed the Sea, and waſted certain Parts of the Realm of France with an "Army of his own, and of certain his Allies. Afterwards the Winter Seaſon approach- "ing, our ſaid Lord the King being Returned into England, heard that there was a great "Fleet of Ships prepared on the Sea, for a ſudden Invaſion of him and his. Who by the "Counſel of his Friends, his then-Aſſiſtants, and principally of the foreſaid Lord Canterbury, "ſpeedily prepared himſelf to ſcour the Seas, and expos'd himſelf to go over without Pro- "viſion of Money, or Horſes, chiefly upon Confidence of the ſaid Lord Canterbury, who had "promiſed within certain and few days to ſend him Money enough: And paſſing the Seas, he "found his Enemies upon the Sea, near the Haven, where he deſigned to Land, and obtain'd "that Victory which God gave him.

"Who afterwards taking Land on Confidence of the foreſaid promiſe, with a Mighty "Multitude of Armed Men Beſieged the City of Tournay, and there having ſat a great "while deſtitute of all Aid of Money, althô at the Importunate Inſtance of many, yet in "very deed being forced by the only failure of Money, he conſented to take a Truce, as be- "ing in the greateſt Danger and utmoſt point of Neceſſity, ſince as he ſaid, he had not "all the time of the Siege received one Penny out of England; and further, unfolding "his Opinion againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop, he ſaid theſe Words; "I verily believe that "the Archbiſhop would, that for want of Money, I had been ruin'd and ſlain: And "further he hath privately ſaid to me, ſuch things of my Wife; and on the other "Hand hath ſaid to my Wife ſuch things of me, for which if he had been credited, he "had provoked Us to ſuch Mutual Diſcord, that there would have been a perpetual "Diviſion between Us. Truly, Holy Father, our Lord the King hath often remem- "bred all thoſe things, touching the Lord Archbiſhop, to me William Norwich, as well "apart, as before others of his Council, and ſtrictly enjoyn'd me upon Oath, that I "ſhould fully and faithfully Report them to your Holineſs. Thoſe things, moſt Holy "Father, namely, that our Lord the King, conſented to a Truce for want of Money, and "what Relates to the Lord Archbiſhop, if it pleaſe You may be kept ſecret: All the reſt "may be made Publick.

At the ſame time theſe Negotiators declared King Edward's Reſolutions in theſe Words; "Moſt Holy Father and Lord; that He may particularly and nakedly open "his Mind to your Clemency, he ſignifies unto your Holineſs, that he Challenges, and "intends to Challenge the whole Realm of France, as Lawfully due, and devolved un- "to him by Hereditary Right: But for the Reverence of You, and of the Apoſtolick "See, and to avoid the Perils, which in all probability will happen by continuance of "the Wars, he is ready to Treat of Peace, and to conſent to a Good Peace; but ſo, "as that in the Treaty of Peace to be made, conſideration be had, as to the Right pro- "portionable unto him in the ſaid Kingdom; and not only as to the Dutchy, becauſe "with the whole Dutchy alone, althô free from all Service and Subjection of any One, "he intends not to be contented.

"And

"And moreover, because your Holiness being Highly sollicitous for the Reforma- "tion of Peace, have offer'd your self by your Letters, to Labour in your own Per- "son at the Apostolick Seat, if the Deputies of the Parties be therefore sent to your "Court; or by others, as it may be Honestly and Profitably done; our Lord the King, "out of his great Confidence, and Devout Reverence, consents, that this may be in "your Holinesses choice. AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

These were King Edward's peremptory Demands; so that there appear'd no way of a Final Agreement. Nay, it was to be expected, that King Philip upon hearing thereof would be inflam'd the more: Wherefore the Pope advis'd him to be more moderate in his Demands; for the King of France was so far from granting thus much, that in his [k] Letters to the Pope, he only gave him Liberty to declare a Restitution of those Lands of Aquitain, which had been Won by his Father Charles of Valois, in the time of Charles IV. (When King Edward II. refus'd to give him Homage; from the withholding of which we have seen the first Causes of Dissention, between the two Kings, to have flow'd) or of what had been forceably taken by King Philip himself in this last War. Thus were both the Kings disposed in their Minds: So that little Good was to be expected from any Treaty.

[k] Extant apud Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc annum §. 38.

And now came the time, wherein by the Articles of the Truce, the Parliament was appointed to be at Arras, the Chief City of Artois, lying upon the River of Scarpe: When there came thither from the Pope ([l] who in this Cause was not to be look'd on as a Judge, but only as an indifferent Friend to the Common Peace) the Cardinal of Naples, and the Cardinal of Cleremont, commonly so called, thô they had only been Bishops of those Titles, before they were made Cardinals. These Legates going first to Paris, where they confer'd with the King, came now to Arras together with the French Commissioners, who were Charles de Valois Earl of Alancon, King Philips own Brother, Peter Duke of Bourbon, Lewis Earl of Flanders, Guy Castilion Earl of Blois, the Archbishop of Senes, the Bishop of Beauvais, and the Bishop of Auxerre: They were met by seven of King Edward's Delegates, who were Dr. Henry Burwash Bishop of Lincoln, Dr. Richard Bury Bishop of Durham, Henry Plantagenet Earl of Darby, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, Robert of Artois Earl of Richmond, Sr. John of Hainault Lord of Beaumont, and Sr. Henry Eam of Flanders. All these held a Treaty together for 15 days; but yet they perform'd but little, as to a Final Composition; for the English Demands were too High, and the French Concessions too low, they yielding to offer nothing but the [m] Earldom of Ponthieu, which was his Mothers Dowry. However they now made shift to prolong the Truce, then in being, for two Years more; and farther than this, the Cardinals could not perswade them. Wherefore thus much being done, and duly Ratified, the Council brake up, and the Cardinals at the Lord John of Hainalts desire, passed homeward thrô that Country, where by him and the Earl they were Feasted Nobly.

[l] Gaguin. p. 139.

[m] Froiss. c. 63. ibid.

Now according to the Ninth Article of the foremention'd Truce, the Earl of Salisbury, and [n] Robert Hufford le Fitz, Eldest Son to the Earl of Suffolk, were released from their Imprisonment, a Ransome being appointed, which they were to pay before the end of the said Truce, or else render up their Bodies to Prison. But here Authors make no small confusion, some alledging, that the Earl of Salisbury was deliver'd in Exchange for the Earl of Murray, a Scot, which could not be till the latter end of the next Year, as we shall shew in due place: Others, confessing, that he was now deliver'd, do add, that immediately thereupon he went with many other English Knights to the Siege of Algezira in Spain, to help the Good King Alphonso against the Moors: And this is the saying of [o] Leland himself. But surely this followed the Siege of Vannes in Bretagne, and not of Tournay in Flanders: For as yet Alphonso had not Won the great Battle of Tartessos, of which by and by; and yet this Battle preceded the Siege of Algezira. However this is certain, * that the Earl of Salisbury was present at the next Parliament which sat in April following: Thô many such Matters having been so confusedly related by Authors, much Difficulty hath arose to Us in this Our Undertaking. Upon which Account the Intelligent Reader will pardon these Digressions, which seem necessary for the clearing of the Truth.

[n] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 48. b. Walsing. hist. p. 135. n. 10.

[o] Leland. Collect. 1 Vol. p. 805. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 646.

* Sr Rob. Cottons M.S. p. 44. §. 43. Godwins Catal. Bps. p. 136. &c.

XIV. Soon after the Prolongation of the Truce, the Famous Dr. Henry Burwash Bishop of Lincoln, [p] Departed this Life about the Festival of Christmas, at the City of Gaunt in Flanders, in the Service of the King his Master, to whom he was very Necessary. Of him [q] Walsingham Reports a divertive Story, which since [r] Sr. William Dugdale ventures to relate, I shall not scruple neither. He is said to have made a new Park at Tynghurst, wherein he enclosed much ground that belong'd to divers of his

[p] Godw. Catal. Bps. Linc. p. 304 Stow p. 238.

[q] Walsingh. hist. p. 150.

[r] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 35.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

his poor Tenants, who therefore purſued him with many a bitter Curſe: Now ſoon after his Death (ſay they) he appear'd unto a certain Perſon (who had been one of his Eſquires) in the Habit of a Keeper, with a Bowe, a Quiver of Arrows, his Horn by his ſide, and his cloathing was all in Green, to whom he ſaid, "Thou know'ſt, how "I've offended God, and injur'd the Poor, by encloſing this Park: Wherefore I am "enjoyned Penance to be the Keeper thereof, till theſe encloſures be laid open again. "Go therefore to my Brethren, the Canons of Lincoln, and entreat them from me, "to make Reſtitution to the Poor, of what I ſo unjuſtly took from them. The Canons upon this Meſſage ſent one of their Company named William Batchelor, to ſee the Dead Biſhops Will performed: Who accordingly cauſed the Banks and Pales to be thrown down, and the Ditches fill'd up again, and having ſo done, return'd by St. Albans, where he Related the whole Matter to Michael the Abbot of that Place. I ſhould not care to tell ſuch idle Stories, but that there may be Readers alſo of that Size, who will take pleaſure in ſuch Entertainment: But much leſs do I concern my ſelf in ſeriouſly confuting them. And yet I will not let this go thus, becauſe Walſingham (who was a Monk, and therefore thrô Prejudice or Ignorance, might either deceive, or be deceived) has noted him for a Covetous worldly wretch. For his Quality, he was Younger [f] Brother to the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh the Elder, and [t] Nephew to the Great Sr. Bartholomew Badleſmere, Baron of Leeds: For his Natural Abilities he was a Perſon of Good Learning, but of exceeding Great Skill in Politicks, as may be gather'd from his Prudent Menagement of Embaſſies, and other Publique Affairs. And as for his Charity (which is a Vertue directly Oppoſite to Avarice) We find, [u] that together with a Brother of his Sr. Robert Burwaſh, he was a Founder of a Grammar School in Lincoln, to which he left Maintenance for five poor Prieſts, and as many poor Scholars for ever. He had his Education at [x] Oxford, and had been [y] twice Lord Treaſurer of England, and for a while Lord Chancellour; till of his own Accord he Reſign'd that Place, becauſe of his Publique Employments, in which at laſt he Deceaſed at Gaunt; but was brought over Sea, and [z] Buried in Lincoln, at the Eaſt-end of his Cathedral toward the North: At whoſe Feet there lies his Brother Sr. Robert, who was a Great Souldier in his time, and alſo a Son of Sr. Robert's, Named, Bartholomew.

[f] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 35.
[t] Godw. Catal. Bps. p. 303.
[u] Godwin ibid. p. 304.
[x] Godw. p. 303.
[y] Philipot's Catal. Chancel. &c.
[z] Godw. p. 304.

There died alſo this Year two Famous Old Barons of England, the [a] One was Hugh Courtney Senior, Earl of Devonſhire, of almoſt 90 Years of Age; who left behind him his Son and Heir of the ſame Name, then about Thirty three Years Old. The Other was the * Lord Henry Vicount Beaumont, Earl of Buquhan in Scotland: He left behind him John his Son and Heir, then Twenty two Years of Age, and a young Daughter, Named Elizabeth, afterwards Married to Sr. Nicolas Audley, Son and Heir to the Lord James Audley of Heley. Beſides theſe two, there Died about the ſame Time at Gaunt, in the Kings Service, the Lord Chief Juſtice of England, Sr. Geoffry Scroop: He had been very Loyal to King Edward the Second, as appeared by the joynt Teſtimonies of the Prelates, Earls, and Barons in [b] Parliament; whereupon he Obtain'd much Grace with King Edward the Third, whom he alſo Served till his Death with Indefatigable Induſtry, Admirable Diſcretion, and Untainted Loyalty: In Conſideration whereof among other Princely Favours beſtow'd on him, we find, that the King Advanced him to the Degree of a [c] Knight Banneret, with a Gift of two Hundred Marks per annum for his better Support, and that but this very Year he [d] gave unto him the Great Houſe call'd the Erbar, by the Church of St. Mary Bothaw, near Dowgate-Street in London. He left behind him together with a Good Name, and a Plentifull Eſtate, Henry his Son and Heir, at that Time Twenty five Years of Age, who prov'd a Valiant and Noble Knight in his Days, and John a Younger Son, who many Years after Married Elizabeth one of the Daughters and Coheirs of David Strabolgi, Son to David Earl of Athol, ſlain in Scotland five Years before.

[a] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 639.
* Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 52.
[b] Pat. 1. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 22.
[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 658.
[d] Stow's Survey Lond. p. 249.

We ſhall conclude this Chapter with a ſhort Relation of a moſt ſignal Victory obtain'd this Year on the 30 of October over the Saracens, Moors and Africans in Spain. In the foregoing Year [e] Alphonſo XI. King of Caſtille and Leon, being hardly put to it by the Barbarians, begg'd aid of the Pope and all the Great Princes of Chriſtendom. From France and England went but few or none, becauſe of the Wars then hot between the two Realms: But from other Parts many gallant Knights and Gentlemen went againſt thoſe Enemies of God, being eſpecially encouraged thereto by the Pope's Bulls, wherein he granted large Indulgences to thoſe, who undertook this Expedition. Alphonſo therefore being now reinforced with a ſmall, but well-compacted Army, and joyned joyned with his Neighbour Alphonso the Brave, King of Portugall, gave Battle to the Moors in the Plains of Tarteſſos, vulgarly called Tariffa, from a Town of that Name in the Bætic Province, which enclines to the River called Rio Salado, near the Herculean Sea. The Forces of Alphonso were 35000 Foot and 14000 Horſe; but the Army of Allibohacen King of Morocco, with thoſe of Granada, under their Miramolin, and three other Kings of the Moors, conſiſted of 600000 Foot and 80000 Horſe. And yet thrô the Divine Aſſiſtance the Chriſtians wan the Day, and with the Loſs of no more than [g] 20 Men, ſlew in the Fight and in the Chace above [h] 200000 of the Infidels, beſides an incredible number of Priſoners taken: Thô Others reckon no leſs than 450000 to have fallen that Day; among whom were two of the Sons of Allibohacen. In Memory of which Miraculous Victory the ſaid 30 of October hath ever ſince been kept as an high Feſtival in Spain, being dedicated to the Honour of the Holy Croſs, which was at this time ſo ſucceſsfully advanced againſt the Enemies of Chriſtendom. King Alphonso after this Exploit, having firſt and chiefly return'd his Thanks to Almighty God, now alſo in token of his Gratitude to the Pope, ſends him for a Preſent to Avignon, out of the Spoils he had taken, an 100 gallant Horſes of Barbary in rich Trappings, with an 100 Saracen Slaves to lead them, an 100 Moriſco Cimitars, and an 100 Shields of Tann'd Leather plated: Alſo 24 Military Enſignes, and the Horſe and Standard of King Allibohacen, which he uſed in this War; together with many rich Veſſels of Gold, and Silver, and Jewels of great Price, beſides his own Horſe, on which he fought, and his own Royal Standard, which he follow'd in that Battle. [i] John Martin Don Leyva and Pedro Didaci de Corduba the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors, who brought all theſe Preſents, were received with extraordinary Pomp by the Cardinals and other Prelates, at their entrance into Avignon. And the next day his Holineſs [k] himſelf celebrated Maſs, and after that made a notable Sermon, wherein with great Eloquence he magnifi'd the Kings Victory, and exhorted all preſent to praiſe God therefore, and to pray for the Kings Health and Perſeverance in Proſperity. And to enable him the better to maintain his Wars againſt the Moors, he then granted unto him the Thirds of the Tithes of all his Subjects; which the Kings of Spain enjoy to this Day. From this happy Succeſs of the two Alphonso's, Kings of Spain and Portugal, againſt Jutzeph King of Granada, and Allibohacen King of Morocco, the Pope took an Occaſion to exhort our King Edward of England to diſpoſe himſelf towards a [l] Peace with his Rival of France, that they might both unite their Forces againſt the general Enemies of Chriſtendom. Theſe Letters bear Date from Avignon, the xv of the Kalends of January, i.e. 18 of December in the Cloſe of this Year, being the VI of his Pontificate. The Copy of which Letter is to be ſeen in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Odoricus Raynaldus at this Year 1340. King Alphonso preſently after this Victory lays Siege to the great Town of Algezira, belonging to the Moors, and lying upon the Streights of Morocco, on the Frontiers of Granada: Which after a long Siege was enforced at laſt thrô Famine to yield to the Chriſtians. Thô ſtill the Saracens held Footing in that Kingdom, till having loſt the City of Granada to Ferdinando and Iſabella Kings of Spain, they were at laſt finally expelled that Kingdom by Philip III.

[e] Ciacon. & Victorell. de PP. Roman. p. 884. & p. 887.

Becauſe we may not diſturb the intended Order of our Diſcourſe, which follows in the next Chapter, we take leave in this place to tell the Reader, that the Fruitfull Young Queen of England, whom we ſhall ſhortly bring home with the King her Husband, was ſoon [m] after in the Tower of London deliver'd of a Fair Daughter, named Blanch, who to temper King Edwards Felicities, unfortunately died before ſhe was weaned, and lies buried at Weſtminſter.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[f] Joſ. Teixera de Orig. Reg. Port.
[g] Joh. Mariana l. 16 c. 7.
[h] Vaſæus Hiſt. Hiſp. Genebr. l. 4 Chronog. vid. Odoric. Raynal. ad hunc annum §. 40. uſque ad §. 56.

[i] Ita Literæ Pontif. gratulatoriæ ad Alphonſum nominant.
[k] Victorell. ib.

[l] Odoric. Raynald. ad ann. 1340. §. 55.

[m] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 135.

CHAPTER the EIGHTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward in great Diſpleaſure comes privately over into England, where he diſplaces and impriſons ſeveral of his Chief Miniſters of State. II. His Quarrel with the Archbiſhop, with the full State of the whole Caſe in Epitome. III. The Archbiſhop's bishop's Letter to the King. IV. The Archbishop's Letter to the Lord Chancellour. V. His Remonstrance to the King and his Council. VI. His Letter to the Bishop of London. VII. His Articles of Excommunication, which he publishes over all his Province. VIII. A Copy of the King's Letters to the Bishop of London in Defence of his Proceedings against the Archbishop. IX. The Archbishops Answer to the King, wherein he defends himself against all his Objections. X. The King's Reply to the Archbishop's Defence, which he sends to all the Suffragans of that Province, with absolute Command to obey the Archbishop in nothing contrary to his Pleasure; wherein we shall find a notable Instance even in those Times of the King's Supremacy and Jealousie of his Rights and Royal Prerogatives. XI. The Particulars of a Parliament at Westminster, wherein at the last the Archbishop upon his Submission is fully pardon'd and received into Favour.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

I. WE said before, that upon the Truce taken before Tournay, King Edward went to Gaunt, and how thence he returned into England: But now we are to take up that Thread again, and so to proceed in a further Discourse of his Affairs. While [a] he lay at Gaunt, Lewis Earl of Flanders, being now by vertue of the Truce restored to his Country, came thither to visit him: And for several Days he made great Cheer to him and his Queen, caressing and entertaining them with magnificent Feasts and Banquets. But King Edward took small Delight in such matters now; his Mind ran upon the Mony, which he dayly expected from England to pay off his Debts contracted beyond Sea; which having long look'd for in vain, pretending [b] that he would ride abroad for his Pleasure, he went suddenly into Zealand, where he took Ship privately, with only his Queen, and Eight more Persons of Quality in his Company, designing for England. But upon the Sea he met with a Storm, which for three days together tossed him too and fro with great fury, to the utter hazard of his Person. It is said, [c] that the Tempest was rais'd by certain Necromancers of France, who purpos'd thereby to destroy him; or at least to cool his Courage from passing the Seas any more. Whatever was the Occasion, this is certain, that as if King Edward had been only destin'd for the Kingdom of France, which he so greatly desired, it seem'd fatal for him always in his Passage thither to have calm Seas and Wind at will; but in his Return all things contrary; so that often he endur'd many great Losses and Shipwrecks. And this was his Fate, while his Fortune stood fair, but when he began to decline, he found the Wind so contrary to him, that by no means he could once set his Foot more in France. However now at last, this storm being happily abated, on the third Night being [d] St. Andrews, he arrived safe at shoar, and landed at the Tower of London about the Cock-crow. The Lords that came with him and the Queen, were the Earl of Northampton, the Lord Nicolas Cantilupe, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord John Darcy, the Lord Guy Beauchamp, Eldest Son to the Earl of Warwick, with the Lord John Beauchamp his Uncle, and two Chaplains, which were also his Secretaries, Dr. William Killesby, and Dr. William Weston, with their Servants only. Upon the King's entring the Tower, he found there no Guard ready, but only his Children and three Servants waiting on them. Wherefore in great Anger he sent for the Lord Nicolas de la Beche, Constable of the Tower, and committed him to Prison in the said place: As also he served at the same time Andrew Aubry Lord Mayor of London, the Lord Thomas Wake, Sr. John St. Paul Keeper of the great Seal, Sr. John Stonore Lord Chief Justice of the Kings Bench, Michael Wath, Henry Stratford, and Robert Chickwell Clerks of the Chancery, and Philip Thorp Clerk of the Exchequer: All whom he sent for and imprison'd, as he had done also to the Archbishop of Canterbury, if he could have got him. After this in several Parts of the Kingdom he caused to be taken and clapt up in divers Prisons, Sr. John Poltney Alderman of London, Sr. William de la Pole Baron of his Exchequer, Sr. William Shareshull, one of the Justices of the Kings Bench, Sr. Richard Willoughby Deputy Lord Chief Justice, Sr. John Shardelow, and Sr. Thomas Ferrers: Thô within a while after the Lord Wake was deliver'd with Honour, having no Fault fix'd upon him. The City of London during the Imprisonment of their Mayor was at the Kings Command govern'd by a Bayliff, as will appear hereafter. As for Dr. [f] Robert Stratford Bishop of Chichester, who was then Lord Chancellour of England, and Robert Northborough Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, then Lord Treasurer, he immediately discharged them of their Offices, threatning to send them into Flanders, there to lie as Pledges for Money, which he owed; or if they refus'd to go, to lay them in prison in the Tower. But upon the

[a] Holingshead Engl. Chron. p. 912. b.

[b] Stow p. 237.

[c] Grafton p. 247. & Fabian p. 216.

[d] 30 Novem.

[e] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 127.

[f] Philipot's Catal. Chancell. & Treas. p. 34.

Bishop

Biſhop of Chicheſter's Remonſtrance to him, [g] that he would then be in danger to incurr the Penalty of Pope Clements Canon, De non incarcerandis Epiſcopis, he relented and let them go free, thô deprived of their Offices; Sr. Robert [h] Bourchier ſucceeding in the Place of Lord Chancellour, and Sr. Richard Saddington in that of Treaſurer, and Dr. Killesby in the Place of Privy Seal, Sr. John St. Paul, the late Keeper being alſo diſcharged. All the Sheriffs alſo of Shires, and other Publique Officers were at this time removed, and new ones put in their Places: And certain Juſtices were appointed to enquire into the Faults of Collectors, and other Officers concerned in the Gathering the Taxes; ſo that few or none eſcaped unpuniſhed; ſo ſtrictly theſe New Juſtices proceeded in their Commiſſions. As for the [i] Lord John Molins, a Great and Noble Baron of the Realm, the incenſed Prince in the heat of his Diſpleaſure flang his Body into Priſon, and ſeiſed all his Lands into his own Hands, which thereupon were committed to the cuſtody of Sr. John Eldred; his Offence having been judged no leſs than Rebellion: Thô ſix years after the King being appeas'd, he was again received into Favour, and reſtoration of all his Lands made unto him. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury had ſurely felt as hard Meaſure as any of them, if not worſe: But by meer chance he was then gone from Lambeth; and when he underſtood what indignation he had incurr'd, wiſely kept aloof, till the Storm was over. As we ſhall ſhew at large hereafter.

AN. DOM. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

[g] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 912.
[h] Philipot's ibid. p. 34. & 38.
[i] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 146. b.

Certainly [k] at this time the Kings Mind was beyond Meaſure exaſperated againſt thoſe, whom he had intruſted to levy Monies here in England, and to ſend it over to him into Flanders: Becauſe thrô their Neglect, when he was juſt upon the point of obtaining Tournay, he was forced to accept of a Diſhonourable Truce, as Himſelf complains in his Letters, which we ſhall ſee by and by. And truly 'twas a great Pity, if thrô the Avarice, Fraud or Treaſon of his Officers at home, theſe things happen'd thus: For he was thereby enforced as it were, to conſent to loſe the faireſt Opportunity, and to let a certain Victory ſlip thrô his Fingers, even then, when his Friends were yet uncorrupted and in Preſence. And verily I doubt not but this was an Occaſion, which made the Emperour, and the Lords of Germany for the moſt part, to fall off from him ſhortly after: Becauſe they ſaw his Money come in ſo ſlowly at this great Exigence. Wherefore not unreaſonably doth honeſt Walſingham [l] bemoan, "That "ſo Worthy a Prince ſhould from his own Subjects find ſuch unworthy Dealing; "For (as he truly adds) if in very deed they had ſcann'd, and exactly weigh'd with "themſelves the Acts of all the Engliſh Kings, from the Firſt Monarch to that Day, "they would not have found that ever this Iſland brought forth a Prince of ſuch "Mature Vertue at ſo unripe an Age; he not having compleated 28 Years.

[k] Holinſhead ibid. p. 913.
[l] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 135. n. 25.

II. Now that we may State the Archbiſhops Caſe Right, We are to take Notice, that as he was at firſt a great Promoter of the Wars with France, ſo lately [m] by the Perſwaſions and Threats of the Pope, he was brought over to be at leaſt cold in the Affair: Whereby he mightily incenſed the Minds of all Men againſt him, who abhorr'd this Weakneſs and Inconſtancy. Theſe things being known, while King Edward lay before Tournay, Henry Burwaſh then Biſhop of Lincoln, and Sr. Geoffry Scroop Lord Chief Juſtice, who both, when living, ſecretly maligned the Archbiſhop, inflam'd the Kings Mind more vehemently againſt him, and laid to his Charge no leſs than flat Treaſon, and that he had Conſpired with the French King. Upon theſe Preſumptions, and urg'd by his Neceſſities, the King as we ſhew'd, came Incognito into England, and Landed about One in the Morning at the Tower of London, without the leaſt Rumour or Suſpicion any where gather'd of his Arrival. There a Council of thoſe about him being held, it was at laſt reſolv'd, that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Chicheſter Chancellour of England, and the Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, Treaſurer, with others abovenamed, being forthwith taken up by the Kings Guard and Officers into Cuſtody, ſhould be brought before the King, to render an Account of what they had done in his Abſence. In the Morning early certain of the Guard were at Lambeth; but the Archbiſhop by chance had gone thence the day before: Whereupon the Officers returning over the Water to London, took up the Biſhops of Chicheſter and Coventry, with the reſt abovenamed, and brought them away to the Tower. This being noiſ'd abroad, the Archbiſhop hies him to Canterbury, but is follow'd by Sr. Nicolas Cantilupe, who being ſent by the King together with one John Faringdon, a Publique Notary, to Regiſter Notes of what ſhould be done with the Archbiſhop, in the Kings Name warn'd the ſaid Archbiſhop: "That whereas he had bound himſelf to Foreign "Merchants, under Penalty of forfeiting his Goods, to ſee ſuch Summs of Money paid, "as the King had borrow'd for the Maintenance of his Wars, and that the King being "diſap-

[m] Antiq. Brit. p. 223. &c.

An. Dom. 1340. An. Regni Angliæ XIV. Franciæ I.

"diſappointed of thoſe Moneys, for the receiving whereof he had put his entire Con"fidence in him, had met with an Interruption in his Warlike Affairs; and the Kings
"Army with the Lords of the Realm there preſent, had been reduced to a want of "things Neceſſary for War, He would now either preſently pay that Money to thoſe
"Creditors, who perpetually call'd upon the King and his Lords, or would go into "Flanders, there to Anſwer the Creditors in Foreign Court, and deliver himſelf up in-
"to their Cuſtody, till the whole Summ, for which he had bound himſelf, ſhould be "diſcharged. This Meſſage being thus deliver'd, the Knight in preſence of the Notary demanded an Anſwer: The Archbiſhop ſaid, "that he muſt deliberate in Matters "of that Moment, before he could give in his Reply; whereupon the Knight with"drew. And now, when the Archbiſhop ſaw how he was not only in Danger of lo-
"ſing all his Fortunes, but alſo his Life and Good Name, he began roundly to deal "with the King by his Letters, adviſing him to take unto him better Counſellors, to "beware of Flatterers and Miſreporters of other Mens Lives and Actions, and being "engaged in Wars abroad, not to diſturb the Peace at home. But when by theſe Letters and other Suaſory means, he could not pacifie the King, he began from the Pulpit to Preach unto the People, concerning his Integrity and Fidelity both to the King and Kingdom. Inſomuch, that having call'd an Aſſembly of the Clergy and Layety together in the Metropolitan Church of Canterbury, he took his Text out of the [n] Apocryphal Scriptures, Non pertimuit Principem & Potentiâ nemo vicit eum. And here in a long and various Diſcourſe he commended Thomas Becket, once Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who withdrew himſelf from Secular Affairs to the Government of his Church:
But he blamed himſelf, for that laying aſide the Care of his Flock, he had been wholly taken up in Menaging the Kings Affairs. The Puniſhment whereof, he declared with Tears, that for his Merits towards the King and Kingdom, being brought into Envy, and Danger of Death, he now moſt juſtly ſuffer'd: But for the future he promiſed to be more Diligent in the Government of his Province. Sermon being thus ended, he publiſhed certain Articles of Excommunication (intending thereby to Guard himſelf from the Kings Power) with the Dreadfull Ceremony of Bell, Book, and Candle, the Bells Ringing Dolefully, and the Candles being ſuddenly Extinguiſhed with a Stench. In theſe Articles all ſuch were Excommunicated as ſhould diſturb the Peace and Tranquillity of the King and Kingdom, all Layicks who ſhould lay Violent Hands on the Perſons, Lands, Goods, or Houſes of Clergymen; all thoſe who ſhould violate the Liberties of the Church; all who by any device ſhould leſſen the Privileges granted to the Barons in Magna Charta; all who ſhould raiſe falſe Accuſations againſt any Per-ſon; but eſpecially all thoſe, who ſhould bring an Archbiſhop, or any other Biſhop of his Province into the Kings Hate or Anger, and him, or them, of Treaſon, or any other Notorious and Capital Crime, falſly Accuſe. And having Publiſhed theſe Articles in his Church, he commanded the Biſhop of London, and all the Suffragans of his Province to Publiſh the ſame in their Churches and Dioceſes.

[n] Eccleſiaſticus c. 48. v. 12.

Preſently hereupon the King, that he might ſome way obviate theſe High Proceedings of the Archbiſhop, wrote to the Biſhop of London, ſetting forth, "that at the per"ſwaſion of the Archbiſhop, he had undertaken ſo doubtfull and Difficult a War, to "Recover his Right and Inheritance: But that He, who had been the Author of the "War, having now conſpired with his Enemy the French King, had at laſt perſwaded
"him, that after the profuſion of ſuch vaſt Expences to no purpoſe, he would lay down
"the Claim of his Right, and disband his Army: That he had not, as he promiſed,
"purvey'd ſufficiently for his Army, nor ſatisfied his Foreign Creditors, of whom, up"on his Security, vaſt Summs of Money had been taken up for ſupport of his Wars,
"and who were continually importuning the King and his Lords: That at laſt he "had demanded of him an Account, how he had Adminiſtred the Realm, which he cun-
"ningly under Pretence of Excommunications and Cenſures hath eluded.

After this Ralph Lord Stafford was by the King ſent unto the Archbiſhop, who taking along with him John Burton, Advocate, and John Faringdon publique Notary, warn'd him again in the Kings Name, "that without more delay he ſhould Repair to "the King, there to Adviſe together with other Prelates and Lords about the War,
"and Matters Relating to England and France (the King [o] offering him a ſafe Con"duct to that purpoſe) to the end he might underſtand, what Defence he could make
"for that his Neglect: But him alſo the Wary Archbiſhop put off, ſaying only, that he would conſider of it. A little after there came out of Flanders to Canterbury, Meſſengers from the Duke of Brabant, who, when the Archbiſhop would not be ſeen by them, declared the Cauſe of their coming in Writing fix'd up at Noon-day upon [o] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 159. ex Walſingham.

the

the High Croſs without the Gate of the Priory of Canterbury, "importing that John "Archbiſhop of Canterbury was Cited and Warned into Court by the Duke of Bra- "bant; that ſo he might Lawfully anſwer in Flanders for the Debts of the King of "England, for which he ſtood Engaged; there to remain according to Oath in that "Part by him made, till his Lords Debts were fully cleared. In this hurry comes a Letter from the King to the Prior and Convent of Canterbury, being the ſame with thoſe Letters, which he had wrote to the Biſhop of London, with a Command to read it out Publiquely before the People and Clergy of Canterbury. The Prior and Convent having received it, inform the Archbiſhop thereof, and ſhew him the open Letter: He on Aſhwedneſday following, before all the People and Clergy, gets up into the Pulpit in Canterbury Church, and there in a Sermon ſpake Largely of his Loyalty and Integrity in Menaging the Kings Affairs: Then he commanded the Kings Letters, wherein the King had laid Heavy things to his Charge, to be Read Openly: Which done, he dexterouſly takes off each Crime and Accuſation in Order. After which, the Anſwer, that now he gave by Word of Mouth, being Digeſted into Writing, he Publiſhed over all his Province of Canterbury. All which Letters, becauſe of many Excellent Sayings therein, and for that they make much for the Clearing the Story, I have thought fit to ſet down at Large from Stephen Byrchinton, or Brickington, a Benedictin Monk of Canterbury, who flouriſhed in that Age, and others of good Authority. And firſt we ſhall produce the Archbiſhops Letter to his Majeſty, taken from the Original Latine; for Mr. Fox is not Exact in his Tranſlation.

AN. DOM. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

III. "MOST Dear Lord, may it pleaſe Your Majeſty to conſider, that the moſt ſpe- "cial thing, which keepeth Kings and Princes in the moſt Flouriſhing Condition, is Wiſe "Counſel: And therefore ſays the Wiſe Man, Where there are many Counſellors, "that is Good Ones, there is ſafety. And it is written in the Book of Kings, that So- "lomon, the Wiſeſt of Kings, took unto him the moſt Ancient and Sageſt Perſons of "his Realm; by whoſe Advice, temper'd with his own Judgement, he continually pre- "ſerved the Land of Iſrael in Peace, and held all his Neighbour Kings round about "him, as his Tributaries and Vaſſals. Now when he was gone the way of all Fleſh, "his Son Rehoboam Reigned, who deſpiſing the Counſel of the Elders (who had ſtood "before his Father) adhered to the Young Men, who were willing to pleaſe him; whence "he juſtly loſt the whole Kingdom of Iſrael, except a Twelfth Part reſerved unto him of "the Lord. In like manner many Kings, as well of Iſrael, as of other Countries, be- "ing led by Evil Counſel, have been reduced to great extremities. And ſir, you well "remember (ſaving your Royal Pleaſure) that by the Siniſter Advice taken by Our "Late Lord the King, Your Father (whom God aſſoile!) againſt the Law of the "Land, and Magna Charta, of the Peers of the Realm, and others, ſome he impriſon'd, "ſome he put to Death, ſieſed on their Goods, and vexed others with Intolerable "Fines: And what happen'd thereby unto him, Your Majeſty well knows. After "his Days alſo, by means of Evil Counſellors, which were about Your Perſon, Your "Majeſty had almoſt loſt the Hearts of Your People, but from them (as it pleaſed "him) the Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath delivered You. From that time by the Good Ad- "vice and Prudence of Your Prelates, Peers, and Counſellors of the Land, Your Af- "fairs are ſo well Menaged, that You now entirely Poſſeſs the Affections of Your Peo- "ple, and Your Subjects, as well Spiritual as Temporal, have given unto Your Ma- "jeſty greater Aids, than to any of Your Progenitors. So that by the means of Good "counſell, the Votes of Your People, and the ſpecial Grace of Almighty God, You have "obtain'd many Glorious Victories over Your Enemies of Scotland and France, and are at "this Day Reputed the moſt Noble Prince in Chriſtendom.

P Walſingh. hiſt. p. 136. Fox Acts and Mon. p. 350.

"But now Your Majeſty, by the Perverſe Counſel of ſome Men, who are rather known "to Reſpect their own Profit and Advantage, than either Your Majeſties Honour, or "the Welfare of Your People, have cauſed Clergymen, and others of Your Subjects to "be ſiezed, and undue Proceſſes to be made againſt the Laws of the Land, which by "Oath made at Your Coronation, You are bound to obſerve, and alſo againſt Magna "Charta, which whoſoever ſhall preſume to infringe, are by the Prelates of England "and the Popes Bull, which we are known to have by Us, to be Excommunicate: "All which things, as they are to the great Peril and Danger of Your Soul, ſo alſo, "alas! are they to the great debaſing of Your Royal State and Dignity. And althô "thoſe who make themſelves, more than agrees with their Condition, Rulers of the "Land, and Your Counſellors, endeavour to perſwade You, that Your preſent Proceed- "ings will be acceptable to Your People; yet we moſt conſtantly averr, that after this "manner which You have begun, there will happen nothing leſs; and that Your Maje-

"ſty

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"ſty will find at laſt. And We doubt not a little, that if You proceed as You have "begun, You will both loſe the Hearts of Your own People, and of Your Allies, and "alſo Your Juſt and Lawfull Right, and will Raiſe up ſuch Evil-will againſt Your Per- "ſon here at home, that You will not be able to Maintain Your War; whereby You "will give occaſion to Your Enemies of Riſing againſt You to deſtroy You; ſo that "You will be in Danger to loſe (which God forbid) both Your Good Name and "Kingdom.

"Wherefore, Sovereign Lord, I beſeech You, that for the Safeguard of Your Ho- "nour and Realm, and the Maintenance of Your Quarrel, You would Summon toge- "ther Your Lords, and the Wiſe Men of the Land, and that Your Affairs may ſuc- "ceed more Proſperouſly, take their Advice, without whoſe Counſel and Aid, You "can neither Conquer abroad, nor Rule happily at Home. And becauſe ſuch as are near "Your Majeſty, are not afraid to lay Treaſon and Falſhood to Our Charge, we hereby "denounce, that they ſhall be forthwith Excommunicate, and as Your Spiritual Father "We beſeech You ſo to Eſteem of them.

"And whereas it is laid to Us, that by Our Evil Adminiſtration of Affairs, You "both loſt the Town of Tournay, and much Honour alſo, may it pleaſe Your Majeſty "to call together Your Prelates, Peers, and Nobles of the Realm, in ſome convenient "place, where We may ſecurely confer with the Prelates, and make ſtrict Enquiry in- "to whoſe Hands from the beginning of Your Wars, the Woolls, Moneys, and what "elſe was granted to this Day, came, and how they were uſed, and by whoſe Default "the City of Tournay was not Won, but left in that Diſhonourable Manner; and that "ſo like a Good and Juſt Lord, You will after their Demerits puniſh the Culpable ac- "cording to Your own Laws. And as for Us, We ſhall ever be ready to ſubmit Our "Selves to the judgement of Our Peers, the State of Holy Church, of Us and of Our "Order (as We elſewhere have frequently Written) ſtill maintained. And for Gods "Sake, Sir, believe not either of Us, or of any other Your Liege Subjects, any thing "but Good, till the Truth be explored, nor be too forward to lend Your Ear to any "Man: For if Men ſhould be puniſhed without anſwer given, or the Truth known, "the Judgement would ſtill be the ſame both to the Guilty and to the Innocent.

"And Sir, may it pleaſe You to Conſider both maturely and ſeriouſly the Great Force "of Your Foreign Enemies both of France and Scotland: For if the Prelates, Lords, "and Wiſe Men of the Realm, ſhould all without any difference, with one conſent, "both Night and Day, joyn and combine wiſely together to Menage Your Weighty "and Arduous Affairs, to Maintain the War You have begun, and to preſerve Your Ho- "nour and Kingdom, 'twould all be little enough. Nor let it diſpleaſe Your Majeſty "(moſt Redoubted Lord) that ſo rudely and groſly We declare the Truth unto You: "For the Great Love and Affection, which We bear unto Your Perſon and Intereſt, "and ever by the Grace of God ſhall bear, (eſpecially becauſe We are, thô Unworthy, "the Primate of all England, and thereby Your Spiritual Father) doth move Us to ſay, "Command, and Provide for what may turn to the Benefit of Your Soul, and the Ad- "vantage of Your People. The Holy Spirit ſave and keep You, my Lord, both in "Soul and Body, and grant You the Grace both to hear and receive Good and whol- "ſome Advice, and moreover vouchſafe to give You Victory over all Your Ene- "mies. Dated at Canterbury, January the Firſt, in the ſeventh Year of Our Con- ſecration, by Your Majeſties Chaplain, John Canterbury.

IV. Beſides this the Archbiſhop for the further Declaration of his Innocence, and Main- tenance of his Authority, wrote to Sr. Robert Bourchier then Lord Chancellor of England, in theſe Words, "JOHN, by Divine Permiſſion Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate "of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, Wiſheth a Will to Conſerve the "Liberties of Holy Church, and the Law of the Land entire. For the Wiſe Man ſaith, "that the Truth being foreknown and foreſeen, doth cauſe Us to avoid great Dan- "gers, that elſe would happen. Therefore We would have You underſtand, that the "Tenths of Holy Church laſt granted unto Our Lord the King for One Year by the "Clergy of Our Province of Canterbury, to be paid together with other Tythes then "behind, were granted on certain Conditions, and certain Articles granted by Our Lord "the King unto the ſaid Clergy, and confirmed by his Charter: And moreover, that "the ſaid Clergy for that time ſhould not be burthen'd with any other Portion or Con- "tribution, to be made or granted unto our Lord the King. After this alſo in the Par- "liament Conven'd at Weſtminſter on the Wedneſday next after Midlent, there were gran- "ted unto the King the Ninth Fleece, the Ninth Lamb, the Ninth Sheaf, but on cer- "tain Cautions and Conditions, namely, that no Prelates, or any of the ſaid Clergy, ſhould

"should be any way Obliged to the Contribution of this Ninth Part, but only those AN. DOM. "who held by Barony, and were bound to come to the Parliament: And that the 1341. "Prelates and Others of the Clergy, paying the said Ninth, should by no means be An. Regni "obliged to the Payment of the Tenth, granted as aforesaid. But yet certain Colle- Angliæ "ctors of the Ninth of our said Province, do endeavour by several Distresses to levy XV. "and raise the said Ninth of Prelates and Others of the Clergy, who pay the said Franciæ "Tenth, and hold nothing of the King by Barony, nor are bound to come to the Par- II. "liament. And on the other hand, they exact the said Tenth of those, who are ob- "liged to the Payment of the Ninth, by burthening Men of the Church, contrary to "God and Justice, and the Grant aforesaid. Wherefore we exhort and require you "in the Lord, that by no means You permit Religious Persons and Ecclesiasticks, to "be burthen'd and vexed, unless according to the Form and Grant aforesaid: Nor by "any means yield either Counsel or Assent in prejudice of the said Charter, or sub- "version of the Privileges and Liberties of the Church: But that if any Brief, Com- "mission or Precept, contrary to the Form of Magna Charta, or the Privileges and "Liberties aforesaid, have already been issued out of the Chancery, You cause them "within ten days after the Receipt of these Letters, as You are bound, to be revo- "ked and disanulled. It is really the Will of our Lord the King to cherish and main- "tain the said Charter, and the Privileges and Liberties of the Church, as we are assu- "red: And it is not his Will, nor ought to be, that the Clergy should by any means "be burthen'd and grieved, beyond their own free Grant: For this would not a little "tend to the prejudice and grievance of Holy Church, which we cannot endure: "But if You shall take no care to revoke and disanull the Premises, as is premised; "We shall not omit to take such Remedy, as Holy Church will allow. And what you shall "do in the Premises, as our Spiritual Son, Faithfull and acceptable to God, within eight "days after the time above limited, you shall take care to certifie unto us by your "Letters. The Holy Spirit, as you shall keep his Privileges uninvaded, vouchsafe to "save and keep your Body and Soul. Given at Canterbury, 28 day of January in the Seventh Year of our Consecration.

V. Beside this he also wrote a Remonstrance to the King and his Council in these Words, "To our Lord the King and his Council, and all and singular Persons of his "Council: We John, by Divine Permission Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all "England, and Legate of the Apostolick See, do shew, that whereas all those, who "seise on Clergymen, put them by force, or detain them in Prison, and do not permit "them to go, where they shall please, knowing them, publiquely and notoriously to "be reputed as such, and bearing themselves as Clergymen, who have not confessed "Crimes, nor have been convicted or indicted of Crimes, nor have been openly taken "in the Fact, are entangled in the Sentence given by the Canon, &c. And that Sen- "tence we have published in the Church of Canterbury, and have caused it to be pub- "lished by all our Brethren Suffragans of our Province of Canterbury. After the De- "nuntiation or Publication of which Sentence made, as is premised, there have been "taken, and in divers Castles and Places of England, imprisoned and forcibly detained, "John de St. Paul, Michael de Wath, Robert Chickwell, John Thorp and Henry Strat- "ford, to the prejudice of God and Holy Church, against the Laws and Privileges of "all Clergymen, and also to the endangering of the Souls of those who acted those "things, or gave their Counsel and Assent thereto. Wherefore we earnestly entreat our "Lord the King, who hath always taken care to maintain the Liberties of Holy "Church, and its Laws and Privileges entire, as our Lord God in all his Actions hath "heretofore happily attested, and made him Famous, that it would please His Majesty "without Delay, to command a Release or Delivery from prison of the said Clergy- "men, and of every of them, who are so detained against Magna Charta, and the Laws "and Customs of the Land. Moreover we desire and beseech in the Lord, all those "Counsellors, who presum'd to give the King Counsel to do such things, by no means "to hinder the Delivery of them, who are so detained: For we cannot dissemble, but "that otherways we must do in this Matter, according to our Duty. Also, that all "Lay Persons and Free-men, who were, against Magna Charta, and the Laws and Cu- "stoms of the Land, taken and yet detain'd in Prison, may be deliver'd, and that it "would please our Lord the King to reform and correct other the Premises, according "to a Form contained in a Bull of [q] Innocent the IV. Whereby all, who presume to "go against Magna Charta, or to violate it, do incurr the Sentence of Excommunicati- "on. Also, that not only his Ministers and Officers of different Stations, who passing "thrô the Land, enter the Houses, Granges and other Places of Archbishops, Bishops, [q] Anno Domini 1243; Papat. iniit. An. 1254. obiit.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"and other Religious and Eccleſiaſticall Perſons, without the Will of the Farmers or "Keepers, do take away Goods at pleaſure, and carry them away forceably, but alſo "thoſe, who command the Premiſes, or in their Names confirm and ratifie what is ſo "done, are involved in the foreſaid Sentence: Let therefore our Lord the King "vouchſafe to apply a fit Remedy: For we cannot diſſemble, but that we intend by "our Selves, and our Brerhren and Suffragans, to execute both our and their Du-"ty againſt ſuch, as the Care of our Paſtoral Office ſhall require: But it is not "our Intention, that our Lord the King, his Lady the Queen, or their Children "be involved or comprehended in the ſaid Sentences; as of Right they may be "excuſed.

VI. The ſaid Archbiſhop alſo ſent Letters to the Biſhop of London, the Tenour whereof followeth: "John, by Divine Permiſſion Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all "England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, to his Reverend Brother, Ralph Biſhop of "London, Greeting. Holy Church which ought to be Free, is unduly oppreſſed with di-"vers Exactions and vexatious Burthens in theſe days: Her Goods (to which no Lay "Hand ought to extend) are ſeiſed on at will for Prey. The Clergy alſo of our Pro-"vince of Canterbury is vexed unjuſtly, and vilely trampled upon by reproachfull Con-"tempt; Juſtice (which principally ought to ſhine, and whereby Kings Reign, and "the People are eſtabliſhed in Peace) is not duly honoured: But many let looſe "the Reins to Injuries and unjuſt Oppreſſions without puniſhment; We therefore, ta-"king a Fatherly compaſſion at the groans of the Oppreſſed, and ſeriouſly conſide-"ring, that for this purpoſe the Divine Mercy hath exalted Us to this Apoſtolical Dig-"nity, not that We ſhould ſpend our Days in quiet and affluence of Delights, but "according to the Duty of our Place, being profitably inſtructed by the examples of "our Predeceſſors, that we ſhould ſet our ſelves againſt thoſe that come up againſt "us, as an impregnable Wall for the Houſe of the Lord; and by Gods Aſſiſtance reduce "the wandring into the way of Truth, have thought fit by publique Denuntiations to be "made in eminent Places by us, and others our Brethren and Suffragans, openly to in-"timate unto all men, certain Sentences of Excommunication, by Holy Fathers and "our Predeceſſors hitherto promulged againſt Delinquents in Caſes hereafter mention'd: "That thoſe who are wicked, may not be able under the vail of affected Ignorance any "way to excuſe themſelves, in pretence that the Truth was unworthily hid and not "manifeſted, as it ought to be: But rather that all may take better heed to themſelves "for the future. And yet it is not our Intention, that our Lord, the Illuſtrious King "of England, our Lady the Queen, or their Children, ſhould be involved or compre-"hended in the ſaid Sentences, or any of them or under the Denuntiation; as of right "they may in this part be excuſed. Commanding, &c. that you publiſh them, &c. Dated, &c. The Tenour of which Articles follow.

VII. "In the Name of God Amen. We John by Divine Permiſſion Archbiſhop, &c. "do denounce Publiquely and Solemnly in theſe Writings all thoſe to be (as by the Holy "Fathers they are) involved in the Sentence of Greater Excommunication, and to have "been and to be Excommunicate, and we ſequeſter them from the Pale of Holy Mother "Church, who do preſume to deprive Churches of their Right, or malitiouſly to infringe "or violate the Liberties or Free Cuſtoms of the ſame, and eſpecially thoſe, who vio-"late the Ancient Liberties or free Cuſtoms of our Church of Canterbury, or diminiſh them "in any thing, or knowingly contravene the Privileges granted thereto, or do ought a-"gainſt them, and alſo thoſe, who wickedly and injuriouſly preſume to diſturb the Peace and "Tranquillity of the King or Kingdom of England, or ſhall give Counſel, Aid or Favour "thereto, by the Authority, and in the Name of God the Father Almighty, and of his Son "Jeſus Chriſt, of his moſt bleſſed Mother the Virgin Mary, of bleſſed Thomas the glo-"rious Martyr, and of all the Saints.

"Item, That whereas in the great Charter of Henry, once King of England, it was "Granted and Ordained, that no Freeman of the Realm of England ſhould be taken "or impriſoned, or diſſeiſed of his Free-hold, or his Liberties, or his Free Cuſtoms, or "be Outlaw'd, or Baniſhed, or any other way moleſted; and that upon a Freeman the "Law ſhould not paſs, unleſs by the lawfull Judgment of his Peers, or by the Law "of England, and that the King would deny, or ſell, or delay, right and juſtice to no "Man: And that the City of London ſhould have all her Ancient Liberties and Free "Cuſtoms: And ſeveral other Liberties and free Cuſtoms are prudently in the ſaid "Charter granted to the Realm of England, to the Praiſe and Honour of God, the "Peace of the Catholick Church, and the Quiet of the Realm: And by the Arch-"biſhop and Biſhops of the ſaid Kingdom, thoſe have been excommunicated, anathe-

"matized,

" matized, and ſequeſtred from the Pale of Holy Mother Church; who after the Grant " of the ſaid Charter, and the Liberties and free Cuſtoms therein, and in the Charter " of the Foreſt, contained and granted to the Church of England, by any art or de- " viſe, ſhould violate, infringe, diminiſh or alter; privily or openly, by Deed, Word " or Counſel, in raſhly going againſt them, or any of them, in any Article: Many not- " withſtanding, not ignorant of the Premiſes, do now raſhly attempt to go againſt the " ſaid Charters, the Liberties and free Cuſtomes, in the ſaid Charters contained, and " mightily endeavour to infringe them: Now we, being deſirous to overthrow their " deteſtable deſigns, and to diſſipate their vailed and pretended Ignorance, by reducing " the Premiſes into the notice of all Men, do in general admoniſh all and ſingular, " who have done againſt the Premiſes in any manner of way, or, contrary to the ſaid " Charters, or either of them, have made Statutes, or have kept them when made, " have introduced Cuſtoms, or have kept them when introduced; alſo the Writers of " Statutes, and Counſellours and Executors, and thoſe who ſhall preſume to judge ac- " cording to them. That duly they amend themſelves, and by the appointment of " their Ordinaries make full ſatisfaction for their Offences within 15 Days to be rec- " kon'd from the time of this our Admonition: Whom upon their Non-obedience, " from that time we denounce publiquely and ſolemnly to have incurred the ſaid Sen- " tence of Greater Excommunication, confirmed of ſure knowledge by Pope Innocent " the IV.

AN. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

" Item, That all and ſingular, who from the Houſes, Manors, Granges or other Pla- " ces, to Archbiſhops, Biſhops, or other Eccleſiaſticall Perſons belonging, ſhall preſume " to take away, ſeiſe, conſume or touch any thing againſt the Will of the Owners, or " thoſe, who are deputed the Keepers of the ſaid thing, or cauſe the ſaid thing to be " taken, ſeiſed, conſumed or touched, and approve the taking away, the ſeiſing, con- " ſuming or touching of the ſaid thing, done by their Abettors, or in their Name, are " Violators of the ſaid Liberties and Privileges Eccleſiaſtick; and we publiquely and ſolemn- " ly in theſe Writings denounce them ipſo facto to incurr the Sentence of Greater Excom- " munication, which in the Council of Oxford was made againſt the Violators of the " Liberties of the Church.

" Item, Becauſe the Iniquity of the times renders the Clergy odious to the Laiety; " inſomuch that the Latter do ſeiſe on the Former, and detain them againſt their Wills, or " not permit them to go freely whither they pleaſe, we publiquely and ſolemnly denounce, " all and ſingular, as well Clergymen as Laymen, within our Province of Canter- " bury, who knowing them to be Clergymen, and publiquely and notoriouſly to be " held and reputed for Clergymen, and alſo to bear themſelves as ſo, having not " confeſſed any crime, nor being convicted or indicted, do in cuſtody or priſon put " and detain them againſt their Wills, raſhly in a Caſe not permitted by Law, or " the Cuſtom of the Realm of England, to the Scandal and manifeſt Injury of the Cler- " gy, to be involved in the Sentence of Greater Excommunication, in this part made " by the Canon.

" Item, Whereas all and ſingular, who in our Province of Canterbury do mali- " ciouſly from the falſe inſtigations of Hate, lay a Crime to the charge of any Per- " ſon or Perſons, who among good and grave Men were not before defamed of the ſaid " Crime, whereby on occaſion of the Charge they may any ways be grieved, are and " have been envolved in the Sentence of Greater Excommunication, juſtly made by " Holy Fathers in the Council of Oxford againſt Defamers of this kind, and thoſe who " knowingly offend againſt Archbiſhops, or their Spiritual Fathers, Ambaſſadors of " Chriſt, Pillars of the Church, do commit a ſin ſo much the greater, as is the Emi- " nence of the Perſon offended; We by the Authority wherewith we are inveſted, do " publiquely denounce all and ſingular, who in our Province of Canterbury, have falſly, " wickedly and malitiouſly already preſumed, or hereafter ſhall preſume, to lay to the " Charge of an Archbiſhop or Biſhop, or any other, the Crime of Treaſon or any o- " ther Crime, contrary to the Conſtitution aforeſaid, to be involved in the ſaid Sentence " of Greater Excommunication, in the ſaid Council diſcreetly made, and to be ſeque- " ſtred from the Pale of Holy Mother Church, &c.

Beſides all this the Archbiſhop ſent the Letters afore-mention'd to all his Brethren and Suffragans, that they alſo in their ſeveral Dioceſſes and Precincts, ſhould publiquely promulge the Sentences above-written: Whereupon the King hearing of theſe Letters of the Archbiſhop, and conſidering them together with others, which (as [r] was thought) ſome Courtiers had forged in his Name, to render him more obnoxious, that he might more plainly detect the Archbiſhops Falſhood, and eſtabliſh the Reputation of his own

[r] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 142. n. 4.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

Juſtice, wrote this Letter to the Biſhop of London, and ſent a Copy thereof to the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury.

VIII. [f] "EDWARD by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord "of Ireland, to the Reverend Father in God, Ralph Biſhop of London, Greeting. It is "manifeſt by old approved Hiſtories, but more clearly appears by what is dayly practi- "ſed, that many Men, abuſing the Favour of Princes, and the Honour conferr'd upon "them, and waxing inſolent thereby, do ſometimes by malitious and ſly Inſinuations "endeavour to deprave the laudable Undertakings of Kings. And that what we ſay, "may be rendred more manifeſt to all our Liege People, We ſuppoſe, that neither you "nor they have forgotten; how We being formerly exalted to the Regal Throne in "the years of our tender Youth, and deſiring at our firſt Undertaking that Royal "Charge, to be directed by wholſome Counſels, did call unto Us John, then Biſhop "of Wincheſter, and now Archbiſhop of Canterbury, becauſe We ſuppoſed him to ex- "cell others in Loyalty and Diſcretion, and have made uſe both of his Spiritual Ad- "vice in Matters concerning the Health of our Soul, and alſo of his Temporal, in Af- "fairs relating to the Augmentation and Conſervation of our Kingdom. Nay he was "by Us received into ſuch Familiarity, and experienc'd ſo much of our Favour to- "wards him, that he was called Our Father, and next unto the King adored of all "Men.

[f] *Antiq. Brit. p.*224. Walſing. hiſt. p. 142. Fox Acts and Monum. p. 349.

"Now afterwards, when by Right of Succeſſion the Kingdom of France was devol- "ved unto Us, and by the Lord Philip of Valois de facto manifeſtly uſurped, the ſame "Archbiſhop by his Importunities perſwaded Us to make a League with the Lords of "Almain, [t] and others, againſt the ſaid Philip, and ſo to expoſe Our Selves and Ours "to the Expences of War; promiſing and affirming, that He would ſee Us abundant- "ly ſupplied out of the Profits of our Lands, and elſewhere; adding moreover, that "We ſhould only take Care to provide Men of Courage and Skill ſufficient for the "War, for he himſelf would effectually procure ſuch Summs of Money, as ſhould both "Anſwer our Neceſſities, and the Souldiers Pay. Whereupon having paſſed the Seas, "we ſet Our Hand to Great undertakings, and with marvellous Expence, as it behoved, "made Our Warlike Proviſions; and bound Our Selves in vaſt Summs of Money to our "Confederates, in confidence of the Foremention'd Aid promiſed unto Us. But, alas! "ſince We put Our Confidence in the Staff of a broken Reed, whereon, according to "the [u] Prophet, if a Man lean, it will go into his Hand and pierce it, being defrauded "of Our wiſh'd for Aid; of meer Neceſſity We were compelled under heavy Uſury, "to contract the Inſupportable Burthens of Debt, and ſo breaking off Our further Ex- "pedition for that time, were Obliged to deſiſt from Our Enterpriſes, ſo Valiantly "begun againſt Our Enemies, and to return into England: Where having made Re- "lation to the ſaid Archbiſhop of Our manifold Vexations and Misfortunes, and there- "upon calling a [x] Parliament, the Prelates, Barons, and other Liege Subjects of Our "Kingdom, gave Us the Ninth of their Corn, Lambs, and Wooll, beſides a Tenth "granted Us by the Clergy; which Subſidy, had it been faithfully collected and ob- "tained in due time, had not a little availed toward Our ſaid Warlike Expedition, the "Payment of Our Debts, and the confuſion of Our Enemies; nay, it might probably "have ſufficed to have anſwer'd all, as many then ſuppoſed. The ſaid Archbiſhop then "again promiſed Us, diligently to uſe his Endeavours, as well in the Collecting the "ſame, as alſo in procuring other things neceſſary for Us. Whereupon, giving credit "to his promiſes, and having Recruited Our Forces with a Navy collected for that pur- "poſe, We ſet Sail for Flanders, and upon the way buckled in a fierce Sea Fight with "Our Enemies, who had combin'd to the Deſtruction of Us and of Our Engliſh Nation: "But by the Mercifull Bounty of him, who Ruleth both the Winds and Seas, and not "by Our own Merits, We obtain'd over the Numerous Multitude of thoſe Enemies a "Glorious Victory and Triumph. Which done, paſſing forward with a Great Army "for the Recovery of Our Rights, We encamped near the moſt ſtrong City of Tour- "nay; in the Siege whereof being very much buſied, and even wearied with continual "Toyl and Charges, We ſilently waited in daily Expectation, hoping, that however by "means of the ſaid Archbiſhop, Our promiſed Aid would at laſt come to relieve Us in "Our ſo Many, and ſo Great Neceſſities. At length being fruſtrated of Our concei- "ved hope, thô by many Meſſengers, and divers Letters, We fully ſignified to the "ſaid Archbiſhop, and other Our Counſellors joyned in Commiſſion with him, Our Ne- "ceſſities, and the ſundry Inconveniences we were expoſed to, for want of the promi- "ſed Aid aforemention'd, as alſo the Great Advantage and Honour which We ſaw, "We might eaſily obtain by a ſeaſonable ſupply of the ſaid Moneys, We yet received "no [t] Et aliis, quod habet l. Antiqu. Brit. omittit Walſingh.

[u] Iſai. 36. v. 6.

[x] Vid. l. 1. c. 16. §. 1. p. 177.

"no Advantagious Anſwer from them: Becauſe, minding their own buſineſs, and whol- AN. DOM.
"ly neglecting Ours, they palliated their own Idleneſs (not to ſay Fraud or Malice) with 1341.
"painted Gloſſings and frivolous Excuſes; like thoſe Mockers, who as [y] Iſaiah ſays, An. Regni
"deridingly Scoff and ſay, "Precept upon Precept, Precept upon Precept; Line upon Angliæ
"Line, Line upon Line: Here a little, and there a little. So that, alas! while a XV.
"near hope of Triumphing over Our Enemies, moſt graciouſly ſmil'd upon Us, We Franciæ
"were even then for want of Neceſſary Supplies conſtrained againſt Our Will to ſubmit II.
"to accept of a Truce, to the ſhamefull Hinderance of Our Expedition, and the no [y] *c.*28.*v.10.&* 13.
"ſmall Joy of Our Adverſaries. Returning thereupon into Flanders, both Empty of "Money and Full of Debt, neither Our own Purſes, nor Our Friends, being ſufficient
"to diſcharge Our Neceſſities, and to pay off Our Foreign Auxiliaries, We were com"pelled to plunge Our Selves into the Devouring Gulf of Uſury, and to ſubmit Our "Shoulders to the various Burthens of Inſupportable Debts. At laſt Our Faithfull "Friends, Companions of Our Labours, and Partakers of Our Troubles, came unto "Us, with whom We carefully conſulted for a deſired Remedy, whereby We might "happily obtain ſome Fair Weather, after this ſo Great Storm of ill Fortune. Theſe
"All agreed, that the ſad protracting of Our Wars, and the manifold Inconveniences
"proceeding from Our Want of Supply, happen'd all thrô the Fault or Negligence
"(not to ſay Malice) of the ſaid Archbiſhop, to whoſe Diſcretion We had committed
"the Affairs of Our whole Kingdom; They the while much Admiring and Murmuring
"at Us, becauſe Our Royal Goodneſs had ſo long left unpuniſhed the Inſolence of the "ſaid Archbiſhop, and other Our Officers: Saying, that if We would not apply a ſpeedy
"Remedy to theſe Evils, They muſt of Neceſſity withdraw from Our Service, and go "back from their Alliance made with Us: And this certainly muſt needs redound to the "Subverſion of Our Kingdom, Our own perpetual Infamy, and the Eternal Reproach
"of the Engliſh Nation; which God, Our moſt Mercifull Father, of his Infinite Good"neſs Graciouſly forbid to come to paſs in Our Days; as the Anchor of Our hope is im"moveably fixed on him.

"Whereupon intending the due Correction of Our Officers, ſome of them, whom for "many Reaſons We ſuſpected Guilty of Male-Adminiſtration, Subverſion of Juſtice; "Oppreſſion of Our Subjects, of Bribery, and other Heinous Offences, We have (as "We might do) cauſed to be removed from their Offices: Others alſo of Inferior De"gree, being culpable in the Premiſes, We have committed to ſafe Cuſtody, leaſt ſhould
"they enjoy their wonted Liberty, the Execution of Juſtice might by their craftineſs
"be prevented, and the Inquiſition of the Truth cunningly eluded. Which Truth ſince
"We believed We ſhould obtain ſo much the more certainly and fully from the ſaid
"Archbiſhop, by how much it was expected, that nothing of what belonged to Our "Information in this part, ſhould be hid from him, to whom for ſo long time We had "thought fit to commit the Adminiſtration of Our whole Common-Weal, and Our "Chiefeſt Concerns; We therefore by Our Truſty and Well-beloved Nicolas Canti-
"lupe, did ſend him Our Special Command, that forthwith he ſhould come to London
"to Our Preſence; becauſe We were minded to confer Perſonally with him. But He,
"as one always Inſolent in Proſperity, and Timerous in Adverſity, fearing now, where "no Fear was, did untruly allege, that ſome Miſchief was intended and threatned unto "him by ſome of Our Aſſiſtants, if at any time he ſhould once come forth of the "Church of Canterbury: Whereas God and Our Conſcience are Witneſſes, no ſuch
"Matter ever enter'd into Our Mind, nor, as We believe, into the Heart of any of Our "Servants. Yet We ſuppoſe, he glanced herein at Our Coſin the Earl of Darby, thô
"not only to him, but to all others, [z] as well of the Clergy as Laiety, by his Evil
"Demerits, he hath rendred himſelf Odious. But We, who deſire that all Our Sub"jects ſhould have free Acceſs to Our Perſon, eſpecially thoſe, who by Our Letters or "Meſſengers are thereto required, to confute his Malicious Suggeſtion, ſent unto him
"Our Truſty and Well-beloved Ralph Stafford Steward of our Houſhold, to offer and give "unto him ſafe Conduct; but notwithſtanding that We cauſed our Royal Letters Patents
"under Our Great Seal to be preſented unto him, again commanding him to make his "Perſonal Appearance before Us, that We might be informed, how he had behaved
"himſelf in that Publique Station which he had long Menaged, as aforeſaid: Yet he ſet-
"ting at nought both Our Requeſts and Commands, anſwer'd with as Haughty an Air, as "Impudent Mind, that he would neither appear before Us, nor confer with Us, unleſs in "Our Full Parliament, which at this time upon Good Reaſons is no way Expedient to "be call'd.

"Thus this Archbiſhop, whom Our Royal Bounty had exalted with Large Benefits,
"and

[z] The foregoing part of this Clauſe is omitted by Antiq. Brit. & Walſingh. only Mr. Fox's Copy hath it.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"and Great Honours, and had admitted into Our Familiarity, nay, even to an Intimacy "of Friendſhip; upon whom, as on a moſt Dear Father, Our whole Breath and Life did "Repoſe; who alſo, while We did after his Will, put on the Pretended Countenance of a "Loving Father toward Us; even this Man is now cruelly turn'd to be an Heavy and "Unnatural Step-Father, and wholly forgetfull of the Benefits he has receiv'd, with "Arrogance and Pride purſues his Benefactor, and hath ſerved Us, as the Proverb is, "a Mouſe in a Bag, a Serpent in your Lap, and Fire in your Boſom, with an ill Re-"quital for Our Kindneſs. For thô, when We were firſt Exalted to the Throne of "Our Kingdom, deſcended unto Us by Right of Inheritance, the Divine Grace ſo work-"ing, it always was, and hath been Deteſtable unto Us to Abuſe the Greatneſs of Our "Power: Who rather affect to Rule Our Subjects with Clemency, Lenity, and Mo-"deration of Juſtice, that they might enjoy Peace, which is deſired of all Men: Yet "notwithſtanding, this Man hath gone about to defame Our Innocence, and the Fide-"lity and Diligence of Our Counſellors and Officers that purſue Juſtice, publiquely by "his Letters Patents, declaring in ſeveral Places, "that in theſe Latter Times by the "Kings Power, contrary to Juſtice, the Laiety is Oppreſſed, the Clergy confounded, "and [a] Holy Church burthen'd with divers Exactions, Taxes, and Talliages. And "becauſe he ſubtlely Uſurped the Name of a Good Paſtor, when indeed he was no-"thing leſs, but rather after the Common Opinion, and his own Confeſſion, as it is vul-"garly Reported, a very Hireling, he cloaked his Fox-Craft with a feigned Zeal for the "Liberties of the Church: Whoſe Troubles, if in Our Days it hath ſuſtained any, "are rather to be attributed to the Remiſneſs of the ſaid Archbiſhop, to his Evil Coun-"ſels and Crafty Devices. He alſo wickedly pretends to have certain Sentences of Ex-"communication, which were long ſince made in general againſt the Violators of the "Liberties of the Church, and Magna Charta; thereby to ſpoil the Good Opinion "had of the King, and to defame Our foreſaid Royal Miniſters, and Traiterouſly to "ſtir up Sedition amongſt the People committed to Our Charge; and finally, to with-"draw from Our Royal Majeſty the Hearts of Our Earls, Lords, and Barons of the "Realm. Theſe by his Letters he commanded to be Publiſhed in moſt Places of Great "Reſort; beſides, and contrary to, the accuſtomed means provided in a Provincial "Council.

[a] L. Antiqu. Britan. habet Eccleſia; ſed Walſingham Regnum, præplacet Eccleſia; ex iis, quæ pluries repetuntur.

"Wherefore We, deſirous, as We have Reaſon, to Reſpect the Integrity of Our "Fame, and to obviate the Malice of the ſaid Archbiſhop, as alſo carefully to decline "the ſnares he hath laid for Us and Ours, have thought good, beſide thoſe things a-"bove Rehearſed, to bring into Publique Notice ſome of his many Evil Actions. And "truly, when We were in Our Minority, by his Imprudent Counſel and Perſwaſion, "We made ſo many Prodigal Donations, unlawfull Alienations, and Exceſſive Lar-"geſſes, that Our Exchequer was wholly exhauſted thereby, and Our Revenues ex-"treamly diminiſhed: We have alſo found, that being corrupted with Bribes, he has "Releaſed to ſeveral Perſons vaſt Summs of Money owing to Us, and that without "any Reaſonable Cauſe, when neither Neceſſity, nor any Proſpect of Advantage ſo "required; and alſo, that he has apply'd to the uſe of himſelf and his Friends, and "other ill-deſerving Perſons, many of Our Rents and Revenues, which ought to have "been kept for Our own Uſe and Neceſſity. Moreover, being as well an Accepter "of Perſons, as of Bribes, contrary to Our Deſire, and his Oath of Fidelity made to "Us, he hath admitted to publique Offices in Our Dominions, Perſons altogether un-"worthy, neglecting and putting back thoſe that well deſerved: And many other "things out of a Refractory Mind, he hath raſhly preſum'd to do, to the Detriment "of Ouf State, the hurt of Our Royal Dignity, and the no ſmall Damage of the "People ſubjected unto Us, by abuſing the Authority and Charge committed un-"to him.

"Who, if he ſhall ſtill perſiſt in his proud Obſtinacy, and Stout and continued Re-"bellion, We ſhall hereafter in convenient Time and Place cauſe his Faults to be more "manifeſt; in the mean while, willing and commanding You, to Publiſh and cauſe to "be Publiſhed all and ſingular the Premiſes, openly and diſtinctly in places, where You "ſhall think it Expedient, and to ſet forth alſo, as it ſhall ſeem beſt to Your Godly "Wiſdom, Our Pious Reſolution for the ſuppreſſing all manner of Incommodities, "and furthering the Commodities and Advantages of Our Subjects; ſo behaving Your "Selves herein, that We may have cauſe to commend Your Care and Diligence. Witneſs "Our Self at Weſtminſter the Twelfth day of February, in the Year of Our Reign over "England the 15, and over France the 2d.

In Anſwer to this the Archbiſhop return'd the ſame Defence he had made in the Pulpit

"Pulpit at Canterbury, only mutatis mutandis; with this Preface directed to the "King, viz.

AN. DOM. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

IX. [b] "To his Dread Lord, EDWARD, by the Grace of God, of France and England "the moſt Illuſtrious King; John by Divine Permiſſion, his humble Miniſter of the "Church of Canterbury, once Temporally, but now more in the Lord, wiſheth Health "both of Soul and Body, and evermore to perſevere in Good, and Manfully to Reſiſt "envious and wicked Suggeſtions, which eaſily corrupt Good Manners.

[b] Antiqu. Brit. p. 227. &c.

"There are two Things, whereby the World is principally governed, the Holy Pon- "tifical Authority, and the Royal Power: Of which the Burthen incumbent upon Prieſts "is ſo much more weighty and ſublime, by how much at the Divine Scrutiny they are "to give an Account even concerning Kings themſelves. And therefore your Majeſty "ought to know, that You depend on their Judgment, not that they can be directed "by your Will. For who doubts, but that the Prieſts of Chriſt ought to be accoun- "ted both Fathers and Maſters of Kings and Princes, and of all the Faithfull? Is it "not look'd on as a ſign of a deplorable Madneſs, for a Son to endeavour to bring un- "der his Father, or a Scholar his Maſter? And that many Prelates have Excommuni- "cated, ſome of them Kings, others Emperours, the Canonical Authority of the Scri- "ptures teſtifies: And if you enquire for any thing particular of the Perſons of Prin- "ces, the bleſſed [c] Innocent ſmote the Emperour Arcadius with the edge of Excom- "munication; becauſe he conſented, that St. John Chryſoſtom ſhould be violently "expelled from his Seat. And the Holy Ambroſe Archbiſhop of Milain, for a fault, "which to other Prieſts ſeem'd not ſo very enormous, bound the Emperour Theodoſi- "us the Great, in the Bond of Excommunication; who afterward, having firſt given "convenient Satisfaction, obtain'd Abſolution: And in more convenient time and place "many more Examples of the like nature may be produced. Whatſoever Prieſts there- "fore offend by Error meerly humane, which doth no way treſpaſs upon the Faith of "Religion, it ſeems, that they neither can, nor ought to be puniſhed by the Secular Pow- "er. For it is the part of a good and religious Prince to reſtore broken and bruiſed "Churches, to build new ones, to honour, and with all reſpect imaginable to defend "the Prieſts of God; like unto Conſtantine, that pious Prince of moſt Happy Memo- "ry, who, when the Complaints of Clergymen were brought unto him, ſaid, "You "can be judged of None (that is, none of the Secular Judges) who are reſerved to "the judgment of God alone, according to the Aſſertion of the Apoſtle, ſaying, [d] The "ſpiritual Man is judged of no man. Let your Majeſty therefore conſider, what and "how great the Puniſhment of that Son ought to be, who uncovers the nakedneſs of "his Father, and wickedly defames his innocent Parent, to whom as is premiſed, he "ought to yield all reverence and honour. For the Pagan Princes after their manner, "yielded and do yield no ſmall Honour to the Prelates of their Temples and Idols, "whom they termed Flamins: How much more ought Chriſtian Princes, Worſhip- "pers of the True God, and of the Chriſtian Faith, to reverence the Miniſters and Pre- "lates of Chriſt? But alas, in a prepoſterous and unnatural way, the Honour, which "on Occaſion of the Dignity wherein we, thô unworthy preſide, ought unto us, as "unto your Father to be yielded, is turned into Reproach, the Reſpect into Reviling, "and Reverence into Contempt: While You ſent your Royal Letters Patents, ſealed "with your Royal Seal, or rather notorious Libels, ſpiteſully dictated and written by "our Enviers and Enemies, containing various crimes and many enormous Matters and "falſe-invented Reproaches againſt us, to our infamy, as plainly by the reading there- "of may appear; to all the Suffragans of our Province of Canterbury, Deans, Abbots, "Priors and their Chapters, and other Eccleſiaſticall Perſons, to be publiſhed to the "great Affront of us, I hope, and not of God himſelf: That ſo the Devotion of our "Flock toward us might wax cold, and their Obedience be turned into Contempt. "From which unexpected (not to ſay deteſtable) Deed it evidently appears to all that "behold it, how the Royal Power, (which proceedeth from the Lord, according to "the ſaying of the wiſe King Solomon, [e] Hear, ô ye Kings and underſtand; Learn ô ye "Judges of the ends of the Earth: For Power is given unto you from the Lord, and "Soveraignty from the moſt High) doth now preſume to judge even the Lord God "himſelf in the Perſons of his Miniſters and Prieſts; not only to the violation of the "Divine Law, but againſt the Ordinance of God, of humane Law and natural Rea- "ſon, and doth condemn its Spiritual Father, and the chief Peer of the Land, being "not called, not convicted, and by your Record, to uſe the vulgar word, unheard, "to the hazard of your Soul, to the exceeding prejudice of all us Peers, and of all "the People of the Land. Nor let any one maliciouſly accuſe us, that being con-

[c] Innocent I. Papa Rom. floruit circa An. Chr. 404.

[d] 1 Cor. c. 2. v. 15.

[e] Wiſd. of Solomon c. 6. v. 1. & 3.

"ſciou*s*

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"ſcious of our own Guilt we ſeek to hide our ſelves, leſt we ſhould be obliged to "bear the brunt of your Objections. For the moſt High knoweth, that we hearti- "ly deſire to ſee you, above all mortal Men; that all Flattery remov'd we may in- "timate unto your Highneſs the dangers both of You and of your Kingdom, and the "Affection and loving Hearts of your Subjects; and adviſe You, that your Actions (I "wiſh they were all Praiſe-worthy) might be as a Light to others, according to that of "the * Wiſe Man,

The World is by a King's Example ſway'd---

* Claudian. Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis.

"And alſo, that upon beholding our Face, You might call to mind thoſe Services, "which lately we have performed in your Employs, carefully and Faithfully, according "to the Conſcience of our Soul, ſo God help us in the laſt Trial, when all Men ſhall "[f] ſtand before his Tribunal, to receive the things done in their Bodies, according to "that they have done, whether it be good or evil. And eſpecially, that before You, "the Prelates, Barons and Peers of the Realm, we might ſet forth our Reputation "(which by your Letters and Libels aforeſaid is baſely torn and beſpatter'd) purged, "true and pure (as I call God to Witneſs it is) to Publique Knowledge. But upon "notice, that certain of your principal Counſellors near your Perſon, have given forth "menaces of Death againſt us; who are in this Land, not as Joſeph was in Egypt, but "like Tyrants now adays domineer in the Throne, after that of the Wiſe Man, [g] Many "Tyrants have ſat on the Throne, and a Man unthought on hath wore the Diadem: The "Sword being thus in the Hands of Madmen, not thrô any proud Arrogance or Diſ- "obedience, but by wiſely * yielding to the Courſe of Fury, we have hitherto defer'd "our Acceſs to You, that juſt Fear excuſing us, which might fall upon the moſt Re- "ſolute, being notwithſtanding ready to obey your Majeſty in all things the Honour "of God and of Holy Church, and of our own State and Order being always in all points "preſerved. But truly in the mean while, during the Power of theſe Tyrants, to the "rooting out whereof, let Him that ariſeth from on high vouchſafe to aſſiſt You, "that the word of the Wiſe Man may be fulfilled, [h] For it was requiſite, that upon them "exerciſing Tyranny ſhould come Penury, which they could not avoid: Leſt the clamour "of our Infamy ſhould grow higher, to the manifeſting of our Innocence, we anſwer "to the Articles contained in thoſe Letters, or infamous Libels, not ſophiſtically but "truly, in form following, viz.

f 2 Corin. c. 5. v. 10.

g Eccluſ. c. 11. v. 5.

* Currenti cedendo Furori.

h Wiſd. c. 16. v. 4.

The Archbiſhops Anſwer to the firſt Article.

"For the Beginning of your foreſaid Letters, or of the foreſaid infamous Libell, be- "ing full of Reproach, containeth; That your Majeſty being formerly exalted to the "Royal Throne in the Years of your tender Youth, and deſiring at your firſt Undertа- "king that Princely Charge, to be directed by wholeſom Counſel, did make uſe of our "Spiritual Advice in matters concerning the Health of your Soul, and alſo of our Temporal, "in Affairs relating to the Augmentation and Conſervation of your Kingdom. And that "afterwards, when by Right of Succeſſion the Realm of France was devolved unto You, "and by the Lord Philip of Valois de facto manifeſtly uſurped, we perſwaded You by "our Importunities to make a League with the Lords of Almain and Others, for the Re- "covery of your Right, and that You ſhould only take care to provide Men of Courage "and Skill ſufficient for the War, becauſe we would effectually ſupply you with Monies "for the Neceſſities of You and Yours, and for Wages for the Army: And becauſe You "altogether wanted this due Aſſiſtance, you were fain to ſubmit to the heavy burthen of "Uſury.

"To theſe things, moſt Excellent Prince, even thô we hold our Tongues, and "ſpeak not a word, the notoriety of the Fact knows how to give a fit Anſwer: For "in the beginning of your Reign, while we preſided over the Church of Wincheſter, "by whoſe Counſel your Majeſty was directed, is known to the whole Kingdom. For "He, who is ignorant of nothing, knows, that when the Queſtion about the Kingdom "of France, after the Death of King Charles, the Brother of your Serene Mother, [i] was "handled and diſcuſſed in the Parliament, then held at Northampton, and it was "thereupon ordained, that the Biſhops of Worceſter then (now of Wincheſter) and "of Coventry and Litchfield, ſhould go into France, and in your Name claim that "Kingdom, and as much as in them lay, hinder the Coronation of the ſaid Philip of "Valois, who according to this Ordinance, taking then upon them the Legation enjoyned "them, went into France; which very Embaſſy gave the greateſt Occaſion of this "preſent War; we had at that time no concern in the Government of You, or of "your Youth, as others had, who directed You both in Spirituals and Temporals; be- "cauſe neither as then did we any ways intermeddle in the Kings Buſineſs, but re-i Vid. l. 1: c. 2. §. 2. p. 28.

"mained

"mained at Court; for what cauſe, God knows, hated by all the Courtiers. But afterwards in times of Unity, ſince it pleaſed Your Majeſty, that We alſo, together "with others of Your Council, ſhould confer about Your Affairs, toward the Eſtabliſhing of Peace between the two Realms of England, and of France; conſidering the "Perils of Souls, Bodies, and Goods, that were impending from the Devouring Gulf of "War, We labour'd with all Our Power, and to that end frequently croſſing the Sea, "not without many Dangers, Toyls, and vaſt Expences, We together with other Prelates, and divers Peers of Your Realm have ſought the Perſonal Preſence of the ſaid "Philip, and have effectually offer'd him, We ſay, not Meaſure ſufficient enough, but "even running over, as before this it hath been known, for the obtaining of Peace. "But the ſaid Philip, like the Deaf Adder, ſtopping his Ears, and not willing to "hearken unto Us, there were ſent unto him on Your Part two Spiritual Ambaſſadors, to wit, the Biſhop of Durham, and of Worceſter then (now of Wincheſter) for "the obtaining of his Peace: And another time, the Lords Henry of bleſſed Memory, Biſhop of Lincoln, and William Mountagu, and William Clinton, now Earls of "Salisbury, and of Huntingdon; who yet could neither obtain Peace, nor any delay "from War: But while the ſaid Ambaſſadors were yet in the Parts beyond Sea, the "the ſaid Philip of Valois, preſently ſent divers Commiſſions to all his Maritime Coaſts, "to kill and deſtroy the Men and Ships of England, whereſoever they could be found "at Sea, and with all Expedition ſent an Armed Band to Invade your Country of Gaſcoign. And ſo the War being begun by the ſaid Philip, and not by Us, according "to the deliberation of Your Parliament at Weſtminſter, Summon'd on that Occaſion, "and not on Our Account only, but on the Account of the great Cruelty and Obſtinacy of the Haughty Mind of the ſaid Philip, who Invaded the Engliſh, and refus'd "all manner of Agreement, and for the obtaining of Your Right in the Realm of "France, which was wickedly Uſurped by the ſaid Philip, it was Ordained and A"greed, that an Alliance ſhould be ſtruck up with the Almains, and others. But as "for the Wages in this part to be paid to Your Forces, in a certain Council then for "that end called at Stamford, there were certain Agreements made with certain Merchants of Your Land (We being preſent) the Form whereof may plainly appear in "Your Chancery: Which, if they had been obſerved, together with other Subſidies "given by the Clergy and People, to the Aid of Your War, and the great Cuſtoms of "Woolls, not only in our Opinion, but in the Judgement of all Your Counſellours, "would have ſufficed for this whole War. And Your Majeſty well knows that the "foreſaid Agreements were neither Violated, nor Changed by Us; and that the Subſidies by no means came to our Hands. If then any Misfortune happen'd for want of "Money, for which We are ſorry, this is to be wholly imputed to thoſe, who brake "the ſaid Agreements, and wickedly waſted and embeſel'd the ſaid Subſidies; and not "to Us, who bore the Burthen and Heat of the Day, and eſpecially for this Cauſe, "that after Your firſt Croſſing the Seas, We have made no long abode in this Kingdom. "But with the Reverend Fathers, the Lords Cardinals, and the Biſhop of Durham, "We went into France for the Reformation of the ſaid Peace, going and coming to "You, then reſiding in Brabant, frequently upon that Occaſion. And at laſt the ſaid "Affair of Peace being wholly laid aſide, as Deſperate; We ſtay'd with You in Brabant for a while, which was Chargeable enough to Us: And being made Partakers of "Your Neceſſities, together with Your Majeſty, and others, Prelates, and Barons of "Your Land, and for Your Majeſty deſpiſing all Danger, We enter'd ſeveral grievous "Obligations for the moſt heavy Debts, which You had contracted (I wiſh not to the "Prejudice of Your State) by paying much Uſury. And ſo, moſt Excellent Prince, "You put not Your Confidence in the Staff of a broken Reed (as You ſay in Your ſaid Letters) conſidering our Actions, but on a moſt firm Staff, and like unto that, where"with Jacob [k] went over Jordan, and returned Glorioufly with two Bands. For with "how much Glory, this Second time, Your Return hath been Crowned, the World "knows; and I wiſh it may be continued to the Glory of God, and Your Honour in "times to come.

[k] Geneſ. 32. v. 10.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"A little after in the foreſaid Letters a more Wonderfull thing is laid to Our Charge, "That breaking off Your further Expedition, for that time, You were obliged to deſiſt from "Your Enterpriſes, ſo Valiantly begun againſt Your Enemies, and to return into England, "where having called a Parliament, the Prelates, Barons, and other Liege Subjects of "Your Realm, gave as an Aid for Your War, the Ninth of their Corn, Lambs, and "Woolls, beſides a Tenth granted You by the Clergy. For the Collecting of which Aid, "and for the procuring of other things Neceſſary for You, We effectually promiſed to do

To the 2d Article.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"Our Devoir. On Occaſion of which Our Promiſe, after a Glorious Victory at Sea, granted
"unto You by God, You encamped near the ſtrong City of Tournay. In the Siege where-
"of being for ſome time wearied with Expectation of receiving the forementiond Aid,
"You were thrô meer want compelled againſt Your Will to admit of a Truce.

"Moſt Gracious Prince, (that We may ſpeak with due Reverence) Your Majeſty is "not ignorant, that the Aid of every Ninth, granted unto You (as is Premiſed) before "Your ſecond Voyage, was, by the Conſent of Your Majeſty, and of Your Council, "wholly Aſſign'd over for the firſt Year, to ſeveral of Your Creditors, as will plain-"ly appear by the Aſſignations themſelves: And that the ſaid Aſſignations ſhould "be firmly obſerved, You your ſelf, after Your ſecond Voyage, frequently enjoyned "by Letters.

"From all which it is Evident, that to the foreſaid Siege, of the beginning whereof we "were Ignorant, We could not ſend any thing, God is our Witneſs, nor did We pro-"miſe ſo to do: Nor could the ſlow Return of the ſaid Subſidy be imputed to Us, "the ſeveral Payments whereof were adjuſted in full Parliament, by certain Terms and "Proportions. And therefore on theſe and other Reaſons, We and other Your Coun-"ſellors fully weighing the Premiſes, told Your Majeſty, that without Your Perſonal "Preſence, We could not help You; ſo that Your ſaid Counſellors cannot be ſty-"led Mockers, ſaying, "Precept upon Precept, &c. But perfect Servants and Faith-"full to their Lord, not reporting, falſe, but true things, according to that of the Goſ-[1] Joh. c.8.v.32. "pel, [1] Ye ſhall know the Truth, and the Truth ſhall make you Free; and ſo, God wil-"ling, it ſhall be done. Moreover, before your Return, there was but little or no-"thing of the foreſaid Subſidy paid, but all will come into the Hands of your Pre-"ſent Miniſters; I pray God, it may hereafter be well diſpoſed of to your Honour.

"Beſides this, Dread Lord, it is added in your ſaid Letters, that upon your Return
"into Flanders, after the foreſaid Siege, there was nothing either in your own Purſes,
"or your Friends, whence You might diſcharge your Neceſſities, and pay off your Foreign
"Auxiliaries: Inſomuch that you were compell'd to plunge your ſelf into the Devour-
"ing Gulf of Uſury: And it was agreed by all your Faithfull Friends, Companions of "your Labours, that all theſe manifold Inconveniences and Misfortunes happen'd thrô
"the Fault or Negligence, and (as is pretended) Malice of Us, and of other Your Offi- "cers. Being therefore led by their Counſel (leſt otherwiſe they ſhould draw back from "your Aſſiſtance) and deſirous to apply a ſpeedy Remedy, certain of your Officers You have "removed, others You have cauſed to be detained in ſafe Cuſtody. And believing to be "more fully acquainted with what had been done by their Information, You ſent unto Us
"by the Lord Nicolas Cantilupe firſt, and after by the Lord Ralph Stafford Steward of "your Houſhold, commanding, that We ſhould take Care more ſpeedily to come to your "Perſonal Preſence, offering Us, becauſe of many Fears by Us pretended, your Letters
"of ſafe and ſure Conduct: But it is pretended, that We, ſetting at nought your Re-
"queſts and Commands, anſwer'd with as Haughty an Air, as Impudent Mind; that We "would neither appear before You, nor confer with You, unleſs in Full Parliament before
"the Lords and Peers of your Kingdom: Which Parliament (as the ſaid Letters Witneſs)
"for certain Reaſons was no way expedient to be called at that time.

"Dread Lord, the plain Truth of the Premiſes being conſider'd, an anſwer thereto "is eaſily framed; for by right Judgement your Return into Flanders, could not be im-"puted to Us, when (as is Premiſed) We made no promiſe beforehand, and by Con-"ſequence Your Friends and Allies could not complain of any Fraud or negligence of "Ours: For the Moſt High knows, that then, and at all times, while We have been "in your Service, We have (as is Premiſed) Loyally and Induſtriouſly purſu'd your Af-"fairs and Commands: And according to the Vulgar ſaying,

[m] Lat. Ultra poſſe viri, Non vult Deus ulla requiri.

[m] God doth expect from Man
No more, than what he can.

"But whereas your Faithfull Friends and Companions of your Pilgrimage, would like-"wiſe have an apt Remedy applied to theſe Matters; 'tis to be believed, as the Words "Sound, how that by a juſt Proceſs foregoing, which ſhall not be Arbitrary, but Ma-"ture, the Culpable (they mean) ſhould be Lawfully puniſhed for their Faults. But "that Clergymen, who are exempt from the Judgement of the Secular Power, and "Lay Freemen, ſhould againſt their Wills be ſeiſed and detained contrary to the Laws "and Cuſtoms of the Kingdom, and the Form of Magna Charta, what, and how great "is their ſin, who do this, cannot be unknown to your Royal Majeſty; ſince the Pe-

"rils

"rils of the Soul thereupon proceeding are not only expreſſed in the Holy Conſtitu- AN. DOM.
"tions, but are by Us and our Suffragans, divulged thrô all our Province of Canterbury, 1341.
"and publiſhed both to the Clergy and People. And certainly, moſt Serene Prince, An. Regni
"We much fear, that the Proceſſes done and had in your Land in theſe days (I would Angliæ
"they were Lawfull and Juſt!) may turn away from You (which God forbid!) the XV.
"Hearts of your People; unleſs a due Remedy be more ſpeedily apply'd. Franciæ

"But what thoſe things were, which your foreſaid Meſſengers on your Behalf de- II.
"clared, and as they pleaſed, enjoyned us cannot be ſecret or hid, as being publique-
"ly told before Notaries, and a multitude of Men. The firſt of whom, viz. the Lord
"Nicolas Cantilupe, bringing with him Royal Letters of Credence under the Privy
"Seal, and delivering his Credence, enjoyned and cited us; that within eight Days,
"then immediately following, upon the account of certain of your Majeſties Debts,
"for which we ſtood bound, we ſhould forthwith croſs the Seas into Brabant, there
"conſtantly to tarry till the ſaid Debts ſhould be fully ſatisfied. But the other Meſ-
"ſenger, namely the Lord Ralph Stafford, as if he had come from a long journey, and "had brought no Letter at all with him, ſaid unto us, only by word of Mouth, "I
"cite thee to appear before the King; aſſuring us alſo by word of Mouth only, that we "ought not to fear the Traps of thoſe that threatned us: If therefore ſuch Meſſages as "theſe, were conſonant to certain Clauſes in that part inſerted in your Letters, let a "juſt Judge determin. It muſt needs ſeem to any circumſpect Perſon, that to go pre-
"ſently into Brabant, and yet to tarry ſtill in England for the gaining of the foreſaid
"Informations, contains meer Repugnances. And let your Majeſty know, that no "vain Fear, Pride, Diſobedience, Contempt, or Conſcience of Guilt withheld us from "the delectable Sight of your Royal Face, but it was the moſt juſt reaſon above al-
"ledged, duly conſidered. And that we may ſpeak with due and reſpectfull Reve"rence, althô your Royal Letters of Conduct, for Coming to your Council, Staying "and returning, might at firſt view ſeem ſufficient; if indeed we had been called to "your Council, as we were not: Yet that ſame Day, whereon your Letters were "brought to us, there was a Royal Brief directed to the High-Sheriff of Kent, that "he ſhould oblige us to come before You and your Council at London, to anſwer
"about a certain Contempt in the ſaid Brief contained: But with what zeal to your "Juſtice that matter was conceived, God knows. For thô the Royal Conduct it ſelf "gave us free Liberty of Returning, yet the very Nature of the ſaid Brief laid upon us
"a ſtrict neceſſity of ſtaying in the hands of our Enemies: Which thing by no means
"did or may become the Majeſty of a King. Yet we, as we ſaid before, have always "been, and ſhall be ready in the preſence of your Majeſty, the Prelates, Barons and "Peers of the Land, to anſwer to whatever ſhall be objected againſt us; and to ſtand
"to the judgment of our Peers in all things, our State and Order always preſerved.

"But thoſe who endeavour to hinder the Convocation of a Parliament; pretending "for an Occaſion, that there is no lawfull Cauſe, endeavour to decline the Declara"tion of the Truth; the Truth it ſelf witneſſing, which ſays, [n] For every one that doth "evil, hateth the light.

[n] John c. 3. v. 20.

To the 4 Article.

"As to that which is inſerted in the ſaid Letters, that We, being exalted by the Roy- "al Bounty to great Honours, upon whom, as a moſt Dear Father your Soul repoſed, were "now cruelly changed into an heavy and unnatural Step-father unto You; forgetfull of "Benefits received, ungratefull, and purſuing our Benefactor, and that we have ſerved
"You, as a Mouſe in a Bag, a Serpent in the Lap, and Fire in the Boſom, with an ill
"Requital for your kindneſs. The Truth being thus concealed, and Falſhood ſet forth
"in laying to our Charge this Ingratitude, ſaving your Reverence, not very truly,
"rather from the Malice of him that dictated the Letters, than of him that ſent them,
"we thus anſwer; For it is ſaid by the mouth of Truth, [o] Every one that hath forſaken
"Houſes, or Brethren, or Siſters, or Father, or Mother, or Wife, or Children, or Lands
"for my Names Sake, ſhall receive an hundred fold, and ſhall inherit Everlaſting Life.

[o] Matth. c. 19. v. 29.

"Now him that ſpake the Premiſes we call for our Witneſs, that from that time,
"wherein we labour'd in your Service ſpiritually, according to the Knowledge gran"ted unto us from the Moſt High, we did ſo much apply our Mind with all Sincerity,
"Loyalty, Devotion and Diligence (as we premiſed) to the diſpatch of your Af"fairs, for your Honour and the Weal of your Kingdom, that we not only left our "Father and Mother, our Wife, that is, our Church, and our Spiritual Children, the "Care and Culture of our Houſes and Lands, and alſo of our Selves; but being day "and night ſollicitous for You and your Affairs, we often paſſed the night without "Sleep; and by no means ſparing our Labours, either beyond or on this ſide the Sea,

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"we have (I pray God it be not to the peril of our Soul) quite wasted our Body, "and by spending our temporal Goods, are as it were made Beggars; and by minding "your Advantage and that of your Realm, have lost the Love both of Clergy and "People, as the World knows. And whether these be the Actions of a Step-father, "or of a Father, let him judge, who knows not how to lie, the Almighty, True God! "For unto you we have ever been a kind Father; but unto our Spiritual Children "(which with grief we declare) for your sake an heavy Step-father. We were not a "Mouse in your Bag, because in your service we did not feed on what was yours but on "our own: What we have of a Serpent, we shew in exercising his Wisdom, not "in pouring forth the malice of his Poison in your Lap; as also by earnest desires "kindling Fire of Divine Love and Charity, which doth not consume in your Bosom, "but according to the knowledge given unto us of the Lord, enlighten: For all which, "since there is no reward allow'd from Man, let him reward us, who is the Rewarder "of all Good Men. Nor will that our Exaltation by Royal Benefits diminish our Re- "ward from the Most High: Which yet was charged unto us, as we have evinced, "by the malice of the Dictator; especially, since it would not become the Royal Mag- "nificence to repeat such Upbraidings: For it is not thrô the Collation or Procure- "ment of any Secular Prince whatsoever, that we are any thing exalted by the Bene- "fits and magnificent Honours, which hitherto we have enjoy'd; but thrô the graci- "ous Munificence of God, [p] who giveth liberally unto all, and upbraids no man of the "Good things he hath given.

[p] James c. 1. v. 5.

To the 5 Article.

"But as to that which under a kind of covert is spitefully thrown against us, That "we have defamed the Kings Innocence, and the Fidelity and Diligence of his Counsel- "lors and Officers, who pursue Justice, publiquely in our Letters declaring, that in these "latter times by the Royal Power, contrary to Justice, the Laity is oppressed, the Cler- "gy confounded, and Holy Church burthen'd with divers Exactions, Taxes and Tallia- "ges; whether the Premises are grounded on Truth, the Most High well knoweth. "For laying aside all Equivocation, we have incessantly studied in Mind and Spirit to "conserve your Innocence, and to own it publiquely unto others: For the Conserva- "tion whereof we have hitherto prayed God, and continually do pray him, and we "have often by our Letters Patents directed and shall do hereafter, that those of our "Province should pour forth their Prayers for the safe and happy Conservation of your "State.

"But whether by the damnable Presumption of certain of your Officers, as we be- "lieve, without your Connivance, against Justice, the Layety is more than usually op- "pressed, the Clergy and Church burthen'd with divers Taxations and Talliages, as e- "vidently now appears; when from Ecclesiastical Persons that is now exacted, which "they never granted. Your People also in these Days are governed by new and unu- "sual (I wish I could not say Arbitray) Laws, so that their Substance hardly sufficing "for Life, will at last (unless God avert) to your great Reproach, be reduced to ex- "treme Poverty. Nor did we say, propose or publish such things with a sinister In- "tention to defame the Innocence of You, or of your Officers; since we named none "in particular: But that thereby your Royal Majesty being moved, might so much "the sooner apply a fit Remedy; lest thrô unlawfull Grievances the Affections of "your People should (which God forbid!) lose their wonted Devotion by turning their "Love into Hatred.

To the 6 Article.

"And because your Royal Majesty, after the malevolous pleasure of the Dictator "of your Letters, seems to charge us; That we have endeavour'd to usurp the name "of a Good Shepherd, when indeed we were nothing less, after the common Opinion, and "even our own Confession, wherein we called our selves an Hireling, and that we cloa- "ked our Fox-craft with a feigned Zeal for the Liberties of the Church; whose Trou- "bles, if in Goods or Persons, it hath sustained any in your Days, are solely to be at- "tributed to our Remissness, evil Counsels and crafty Devices. To which we answer, "as the subject matter permits; For the Truth called himself the Good Pastor, say- "ing, [q] I am the Good Shepherd, and no other can call himself a Good Shepherd, wit- "ness the same Truth, saying, [r] There is none Good save God alone. If therefore in "Preaching publiquely we said, "That we were not a Good Shepherd, but an Hire- "ling; We spake after the Doctrine of our Saviour, saying, [s] When you have done all "those things, which are commanded you, say ye are unprofitable Servants. And Truth it "self knows, that we never thought fallaciously, or by any pretence, to usurp the "Name of a Good Shepherd, as we neither are nor can be. But laying aside all "Fox-craft and feigned Zeal, such as we were, We (together with the other Prelates

[q] John 10. v. 11

[r] Luke c. 18. v. 19.

[s] Luke c. 17. v. 10.

"and

"and Proctors of the Clergy of our Province) interposed our selves for the relief of "your Necessity, and the Profit, or rather Salvation of your Kingdom, which with "our own eyes we beheld exposed to innumerable Dangers; doing all that in us lay, "and procuring to be granted Taxes and many Subsidies, to the great burthen and "grievance of the said Clergy; that by the Aid of the Subjects, the Enemies of the "King, Kingdom, and Church might be drove away; and the Church and Kingdom "might flourish in the calm of Peace. For which, because as it seems, by You it can-"not be reasonably laid to our Charge as a Fault, we comfort our self with the com-"mon Proverb,

Thô Others Accusations raise;
'Tis fit that You should yield me Praise.

t Si culpent alii, Te me laudare necesse est.

"But as to that which is laid to our Charge, That by our Letters we commanded to To the 7 Ar-
"be published in most Places of great Resort, certain Sentences of Excommunication, ticle.
"which were long since made in general against the Violators of the Liberties of the "Church and Magna Charta, thereby to spoil the good Opinion had of the King, and to "defame the Kings Ministers aforesaid, and traiterously to stir up Sedition among the "People committed to the King, and to withdraw from your Royal Majesty the Hearts "of the Earls, Lords and Barons of your Realm. Because the Premises seem to fling "the Crime of Treason upon our Head, in which Case no King or Temporal Lord "can be our Competent Judge, as is sufficiently shewed above, we protest openly and "publiquely by these Presents, that we intend by what we have said, or shall say, in "nothing to prejudice our State in this part, but wholly to decline the Tryal of any "Secular Judge whatsoever. But yet extrajudicially to the declaration of our Inno-"cence, we do confess, nor can we deny, that we have denounced, and by Others "caused to be denounced certain Sentences of Excommunication, formerly made in ge-"neral against the Violators of the Liberties of the Church and Magna Charta; but "yet so, as particularly and expressly to except, as we might the Kings Person, that "of the Queen and their Children: Wherein we defamed no body, since therein we "nominated no body: Nor thereby, saving the Reverence of him that dictated, did "we traiterously procure Sedition, or cause the People to be withdrawn from You: "Who are at present obedient to You in all things, and who serve You in all things "according to their Duty, as the whole World may see: But He, who knows all things, "is our Witness, that as far as it was possible for us, we always, as well publiquely as "privately, did induce the Lords and Commons of your Realm, to love you heartily, "and to serve you in your Affairs more readily, and with all their Power to aid You, "as is sufficiently known to all your Realm.

"In the end of your foresaid Letters, there seem to be many things said, proposed, "and generally repeated, to the slander of our Reputation, As that You being in your "Minority, by our imprudent Counsel made certain prodigal Donations, unlawfull Ali-"enations, and excessive Largesses, so that thereby your Majesties Exchequer was whol-"ly exhausted; affirming further, that being corrupted with Bribes, we have without rea-"sonable Cause, released to several Persons vast Summs of Money owing unto You: "And also, that we have applied to the Use of our selves and our Friends, and bestow'd "on other evil-deserving Persons, many of your Rents and Revenues. And that being "not only an Acceptor of Bribes, but of Persons also, we have, contrary to your desire "and our Oath of Fidelity made to You, admitted to publique Offices in your Dominions "Persons altogether unworthy, neglecting and putting back the worthy and well-deserving: "And that of a refractory Mind, we have rashly presumed to do many other things, to the "detriment of the State Royal, the hurt of the Regal Dignity, and the dammage and "grievance of your People, by abusing the Authority and Charge committed unto us.

"Premising again the foresaid Protestation, because your Royal Majesty as it seems, "doth in the Premises lay unto our Charge Perjury by way of Crime, in which cause "You are not our Judge, as neither can you be, yet unto Generals we answer gene-"rally, that according to the discretion given unto us by God, being in your Offices, "we always faithfully served your Royal Majesty, and in our Actions gave you, in our "judgment, sound Counsel: To prodigal Donations, or unlawfull Alienations, or ex-"cessive Largesses, or Relaxations of great Sums of Money due unto You (unless up-"on good Reasons by you done) neither thrô Bribery, Hate, Love or Favour, yiel-"ding fallaciously any Assent, but to our Power conserving your Honour and Interest "in the Premises, and all other Matters. And because sundry times we stiffly with-"stood several Donations and Relaxations, we often went away with small Thanks "from

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"from the Kings Servants and Others. And if particularly any thing had been made "out, as to each of the Premiſes, we ſhould have given a particular Anſwer, agreeable "to God and the Truth. For at preſent it doth not occurr to our Memory, that your "Royal Highneſs hath made any extraordinary Donations, we being preſent and know- "ing, thoſe onely excepted, which unto certain Earls, lately by You firſt made, by "Conſent of ſolemn Parliament then held in your Royal Palace at Weſtminſter, You "of your Royal Bounty gave: Which then we believed and yet do, not to have "been done to the Kings Prejudice, but to make for your Intereſt and Honour. For "the Experience of things teaches, what rank they held for You and your Realm, and "how much they have ſuffer'd and do ſuffer at preſent. But as for any Exceſſive "Largeſſes or Relaxations, of the Kings Liberality made, we remember not at preſent, "unleſs your Majeſty would have us underſtand it, of one Relaxation made to a "Debtor, even to all your People of England, in your laſt Parliament (You being pre- "ſent) conven'd at Weſtminſter: Which Grace on that occaſion was granted by the "Aſſent of the King and of the whole Parliament, on conſideration of a greater Ad- "vantage thereby accruing to You, viz. that the Community of the Land ſhould "grant You a Ninth aforeſaid; nor would the Community have otherwiſe aſſented to "give the Subſidy of the ſaid Ninth: Which latter Inſtance, where Reaſon ſways, ought "not to be imputed unto us.

"But when the ſaid Generals are declared more particularly, as the Law requires, "we will give in our Anſwer to what ſhall be ſo declared, diſtinct enough: And yet "one thing we ſhall not here omit, which we wonder that it ſhould be objected againſt us; "namely, that we have applied unto the uſe of us and of our Friends, the Kings Rents "and Revenues: For the juſt Judge ſitting in Heaven knows, that hitherto we "never appli'd any of the Kings Lands, Rents or Profits, to our ſelves or ours; nor "ever intended to apply them: But in the Affairs of You and of your Father and "Grandfather, for whom we have croſſed the Seas 30 times, and have often gone to "and fro for Scotland, and in other your Employs, we have ſpent ſo much of our own, "that of our Purſes it may be ſaid, as above in your Letters it is repeated, Here a "little and there a little. For from the beginning of the Wars to this preſent day, "we have received nothing at all from the Kings Exchequer except 300 l. And ſo "the Evil deſign'd againſt us is remembred; but our Labours, Expences and Gratitude, are [y] Job c. 6. v. 2. "utterly forgotten of all Men. Therefore I may ſay with Job, Oh! that my ſins were "throughly weighed, and my Calamity laid in the Balances together; ſurely this would "appear heavier than the ſand of the Sea.

"As for Acceptors of Perſons, truly God is our Witneſs, we never were; but deſi- "rous always to prefer the Kings Will, we placed, and cauſed to be placed Worthy "Perſons in Publique Offices, in whatſoever Lands or Places were ſubject to the Kings "Government; as far as Human Condition permitted us to know the Manners of Men, "according to the knowledge and power given us from above, taking therefore Gifts "or Rewards of no body. And if any one will ſay or prove, that we have taken a- "ny Gifts or Mony from any, we ſhall be ready upon Occaſion to anſwer all Plaintiffs, "or Impeachers, whenſoever it ſhall pleaſe the Kings Majeſty, according to the Law "and Cuſtoms of the Realm, the Honour of God, our Eſtate and Order being in all "things preſerved: Knowing (moſt Serene Prince) for certain, that if we might with "a ſafe Conſcience reveal the ſecrets of your Council, we could ſhow openly to all "the World, to whom the Failing in all the Premiſes ought to be imputed, in the juſt "Judgment of God and all true Men.

"Thus much for the preſent may ſuffice as to the ſaid infamous Libel, and I wiſh "that for your Majeſties Honour, it had never been written and publiſhed; which al- "thô at the firſt view it ſeems to beſpatter and wound our Reputation; yet things be- "ing ſeriouſly conſider'd, as they ought to be, and the Writings therein contained, "weighed in a juſt Scrutiny, thoſe Men cannot avoid the blot of Treaſon to the King "and Kingdom, who dictated this Libel, or thereto gave their Counſel and Conſent, or "reported the Contents thereof to our Injury, or publiſhed them to our Infamy.

"Which may your Royal Majeſty vouchſafe with an Upright Heart to conſider; [z] Prov. c. 18. v. 15. "whom may that King, by whom [z] Kings reign and Princes decree Juſtice, vouchſafe "to preſerve in Health, and in his own Love. Amen.

This notable and artificial Letter the Archbiſhop wrote in a ſtrain agreeable to the Times, ſometimes ſtanding ſtiffly upon his Pontifical Authority, and the ſacred Liberties of the Church, ſometimes humbly conceding the Regal Power, always full of ſubmiſſive Courage, which was fomented by his Innocence or Dignity: But all theſe Arts Arts could neither frighten nor mollifie the Kings Exaſperated Mind yet; ſo that he preſently followed it with this Reply, which he ſent as an Antidote againſt the Archbiſhops Inſinuations, to all the Biſhops and Clergy of that Province. AN. DOM. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

X. "EDWARD by the Grace of God, King of England, and France, and Lord "of Ireland, To the Biſhops, Deans, Abbots, Priors, and their Chapters, and other "Eccleſiaſtical Perſons of the Province of Canterbury, Greeting. The Wound of "Hearts, Pride, which always ſoareth aloft, doth often turn the Remedy to a Diſeaſe, "and the Phyſick to Poiſon; And this is proved by the preſumptuous Arrogance of "John Archbiſhop of Canterbury; who, when lately he had publiquely Preached, and "commanded to be Publiſhed in ſeveral places of great Reſort, ſundry ſiniſter Mat"ters, concerning Us and Ours, as more fully is contained in our Excuſatory Letters "to You, and others thereupon directed, now heaping up more heavy Injuries to his "former endeavours, to intimate to our Liege People, that Our Excuſes which We "provided to heal the Wounds of Our Dignity and Royal Fame, are not true; and "with Exquiſite Engines to batter them, and by New Letters lately ſent to You and "others, with a ſlanderous Pen, and lying Style, more grievouſly and freely to defame "them. And thô it be the Cuſtom of Popes, Cardinals, and Inferior Prelates, to re"ceive the Diſcourſes and Letters of Kings reſpectfully and graciouſly; yet Our Ex"cuſatory Letters containing (as in due place and time We intend fully to prove) true and "juſt Matter, he intitles Deteſtable Scandalous Libells, putting a falſe blot upon Our "Name: Becauſe if any One that hath the Cuſtody of a Common Weal, is ready to "prove thoſe Crimes that are committed to writing, if truth corroborate his Aſſer"tions, he is vindicated from the Scandal of Libelling, and is thereby accounted Praiſe"Worthy. He alſo not obſerving the manner of his Predeceſſors, who uſed to Ho"nour and Love their Princes, and cauſe [y] Supplications, Prayers, Interceſſions, and gi"ving of Thanks to be made by themſelves and others, for them; and to teach them in "the Spirit of Meekneſs, begins the Web of Faction and perverſe Contention againſt "Us, and Our Servants, in the Spirit of Pride, [z] making long his Iniquity, and ſeek"ing (which is the Comfort of Wretches) more Companions in his puniſhment: And "which is worſe, by his Lying Words he wickedly endeavours to precipitate into a "Diſreſpect and Contempt of Us, his Suffragans, and other Our Devout and Loyal Sub"jects. And althô with God, not the Heighth of a Mans Degree, but the Paſſing of a "Good Life gains approbation, this Man Glorying in the Loftineſs of his Condition, "requires unto himſelf, as unto the Ambaſſador of Chriſt, that Reverence, which be"ing due from Him unto Us, He doth not pay. Nay, when both He and other Pre"lates of the Realm, who receive the Temporals of their Churches from Us, by their "Oath of Allegiance do owe unto Us Faith, Honour, and Reverence, He only is not "aſham'd to render unto Us, inſtead of Faith, Treachery; in lieu of Honour, Reproach; "and for Reverence, Contempt. Wherefore althô We are ready, and always have "been, to reſpect, as is meet, Our Spiritual Fathers; yet as for their Offences which "We ſee to abound to the Hazard of Us and of Our Kingdom, We ought not to paſs "them over ſlightly. But the ſaid Archbiſhop complains, that certain Crimes were "in Our ſaid Excuſatory Letters objected againſt him; thô abſent, unheard, and with"out Defence; and that he was condemn'd of Capital Matters, as if We (as He fool"iſhly pretends) had to the utmoſt proceeded criminally againſt him; which is not true: "When We only ſupply'd the place of an Excuſe, being compell'd of Neceſſity; "leſt We ſhould ſeem to neglect Our own Reputation. But let this Cavilling Repro"ver ſee, if this complaint may not juſtly be retorted upon his own Head, who falſe"ly and maliciouſly in poſitive Words deſcribes Us his King, and Our Counſellors, thô "abſent, unhear'd, and without Defence, as Oppreſſors and Tranſgreſſors of the Laws "altogether: When as He is juſtly blamed, who incurrs the Fault, which he himſelf "Reproves; and [a] wherein he judgeth another, he condemneth himſelf; while he him"ſelf is found reproveable in the ſame thing. Moreover, althô he ſtudied to ſerve, "not Our Intereſt, but his own Covetouſneſs; yet he upbraids and boaſts, that he hath "labour'd ſo Mightily in the Kings Affairs (to uſe his own Words) that thereby he "feared, how he had manifoldly incurred the heavy diſpleaſure both of God and Man: "And this he might juſtly fear, ſince he may be reckon'd among that ſort of Men, "who according to the Prophetical taunt, [b] have taught their tongues to ſpeak lies, and "weary themſelves to commit Iniquity. But as to certain other falſe and ſpecious Words, "contained in the Letters of the ſaid Archbiſhop, thô We might confute them with "Reaſons more clear than the Light, yet leſt We ſhould protract Diſcourſe, We thought "fit for the preſent not to anſwer them, becauſe it is not decent to ſtrive with a conten"tious Man, nor agree with him in perverſeneſs.

[y] 1 Tim. c. 2. v. 1.

[z] Pſalm 128. v. 3.

[a] Rom. c. 2. v. 1.

[b] Jer. c. 9. v. 5.

"But

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"But We command You firmly, in the Faith and Love, wherein You are bound unto Us, enjoyning You, that notwithstanding any Mandate of the said Archbishop (to which in derogation of the Royal Honour, against Your Oath of Allegiance made unto Us, You ought not to obey) You forthwith proceed to the Publication of those things, which in Our foresaid Excusatory Letters are contained, according to their Order.

"And because We are and ought to be extreamly jealous concerning the maintenance of Our Rights and Prerogatives Royal, which the Worthily remembred Supremacy of Our Progenitors, Kings of England, hath Gloriously defended; and because the said Archbishop, to stir up the Clergy and People against Us, and to hinder the Carrying on of Our War, which by his Counsel principally We undertook, hath caused and commanded by others to be done, and Published certain Denunciations and Publications of Sentences of Excommunication and Monitions, Injurious and prejudicial to Our Crown and Dignity Royal; since thereby he endeavours in sundry Articles to take away from Us the Jurisdiction, notoriously to Us belonging, and whereof We, being a King Anointed, are known to be capable, and which both We and Our Progenitors (the Popes, Prelates and Clergy of Our Kingdom both knowing and allowing) have peaceably enjoy'd time out of Mind, to the Hurt of Our Majesty Royal, and the manifest derogation of Our Rights and Kingly Prerogatives: We therefore strictly, and upon your Peril, forbid You, that neither by your selves, nor by others, you make; nor, as much as in you lies, by others suffer to be made any such undue Publications, Denuntiations, or Monitions, Prejudicial and Derogatory to Our Rights and Prerogatives Royal; or any thing else, whereby Our Liege Subjects may be stirred up against Us, or the Carrying on of Our War may be any way hindred, to the Subversion of Us, and of Our Liege People (which God forbid) at the Command of the Archbishop, or any other whatsoever: And if any thing in this kind hath by You been attempted, that forthwith You Repeal it. Witness Our Self at the Tower of London, the 31 of March, in the Year of Our Reign of England the 15, and of France 2. This truly Royal Command of the Kings being obey'd; by all the Bishops of the Province of Canterbury, the King resolved to maintain the Rights of his Crown, and Summons a Parliament, to which also the Archbishop is called, [c] the Kings Royal Protection being Granted him, that he might safely come thither.

[c] Antiqu. Brit. p. 235. n. 55.

XI. On the [d] Ninth of April, being Easter [e] Monday, King Edward held his High Court of Parliament at Westminster; the Causes whereof were declared to be, how the King might be speedily supply'd with the Grants, yielded unto him last Year, upon his passing in Person against his Enemy, Philip of Valois, who had taken away part of the Dutchy of Guienne, much part of which Grant was kept from the King by Evil Officers: Also secondly, how more plenty of Money might be raised, and whether Florens were to be current with Sterling. After which Declaration was made in the Kings Name, that whoever of his Subjects should think themselves hardly used either by the King, or his Officers, upon Complaint and Proof made, should have their Remedy.

[d] Pascha 8 April. Lit. Dom. G.

[e] M. S. Rot. Parl. p. 40. &c. Exact Abridgement by Sr Rob. Cotton p. 31.

The mean while the Archbishop, in Order to be present at this Session of Parliament, [f] came to London; repaired secretly to the Bishops of London and Chichester, by whom he is convey'd to the Kings Palace, where the Parliament sat, with a great Company of Clergymen and Souldiers. Upon his Entrance into the House, the Kings Steward and Chamberlain met him; who in the Kings Name forbad him to enter the Parliament, untill in the Kings Exchequer he had undergone a Tryal concerning Crimes laid to his Charge. Canterbury, lest he should move the King too much, went into the Exchequer, and there took a Copy of the Articles, whereof his Accusation was framed, to which he promised after a mature deliberation to return an Answer. Then with the Kings leave he enter'd the Parliament, and there before the Prelates and Lords of the Realm declared the causes of his coming to be for the Honour, Rights, and Liberties of the Church, for the Profit and Commodity of the Realm, and for the Interest and Honour of the King; and lastly, that he might clear himself in Parliament of several Crimes laid to his Charge, and Published over all England. That day there was nothing done, but the Parliament being at the Kings command Adjourn'd, every one went his way. But from [g] Thursday the 12 of April, till Thursday the 19, the Parliament continued from day to day in debate upon this point, that the Nobles of this Land should not be put to answer, but before their Peers in open Parliament: Whereupon are named Four Bishops, Four Earls, and Four Barons, to draw up the Platform for [f] Antiqu. Brit. p. 235. n. 56.

[g] M. S. ibid. §. 6. & Sr Rob. Cottons Exact Abridgement.

for the Kings View. Their [h] Names were these, the Prelates Ralph Stafford Bishop of London; Ralph Shrewsbury Bishop of Bath and Wells, John Grandeston Bishop of Exceter, and Thomas Charleton Bishop of Hereford: The Four Earls were Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, William Clinton Earl of Huntingdon, and Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk: The Four Barons were, Henry Lord Piercy, Thomas Lord Wake, Ralph Lord Basset, and the Lord Ralph Nevill. These being also to enquire concerning the Crimes laid against the Archbishop, and to prepare them for the King, among other things determin'd, that the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Treasurer, and other High Officers of State, should be included under the Names of Peers; and set down a Request, that all Conditions and Estates might enjoy their proper and peculiar Liberties. By that time these things were thus forwarded, the Archbishop came again to the Parliament, but was forbid by the Captain of the Kings Guard [i] Sr. William Attewood to enter: Whereupon he spake thus to the People that flocked about him, "My Friends, the King by his Writ of Summons "hath called me to this Parliament, and I, who am the Chief Peer of the Realm, and "who next the King have the First Voice in Parliament, claim the Rights of my Church "of Canterbury, and therefore require entrance into Parliament. But when for all this being kept out by the Guard, he could not enter, he took his Cross in his own Hands, and solemnly protested, that he would not stir from that place, till the King gave him leave to come into Parliament, or a sufficient Reason why he should not: While he stood there in this manner, some that were by, began to revile him, telling him, that he was a Traytor, and had deceived the King, and betray'd the Realm. To whom the Archbishop, "The Curse of Almighty God, and of his Blessed Mother, and of St. Thomas "and Mine also, be upon the Heads of them that inform the King so, Amen, Amen. In this hurry certain Noblemen chancing to come out, he besought them to Request the King in his behalf, and for the Right of his Church of Canterbury; this they kindly promise him to do. The mean while certain Articles cunningly contriv'd, and so as they might stir up the hate of the Common People against him, are scatter'd about in all places. The Authors of this trouble of the Archbishops were thought to be that subtle Engineer Adam Orleton Bishop of Winchester, the Lord Darcy, and Dr. William Killesby; but Winchester cunningly dissembled the Matter, and the other two were his open Enemies. However at last by the Intercession and Favour of the Lords, the King gave leave for his Admission into Parliament, where he offer'd to purge himself Lawfully in Parliament of the Crimes objected unto him: But he was referr'd to the Consideration of the Twelve Peers, who had his Cause in Hand at that time. On the 19 of April being a Thursday, [k] the King came into St. Edward's Chamber, commonly called the Painted Chamber, before whom, in sight of all the Lords and Commons, the Archbishop humbled himself, and required his Gracious Pardon; which upon the whole Parliaments General Suit and Entreaty his Majesty granted. After which the Archbishop desired, that whereas he was publiquely defamed thrô the Realm, he might now be Arraigned in Open Parliament before his Peers: But the King answer'd, he would first attend to the Common Affairs, and after that examine lighter Matters. However a little after without any more Accusation, or Answer; the King of his own accord declared him Legally purged and excused, and ever after held him more Dear than before. Thus ended the Archbishops Troubles, the Matter being no more resumed, he either appearing Innocent, which is most likely, or however made so by the Kings Pardon: Thô at that time all things touching his Arraignment were deliver'd [l] to remain with Dr. William Killesby, Keeper of the Privy Seal, who as We observ'd before, was thought no very Good Friend to the Archbishop. But the Gracious King it seems had a Mind not to destroy so able a Minister, but only to humble him and break his High Prelatical Obstinacy, which for a while seem'd ready to Cope with his Regal Power.

But upon occasion of this Contrast, the [m] Clergy of England in this Parliament made these Requests to the King, That the Liberties of Holy Church may be kept, and the Great Charter be newly proclaim'd, and by Oath confirmed: The King answer'd, that it "was his Desire that Magna Charta should be observed; but that it seem'd to him sufficient, for either that, or other their Liberties to be exemplifi'd under the Great Seal; and "that more Oaths were not necessary; especially since already too many were forsworn "throughout the Land.

Then they shew'd, how several of the Clergy were impriſon'd by the Kings Officers without due Process, and that therefore they may be deliver'd: To which the King answer'd, "That he intended not any Clergyman should be attached against "Law, and that he would be ready to hear, if any was in that Manner Impri[h] Antiqu. Brit. p.236. Godwins Cat Bps p.136.

[i] Antiqu. Brit. & Godw. ut supra.

[k] M. S. Rot. Parl. p. 41. §. 8. Sr. R. Cotton p. 31. ibid.

[l] M. S. Id. p. 45. §. 48. & Sr. Rob. Cotton.

[m] M. S. Id. p. 42. &c.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"ſon'd, either againſt Magna Charta, or the Statute of Northampton.

They complain'd further, that ſeveral of the Kings Officers had entred divers Religious Houſes, and have by Oath extorted a Confeſſion of things depoſited in thoſe Houſes, and them ſo found have carried away. The King anſwer'd, "that he would "not his Officers ſhould do thus: But that if Laymen to defraud Him, do conceal "their Goods in ſuch places, then the Privilege ſhould not avail: For ſo the King is "wronged.

On Saturday following the King thus anſwer'd the Petition of the Lords, which Petition was, That Magna Charta might in all points be obſerved, ſo as ſuch Perſons, who are neither appealed, nor indited, nor preſented at the Suit of any, and yet have their Goods, Lands, or Poſſeſſions taken away, may be reſtored thereto again. R. "The "King granteth for Him and his Heirs for ever, that if any Perſon commit any Act "contrary to the form of Magna Charta, or any other Good Law; he ſhall be lyable "to anſwer it in Parliament, or elſe where he ought by Law. The ſame anſwer he gave the Commons, whoſe further Petitions, with their Reſpective Anſwers, follow,

Com. That the Chancellor and other Officers of State, there named in the Records, may upon their Entrance into the ſaid Offices be ſworn to obſerve the Laws of the Land and Magna Charta.

K. The King willeth the ſame.

Com. That every Man, for Debts due to the Kings Anceſtors, may have therefore Charters of Pardon, of Courſe out of the Chancery.

K. The King granteth.

Com. That Certain by Commiſſion may hear the Accounts of thoſe, who have received Woolls, Monies, or other Aid for the King, and that the ſame may be enrolled in the Chancery.

K. It pleaſeth the King, ſo as the Treaſurer and Lord Chief Baron may be joyned in the Commiſſion.

Com. That the Ordinance made at Northampton, That Men of evil Life and Converſation ſhould be attached, may be repealed: Becauſe on Pretence thereof many Honeſt Men have been arreſted.

K. The King doth revoke it.

Com. That many Commiſſions, whereby ſundry Men have been fined outragiouſly by the Commiſſioners, may be revoked, and New ones granted to Others.

K. The King is pleaſed, that the ſame ſhall be done in the Preſence of Him, of the Lords and certain of the Commons.

Com. That the Chancellor and all other Officers, there named, may be choſen in open Parliament; they at the ſame time to be openly ſworn to obſerve the Laws aforeſaid.

K. The King yieldeth onely thus much, that if any ſuch Office, by the Death or other Failure of the Incumbent become void, the Choice to remain ſolely in the King; he taking therein the Aſſent of his Council; but that every ſuch Officer ſhall be ſworn at the next Parliament according to the Petition: and that every Parliament following, the King ſhall reſume into his Hands all ſnch Offices; ſo as the ſaid Officers ſhall be left liable to anſwer all Objections.

Hereupon at the requeſt of the whole Three Eſtates made unto the King, theſe Articles were Statutes, as on the Back of the Roll doth appear: Which Statutes with the Conditions were after read before the King, his Officers being preſent, as the Chancellor, Treaſurer, Juſtices of both Benches, Steward of the King's Chamber and Others, all which Officers were ſworn on the Croſs of Canterbury to perform the ſame: Only the Chancellor, Treaſurer, and certain of the Juſtices refuſed the ſaid Oath, as being repugnant to their former Oath and the Laws of the Realm. However for that time the Statutes and Conditions aforeſaid, together with the Commiſſions to enquire after Oppreſſions, were exemplified under the Great Seal and deliver'd to the Lords and Commons. Althô afterwards the King judging them to entrench upon his Prerogative Royal, and conſequently to be in themſelves illegal, did abſolutely revoke and annull them, declaring them void and of no force.

Becauſe the King before Michaelmas then next enſuing, was to tranſport 20000 Sacks of Wooll; it was at this time provided, that no Subject ſhould before that time paſs over any Wooll, on peril of treble Loſs, viz. of Wooll, Life and Member: Alſo that during the War with France the King may charge Religious Aliens. Robert Stratford Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Lord Robert Wake, and Sr. Robert Sodington, were appointed to proportion the Wooll, according to the Aſſeſment of the Fifteenth lately made, by the direction of ſuch as had perfect Knowledge of each County:

ty: Which particular Rates being accordingly made, were deliver'd and enter'd upon Roll in Chancery, and thereupon Commiſſions iſſued out for Collecting the ſame. And this is all I thought fit to obſerve of this Parliament; they that would know more, may have recourſe to the Printed Books of Statutes, which in this Year agree exactly with the Record, except in one Point, touching the Revocation of the Statute aforeſaid (to which ſome Officers would not agree) thô in the [n] Print it is ſet here, there is no mention in the Record: Nor is it likely, that it was Revoked till two Years after, as the [o] Record places it.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

[n] Statute Book 15 Ed. 3. p. 85.
[o] Ed. 3. 17. n. 23.

Revocation of a Statute.

As to what Sr. Robert Cotton obſerves immediately before, that there is no mention of the Revocation of the Statutes aforeſaid in the Record of this Year; but that he refers Us to the Seventeenth of this King; it is to be noted, that indeed the Statutes aforeſaid were not revoked during this Seſſion; (for then they were made) and that in a Parliamentary way they were not revoked, till the time fixed by him, viz. the 17 of Ed. 3. But that ſhortly after (according to the Printed Book of Statutes) the King of his meer Prerogative, without any Parliament, only by Advice of his Council, did abrogate what formerly he had, as he judg'd, unadviſedly Enacted; and this being done this Year, was two Years after confirmed by Act of Parliament. But for the Rarity of the Caſe, I ſhall ſubjoyn the Form of the Kings Revocation; which is this:

"EDWARD, by the Grace of God, King of England, and France, and Lord of "Ireland, to N. N. Sheriff of Lincoln, Greeting. Whereas at Our Parliament Sum- "moned at Weſtminſter in the XV of Eaſter laſt paſt, Certain Articles, expreſly con- "trary to the Laws and Cuſtoms of our Realm of England, and to our Prerogatives "and Rights Royal, were pretended to be granted by Us by the manner of a Sta- "tute: We conſidering, how that by the Bond of our Oath We be bound to the "Obſervance and Defence of ſuch Laws, Cuſtoms, Rights and Prerogatives, and "Providently Willing to Revoke thoſe things, which be ſo improvidently done, to "a due State; Counſel and a Treatiſe thereupon had with the Earls, Barons, and o- "ther Wiſe Men of our ſaid Realm: And for becauſe We never conſented to the "making of the ſaid Statute, but as then it behoved Us, We diſſembled in the Pre- "miſes by Proteſtations of Revocation of the ſaid Statute, if indeed it ſhould pro- "ceed, to eſchew the Dangers, which by denying of the ſame We feared to come; "foraſmuch as the ſaid Parliament otherwiſe had been without any Expedition in Diſ- "cord diſſolved, and ſo our earneſt buſineſs had likely been, which God prohibit, in Ru- "ine; And the ſaid pretenced Statute We promiſed then to be Sealed.

"It ſeemed to the ſaid Earls, Barons, and other Wiſe Men, that ſithence the ſaid "Statute did not of our Free Will proceed, the ſame ſhould be void, and ought not to "have the Name nor ſtrength of a Statute.

"And therefore by their Counſel and Aſſent, We have Decreed the ſaid Statute to "be void, and the ſame, inaſmuch as it proceeded of Deed, We have brought to be "annulled: Willing nevertheleſs, that the Articles contained in the ſaid pretenced "Statute, which by other of Our Statutes, or of Our Progenitors, Kings of England, "have been approved, ſhall according to the form of the ſaid Statute in every point, "as convenient is, be obſerved. And the ſame We do only to the Conſervation and "Redintegration of the Rights of Our Crown, as We be bound, and not that We "ſhould in any Wiſe aggrieve or oppreſs Our Subjects; whom We deſire to rule by "Lenity and Gentleneſs. And therefore We do command You, that all theſe things You "do to be openly proclaimed in ſuch places within your Bayliwick, where You ſhall ſee ex- "pedient. Witneſs my ſelf at Weſtminſter the Firſt day of October, the XV Year of Our Reign.

This is the Famous Revocation, which thô put among the Printed Statutes, was meerly the Reſult of the Kings Prerogative Royal; and yet in thoſe days Eſteemed of ſufficient Force, and as ſo, afterwards confirmed by Act of Parliament, as We ſhall ſee two Years hence.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

CHAPTER the NINETEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Philip of France wins the Emperour to his side. II. The Emperours Letters of Revocation to King Edward. III. King Edwards answer thereto. IV. The sudden Death of the Duke of Bretagne without Issue: With the several Pretences of the Earl of Montford, and Charles of Blois to that Dukedom. V. Earl Montford seises his Fathers Treasure, calls a Parliament, and goes forth with an Army to conquer his Inheritance. VI. He goes into England, does Homage to King Edward, as true King of France for that Dukedom, and implores his Protection. VII. On Charles of Blois his Complaint to King Philip, Earl Montford is Summon'd to appear in the Chamber of France: He comes to Paris, but being in doubt, gets secretly away again. VIII. The Dukedom adjudged to the Lord Charles of Blois. IX. King Philip promises unto him his Assistance, and confiscates the Earldom of Montford; which King Edward requites by giving the Earldom of Richmond unto the said Earl. X. Charles of Blois descends into Bretagne, besieges Nantes, and takes the Earl of Montford, who is sent Prisoner to Paris. XI. The Countess of Montford prepares to renew the War. XII. King Edward keeps his Christmas at Melros-Abbey, and the Earl of Darby at Roxborough; whither certain Scotch Knights come to exercise Feats of Arms. XIII. Queen Philippa deliver'd of her Fifth Son, called Edmund of Langley: His Christening solemnized with a Feast and Turneament: Which is falsly said to have been for love of the Countess of Salisbury. XIV. A small Digression concerning Francis Petrarch the Italian Poet. XV. The Lord Douglas besieges Striveling, and takes it. King Edward goes against Scotland with a Royal Army: The Scotch Lords offer Conditions to obtain a Truce, which are accepted. XVI. King David of Scotland returns home again, raises an Army, and enters England, lays Siege to Newcastle, but leaves it again. XVII. The Captain of Newcastle rides post with the News to King Edward, who prepares for Resistance. XVIII. King David takes and destroys the City of Durham. XIX. He lays Siege to the Castle of Werke, the Story of King Edwards Amours with the Countess of Salisbury exploded. XX. The Captain of the Castle passes thrô the Scotch Host in the Night, to hasten King Edward to his Relief: On Knowledge whereof the King of Scotland Retires. XXI. King Edward comes before the Castle of Werke, and the next Day follows the Scots. XXII. A Truce taken between the two Kings, with the several Reasons inducing them thereto: The Earls of Murray and Salisbury acquitted their Ransoms.

I. ALL this while, thô the Truce between France and England had more than Two Years to continue, King Philip knowing, that Truces are but Opportunities for Wise Enemies to improve to their Advantage, like a Politick and Wary Prince, thought good to take this time to recruit himself, and to provide more strongly against a War; which the Competition for a Crown seem'd to Entayl to future Ages. And first, after King Edward's own Method, he desired to Establish himself with the Accession of some Powerfull Friends: The Flemings he could by no means expect to prevail with, while Jacob van Arteveld bore any Authority among them; and the Earl of Hainalt was too much incensed to be wrought upon; and the Duke of Brabant, and other Lords of the Empire were still hamper'd in the Triple League made at Villenort; Nor indeed did it seem feasable to gain any great footing in the Empire; till the Emperour himself might be brought over. The Emperours Friendship therefore seem'd, as more considerable, so upon many Accounts more attainable. Lewis the Emperour had now to Wife the Lady Margaret, Eldest Daughter to Jane of Valois, King Philips Sister: Besides he knew him extream desirous to be Reconciled to the Church, if he might obtain Absolution from the Pope on no Dishonourable Conditions; and King Philip had at that time the Popes Keys under his Girdle; the Court of Rome being at Avignon in France. The Emperour therefore he now secretly and effectually plyes by the Popes Letters, and his own Ambassadors, offering him both both Temporal and Spiritual Advantages, great Gifts and Penſions, together with a Frank and eaſie Abſolution from his long-continued Excommunication. Theſe things took with him ſo well; that he preſently ſent unto King Edward theſe his Letters of Revocation. AN. DOM. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ III.

II. "[a] Lewis by the Grace of God, Emperour of the Romans, always Auguſtus, to "Edward King of England, his Beloved Brother, Greeting and unfeigned Love. Al"thô innumerable and arduous Affairs do lie upon our ſhoulders, and We are variouſly "and perpetually encumbred about them; yet notwithſtanding, when the Diſcord a"riſen between You and Philip King of France, our Beloved Coſin, which (unleſs "it be appeaſed) may for the future bring forth both to You and to your People hea"vy Loſſes, both of many Mens Lives and Fortunes, doth repreſent it ſelf unto our "Eyes, it more eſpecially torments our Mind, and moves Us to apply all our Dili"gence, Care and Labour to take it up. Wherefore We give You to underſtand, "that the foreſaid Philip, at our Requeſt, hath given unto Us by his Letters, Autho"rity and Power, to moderate between You and Him about this Diſcord ſtirred up be"tween You, in order to the obtaining of a Peace. Which Peace (duly conſidering "the whole State of You and your Allies) we believe to be very expedient for You "and your Kingdom: And therefore perſwade your Friendly Charity, and earneſtly "exhort You to give alſo Your Conſent thereto: So that We may thereby bring You and "Him to an Agreement, and eſtabliſh between You a firm Peace; whereunto with a "ready Mind We will apply Our ſelves, and take pains in vigorouſly proſecuting the "ſame. Wherein if You will conſent to our Advice, and as We hope, acquieſce there"in, may it pleaſe You by your Letters to give unto Us the foreſaid Power of Treat"ing about an Agreement, and of Ordaining a Truce for a Year or two more. Nei"ther let it move You, that between Us and Philip King of France, a Friendſhip is "made and contracted: For ſince You took a Truce and certain Limits, wherein to "treat of an Agreement between You and the ſaid King of France, without our Know"ledge, Will and Aſſent; We alſo by the Advice of our Princes, who know the Tyes, "Bonds and Covenants betwixt Us (to whom alſo it ſeem'd, that ſaving our Honour "We might do the ſame) have contracted an Agreement and Friendſhip with the ſaid "King of France; and therefore for the Cauſes aforenoted, do revoke and call back "the Lieutenantſhip, aſſigned unto You by our Letters. Nevertheleſs giving you for "certain to underſtand, that We ſhall in our Treaties make ſuch Brotherly Proviſion "for You; that if You will acquieſce in our Counſels, your Cauſe (by means of our "Counſel) ſhall be brought to a good Iſſue. About which Matters further to inform "your Charity of our Intention, We have ſent unto your Brotherhood a Religious "Perſon, Frier [b] Everhard, Reader of the Order of Friers Hermits of St. Auguſtine, "and Chaplain in Ordinary of our Court: Whom about the Premiſes We deſire to be "ſpeedily diſpatched unto Us again. Dated at Frankford the 14 Day of June, in "the 27 Year of our Reign, and the 14 of our Empire.

[a] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 146. n. 30. & Fox Acts and Monum. p. 351. & Stow p. 238. & Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc annum §. 12. &c.

[b] Herwart.

III. King Edward made no more of all this, knowing the unconſtancy of that Prince, but only return'd him this reſpectfull and rational Anſwer.

"To the moſt Renowned Prince, the Lord Lewis, by the Grace of God, Roman "Emperour, always Auguſtus, Edward by the ſame Grace, King of France and England, "and Lord of Ireland, Greeting and perpetual Happineſs. We have reverently received "the Letters of your Highneſs, containing among other things, that upon your Re"queſt, Philip of Valois hath by his Letters given unto You Power to treat of an A"greement between Us and Him; and that if it would pleaſe Us to give unto You "Power therefore, You would willingly endeavour Your utmoſt, toward the bringing "about the ſaid Agreement; And that the Friendſhip between You and Philip ſhould "not move Us; For ſince without your Knowledge and Aſſent we took a Truce "and Limits, wherein to treat of Peace between Us and the ſaid Philip; You alſo "have contracted the ſaid Friendſhip with him by the Advice of your Princes, to whom "it ſeem'd, that ſaving your Honour, You might do ſo much; and have alſo revoked "the Lieutenantſhip by You granted unto Us. Certainly the Zeal which You have "to make the ſaid Agreement We very much commend. [c] And truly it would be "very agreeable and acceptable to Us, if at the Inſtance of ſo great an Umpire a de"ſirable Peace may be obtained. But foraſmuch as We know our Right and Title "to the Realm of France to be clear enough; We purpoſe not by our Letters of "Commiſſion to any one, to leave it under doubtfull Arbitrement. But when We "ſeriouſly conſider and revolve, how your Highneſs, upon mature Deliberation, be"holding our manifeſt Right, and the obſtinate Pertinacy and Violence of the ſaid

[c] Here a Clauſe added by Fox, which I find not in Walſingham's Original.

"Philip,

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"Philip, did of your Grace make a League with Us againſt the ſaid Philip, admitting "Us out of the Exuberance of your Love, as a particular Child of Adoption, to ſpeak by "your leave, We cannot ſufficiently admire; That your Invincible Highneſs being "conſtituted of God, for the [d] Praiſe of them that do well, and for the Puniſhment "of Evil-doers, hath made a League againſt Us with the ſaid Philip, our injurious "and notorious Enemy. And as to that which You ſay, that without your Know- "ledge and Aſſent, We took a Truce with the ſaid Philip, in Order to a Treaty about "a Peace, the Circumſtances of the Fact being rationally weighed, it ought not to "move You; For while We beſieged the City of Tournay, it was requiſit we ſhould "follow their Counſels, who then gave us their Aid and Society; and the near Ap- "proach of Winter, and the Diſtance of place would not permitt Us to adviſe with "your Highneſs about the Premiſes. Nay, if you remember, your Grant unto Us was "otherwiſe, namely, that if a fit Opportunity was offer'd, We might without your "Advice or Knowledge hold a Treaty of Peace; but ſo, as that without your Con- "ſent We ſhould by no means make a final Peace with the ſaid Philip; which We "never purpoſed to do, till we ſhould have had thereupon your Counſel and Aſſent. "But it was Our deſire in all things to bear Our ſelves, as we ought toward You, ac- "cording to our Abilities, hoping that the Fulneſs of your Brotherly Kindneſs would "more lovingly have ſupported Us for a time. It is alſo thought by ſome, that the "Revocation of the ſaid Lieutenantſhip was prematurely made: Whereas according "to your Promiſe herein given unto Us by your Imperial Letters, it ought not to have "been made, untill we had obtained the Kingdom of France, or the greater Part there- "of. We deſire your Excellence duly to weigh the Premiſes, and to do farther what "ſhall ſeem moſt requiſit: Becauſe, by the Grace of God, We intend after our Abilities "to gratifie both You and Yours, according to the meaſure of your Benevolence be- "ſtowed upon Us. The Almighty grant unto your Highneſs as much Felicity, as your "Heart can wiſh. Dated at London the 18 of July, in the 2[d] Year of our Reign of "France, and of England the 15.

[d] 1 Pet. 2. 14.

IV. Now for a while we might expect to have liberty, wholly to divert to Actions of Peace, the Truce being prolonged with France for two Years more, and that with Scotland not yet expiring, till the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt next enſuing. But King Edwards Deſtiny, which mark'd him out for Action, or rather the evil Genius of France, was even now working to break the Truce, and to ſet open the Gates of War again.

[e] Froiſ. c. 63. fol. 35. The Occaſion was given firſt in Bretagne: For [e] after the Truce had been confirmed and ſealed before the City of Tournay, and every Man was gone his way, the Lord John Dreux, then Duke of Bretagne, who had been there on the French Kings ſide, in as gallant an Equipage as any other Prince whatſoever, upon his Return homewards, fell ſuddenly ſick of a mortal Diſeaſe, and died in little Bretagne, and was buried at [f] Ploermell in the Dioceſs of Nantes. He had been thrice married, firſt to Iſabell, Daughter of Charles Earl of Valois and Alanſon, and Siſter to King Philip of Valois; ſecondly to Blanch, Daughter of the King of Caſtille; and laſtly to Margaret Daughter of Edward Earl of Savoy; but yet died without any Iſſue: From whence a laſting War was entailed upon his Country; which occaſionally alſo involved the Realms of France and England. This ſame Duke [g] had two younger Brethren, the one by the Fathers ſide onely of a ſecond Venter, named John, Earl of Montfort, who was then living; the other named Guy, Earl of Pentebria, his Brother both by Father and Mother ſide, was dead indeed, but had left one Daughter behind him named Jane, which her Uncle the late Duke had before his Death married to the young Lord Charles Caſtillion, Eldeſt Son to Guy Earl of Blois, by another Siſter of King Philip of France. Upon which Marriage the ſaid King promiſed, after the Deceaſe of her Uncle Duke John, to uphold and maintain the ſaid Charles, her Husband in the Dukedom of Bretagne. For the late Duke always ſuſpected vehemently, that his Half-brother Monford would ſtruggle for the Inheritance after his Death, againſt the Daughter of his own Brother Guy, to whom he reckon'd it more juſtly belonged. That ſhe might therefore find an able Friend upon Occaſion to abett her Quarrel, he thus wiſely to his thinking, match'd her with a Son of King Philips Siſter. And accordingly King Philip, however partial he was in King Edwards Cauſe, who claim'd the Crown of France by a Title derived from a Woman, yet without any Scruple undertook to defend the Title of his Nephew Charles to this Dukedom, as we ſhall ſhew at large anon.

[f] Catal. Honor. p. 606.

[g] Froiſ. ibid. & Catal. Honor.

[h] Froiſ. ibid. V. However John Earl of Monford had this Advantage, that he [h] firſt heard of the Duke his Brothers Death; and thereupon resolving not to dally in a matter of such Consequence, he rode immediately to Nantes, the chief City in Bretagne; where, upon his fair Address to the Burgesses, and those of the Country thereabouts, he was forthwith received as their Chief Lord, and had Homage and Fealty done unto him. Then the Earl and his Lady Margaret, Daughter to[1] Robert late Earl of Flanders, and Sister to Lewis of Cressy the present Earl of Flanders, a Lady of a most Masculine Spirit, determin'd by Advice of their Council, to call a Court of Parliament, and keep a Solemn Feast on such a Day at Nantes; against which time the Earl of Montford sent forth his Summons to all the Nobles and Representatives of the good Towns of Bretagne, to be there to render their Homage and Fealty unto Him, as unto their Soveraign Lord. But in the mean while, before the time of the Feast came, the Earl of Montford went from Nantes with a competent Number of Men of Arms unto Limoges (the Chief Town of Limousin, whereof the Dukes of Bretagne were Vicounts) where he was informed, that the vast Treasures, which his Father Arthur had amassed together, were securely kept. Being come thither he enter'd the City in great Pomp and Splendour, and was honourably received of all the Clergy, Burgesses and Commons; who then and there made Homage, and swore Fealty unto him. Here he handled the Matter so discreetly, that he had all that inestimable Treasure deliver'd up to him, which of a long time before his Father had gather'd and strongly secur'd, with this Injunction left to his Son, that he should not meddle therewith till he should be brought to some Extremity. So having obtained this hitherto untouch'd Prize, he brought it away with him to Nantes, to the Countess his Wife, as the most able Nerves of the War, which he expected.

the

AN. DOM. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

[1] Mezeray p. 19.

By this time was the Day of the Solemn Feast come; but no Breton of any great Name or Quality was found to be concern'd at Monfords Summons; onely one valiant and wealthy Lord, named Sr. Henry du Leon, came thither to yield him his Obeisance. However the Feast was continued for three Days with much Real Pomp, but Feigned Cheer, because it look'd so ill, that his Cause was so universally discountenanced by the Nobility and Gentry. After the Feast it was resolved, that all the New-found Treasure should be set apart for Wages for Men of War, both Horse and Foot, which the Earl design'd to retain on all Hands; as well to constrain the Rebellious, as to maintain the Dutchy against his Adversary.

Being therefore as soon as might be, well furnished with Men of War and Chosen Captains from divers Countries, he resolved to March forth, and either by Love or Force, make himself Lord of all Bretagn. The first Place he design'd to attempt was the strong Castle of Brest, standing upon an Arm of the Sea, the Captain whereof was the Lord Garnier Clisson, a Noble Knight, and one of the Greatest Barons of Bretagne. Earl Monford, all along in his Passage thither, prest the Men of the Country to his Service, none daring to refuse; so that by that time he came thither, his Forces were mightily encreased; Brest and Nantes being distant almost the whole length of Bretagne one from another. Being come to the Castle, he sent the Lord Henry du Leon to summon the Captain to yield up the Place, and to obey the Earl, as his Lord and Duke of Bretagn. The Captains Answer was short, "That he was not inclin'd to "do any such Matter, till he should be commanded so to do by the Right Heir of that "Dukedom.

So the next day an Assault was given; But within the Castle were 300 Men of Arms besides Others, and all things were well disposed for Defence: Wherefore the Captain full of Courage came to the Barriers with 40 good Men of Arms, and made a very brave Resistance. But so many of the Assailants came thither, that at last the Barriers were won by fine Force, the Defendants being obliged to retire toward the Castle in some Confusion, having lost several of their Company: But the Captain did so much, that he secur'd the Retreat to the rest, as far as the first Gate: When those who kept the Ward thereof, fearing from what they saw, more mischief, in an ill time let down their Portcullis, and shut their Captain out with most of his Company, who fought with him in the Reer with much Resolution and Bravery. Thus they all remain'd without, expos'd to eminent Danger; for the Captain would never yield himself upon any Account: The mean while from within they cast out Stones, Timber, Iron-barrs, with Pots of quick Lime in such quantities, that the Assailants were enforced to draw a little back; at which instant the Portcullis being something raised, the Captain, and those few left alive with him made shift to get in, thô all grievously wounded. The next Day the Earl caused certain Engines to be raised, vowing, that he would not stir thence till he had reduced them. The third Day he understood for certain, certain, that the Captain within was dead of his Wounds: Whereupon to encreaſe their Terror, he commanded the Aſſault to be renewed, the Ditches to be filled, and the Engines to be raiſed: All this was done, and the Bickering continued with much Heat and Violence till noon; at which time the Earl declared unto the Beſieged by Proclamation; "That if they would yield, and accept of him for their Lord, accor- "ding to their Duty, he would freely pardon them all of their Lives and Goods. Here- upon they required Reſpite; ſo the Aſſault ceaſing they call'd a Council of War, and preſently after yielded on the foreſaid Conditions. The Earl preſently enter'd with a certain Number, took the Fealty of the Caſtlewick, and having ſet over them a Valiant Captain in whom he confided, and order'd the Garriſon as he thought beſt, he return'd to the Camp with great joy at this his proſperous Beginning.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

[k] Froiſ. c. 66. From thence he marched Eaſtward to the City of [k] Rennes, ſtanding on the River of Vilaine; and ſtill, as he proceeded, he received the Homage of the People, and greatly encreaſed his Hoſt, by thoſe whom he preſt to his Service. Being come be- fore the place, he pitch'd his Tents, and lodged his Army round about, and in the Sub- urbs: The Beſieged were fully determin'd to defend themſelves to the extremity, and their Captain was one Sr. Henry Penfort, a Man mightily beloved in the City for his Integrity and Valour. Early one Morning this brave Gentleman Sallied out with two Hundred Horſe, and ſtrack into the Camp, beating down Pavilions, and murder- ing and wounding at his Pleaſure. The Alarm being given, all thoſe Troops, who in ſeveral parts of the Camp were then upon Duty, drew thitherward apace, others ma- king all haſte to follow them. By this the Men of Rennes began to draw off, but ſo ſlowly, becauſe as yet they did not ſee all their Danger; that being preſently in a man- ner ſurrounded, many were ſlain, and more taken, among whom was the Captain him- ſelf. Him they brought Priſoner to the Earl, who underſtanding, that he was mighti- ly beloved by all the City, immediately cauſed him to be preſented before the Town; offering to the Burgeſſes, that if they intended to ſave their Captains Life, they ſhould deliver up the place to the Earl, otherwiſe he ſhould be hanged before their Gates. Upon this the Beſieged deſired time to conſider; but different Opinions prolonged the Counſel; for the Commons loved their Captain wonderfully, and had great pity of his hard caſe, which he had incurr'd for their Sakes: And beſides they ſaw, they were not able to hold out long for want of Proviſions; wherefore they were for accepting Con- ditions of Peace: But the Rich Burgeſſes who had enough for themſelves, and being all of one mind and well-nigh all Related together, by intermingled Affinity, drew a- part by themſelves, and proclaimed; that all, who were of their ſide, ſhould follow them; ſo that preſently they were about two Thouſand. At this the Commons, who were far more in number, began firſt highly to rate them with bitter words, and immediately proceeded to wound and kill ſeveral of them: Till the Burgeſſes, who now ſaw their folly, to prevent further miſchief, agreed with the Commons to yield up the City. Which was done accordingly, and ſo the Captains Life was ſaved, and he received into the Earls Favour, and made of his Privy Council, and Rennes ſubmitted to accept of Earl Montford for her Lord.

[l] Froiſ. c. 67. [l] When the Commons had preſented the Keys of the City to the Earl, and ſet their Gates wide open, he marched in with a ſufficient Number, the reſt of his Army being left in the Fields: And having firſt made Peace between the Burgeſſes and Commons, he then Created new Provoſt, Aldermen, Bayliffs, Serjeants, and other Officers, and within the ſpace of three days, ſet all things in very good Order, ſhewing himſelf very gracious to the Inhabitants. After that he raiſed his Camp, and took the Left hand, marching Southerly, toward the very ſtrongeſt Caſtle in all Bretagne, called Henne- bond, a Sea-port Town, about which the Sea alſo ran round in great and deep Tren- ches. When Sr. Henry Penfort perceived the Earls Reſolution to go thither, he was mightily concerned for his Brother, Sr. Oliver Penfort, the Captain of that Fortreſs, whom he ever loved entirely; leſt he ſhould miſcarry in obſtinately defending the place. At laſt he conſider'd on a ſubtle project, whereby he might both keep his Faith to his New Lord the Earl, and alſo ſave his Brother, whether he would, or no. And with this thought he thus ſpake to the Earl in Council, "My Lord Duke, of an Enemy "and a Priſoner, it hath pleaſed You to admit me for one of Your Counſellors, and I "have given You my Faith and Allegiance to ſerve You Loyally and truly: Where- "fore I think my ſelf obliged to diſcover unto You, what I preſume will not be unſer- "viceable to Your Affairs. I underſtand, Sir, how you are reſolv'd to lay Siege to Hen- "nebond; which I pray God, may fall into Your Power cheaply. But Sir, be aſſured of "a Truth, that both the Town and Caſtle are of ſuch Strength, that they are in a man"ner

"ner Impregnable. I rather believe You may loſe your time there an whole Year, before "You ſhall be able to take it by force. But Sir, if You will pleaſe to repoſe any Con- "fidence in me, I'll ſhew You the moſt likely and eaſie way how to win it: For where "the Lions skin will not do alone, the Fox's muſt be ſow'd unto it; and ſubtlety and "fineneſs are to be uſed, when force will not avail. If You will therefore deliver to "my Conduct 500 Men of Arms, to be wholly govern'd at my Orders, I will ride with "them half a League before Your Hoſt, with the Banner of Bretagne, and my own "Arms before me. Whereupon, I nothing doubt, but that my Brother Oliver, who "is Governour both of the Town and Caſtle, when he ſhall ſee the Banner of Bretagne, "and know, that I am there, will readily open the Gates, and receive me, and all my "Company gladly. And if ſo, I will then take him Priſoner, ſeiſing both on Town "and Caſtle in your Name, and will deliver my Brother into Your Hands, unleſs he "will conſent to embrace Your Service: But Sir, I muſt require Your Faith and Pro- "miſe, that however You will do no bodily hurt to his Perſon. The Earl was won- derfully pleaſed with this Device, and ſware, that his Brother ſhould by no means ſuffer the leaſt Perſonal harm, ſaying further, "Sr. Henry, if you can bring this about, "I ſhall love you the better for it, whileſt I live. Preſently he had his 500 Men al- lotted him, with whom he rode forth before the Army, and toward the Evening arri- ved before Hennebond: When the Captain Sr. Oliver Penfort heard, and ſaw, and knew, that his Brother was there, ſuppoſing he came with that force to his Aſſiſtance, he immediately open'd the Gates, and received him with all his Men, himſelf haſting forward joyfully to ſalute him in the ſtreet. When Sr. Henry ſaw him, he haſted for- ward to meet him, and taking him ſuddenly by the Arm, for the firſt Complement, ſaid, "Brother Oliver, now You are my Priſoner. "How ſo, cry'd his Brother, amazed? "Did I put my Confidence in your Kindneſs, expecting, you were come to my Aſſi- "ſtance in defence of this place, and am I now deceived? Brother, reply'd Sr. Henry, "the matter is nothing ſo: I am come hither to take Poſſeſſion of this Town and "Caſtle for my Lord; the Earl of Montford, who is now Duke of Bretagne, and fol- "lows us juſt at our heels: To him I have made fealty and Homage, and the greater "part of the Country obeys him, as You alſo are like to do now. But ſurely it were "better for You to do it of choice, than by compulſion; and You will receive more "thanks for your pains, for the Duke is a Gracious Prince, I'll aſſure you. Upon theſe and the like Words, together with the Conſideration of his preſent Condition, Sr. Oliver preſently conſented; and ſo the Earl, without one ſtroke given, or taken, was admitted into Hennebond, where he ſet a good Garriſon. Thence he marched with all his Army to Vannes, another conſiderable City, which after a ſmall Treaty, upon Fame of his Succeſs, open'd her Gates, and received him for her Soveraign Lord. Here ha- ving in three days time Eſtabliſhed all manner of Officers, and given neceſſary Orders, he went thence and laid Siege to a ſtrong Caſtle, called la Roche Bernard, on the o- ther ſide the Vilaine, whereof Sr. Oliver Cliſſon, Coſin German to the Lord Cliſſon, was Captain: The Siege here laſted ten days; but the place was too ſtrong to be won by force, and neither threats, nor promiſes could work upon the Governour. Where- fore the Earl thought fit to riſe thence for the preſent, and go and attempt the Ca- ſtle of Auray, about 10 Leagues Weſtward from la Roche Bernard, and very conſi- derable for its ſtrength and ſcituation, it ſtanding on an Arm of the Morbihan, be- tween Vannes and Blavet. The Captain thereof at that time was the Lord Geoffry de Maleſtroit, who had with him another Valiant Knight, Named, Sr. John de Triguier. The Earl gave them two notable Attacks, which they as worthily ſuſtained; ſo that when he ſaw, he might loſe more there, than he could hope to win, he thought to try them by fair means, and ſo gave them a Truce for one Day, at the Requeſt and Advice of the Lord Henry du Leon, who was always near him. This ſhort time Sr. Henry made ſo good uſe of; that by his fair Words and Perſwaſions they were con- tent to hold the Caſtle for the Earl John, and to yield him their Homage, as their True and Lawfull Lord. This done, the Earl left them ſtill Captains of the place, and the Country about, and then paſſed forth to another ſtrong Caſtle, called Gony en la Foreſt; which they prepared to Aſſault. The Captain thereof ſaw well what great forces the Earl had with him, and how in a manner all the Country fainted before him; ſo that by the perſwaſion of Sr. Henry du Leon, with whom the Cap- tain had kept good Company formerly in the Holy War in Pruſſia and Granada, and other Foreign Parts, he was at laſt contented to keep that place for the Earls behoof for the future; to whom he then made his Homage. After this the Earl went to Karhais, whereof at that time a Biſhop (who was Uncle to Sr. Henry du Leon) was

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

Governour: But he by means of his Nephew was brought off to own the Earl for his Lord, till ſome other ſhould come, who could ſhew more Right to that Dutchy.

VI. Thus Earl [m] John conquer'd almoſt whereever he went, and ſeriouſly took upon him the State and Title of Duke of Bretagne; but by Advice of his Council he was perſwaded to have recourſe to ſome Powerfull Protector, that upon occaſion might uphold him againſt the French King, who doubtleſs would take the Part of his Nephew, Charles of Blois. Having therefore beſtow'd his Men about in Garriſons, and provided ſufficiently for the Defence of his Country, he took ſhipping for England, with ſome of his Chief Lords in his Company, and arrived ſafe at a Port in Cornwall; where, upon Enquiry, underſtanding, that King Edward was at Windſor, thither he went, and was very welcome to the King, Queen, and Lords of England. There he declared to the King, and his Council, "How he had taken Poſſeſſion of the Dutchy "of Bretagne, devolved unto him by Right of Succeſſion, upon the Death of his El- "der Brother, the late Duke: But that he feared, leſt the Lord Charles of Blois, by "help of his Uncle the French King, would at laſt force him from his Right: Where- "fore, he ſaid, He was come thither to receive and to hold that Dukedom of the "King of England, as true King of France, and his Soveraign Lord, by Fealty and "Homage, for him and his Heirs for ever: Deſiring him to Defend him in his Quar- "rel againſt the French King, or whoſoever elſe ſhould moleſt him about that Matter. King Edward conſider'd, that his War with France ſhould be much furthered by the Acceſſion of ſo great a Prince; and that there was no way more Commodious for him to paſs into France, than by Bretagne; eſpecially remembring, that the Germans and Brabanders had done him ſmall, or no ſervice, but had made him ſpend much Money to little purpoſe; and that now ſince the Emperour, whoſe Letters he had juſt then received, was alſo fallen off, there would be little good done for him by any Lords of the Empire: upon theſe Reaſons, He readily condeſcended to the Earl of Montford's Requeſt, and then, and there received Homage of him, as Duke of Bretagne. Which done, in Preſence of all the Lords, as well Engliſh, as Bretons, that were there, he promiſed to Aid, Defend, and Suſtain him as his Liegeman, againſt either the French King, or any other whatſoever. This Homage and this Promiſe being interchangeably Sealed, and deliver'd, the King and Queen preſented the Earl and his Company with ſuch great Gifts, and ſo Royally entertain'd them, that they accounted King Edward to be a moſt Noble Prince, and Worthy to Reign in much Proſperity. After this the Earl took his leave of England, and arrived in ſhort ſpace at an Haven in lower Bretagne, whence he went to Nantes to his Lady; who applauded his League with England, as likely to be of moſt Advantage to his Affairs. But the Matter was kept very cloſe, and none but his Council knew certainly of it; for he had not been above Eight or Ten Days abroad in all, and the Nantois thought he had viſited ſome other Parts of his Dominions that while.

[m] Froiſ. c. 68.

VII. When the Lord [n] Charles Caſtillion, commonly called Sr. Charles of Blois, who look'd upon himſelf as true Heir of Bretagne, in Right of his Wife, heard of all the Conqueſts that the Earl had made in that Country, which he took for his own, he addreſt himſelf to his Uncle King Philip, to complain of theſe Injuries. The King deliberating what courſe to take in this Affair, was in the end counſelled to ſummon the Earl of Montford by ſufficient Meſſengers, to make his Perſonal Appearance at Paris by ſuch a day, there to anſwer to what ſhould be objected againſt him, in the Chamber of France. Meſſengers were accordingly ſent, who found him at Nantes keeping of a Solemn Feſtival: Here he treated them highly, and then having well underſtood their Errand, anſwer'd, that he would punctually obey the Kings Commandment. Soon after being prepared for his Journey, he rode from Nantes toward Paris with a Princely Equipage of 400 Horſe in his Company. The next day after his Arrival, he rode with this Great Attendance to the Palace Royal: Where the King and the 12 Peers, with other High Lords of France expected his coming, with the Young Lord, Charles of Blois in their Company. The Earl was conducted to the Kings Chamber, being highly regarded, and civilly ſaluted in his Paſſage thither by all the Lords, for the Fame of his great Exploits, and the Grandeur of his Perſon. When he came before the King, he enclin'd his Body ſomething low and ſaid, "Sir, I am come hither in Obedience to your Command and Pleaſure. The King anſwer'd, "Earl Montford, for that you have ſo done I give you thanks: But I won- "der how you durſt take upon You the Dukedom of Bretagne, whereunto you have "no Right: For there is another nearer than your Self, whom you ſeek to diſinhe[n] Froiſ. c. 69.

"rit:

"rit: And to maintain your unjuſt Quarrel by Violence, you have been with mine "Adverſary the King of England; to whom as I am enformed you have done Ho- "mage for the ſame. The Duke who thought it impoſſible, that the King ſhould know this Conveyance of his, reply'd not without ſome Confuſion, "Sir, I beſeech "your Majeſty not to believe any ſuch Matter, for You are not rightly informed, as "to that Point: But Sir, as for the Right which You mention, ſaving your Diſplea- "ſure, You do me wrong to queſtion it. For Sir, I know of none living ſo near to "my Brother deceaſed as my Self. And if it can be made appear by Right Law and "Judgment, that there is any Perſon neater than I am; I am not He that ſhould rebell "againſt Reaſon, or be aſham'd to renounce what I had unjuſtly uſurped. "Well "Sir (rejoyn'd the King) you ſay well: But I command you in whatever you hold "of me, not to ſtirr from this City of Paris theſe Fifteen days; in which ſpace the "12 Peers and Lords of my Realm ſhall conſider impartially on the Matter: And "then you ſhall know where the Right lies. And if you ſhall preſume to do other- "wiſe, be aſſured we ſhall not be Friends. The Earl having promis'd all ſhould be at his Pleaſure, went from the Court home to his Lodgings to Dinner: But having din'd, he mus'd much with himſelf in his Chamber, and thought he had done too raſhly in coming thither, where he ſhould be oblig'd to ſtand to the Award of ſuch as were byaſs'd another way. At laſt being [o] diſguiſed like a Merchant, and only three in his Company, he privately took horſe in a clear Night, and leaving the City, got home into Bretagne, before the King or any elſe, knew what was become of him. Being come to Nantes, he ſhew'd unto his Counteſs, what he had done and wherefore; and then by her Advice, he rode about to all the Towns and Fortreſſes, which he had won, and ſet over them Valiant and Loyal Captains with ſufficient Numbers of Souldiers, Horſe and Foot, and gave them large Wages before-hand.

[o] Mezeray p. 18.

VIII. For ſome [p] time the Court of France thought, he had been detain'd in his Lodgings by ſome Indiſpoſition; ſeeing his Servants conſtantly about the Houſe, and tending his Affairs, as if preſent. But they alſo getting off by degrees, when his Departure was fully known, it may be gueſſed, how deeply King Philip reſented this Affront. But for all that he kept ſo much decorum, as to tarry till the 15th Day came, whereon the Peers were to give their final Judgment concerning the Dukedom of Bretagne. At the time appointed the Caſe was adjudged clearly in behalf of Sr. Charles of Blois his Lady, Jane, who was Daughter and Heir to Guy, Earl of Pentebria, Brother German to the Duke laſt deceaſed, and therefore was now declared to have more Right than John Earl of Monford, [q] who was Younger Brother to the ſaid Ladies Father by a ſecond Venter, namely by Violanta, ſole Daughter and Heir of Almaric, Earl of Narbon and Montford. They alledged further, that althô the Earl of Montford had had the Right, yet now he had forfeited it on two Accounts; Firſt, becauſe he had received the Dutchy of another Lord, than of the French King, of whom only he ought to hold it; and ſecondly, becauſe he had broken the Kings expreſs Command, and diſobeyed his Arreſt in going away: Wherefore neither would they [r] admit of his Requeſt, which was to accept of his Procuration, whereby he had left One, as his Deputy to manage this Matter in his Behalf. From which Judgment it being manifeſtly influenced by King Philips Authority, that Prince was much [s] cenſur'd of injuſtice by thoſe, who allow'd the Ancient Order and Cuſtom of the Baronages of France and the Salique Law; eſpecially ſince it was contrary to that very Judgment, by which He himſelf had been Declared and Crowned King of France: Since if Charles of Blois had the Right to the Dukedom of Bretagne by his Wife, Daughter to the laſt Dukes Brother German; much more had King Edward of England the Right to the Crown of France by his Mother, ſole Daughter and Heireſs (after the Death of Lewis Hutin, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair, her Brethren) of Philip the Fair, King of France. But Prejudice is ſo ſtrange a thing, that it byaſſes the Minds of the Great and the Wiſe Men of the World, by repreſenting Falſhood and Injuſtice, under the ſpecious Titles of Fair and Equitable; unleſs there be preſent an Awe of Religion, and a Senſe of Honour and Conſcience to ſuppreſs thoſe ſelfiſh Conſiderations.

[p] Froiſ. c. 70.

[q] Catal. Honor. p. 604.

[r] Mezeray p. 18.

[s] Giov. Villani l. 11. c. 142.

IX. However, as ſoon as this Judgment was thus given, King Philip called unto him the Young Lord Charles of Blois and ſaid to him, "Fair Nephew, you have a fair "and large Inheritance by Judgment Awarded unto you: Make haſte therefore, and "go and conquer it againſt him, that unjuſtly detaineth it from you; and deſire all "your Friends to aſſiſt you in this your Quarrel. I for my part ſhall not fail to lend "you Gold and Silver enough, and I will alſo command my Son the Duke of Nor-

AN. DOM. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

"mandy, to go along with you. Sr. Charles enclin'd himſelf humbly to the King his Uncle, returning him his moſt hearty Thanks; and after that he deſired his Couſin John Duke of Normandy, his other Uncle Charles of Valois, Earl of Alençon, Eudes the Fourth of that Name, Duke of Burgundy, his Uncle by the Fathers Side, and Brother-in-Law to King Philip, Peter Duke of Burbon, and the Lord James of Burbon, Don Lewis of Spain, Ralph Earl of Ewe and Conſtable of France, with the young Earl of Guiſnes his Son, the Vicount of Rouën, and the moſt Part of the Lords that were then at Court; who all ſaid they would gladly go along with him and their Lord the Duke of Normandy. And with this they brake up for that time, and fell ſtraight upon Preparations for this Expedition.

In the mean while King Philip cauſed the Earldom of Montford to be confiſcate and ſeiſed into his Hands; becauſe Earl John had made a League with the King of England his Adverſary: Wherefore King Edward reſpecting [t] this his Loſs, and willing to gratifie him with an Equivalent, gave him the Earldom of Richmond in England, with the Rights belonging unto it, in like manner, as John Duke of Bretagne, and Earl of Richmond, his Brother had held it; untill ſuch time as he ſhould recover his Earldom of Montford. Teſte Rege apud Weſtminſt. 24 Septemb. 1341. So that we may well doubt the Authority of thoſe, who ſay this Title was given to the Lord Robert of Artois: Thô it may indeed be ſuppoſed, that John Dreux, late Duke of Bretagne might, for adhering to France againſt England, be deprived of that Title; which (if our Hiſtorians muſt be in the right) was thereupon given as they ſay, to the foreſaid Lord Robert (thô he is not found in the Catalogue of the Earls of Richmond) but upon this Occaſion, upon an Equivalent conſideration, might be taken from him again: For as yet the Lord Robert of Artois was not deceaſed, as will appear hereafter.

[t] Catal. Honor. p. 608. ex Record. Ed. 3. 15.

X. And now [u] all the forementioned French Lords, who had abetted the Quarrel of Charles of Blois, being ready with their Forces, began to march from Paris and other Parts, to the place of their general Rendezvous, which was the City of Angers on the Loire. Being all joyn'd together they marched thence to Ancenis, wherewith France is bounded on that ſide toward Bretagne; and here having refreſhed themſelves for three Days, they began to enter the Country of Bretagne. As ſoon as they came into the Campaign they muſter'd, and found that they amounted to 5000 Men of Arms, beſides the Genoueſe, which were 3000, and led by three Valiant Knights of Genoa, Sr. Otho de Rue, Sr. Charles Germaulx, and Sr. Galeas de la Baulme, who was Captain of the Croſsbows. The Army firſt went to a ſtrong Caſtle ſtanding on an high Mountain, called Chantoceaux, at the very Entry of Bretagne, on the Loire; which was pretty well furniſhed with Men of War, under the Command of two Knights of Lorrain, Sr. Giles and Sr. Valeran. This Caſtle they thought beſt to reduce, becauſe 'twas not ſafe to leave ſo ſtrong a Fortreſs behind them: Wherefore they inveſted it round, and made many vigorous Aſſaults, eſpecially the Genoueſe, who ſtrove mightily to gain Honour in this their firſt Service with the Frenchmen: But their great Courage was more hurtfull to themſelves than to their Enemies; for the Beſieged defended themſelves ſo well, that of a long while they had no harm. But at laſt the Aſſailants reſolving to try all ways, rather than hazard their Reputation in this their firſt Enterpriſe, carried thither ſo much Timber, Graſs-plats and Faggots, that they filled the Ditches therewith, whereby they were able to approach cloſe to the Walls. The Beſieged ſpared not to welcome them with plentifull Showers of Burning Pitch, Quick-lime, Stones, Chalk and Iron-bars: But the Frenchmen had brought with them a ſtrong Engine, in manner of a Penthouſe, like the old Roman Teſtudo, under which the Pioneers might ſafely mine the Walls. At the very ſight whereof, eſpecially when they found they could not break or fire it, the Beſieged began to capitulate, and at laſt yielded up the Caſtle, on condition to have their Lives and Goods ſaved. Then the Duke of Normandy, who was General in this Expedition, deliver'd the Fortreſs to Sr. Charles of Blois as his own; who preſently put therein a good Garriſon, to keep open an Entrance for him into Bretagne. Thence they marched along by the Loire, directly towards Nantes; where they heard their Enemy the Earl of Monford was at that time. The Marſhalls and Vancurrours of the Army found in their way, within 5 Leagues of Nantes, a good Town called Carqueſie, environ'd with Ditches; but there were not many People in the Town, and thoſe but indifferently armed; ſo that after a fierce Aſſault the Town was taken, robbed and half burnt, and all within put to the Sword. Thereabout the French Lords lay all that Night, and the next Morning marched for Nantes, where they laid their their Siege, and pitch'd up their Tents and Pavilions; for they expected no short Work of it: And yet the Weather was pretty favourable; for it was about the middle of October. The Earl of Monford was not at all discouraged, that he was thus besieged; for he doubted not but to make the Place good till Winter, when they would be obliged to raise their Siege, and by the next Spring he question'd not, but to be well provided with Succours from England, by whose Aid, he might give Battle unto the Enemy: But he forgat all this while to consider the wavering Minds of his People: and besides Himself committed one grand Oversight in Disobliging at such a juncture the very Chief of his Captains. AN. DOM. 1341 An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

[u] Froiſ. c. 71.

At the beginning of the Siege, the Men * of War within the Town, and the Inhabitants went all in Arms to their appointed Defences: A Detachment from the Army came presently to the Barriers to skirmish, against whom some Souldiers and young Men of the Town went forth; and that time many were slain and hurt on both parts; but the Barriers were maintained: And in this manner the Town and the Army had several skirmishes, not without many Wounds, and much Bloodshed on both sides. One Morning about 200 of the Besieged went forth of the City very early at a Venture; and they chanced to meet with 15 Wagons, laden with Provision, under the Convoy of sixty Souldiers, who were going therewith to the Army. The Townsmen set upon them, and easily master'd them, slew several, and took others; but some few made shift to escape to the Camp, where they related the whole Matter. At this, such as were most ready, rose up to Rescue the Prey, which they overtook, near the Barriers of the Town. And here began a fierce skirmish, the Nantois being hard put to it, by reason of the Numbers that flow'd in upon them from the Camp; but however some of them took the Horses out of the Wagons, upon the first approach of the Enemy, and drove them in at the Gate, that the Frenchmen might not easily drive back the Provision. Hereupon Fresh Men came out of the City to relieve their Companions; so the Fray multiplied, and many were slain and hurt on both sides; for Recruits continually came both from the Camp and City. Wherefore the Lord Henry du Leon, the Earl of Monford's Chief Captain, perceiving that by continuing the Fight in this Manner, he might by Degrees engage the whole City, with the whole Army, without any Advantage of his Walls and other Works, thought best to sound a Retreat now, before it grew worse. But then the pursuit was so close upon their heels, that more than 200 of the Burgesses were taken and slain. Wherefore the Earl Monford, when the business was over, blamed Sr. Henry du Leon very severely, for Retreating so soon: At which unseasonable Reproof, Sr. Henry, who had hitherto been his Main Support, was infinitely disgusted, and for the future came not to any Council of War, as his Manner was: Which made many to wonder, what his Design should be. * Froiss. c. 71.

Soon * after this Mischance, 'tis said, that some of the Chief Burgesses considering, how their substance went daily to wreck both without and within the City, and that already several of their Friends and Children were Prisoners, if no worse, and that themselves were in no less Danger, privately agreed together to hold a Treaty with the Lords of France. This Plot was carried on so closely by the connivance at least of Sr. Henry du Leon, that it was concluded, all the Prisoners should be deliver'd, they in Lieu thereof engaging to set open their Gates, that the French Lords might enter, and take the Earl of Monford's Person in the Castle, without doing any harm to the City, the Inhabitants, or their Goods. Some lay all this Contrivance, and the Menagement thereof to Sr. Henry du Leon's Charge, who had been One of the Earls Privy-Counsellors, his Friend, and Chief Captain, till that unhappy Accident, whereby the Earl was provok'd to take him up so roundly. However, according to this Device, so one Morning early it was effected: The French Lords found easie entrance, went straight to the Castle, brake open the Gates, and there took the Unhappy Earl Prisoner, and led him clear out of the City into their Field, without doing any further harm in the World: This happen'd about the Feast of All-Saints, in the Year of our Lord MCCCXLI. * Froiss. c. 72.

After this the Lords of France, and Sr. Charles of Blois enter'd the City again with great Triumph, and there all the Burgesses, and others, did Fealty and Homage to the Lord Charles of Blois, as to their Right Sovereign, and True Duke of Bretagne. For three Days they all continued here in great Jollity and Feasting, because of this their unexpected Success: After which the Lord Charles was advised to tarry thereabout, till the next Summer, and to set Captains in the places he had won; But most of the other Lords return'd to Paris, with the Earl of Monford their Prisoner.

XI. Now

An. Dom. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

XI. Now Margaret, the Counteſs of Monford, who had the Courage of a man, and the heart of a Lion, was in the City of Rennes, at what time her Lord was taken, and althô ſhe had a due ſenſe of this great Misfortune, yet ſhe bore a good Countenance, Recomforted her Friends and Souldiers, and ſhewing them her little Son, John, ſaid, "Gentlemen, be not overmuch diſmay'd at this miſchance of my Lord, "the Earl; whom We have unhappily loſt; He was but a Mortal Man; and ſo all our "hope ought not to reſt on him: But behold this my little Son, who by the Grace of "God, ſhall be his Reſtorer, and your Benefactor. I have Riches enough, ſo that you "ſhall want for Nothing; and I doubt not, but to purchaſe ſuch a Captain to be your "Leader, who ſhall be Wiſe, Valiant, and Noble. When ſhe had thus animated her Men in Rennes; then ſhe went about to all the Fortreſſes, and good Towns that held of her ſide, and ſtill ſhe carried along with her the little Lord John her Son; and fortify'd all her Garriſons, and ſpake to them as ſhe had done to thoſe at Rennes, and paid largely, and gave great Gifts, where ſhe thought it Convenient. After all things were ſettled, ſhe went to the ſtrong Town of Hennebond, where ſhe and her Son tarried all that Winter, and frequently ſhe ſent to viſit her Garriſons, and paid all Men well and truly their Wages.

The mean while her Lord was a cloſe Priſoner in the Louvre in Paris; without hopes of Eſcape or Redemption: Thô it will appear that about 3 years after upon certain Conditions (which he kept not) he got his Liberty; but he died ſo ſoon after, that it is hardly worth taking notice of, and that I take to be the Reaſon, why many Hiſtorians ſay nothing of it; but rather think he died in Priſon.

Thus much, thô great part thereof ſeems a Digreſſion, was neceſſary to be ſaid, in order to clear what follows next Year of the Wars of Bretagne, wherein England was concern'd. I ſhall now take leave to ſpeak ſomething of the Scotch Affairs relating to the end of this, and the beginning of the following Year: Which after a ſmall Digreſſion we ſhall purſue more cloſely.

XII. The laſt Year, We ſhow'd briefly, how the Scots ſucceeded, during King Edwards abſence, he lying at that time before Tournay: So that having at laſt taken Edenburgh by Stratagem, they had left nothing of Scotland in the Engliſh Hands, but Striveling, Barwick, and Roxborough. Now at King Edwards Return into England, nothing was yet done againſt them, becauſe they were comprehended in the firſt Years Truce with France: [y] But the King went about St. Andrews toward Scotland, and kept his Chriſtmas at Melros-Abbey, Henry the Noble Earl of Darby, keeping the ſame Feſtival at Roxborough, hard by. To Roxborough came the Lord William Douglas with Three Scotch Knights, to Juſt with the Earl of Darby and his Knights; which Martial Sport being honourably maintain'd on both ſides, the Scots departed for that time; but ſhortly after, the ſaid Earl of Darby being then at Barwick, twelve Knights of Scotland came thither alſo for the ſame purpoſe; who were preſently Match'd by as many Engliſh: Of the Scotch Knights two by chance were ſlain, and one Sr. John Twyford of the Engliſh Earls Retinue; all the Reſt came off with ſafety and Honour on each ſide. King Edward preſently after Chriſtmas Return'd to Langley in Hertfordſhire, [z] where at Candlemas he held a Royal Juſt and Turneament, for the Honour of the young Noblemen of Gaſcoigne, whom he trained up here in Feats of War: And what Expert Scholars they proved under ſo great a Tutor, We ſhall ſee hereafter in the Wars of France.

[y] Knighton p. 2580.

[z] Stow p. 238.

XIII. On the [a] fifth Day of June Queen Philippa of England was deliver'd of her Fifth Son, at the Kings Mannor-houſe of Langley aforeſaid, near St. Albans; this Young Prince being in Auguſt following Baptized, by Michael Lord Abbot of St. Albans, was called Edmund: He was afterwards by his Father created Earl of Cambridge, and by his Nephew King Richard the Second, Duke of York, from whom King Edward the IV was Lineally Deſcended. King Edward, as he always wiſh'd rather to have Sons, than Daughters, was mightily pleaſed at the Birth of this Boy; and being now at Leiſure from Wars, reſolv'd to expreſs his Joy in a moſt Magnificent and Royal Manner at the time of his Baptiſm, which was to be about the [b] Midſt of Auguſt. Againſt this time therefore he cauſed Proclamation to be made in France, Scotland, Hainalt, Brabant, and Flanders; that all Knights and Gentlemen, who would pleaſe to come to his Feaſt, to be at ſuch a time held in the City of London, ſhould have ſafe Conduct for ſo many Days, for coming, ſtaying, and going. I will not diſſemble, that all this by moſt Hiſtorians is ſaid to have been done for Love of the Counteſs of Salisbury, with whom they make King Edward to be at this time deeply in Love: But this is a moſt Fabulous and Irrational Tradition, (as we ſhall ſhew in due place) and utterly to be be exploded of all Discreet Persons: So that now the [c] Romancers themselves are fain to confess; that at least the Kings Pretence for this Feast was to Honour the Christening of his Son Edmund. Not to say, that it will appear the next Year, how as yet the King had not received even that supposed wound of Love, of which many Authors make such pleasant Tales. However there were present at this Solemnity many Fair Ladies and Virgins of Prime Quality, all Drest and set off in the Best Manner that could be expected from their Rank and Condition. To this Tourneament, of Foreigners came William the Young Earl of Hainalt, Brother, and the Lord John Beaumont of Hainalt, Uncle, to the Queen of England; Henry Lord Eam of Brabant, and many other Lords and Knights of several Countries: But of the English Nobility, the Greater Part was there; particularly the Lord Henry de Tortocollo Earl of Lancaster, Henry Plantagenet his Son, Earl of Darby, Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex, and his Brother William Earl of Northampton; the Earls of Salisbury, Warwick, Arundel, Gloceſter and Pembroke, Suffolk and Oxford; the Baron Stafford, and Vicount John Beaumont; which latter Froisard Reports to be slain in the Justs; but indeed he [d] died not till the next Year, whereas the Tourneament is [e] rightly placed here: There was also here the Often-mention'd Lord Robert of Artois, called the Earl of Richmond. Among others Sr. Maurice Barkley, Brother to the Lord Berkley, together with his Valiant and Inseparable Friend and Companion Sr. Thomas Bradeſtan, did so well behave themselves at this Tourneament, that in consideration of their High Proweſs, they were [f] now by the King advanced to the Dignity of Bannerets. And as thus the Lords and Knights exercis'd themselves in Martial Feats, so on the other hand the Ladies diverted the whole Assembly with their Songs and Dances; the Solemnity being continued for 15 Days together. So delightfully did this Warlike King intermix the Pleasures and Pastimes of Love and Peace with the more Laborious Toyls of War; thereby to Encourage his Subjects, and to Relax himself from the Cares of Empire.

[a] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 149. Sandford p. 357. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 154.

[b] Froiſ. c. 89.

AN. DOMI 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

[c] Ferrand Spence's Countess of Salsbury p. 45.

[d] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 52.
[e] Id. 1 Vol. p. 576.

[f] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 356.

XIV. About this time there happen'd some new Commotions in Scotland, whereof I shall presently take Notice, when I shall have made one small Digression; which I hope the Learned will pardon upon the account of its own Worth, thô it hath little or no Relation to Our Matters. The Name of Francis Petrarch the Famous Poet, Historian, and Philosopher of his Days, cannot, I suppose, be unknown to any one, that hath but heard of Rome and Italy. This Man flourished in this Age, being this very Year but [g] 37 Years old: He had at Avignon, and especially about fifteen Miles thence in a Pleasant Valley, so improv'd himself in the studies of good Learning, that his Name was now grown considerable, Insomuch that in [h] one Day there were brought unto him, Letters, from two very distant Parts of the World, the One sent from the Senate of Rome, the Other from the Chancellor of the University of Paris, each of them containing an Invitation, that he would come to the Respective Places, and accept from their Hands the Honourable Crown of Lawrel. The Glory, thô of it self Great, seem'd yet in those Days much Greater; because that Ancient and Laudable Custom had been for so many Ages discontinued; saving, [i] that in the German Empire, here and there we meet with an Instance or two of Laureate Poets. Petrarch did not at all decline so generous an offer (for he that despises True Glory, is no Friend to Vertue) but however by Advice of his Noble Friends, the two Colonna's, he chose rather to acknowledge this Favour to Rome, once the Imperial City of the World, than to Paris, the Metropolis of one single Kingdom. But withall being resolved not to arrogate an Honour, that should not first be Worthily and unquestionably adjudged unto Him, in his way thither He waits upon Robert King of Jeruſalem, Sicily, and Naples, the Great Philosopher of those Days; who understanding the Occasion of his Visit, and who He was, receiv'd him with Princely Humanity, and at last appointed a Time to Discourse him at large. This Discourse thus held between this Learned Prince, and Prince of Learned Men in Poetry, History, and Philosophy, was continued for Three whole Afternoons: By which time King Robert (having also read a good Part of his Heroick Poem, called Africa) was so fully convinced of Petrarchs Abilities; that he offer'd there at Naples to confer the Lawrel on him with his own Hands, and desired him also (on promise of a Gracious Acceptance and Bountifull Reward) to Dedicate that his Poem to no other, than Himself. This latter Motion Petrarch with many Thanks readily embraced: and has, we see, perform'd it accordingly in these and other Verses of that Work------

[g] Natus enim A. D. 1304. vid. Hier. Squarzaſichum in Vitâ Petrarchæ.
[h] Id. ibid.

[i] Selden's Tit. Hon. 2 Part. c. 1. p. 406.

O thou

Tu quoque Trinacrii Moderator maxime Regni
Heſperiæque Decus, atque Ævi Gloria noſtri,
Judice quo merui, vatúmque in Sede ſedere,
Optatáſque diù lauros, titulúmque Poetæ:
(Te precor) oblatum tranquillo pectore munus
Hoſpitio dignare tuo, &c. Petrarch. Africæ l. 1.

O Thou, whoſe Hand Sicania's Scepter ſways, Heſperia's Pride, and th' Glory of our Days;
By whoſe Award I hold a Poets Name,
And wiſh'd-for Bayes, and Bayes-attending Fame:
Don't Mighty Prince (I humbly pray) refuſe
To' accept this candid Offering of a Muſe, &c.

AN. DOM. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

But as to the Kings Gracious Proffer to Crown him there at Naples, he modeſtly declared, that it was his Reſolution not to accept the Laurel but in the Imperial City of Rome: Whereupon that Noble Prince gave him his Letters Teſtimonial to the Senate of that City; wherein he largely ſet forth the Merits of the Man, and from his own Experience declared, that he was well worthy to be publiquely in the moſt honourable manner preſented with a Crown of Laurel. Theſe Letters being produced in the Senate by Urſus Earl of Anguillara, and Jordanus his Colleague, one of the Sons of Urſus, Knight, Senators of Rome, Petrarch was called in and there openly challenged the Laurel. His Claim was allowed, and the Day of his ſolemn Inauguration appointed; which was Eaſter-day, [k] or the VI of the Ides of April in the Year MCCCXLI. And on the ſame day [l] by the General Conſent of the whole City of Rome, he received this Honour in the Capitol by the Hands of Earl Urſus, in the Name of King Robert, and of the City and Senate of Rome, with the loud Acclamations of a frequent Multitude, at which time Earl Urſus declared him a Great Poet, Hiſtorian and Philoſopher, and Maſter in each Faculty. After which being carried with a Pompous Attendance to St. Peter's Church, he there conſecrated his Laurel Wreath, hanging it up on the Top of the Temple, as a Memorial to Poſterity. Certainly whatever that Man may ſeem in the Opinion of our more polite and refined Age, whoever conſiders him in relation to thoſe dark Times, muſt readily acknowledge this Honour was no way beyond his Merits; and alſo that the Ignorance of thoſe Days may be in ſome meaſure excuſed; when we conſider how ready they were to honour Learning, where they found it. In our Age a Skill in Letters is not ſo highly regarded, either becauſe it is more common, or becauſe Princes are leſs bountifull; or the Learned themſelves take not the beſt way to pleaſe them, or Envy precludes them a fair Acceſs to the notice of the Government.

[k] G. Lit. Dom. Paſch. 8 April.
[l] Victorellus p. 886. ad hunc ann. in Vitt. Pontif. & Squarzafic.

XV. But to return to our Diſcourſe of the Scottiſh Affairs: When the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt drew near (which was the Time limited for, the expiration of the Truce between England and Scotland) Sr. William Douglas ſecretly gather'd together his Troops, as well of Scots, as of the French Auxiliaries, and the very Day after the Truce was expired, lay down with a competent Army before Striveling. And becauſe he well knew, that King Edward being now at home, it was not probable, he could lie long there without ſome powerfull Diverſion, he uſed the more Vigour and Fury in all his Attacks, and made his Approaches more reſolutely; hoping thereby to carry the Place, before any ſuccour ſhould come. King Edward about the beginning of September, being alarm'd at the news of theſe Motions of Scotland, came to York, having before iſſued out his Commands to his Lords and Captains to meet him with their ſeveral Retinues by ſuch a time at Barwick: And the Commiſſioners of Array for the North did ſo well beſtir themſelves, that ſhortly after the King was provided with ſufficient Forces both Horſe and Foot, and his Army encreaſed daily. The Lord Douglas knew well to what all theſe Preparations tended, and therefore being one of the moſt daring Captains in the World, and alſo conſidering, that now was the beſt time to ſtir, when ſo many Frenchmen, his Friends were by to help him, and the Enemy as yet was far off and unprovided, renewed his Aſſault ten times more fiercely than before: So that dividing his Army into Four Parts, and keeping one of thoſe four Diviſions by turns perpetually upon the Aſſault, he allowed the Beſieged not one moment to reſt, whereby they were at laſt compell'd to Capitulate, and (becauſe Douglas would allow them no better) to yield on theſe Conditions; to go away at their Liberty, with Life and Limb, one Suit of Apparel and their Swords only. The Captain of the Caſtle was that valiant worthy Sr. Richard Limeſi, who the Year before had ſo well defended the Caſtle of Thine l' Eveſque againſt the Duke of Normandy; but now the incredible Fury of the Scots, and the great Engines of battery, which Douglas brought thither, enforced him to accept of theſe neceſſary Conditions. King Edward was at [m] Barwick, when the News of this Loſs came to him; whereupon he immediately rode back to Newcaſtle upon Tine, where he lodged, and was fain to tarry more than a Month; ſtill expecting the Proviſion for his Army, which was to come by Sea. But his Fleet had been been so shatter'd with a furious and lasting Tempest, that a very small Part of it was able to come thither in any time, and that not till November; the rest being dispersed abroad, some into Holland, others upon the Coasts of Friseland, and not a few quite lost: Whereby the English Army suffer'd great want of Victuals, and all things became excessive Dear, and Winter was pretty well enter'd. It was, no doubt, impossible, for any time to hold together so great Forces, which consisted of 40000 Foot, and six thousand Horse, in those Parts; especially since the Scots, had put as well all their Corn and Forage, as their other Moveables into strong Holds: And yet however King Edward was not wholly left by his good Fortune. For Prince Robert Stuart, Sr. William Douglas, and the other Scotch Lords, after the taking of Striveling, had retired into the Forest of Gedeours, not at all ignorant of King Edwards Forces and intent, but wholly unwitting of his Misfortune for lack of Provision: Wherefore they took counsel how to avoid so dreadfull a storm of War, as they saw now ready to fall upon them: Not at all presuming with their small Forces to meet with a Royal Army of so fam'd a Conquerour; and being satisfied in themselves, that they had already performed the Duty of good Subjects to their King and Country, in having for more than seven Years without a King to lead, or protect them, not only maintained what was left, but recover'd most of what was lost, which yet they must expect to lose again, as oft as King Edward should come thus strongly against them. Wherefore they were ready to mutiny against their Lord, King David, who for all this kept private in France, as if he either thought them not worth his Care, or, tho now of Age, durst not undertake their Defence. Upon all which Accounts, they resolv'd by any means to divert the War for this time, and so sent to King Edward, a Bishop, an Abbot, and two Knights, to desire a Truce of him for such a time, on such and such Conditions. These Messengers found the King in the beginning of December at Newcastle, where they declared to him and his Council their business, which was to require a Truce for six Moneths, on these Conditions; "That the Scots should the "mean while send into France to King David, to protest unto him, that unless He "would return home by the Moneth of May, next following, with Power able to "meet his Enemies of England in the Field, and to defend his Realm, then all Scot- "land would admit of King Edwards Government, and never after own either David, "or any of his Posterity for their King; and that thus to do upon King Davids failure, "all the Lords of Scotland had agreed. Upon good security given, these reasonable Conditions in so bad a juncture were accepted; the Scotch Messengers return'd with a Ratification of the Truce into Scotland, and King Edward having settled Affairs in those Parts, towards London.

[m] Froiſ. c. 73. Du Cheſne p. 654.

AN. DOM. 1341. An. Regni Angliæ XV. Franciæ II.

XVI. Soon after the Scots agreed to send into France Sr. Robert Vescy, Sr. Simon Fraiser, and two other Knights, to shew their King what they had resolv'd upon, in case he should absent himself any longer from them. They accordingly about the beginning of March, by reason of the Truce, took shipping at Dover, in order to sail into France. The mean while King David, who had now been in that Kingdom upward of seven Years, hearing daily unwelcome News of the Miseries and Ruines of his Country; at last understood, how his Captains at home had raised up some Light and Life in his Realm, had recover'd almost all Scotland from his Enemies, and had now extorted an half-Years Truce from the King of England; altho as yet the Conditions thereof had not reach'd his Ears: Whereupon being now about 21 Years of Age, and fired with a generous Indignation against England, as well as a due sense of Honour toward himself, and an hearty Commiseration of his poor Subjects, he determinately resolves the Redemption of his People, tho with the hazard of his Life and Crown. This his Resolution he communicates to his Friend King Philip of France, who highly approving thereof, furnishes him with Men, Money, and Vessels, and vehemently inflames him to a cruel and perpetual Enmity with England. Whereupon King David, having taken his leave of the French King, went on board with his Queen Joan, King Edwards Sister, and such Company as he had, for Scotland. His Admiral was the Loyal and brave Malcom Flemin of Cummirnald, who had formerly with great Care and Conduct convey'd him into France, and above a Year before had resign'd his strong Castle of Dumbriton, to the Custody of the Lord Robert Stuart, Viceroy of Scotland, only to enjoy the Honour of waiting upon his Exil'd Prince in France. King David landed at the Haven of Murray, before any of his Subjects heard any thing of his Arrival: For neither did he himself know of the Deputies about that time sent unto him into France; nor did they know any thing, that their King was then upon his Return home again.

1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

When [n] the Arrival of King David was nois'd abroad in Scotland, his glad Subjects flock'd unto him, as if He had been sent from Heaven to work their Deliverance. At first they brought him with great joy and solemnity to St. John's Town, whither his loving Subjects came unto him from all Parts of the Kingdom to see and welcome him home: Especially his Deputy the Lord Robert Stuart, Sr. William Douglas, Sr. Alexander Ramsey, and other his Great Captains, the Prime of his Nobility; all whom he highly thanked for their constant Valour and Fidelity unto Him. These Lords declared then to their Master what terrible Devastation had been made in his Kingdom by the English, to whose Complaints the young King only answer'd, shaking his Head, "Well, well, my Lords, by the Grace of God, I will be sufficiently revenged for all; "or else it shall cost me both my Realm and Life in the Quarrel. Then he straight sent forth his Summons to all his Subjects, Friends, and Allies, to come unto Him to St. Johnston by such a day to aid Him against his Adversary of England: At the time appointed there came thither the Potent Prince of Orkney, who had married one of King Davids Aunts, with a prodigious Number of Men of War in his Company; and divers Lords, and Knights of Sweeden, Norway, and Denmark, some for Love and some for Wages: So that in all He number'd in his Army no less than 60000 Foot, and 13000 Horse armed after their Manner.

[n] Froiss. c. 74.

The time [o] of Cessation being therefore now expired, hoping after all his troubles to have as good Success against England, as his Father Robert had, he began to march from St. Johnston with this terrible Army. That day he reach'd Dumfermlin; the next, crossing a little Arm of the Sea, and passing forth beyond Edenburgh, He went over the Tweed, leaving both Roxborough and Barwick (both which held then for England) unattempted: For he thought to do a greater Feat before his Return. So thrô the Marches he descended into Northumberland, exercising all manner of Hostility, and wasting and ravaging all before him, for about 40 Miles in length, till he came to Newcastle upon Tine, which he resolved to besiege, and so sat down with all his Forces before it. The Captain [p] of the Castle was the Lord John Nevill of Horneby, a Person of great Conduct and Bravery, who resolving to give the young King of Scotland a taste of the English Valour, as soon as might be, commanded 200 Lances to make a Sally very early the next Morning. These dashing suddenly with great Fury into the Scotch Host, on that Part where the Earl of Murray was (who as they say, was chief General for the time, the King himself keeping private) took the Earl himself in Bed, drag'd him away naked out of his Tent, and so having slain several of his Men, and wan much Booty, they return'd all safe into the Town with great joy, and deliver'd the Earl of Murray Prisoner to Sr. John Nevill their Captain. This Earl was a chief Prince of the blood in Scotland, next of Quality to Prince Robert Stuart, and the Earl of Southerland; but for Valour and Conduct he yielded to none: Froissard says, his Arms were Argent, three Oreills gules. This daring enterprise having alarum'd the whole Camp, the Scots ran like Madmen to the Barriers of the Town, and began a fierce Assault, which they continued a great while with much pertinacy. But they gain'd little, and lost much; for there were many good men of War within, who defended themselves with much Resolution and Discretion: So that the Scots were at last fain to leave off their Attack, and the hopes of suddenly revenging their Dishonour in that place. Wherefore that bold and lucky attempt of the Besieged being thus well back'd by a vigorous Defence, was sufficient to perswade King David and his Council, [q] that to dally about Newcastle was Dangerous; and that if they could rest securely in their Camp, yet there they had small likelihood to win either Profit or Honour; the Place it self not being of Import equal to the Reputation of so great an Army: Whereupon about Noon they decamped, and entring into the Bishoprick of Durham, burnt and wasted all before them. At last King David came before Durham, which he presently invested; for he knew well there was great plenty of Goods, and other Rich Booty in that City; because in time of Danger all the Country thereabout was wont to fly thither for Refuge.

[o] Buchan. says K. David return'd not till July, thô he makes the time limiting the Truce to be May: And yet that he came before the Deputies had been with him: Preposterous.

[p] Froiss. c. 74. f. 39.

[q] Froiss. c. 75.

XVII. As soon as Sr. John Nevil, the Captain of Newcastle, had seen for certain the Departure of the Scots, he gues's'd at their mischievous Designs, and resolv'd, what in him lay to prevent, or at least revenge them: Wherefore he mounts a very swift Gelding, and coasting wide of the Scots, rode Post night and day, till on the fifth day, he came more than 200 miles to Chertsey in Surrey, where at that time King Edward lay, to whom he exactly related all he knew of the Scots. The King immediately sent forth his Commissions, commanding all Men between the age of Sixty and Sixteen, laying aside all Excuses, to draw Northward, and to joyn him at York, to aid and defend his Realm, which his Enemies the Scots deſtroy'd. The command was readily obey'd by all the Lords, Knights and Eſquires of England, concerned therein, who drew thitherward with as convenient ſpeed as might be. As for the King, he would ſtay for no Man (ſuch an ardour of Mind and indignation, with a deſire of preventing his Peoples ruine, hurri'd him on) but he paſſed immediately Northward with the Troops of his Guards and thoſe he had ready, leaving the reſt to follow him. AN. DOM. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

and

XVIII. The mean while the Scots aſſaulted Durham with all the Fury imaginable, for they were e'ne ſtark mad for the former Affront they had received at Newcaſtle; when they loſt the Earl of Murray ſo diſhonourably. They rear'd vaſt Engines to caſt Stones with, and other Devices they had, whereby to approach the Walls under the ſhelter of certain Machines, reſembling the Ancient Teſtudo of the Romans, or the Synaſpiſmus of the Greeks; and withall they had other Engines running upon Wheels, wherein on Lofts as high as the Walls at leaſt, there were Croſsbows and Others, who kept the Beſieged from their Defences. So that after the Aſſault had been continually renew'd with all the vigour imaginable, and on the other hand maintain'd with incredible Obſtinacy for ſix or ſeven Days, the Scots [r] enter'd the City per force; at which time King David in revenge of all his Loſſes for ſo many years preceding, eſpecially being urged even beyond his Nature, by the importunate Inſtigations of his French Auxiliaries then with him, commanded his Captains to put all to Fire and Sword. There were Men, Women and Children, Old and Young, Men of the Church, as Monks, Prieſts, Canons and Others, Holy and Profane, all without pity or diſtinction put to Death. Neither Churches, Monaſteries nor Shrines, no not that of St. Cuthbert himſelf (after it had repos'd there for more than 300 Years) could reconcile the incenſed Minds of the Souldiers to pitty; not ſo much as one Soul was left alive within the Place: ſo implacable and impartial is the Sword of War, when ſharpned by Unchriſtian Cruelty.

[r] Froiſ. c. 75. & Du Cheſne p. 655. Martin p. 111.

XIX. When King David had left his high Reſentments, written at Durham in ſuch bloody Characters; he was adviſed to draw back with the Prey he had already gotten, as having for this time ſufficiently plagu'd the Engliſh, and enrich'd himſelf with Booty and Honour. This Counſel he obey'd, not thinking it good to expect the King of England, who was preparing to meet him with a Royal Army; wherefore now he made back again for Scotland. But in his Return toward Barwick, he lay one night near a ſtrong Place, belonging at that time to the Earl of Salisbury, called the Caſtle of Werk, which King Edward had [s] formerly granted unto the ſaid Earl, together with the Mannor thereto belonging, on condition to repair the Fortreſs and defend it againſt the Scots. It ſtands on the Frontiers of Scotland, on this ſide the River Tweed in the utmoſt Limits of Northumberland, about 9 Miles from Norham Caſtle, and 18 from Barwick. It was now well fortified by the care of the Earl of Salisbury, and committed to the Cuſtody of a Valiant Brother of his, [t] Sr. Edward (not as moſt of our Hiſtorians name him, Sr. William) Montagu: Which Sr. Edward and Dr. [u] Simon Montagu, at this time Biſhop of Ely, and a great Benefactor to our Univerſity of Cambridge, were both Brethren to the ſaid Earl of Salisbury. Within the Caſtle was the Counteſs of Salisbury, whom our Hiſtorians call Joan, who was Siſter to John Plantagenet, at this time Earl of Kent, and Daughter to Edmund late Earl of Kent, King Edward's Uncle, who had been ruin'd, as we ſhew'd, by the contrivance of Mortimer. This Lady Joan I ſhall readily acknowledge to have been eſteem'd the greateſt Beauty of that Age: Nor was her Diſcretion or Chaſtity any whit leſs notable: But whatever our Hiſtorians talk of King Edward's Amours with her at this time, 'tis certain ſhe was now but little more than Thirteen years old: For by [x] inquiſition made in the twenty ſixth of this King, ſhe was then found to be hardly twenty four years of Age. Yet it is agreed on all Hands, that by the ſpecial Favour of King Edward to one William Earl of Salisbury, ſhe was intended to be given unto him for Wife. But it is moſt certain, that that Earl William who was eſpouſed to this Lady Joan, was Son and Heir to this William; and now alſo but [y] thirteen years of Age. His Mother the preſent Counteſs of Salisbury, being the Lady Katherine Grandiſon, a Mother of two Sons and four Daughters, and was not only now living, but ſurviv'd her Husband the Earl (who died two years after this) ten [z] years, and lies buried at Biſham Abbey in Berkſhire of the Earl her Husbands Foundation. But the Lady Joan Plantagenet was indeed ſome Years after deſign'd to be married to this Earls Son, [a] thô by reaſon of a Precontract with the Lord Thomas Holland, upon his complaint to the Pope, ſhe was adjudged unto the latter: The former as it ſeems acquieſcing therein, by his after-marriage with another young Lady, namely [b] Elizabeth, one of the Daughters and Co-

[s] Pat. 4. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 21. Eſc. 18. Ed. 3. n. 51.

[t] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 653.

[u] Dugd. ibid. & Godwins Catal. Bps p. 268.

[x] Eſc. 26. Ed. 3. n. 54.

[y] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 647.

[z] Aſhmole's Garter p. 180. ex Eſc. 28. Ed. 3 n. 19.

[a] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 74. ex libro Iſlip dicto f. 178

[b] Catal. Honor. p. 1044.

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

heirs of John Lord Mohun of Dunſtor Caſtle. Whereby it is evident, that this Lady Joan Plantagenet could never be rightly called Counteſs of Salisbury. Nor yet was ſhe Counteſs of Kent at this time, nor till ten years after, when her Brother John Earl of Kent dying without Iſſue, left her (then) Husband, the foreſaid Lord Holland, Earl of Kent in her Right. After whoſe Death, ſhe was upon the account of her extraordinary Endowments and Perfections both of Body and Mind, taken to Wife by Edward Prince of Wales, commonly called the Black-Prince. Whereupon Hiſtorians, either miſtaking the young Earl for his Father, and ſo conſequently Joan Plantagenet, his intended Wife, for the Lady Katherine his Mother, or not apprehending, that the Order of the Garter, of which we ſhall ſpeak in its proper Place, could have any other than an amorous Original (thô we ſhall ſhew the contrary) or reſolving by right or by wrong, to celebrate the Counteſs of Kent's Beauty and Vertues, have thus confounded Matters, that without this long Digreſſion, we could not perfectly clear the Truth; which now we have ſincerely and unanſwerably done.

However near this Caſtle of Werk, wherein at that time was the Counteſs of Salisbury, and her Lords Brother, the Scotch Army [c] lodged that night, but thought not to ſpend any time in Aſſaulting the Place, becauſe they were now ſo laden with Booty, and the Fortreſs it ſelf ſeem'd too inconſiderable to employ ſo great an Army. Wherefore early next morning they began their March for Scotland; Prince Robert Stuart, Heir Apparent of that Crown, being in the Van, the King himſelf with moſt of the Booty and Carriages in the Middle, and the Lord William Douglas bringing up the Rear. Sr. Edward Montague, [d] who well ſaw from the Battlements of the Tower, that the Scots were reſolved to leave him in quiet, and that they were ſo charged with heavy Carriages, with the Plate, and what elſe they brought from Durham, that their Horſes could hardly ſuſtain the burthen, preſently mounts fourty Spears, and he himſelf in the Head of them ſallies out of the Caſtle, and covertly following the Reer of the Scots, overtook them as they were juſt entring into a Wood, and ſet on them with ſuch vigour, that he preſently ſlew and hurt of the Scots more than [e] two hundred, and took away from them above ſixſcore Horſes laden with Spoil, which they drove back toward their Caſtle. The cry and noiſe that follow'd this Action, came to the hearing of Sr. William Douglas, who had the charge of the Rereguard and was already paſſed the Foreſt: But when upon this Alarm he looked back and ſaw his Men come flying over Mountains and Dales, he was mightily ſurprized at firſt, but being quickly informed of the Matter, he commanded his Men to face about, and having ſent word thereof to the King and Prince Robert Stuart who led the other two Battalia's, himſelf without any ſtop purſued the Engliſh even to the foot of the Caſtle, and mounted the Hill after them with his Sword drawn. But before he came to the Barriers, the Engliſh were all entred, together with the Spoil they had recovered, and had cloſed the Barriers again: However the enraged Douglas falls immediately to the Aſſault with great Fury, and was received with as much Bravery. This Action continued till the whole Army and King David himſelf were return'd before the Caſtle; at which time, when the King ſaw what Maſſacre they had made of his Men along in the Field, and how weary and wounded they had already rendred the Aſſailants, without any apparent advantage on his Side, he cauſed the Aſſault to ceaſe for that time; but however gave command to encamp about the Caſtle. Then all men were buſied in taking up their Quarters, as the Camp-maſters had appointed, and to gather their Dead together for Burial, and to dreſs their Wounded. Thus they were employ'd the remaining part of that Day till time of reſt came: Next morning King David gave command for a freſh and general Aſſault, and the Beſieged ſtood ready at their Defences. The Counteſs of Salisbury for her part even beyond her Sex, ſhew'd ſuch a Maſculine Spirit, that inſtead of receiving Courage from others, ſhe added heart to all her Men: She diſtributed her Gold and Silver largely among her Souldiers, and promiſed more, and told them King Edward their Lord would ſoon come to her Aid; and ſpake ſo ſweetly, that every Man became as good as two. Wherefore the Aſſault was ſore and cruel, being on both ſides maintain'd with great Ardour and Animoſity: But the Aſſailants were expoſed to infinite hazards, the Preſence of their King making them venture on any thing; while the Beſieged fought with all poſſible Care and Diſcretion as well as Courage, as being Guardians of Beauty and Vertue, beſides the charge of their own Lives, and the Honour of their King and Country, which they were to maintain againſt a cruel and numerous Enemy. The Scots carried thither Timber, Faggots and other Stuff, intending to fill up the Ditches, whereby their Engines might the better approach the the Walls: But the Engliſh ſhot ſo fiercely, that after a long and bloody Conteſt, the Aſſailants were obliged to retire back, weary and well-beaten, and leaving great Numbers of their Companions behind. AN. DOM. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

[c] Froiſ. c. 76.

[d] Froiſ. ibid. & Du Cheſne p. 655. B.

[e] Froiſ. ibid. & Du Cheſne p. 655. B.

Then * King David gave Order to guard well the Engines for that Night, being fully reſolved the next day to renew the Attack: So all men retired to their Lodgings, but thoſe who were to ſtand upon Duty. There ſome lamented the loſs of their Friends, others, their own Wounds and Languiſhing Condition; the whole Camp was out of humor, either griev'd, or vext, or aſhamed.

XX. On the other hand † Sr. Edward Montagu Governour of the Caſtle called a Council of War: Where having conſider'd, that if the Scots gave them many ſuch Aſſaults, it was impoſſible to hold out long; They reſolved, that ſome body muſt adventure to paſs thorough the Scotch Camp, and ride Poſt to King Edward (who, as they heard from their Priſoners, had been for ſome time at York, gathering his Forces together) to tell him their Condition. Hereupon Sr. Edward Montagu threw down a Purſe of Gold, offering it as a Reward to Him, that would adventure to do ſo ſignal a Piece of Service, and withall, his beſt Gelding to carry him. But it ſeem'd ſo deſperate an undertaking, that every man look'd about upon his Neighbour, but none durſt engage in the Attempt himſelf. When Sr. Edward ſaw this he ſaid, "Well, Gentle-"men, however I am ſufficiently aſſured of the Loyalty, and Good-will, that you all "bear to my Lady of this Caſtle; wherefore for her ſake, and yours, I'll put my Life "in hazard to do this Errand my ſelf: For I have ſuch knowledge of you, that I "doubt not, but you will make ſhift to hold out, till my Return: And I repoſe ſuch "a Confidence in the Goodneſs of Our Soveraign Lord the King, that he will ſhort-"ly ſend me back unto You, with ſuch Relief, as will pleaſe You. And then believe "it, his Majeſty will ſo well Reward You, that You ſhall all remain highly ſatisfied. Theſe Words kindly refreſhed the Mind of the Noble Counteſs, and the reſt with her: So when Night came, he provided all things for his purpoſe, as ſecretly as poſſible, cauſing the fleeteſt Courſer that he had to be ready ſaddled for him. Surely, either the Ladies Vertue, or his Courage, or both, made Heaven propitious to the Enterpriſe; for it rain'd ſo hard all that Night, that the Scotch Sentinells kept all within under ſhelter, whereby his Paſſage was not impeached, and the Aſſault next Morning could not proceed to any purpoſe. About Midnight Sr. Edward iſſued privily out of the Caſtle, and paſſed within a while clear thrô the Hoſt, unhurt, and unperceived, till being got clear he made forward with full ſpeed. It was now about Day-break, when near half a League from the utmoſt Limits of the Scotch Camp, he met with two Scots, driving before them two Oxen and a Cow toward the Army; whom upon Examination, finding out, he ſet upon them, and wounded them both in ſeveral places, for he would not kill them, becauſe he deſign'd they ſhould tell their King what he was gone about: But the Cattle he ſlew, that the Scots might have no Benefit of them. After which he ſaid to the wounded Scots, "Now go your ways, and tell your King, that "I am Edward Montagu, who have this Night broke thrô his Camp, and am now go-"ing to direct the King of England hither with his Army; and with this he ſet forward upon the Spur. The News was brought to the King of Scots, wherefore being hindred for a while by the fall of the rain, as ſoon as he could, he renewed the Aſſault with all the fury imaginable; but gain'd nothing all the while. Upon this the Lords of his Council, who had ſeen ſo many Attacks made to no purpoſe, but that his Army was daily diminiſhed and weakned thereby, fearing that the King of England might come ſuddenly upon them before the Caſtle could be won, and ſo they might hazard not only the loſs of what they had already gotten, but of the King and Kingdom too, upon theſe Conſiderations (I ſay) the Lords of Scotland agreed all together, and thus one of them deliver'd their Minds to King David, "Sir, hitherto You have Honourably per-"formed Your Enterpriſe; You have done conſiderable Damage to the Engliſh, your "Enemies; you have taken and deſtroy'd the City of Durham, and in this Country "of Northumberland, You have now kept the field 12 days. And certainly, Sir, all "things conſider'd, it were better to go home in time with Honour, and ſave what "You have already won; then with Your wearied Forces to expect a freſh Enemy, "and ſo hazard the loſs of all upon unequal Terms. Your Majeſty may more oppor-"tunely return another time, when Your Men have refreſhed themſelves, and Your E-"nemies are not at hand with ſuch vaſt Preparations. The King would not be againſt the general Opinion of all his Council; but after a while, thô very unwillingly, yielded to follow their Advice. So early the next Morning he paſſed the Tweed with all his Hoſt, taking the direct way to the Foreſt of Gedeours among the wild Scots, there to remain

* Froiſ. c. 76.

† Froiſ. ibid. & Du Cheſne.

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

remain and wait King Edwards Motions, whether he would break up his Army and return, or pierce into Scotland at that time.

XXI. That [g] very day at Noon King Edward came thither with his Army to the ſame place, where the Scots had lain, and was mightily diſpleaſed, that he found them not there: For he came thither in ſuch haſte, with hopes to give them Battle, that his Infantry eſpecially was much wearied. However, when he ſaw how the matter ſtood, he gave Order to encamp there that Night, and ſaid, "how he intended to go ſee the "Caſtle, and give a viſit to the Noble Lady the Counteſs of Salisbury: For (ſays Froiſard) he had not ſeen her ſince ſhe was Married, before, which was near upon 14 Years ago, if not more, as may be gather'd from the Age of her Eldeſt Son, who was fifteen Years old, two Years after this, as appears [h] by Record. Wherefore I ſhall wholly wave that Popular, but exploded, Story of the Kings Amours with her at this time, and only proceed in a way more conformable to Reaſon, and undeniable Authority. When King Edward had unarm'd him ſelf, he took 10 or 12 of his Barons with him, and went to the Caſtle to ſalute the Counteſs, and to ſee the manner of the Scots Aſſaults, and the Defence that was made againſt them. As ſoon as the Counteſs heard of the Kings coming, ſhe commanded the Gates to be ſet open, and came forth to meet him in her moſt Rich Attire, ſo that it is not to be doubted, but that the Fame of her Courage preparing Mens minds, and the Splendour of her Garb being added to a Perſon of that Sex, of an high Quality, and not too far gone in Years, ſhe might appear charming enough to give occaſion of much merry talk among the Souldiers, who ſaw her at that time; and did poſſibly ſcatter ſuch Reports, as might propagate an erroneous Tradition even down to us. When ſhe came before the King, ſhe kneeled upon the Earth, and returned her Dutifull Thanks for this his ſeaſonable Succour. The King took her up Graciouſly with a cheerfull and hearty Aire, and perhaps (as One of that Sex and Quality, who had Honourably acquitted her ſelf in a Danger, brought upon her upon his account) ſaluted her at the ſame time. And ſo taking her by the hand, he walk'd her eaſily toward the Caſtle, talking no doubt pleaſantly upon the way, as a King not fully 30 Years old might probably do on ſuch an occaſion. Whoſo is minded to believe the other account of this Story, where the King is made to fall in love with her, him I refer to [i] Froiſard, who diſcourſes it at large, and is, I muſt confeſs, as to the main, a very credible Hiſtorian: Altho in this he is not to be followed by thoſe, who ſeriouſly confer circumſtances of Names, Times, Places, and Perſons.

[g] Froiſ. c. 77. & Du Cheſne.

[h] Eſc. 18. Ed 3. n. 51.

[i] Froiſ. c. 77.

Here the King had a Noble Dinner provided for him, both he and his Lords ſitting down together at the ſame Table: But the King himſelf ate but little, whereat his Lords wondred much, for he was wont to bear a cheerfull Countenance; but they judg'd this ſadneſs to proceed not from Love, but from this, that he had miſſed of the Scots his Enemies. In the [k] Morning however the King aroſe early, reſolving forthwith to follow after the Scots, and to chaſe them out of his Realm. Accordingly having taken leave of the Lady, he put himſelf in the head of his Army, and went after the Scots, till he came to Barwick; from whence afterward he proceeded, till he encamped within four Leagues of the Foreſt of Gedeours, whereinto King David was entred with all his Forces in confidence of that Impaſſable Wilderneſs. For three days together King Edward lay there, to ſee whether the Scots would come forth and give him Battle: All this while there were divers skirmiſhes between the two Armies, and ſeveral were ſlain and taken interchangeably on both ſides; thô the greater ſhare of the loſs fell to the Scots. But Sr. William Douglas was the Man among them that did moſt harm to the Engliſh: His Arms at that time are ſaid to have been Azure, a Chevron Argent, Thô after upon the Encreaſe of the Honour of that Houſe, the Douglaſſes, as * We ſaid before, took the bloody Heart for their Arms, in memory of Sr. James Douglas the Author of their Nobility, who died in Spain, as he was carrying King Roberts Heart to Jeruſalem.

[k] Froiſ. ibid.

* Vid. c. 4. §. 2. p. 57.

XXII. Now for all theſe Skirmiſhes between the Scots and Engliſh, during theſe three days, [l] there were certain Noblemen on both parts, who earneſtly labour'd to compoſe matters between the two Kings: And their Treaty took at laſt ſuch effect, that a Truce was agreed on for two Years, provided the French King ſhould give his Conſent thereto: For King David was ſo ſtrongly confederated with King Philip, that he could admit of no Peace without his Leave. Which unleſs he ſhould now grant, then the ſaid Truce was only to endure unto the Firſt day of May following. It was alſo agreed, that the Earl of Murray ſhould be quitted of his Ranſom and Captivity, vity, if the King of Scots could ſo far prevail with the French King, as that the Earl of Salisbury, who was already at liberty but upon Parole, ſhould now fully be acquitted of all Obligations. This Truce the King of Scots was by his Council earneſtly adviſ'd to make, that Scotland might thereby have ſome Breathing time to recover Strength from all its Miſeries, and that the Husbandmen might return to their care of the Fields, which were now almoſt wholly neglected: And King Edward for his part agreed the ſooner, not only becauſe the Seaſon of the Year began to call for a Reſpit, but becauſe he had Men of War at this time maintained at his charges in France, in Gaſcogne, in Ponthieu, in Xaintogne, in Bretagne and other Places, beſides his other vaſt Expences. King David ſoon after by his Ambaſſadors perſuaded King Philip to allow of this Agreement, and moreover to ſend a Releaſe to the Earl of Salisbury into England, on ſight whereof King Edward immediately return'd the Earl of Murray into his Country. Only the King of France did by a caution oblige the Earl of Salisbury to pay him [m] 3000 l. Sterling to boot, which before he had undertaken to do, for the redemption and Fees of himſelf, and of the Lord Robert Hufford le Fitz, Son to the Earl of Suffolk. In conſideration of all which Charges we find, that a Year after the Earl of Salisbury had his Liberty, his good Maſter King Edward allow'd him leave to tranſport [n] 240 Sacks of Wooll into Flanders, as part of a Requital of what he had loſt and ſuffer'd for his ſake.

[l] Froiſ. c. 78. & Du Cheſne.

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

[m] Leland Coll. 1 Vol. p. 803. & 805. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 646. & 2 Vol. p. 48.

[n] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 646.

CHAPTER the TVVENTIETH.

The CONTENTS.

I. Charles of Blois layes Siege to Rennes in Bretagne. II. The Counteſs of Monford ſends for Succour to King Edward, who orders the Lord Walter Manny to her Aid: But he is detain'd at Sea 40 days. III. The City of Rennes taken by Charles of Blois. IV. He beſieges the Counteſs in Hennebond, with a notable Exploit performed by her in Perſon, after which ſhe is forced to ride off to Breſt. V. She returns again to Hennebond with a good Succour, whereupon Charles of Blois, leaving half the Army ſtill there under Don Lewis of Spain, goes with the other half and lays Siege to Auray: Sr. Reynald of Dinant's Succeſs againſt the Garriſon of Roſternan. VI. Hennebond being juſt on the point of Yielding, the Lord Walter Manny arrives; the Biſhop of Leon falls off from the Counteſs. VII. The Lord Manny in a ſally breaks the Enemies biggeſt Engine of Battery to pieces, and gives them a brisk Camiſade. VIII. Don Lewis riſes in deſpair, and goes to Charles of Blois before Auray, who ſends him to take in Dinant. In his way thither he takes Comper. IX. The Lord Manny having retaken Comper, returns to Hennebond. X. The Men of Dinant having murder'd their Captain, Sr. Reynald of Dinant, yield to Don Lewis, who after that takes and ſacks Guerande. XI. Auray taken by Charles of Blois. XII. He takes Vannes and lays Siege to Karhais. XIII. The Lord Manny routs Don Lewis, killing 5700 of his Men; the Don narrowly eſcaping. XIV. While the Lord Manny attacks Roſternan, the Captain of Favoet takes and carries away two Engliſh Knights; whom the Lord Manny purſues and beſieges, but hearing of a powerfull Succour approaching, riſes and goes homeward, taking Gony en la Foreſt in the way: The Counteſs ſends to England for a Reinforcement. XV. Karhais yields to Charles of Blois, who thereupon returns before Hennebond. Don Lewis, having obtain'd as a gift the diſpoſal of the two Engliſh Knights Priſoners, vows to behead them both in ſight of their Friends in Hennebond. XVI. The Lord Manny hereupon calls a Council of War, and propounds and effects the Reſcue of the two Knights. XVII. Hereupon Charles of Blois raiſes his Siege again, but takes Jugon by a wile. XVIII. A Truce taken between the Lord Charles and the Counteſs, which latter comes to England with her Son; where ſhe is honourably received of the King. XIX. The Earl of Salisbury conquering the Iſle of Man, is by the King of England crowned King thereof: Pope Benedict the Twelfth dying, is ſucceeded by Clement the Sixth.

I. WE

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

WE have before given an Account of the Occaſion and Beginning of the Wars in Bretagne; how John Earl of Montford was taken at Nantes and deliver'd up, as Priſoner to King Philip, who committed him to the Louvre, and that all that Winter the Lord Charles of Blois remained about Nantes, intending to renew the War in the Opening of the Year. Now therefore having remov'd out of the way the Matters of Scotland, we ſhall return again to Bretagne, where ſhortly we ſhall find England engag'd in a War. Early [a] in the Spring of this Year MCCCXLII, all the French Lords, who had the Year before aſſiſted the Lord Charles of Blois, returned unto him to the City of Nantes with a great Power of Armed Men. Among them it was in a Council of War agreed, that the City of Rennes upon the River of Vilaine ſhould be firſt attempted, as being a place of great Importance, and the Seat of Parliament for the whole Province. The Counteſs of Montford who foreſaw no leſs, had already well provided for that City, having made a moſt loyal and couragious Gentleman of Bretagne, named Sr. William Cadudal Captain thereof. However the Lords of France laid their Siege to Rennes, but were ſo well received by the Captain, that they loſt much more than they could win: Yet ſtill they continued there, reſolving one way or other to be Maſters of the Place,

[a] Froiſ. c. 79.

II. Upon the firſt News of their Return into Bretagne, the Counteſs of Montford ſent the Lord Emery Clyſſon into England, to deſire Succour of King Edward; proffering her only Son and Heir in Marriage with one of the Kings Daughters, who thereupon ſhould be Dutcheſs of Bretagne. King Edward upon this Lords Arrival was at London, holding a great Feaſt, for it was Eaſter, whereupon moſt of his Chief Barons and Knights were about him. When the Lord Clyſſon had punctually related his whole Errand, the King granted his Requeſt in contemplation of the Alliance already made, and to be made between England and Bretagne. Whereupon he commanded the Noble Lord Walter Manny, to take with him as many Men of War as Sr. Emery thought neceſſary, beſides 3000 Select Archers at leaſt, and with all ſpeed to croſs the Seas for Bretagne in order to aid the Counteſs. Sr. Walter Manny prepared with all Expedition, and when all things were ready, took the Sea with theſe Lords of England and of Bretagne in his company; the Lords of Bretagne were Sr. Emery of Clyſſon, the two Brethren of Lyndale, Sr. Lewis and Sr. John, Sr. Alan Sirefond, Sr. John Hayes of Brabant; and of England the Lord John [b] Bardolph, the Lord Miles Stapleton, the Lord John Darcy ſenior, Sr. John Butler and Sr. Matthew Trelauny; being in all [c] 620 Men of Arms and 6000 Archers with others: For we find [d] that Hugh Audley Earl of Gloceſter, was alſo there as a Volunteer under the Lord Manny, with a Troop of an 100 Men of Arms, himſelf accounted for one, whereof there were beſides one Banneret, twenty Knights and ſeventy eight Eſquires; and theſe were joyned with another Troop of an 100 Archers on Horſeback: Here was alſo the Lord William Bohun Earl of Northampton, who [e] had Commiſſion to receive Fealty and Homage from the Bretons, on the behalf of King Edward, as King of France. But thô theſe Succours took the Sea early enough, it was almoſt too late before they came to the Counteſs, for they were detained at Sea more than fourty Days by Tempeſts and bad Weather.

[b] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 682.
[c] Knighton p. 1581. *n.*10.
[d] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 751.
[e] Id. ibid. p. 185.

III. The mean while the Lord Charles of Blois, who had layn ſome while before Rennes, gave ſuch Trouble to them within, that the Citizens would gladly have Articled; but Sr. William Cadudal their Captain, would by no means hear of any Agreement. The Beſieged however, when they ſaw that all this while there came no Succour from England, nor from the Counteſs, as they had been promiſed, and that they had already endured much Trouble, urged the Captain again more importunately to think of yielding while there was time of Mercy; but he abſolutely refuſed, ſaying, he was ſtrong enough to hold out, but if not, had rather die than turn Traytor. When they ſaw his Reſolution, they kept their own counſel ſecret; and being reſolved to ſave themſelves (thô without doing him any harm, for they lov'd his Perſon for his valour, Bounty and Loyalty) they once by a wile train'd him from his Attendants, and ſeiſing his Perſon caſt him into Priſon. Then they preſently agreed with Sr. Charles of Blois to yield up the Town the next Day, on condition, that the Captain and all thoſe who would ſtill hold on the Counteſſes ſide, might have free leave with their Horſe and Arms to depart whither they would; and the reſt ſhould make Homage unto him. Accordingly in the beginning of May, the City was yielded up, and the Lord Charles received there, as Duke of Bretagne; to whom all the Burgeſſes made their Homage and ſware Fealty. But Sr. William Cadudal could not be wrought upon to own him, or his cauſe; wherefore according to the Articles he had leave to depart; which he did with all thoſe of his Mind, and went ſtraight to the ſtrong Town of Hennebond, where he found the Counteſs; who as yet had heard no News of Sr. Emery Cliſſon and his Fellows. AN. DOM. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

to

IV. Rennes being thus taken, the Lord Charles of Blois was [f] adviſed to go and lay his Siege to Hennebond, where the Head of the War, the Counteſs and her Son were. For (ſaid the Lords, his Friends) "now the Earl himſelf, your Adverſary, is "in Priſon; if We might get the Counteſs and her Son into Our Hands, the whole "War would be at an end. This Advice, if it had been taken before they went to Rennes, had in all likelihood ſucceeded, as they wiſh'd: For even now We ſhall find the Place to be almoſt reduc'd, by that time the ſlow Succours came from England.

[f] Froiſ. c. 80. fol. 41. b.

When the Counteſs underſtood that the French were come to Beſiege her, ſhe immediately commanded an Alarum to be given with the Watch-Bell, for all Men to go to their Defences. And ſhe had now with her in the Town a Competent Garriſon, well furniſh'd with Proviſion, Ammunition, and Good Captains, as the Biſhop of Leon, Uncle to the Lord Henry du Leon, who was Revolted, Sr. Pierce of Triguier, the Lord of Landerneau, Sr. William Cadudal, Sr. Henry Pennefort, and Sr. Oliver his Brother, the Governour of Guingand, and many other Valiant Gentlemen.

When Sr. Charles came thither with his Army, he encamped within a quarter of a Mile of the Town: But ſome of his luſty young Knights, and Eſquires would not reſt, till they had try'd what Defence their Enemies could make. So to the Barriers to skirmiſh they went; and others, as bold went forth to meet them: The Diſpute was continued very hot between them for a while; but at laſt the Frenchmen and Genoueſe being overpower'd, were forced to retire with conſiderable loſs. The next day Sr. Charles perfected his Siege round both the Town and Caſtle, except where the Caſtle opens to the Sea; (for he had no Navy) and then took Advice to give a fierce Aſſault at the Barriers, which continued till Noon: At which time the Aſſailants were compelled to draw back, themſelves all weary, and having loſt many of their Men. When the Lords of France ſaw their people retire thus, they were no leſs aſhamed, than diſpleaſed; inſomuch, that they all ran thitherward with the remainder of their Forces, and made the others turn their Faces again, and together with them renew the Aſſault. This was a moſt vigorous and general Onſet, and Honourably performed; but the Beſieged ſtill defended themſelves moſt reſolutely. The Virago Counteſs was her ſelf Armed Cap à pied, and rode about on a large ſtrong Courſer from ſtreet to ſtreet, deſiring and commanding all Men to make good their Defence: The very Women and Maidens ſhe order'd to cut their Garments ſhorter, and to carry Stones and Pots of quick Lime to the Walls, to throw down upon the Enemy. And ſhe her ſelf to ſet an Example of Hardineſs to her Sex, perform'd that day ſuch an Exploit, as few Ages can equal; but all Writers joyntly atteſt. [g] When ſhe had thus ſet all hands to Work, ſhe mounted the Higheſt Tower to ſee how the Frenchmen were diſpoſed without: And there ſhe ſaw how all the Army was engaged at the Aſſault, and had left the Camp unguarded. Hereupon ſhe deſcended, took again her Courſer, all Armed, as ſhe had been, and Selecting 300 Horſemen went with them to another Gate, which was not Aſſaulted. Here ſhe iſſued forth with all her Company, and taking a Courſe daſhed into the French Camp, cutting down, and ſetting fire to their Tents and Pavilions: There was no reſiſtance made againſt her, for ſhe met with no body in the Camp, but Boys and Pages, who ran all away with great outcries. When the Lords of France looked back, and heard this confuſion, and ſaw their Tents on fire, they left the Aſſault, and return'd to the Field, crying Treaſon. When the Counteſs ſaw them Returning, ſhe gather'd her Men together, and perceiving that without great Danger ſhe could not recover the Town again, took another way, and made toward the Caſtle of Breſt, which was above 22 French Miles from thence.

[g] Froiſ. c. 80. Du Cheſne p. 656. Mezeray 2. part. tom. 3. p. 19. &c.

But ſoon after, the Lord Lewis of Spain, who being Marſhal of the Hoſt, was returning that way toward the Camp, when he beheld ſuch a Company of his Enemies marching off, followed after them with a competent Number of his beſt Horſe, and purſued the Counteſs ſo cloſe, that he ſlew and hurt ſeveral of her Men, who could not keep up with her: But however, ſhe and the greater part of her People rode ſo well, that they gained Breſt, where they were all received with great joy.

V. The next day the Lords of France, having thus loſt moſt of their Tents and Proviſions, reſolved to lodge nearer the Town in Bowers made of Trees: But they were mightily surpriſed, when they heard how the Counteſs her ſelf had headed that daring Exploit. However the Beſieged were extreamly concern'd for their Lady; for of five days together they heard no tidings of Her, nor could any way tell, what was become of Her. The mean while the Counteſs took ſuch Care of her Affairs, that ſhe had gather'd together no leſs than 500 Men of Arms, beſides thoſe whom ſhe brought with her to Breſt: And having ſo done on the Fifth day from her coming thither, ſhe left the Town with all this Warlike Company, and rode forward without noiſe, till about Sunriſe ſhe came along by one ſide of the Enemies Camp, to the very Gate, whence ſhe had before made that daring Sally, which immediately upon knowledge of her Perſon, was opened unto her: And ſo both She and all her Company enter'd Triumphantly with a great noiſe of Trumpets and Clarions; whereby the French Army was rouſed. They admired much at this Rejoycing of the Beſieged, and made haſte to give them a freſh Alarum; as thoſe within did to defend themſelves. For this ſeaſonable Return of the Counteſs with ſo good a Succour, brought ſuch mighty aſſurance to the Town, that now they made a moſt notable defence, thô their Enemies held them hard at Work all that Morning: At Noon the Aſſault ceaſed, the French having by far the Worſt of it, as well now, as at other times. Hereupon it was determin'd in a Council of War, that the Lord Charles of Blois, and Guy Earl of Blois his Father, the Duke of Bourbon, and the Marſhall of France Sr. Robert Bertrand, ſhould go with moſt of their Troops, and lay Siege to the ſtrong Caſtle of Auray upon the Morbihan, which is ſaid to have been built by the Famous Breton, King Arthur. And that the Lord Henry du Leon, Don Lewis of Spain, and the Vicount of Rouën, with all the Spaniards, and part of the Genoueſe ſhould tarry ſtill before Hennebond, and block it up; for they deſpaired of taking it by Aſſault. But however they ſent to Rennes for 12 great Engines, wherewith they might caſt huge Stones into the Town and Caſtle Night and Day. Thus the French Hoſt was divided, the One part lying before Hennebond, and the Other before Auray. This Fortreſs of Auray was now well fortified and ſupply'd with 200 choice Souldiers, and Proviſion ſufficient, and the Counteſs of Monford had lately ſent them from Hennebond two Valiant and Loyal Captains, Sr. Henry Pennefort, and Sr. Oliver his Brother. About four Leagues from this Caſtle was the ſtrong City of Vannes, which ſtill held for the Counteſs, by whom the Lord Geoffry of Maleſtroit was made Captain of the Place. Not very far off was the good Town of Guingand, the Governour whereof, the Lord of Dinant, was now in Hennebond with the Counteſs; but he had left the Town well provided both of a Captain, and what elſe was neceſſary, his Wife and Children being in the Town of Dinant, whereof Sr. Reynald of Dinant his Son was Captain. Between Guingand and Vannes ſtood a ſtrong Caſtle belonging to Sr. Charles of Blois, called Roſternan, well Garriſon'd with Souldiers of Burgundy, whoſe Captains were Sr. Gerard of Morlaix, and Sr. Peter de Portbeufe. Theſe two waſted all the Country about them, and prov'd a great Nuiſance to both the foreſaid Towns; ſo that neither Merchandiſe, nor Proviſion could be ſent to either of them without Danger of being intercepted and loſt. For one day they would ride toward Vannes, and another toward Guingand, and ſtill, when one Captain went forth, the other kept the Caſtle. One day among the reſt, it happen'd, that Sr. Reynald of Dinant had laid an Ambuſh for theſe Prolers, at which very time Sr. Gerard of Morlaix their Chief Captain, being ridden forth, had taken 15 Merchants with all their Goods and Commodities, and was now driving them to his Caſtle of Roſternan. But in the way he fell into Sr. Reynald's Ambuſcade, who took Sr. Gerard, and Twenty five of his Men Priſoners, reſcued the Merchants and all their Goods, and return'd ſafe to Dinant: Whereby the Young Man deſervedly got much Commendation.

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

VI. All this while [h] Sr. Charles of Blois gain'd no great Advantage at Auray. But Don [i] Lewis of Spain, Nephew to King Alphonſo the XI, who continu'd the Siege before Hennebond, had ſo broken and ſhatter'd the Walls of the Town with his Engines, that the Beſieged began to doubt extreamly. One day among others, the Biſhop of Leon having had ſome Communication in the Camp with Sr. Henry du Leon his Nephew, after much arguing (for the Biſhop was ſent forth to obtain ſome ſhort reſpite) it was at laſt agreed, that the Biſhop ſhould endeavour to perſwade them within to yield up the Town and Caſtle to Sr. Charles of Blois; and Sr. Henry du Leon on the other ſide, engag'd to obtain of the Lord Charles a full freedom and liberty for them all, that they ſhould receive no Damage either in Body, or Goods. Upon this concluſion the Biſhop enter'd the Town again; immediately whereupon the Counteſs, who ſuſpected his Errand (after ſhe had heard of his conference with Sr. Henry) beg'd earneſtly

[h] Froiſ. c. 80. fol. 42.

[i] He came from Prince Ferdinando, Eldeſt Son to Alphonſo X, King of Caſtille and Leon, and from the Daughter of St. Lewis King of France: Whoſe Sons were put by the Crown by their Uncle Alphonſo, that now Reigned. Odoric. Raynald. ad an. 1344 §. 47.

of

of the Lords and Knights, who were with her in Council, "that for the love of God, "they would all take heart, and hold out a little longer: For she said, she was confident, that within three days the Succours from England would arrive. But yet the Bishop spake so effectually, and gave so many Reasons for what he said, that all their Minds were mightily perplexed, and they remain'd in doubt all that Night. The next Morning they met in Council again: And at last they began to agree about yielding, and had accordingly then done it, had Sr. Henry been near with his Forces to enter and take possession. Then the Countess ran to a Window in great Agony, and look'd down along the Sea from the Castle with her heart aking, while her Lords were left debating of these unpleasant matters. Of a sudden she leap'd for joy, and cry'd out aloud, "I see, I see the Succours of England coming! There's the Cross of St George! God "has heard our Prayers: He has heard Us! Then all the Lords, and others, ran to the Window, and to the Walls, and up to the High Tower, whence they beheld a Fleet of Ships, Great and Small, freshly deck'd, making up to the Port. They presently knew it to be the English Fleet, as indeed it was, and had been detain'd above 40 days at Sea by ill-weather; but now happily came in the very Golden Opportunity to save the Countess and the Town. AN. DOM. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

Now [k] when the Governour of Guingand, Sr. Pierce of Triguier, Galeran Lord of Landerneau, and other Knights of Bretagne saw these Succours coming, they said to the Bishop, "Sir you may e'n leave off this pious Harangue about Peace, for we are "not at present disposed to follow your Doctrine. Then said the Bishop, "if so Gen-"tlemen, we must e'n part Stakes: For I will go to that Side which hath most Right. Having so said, he went out of Town and defi'd the Countess and all her Abettors, and being brought to Sr. Henry du Leon, shew'd him how Matters stood. Sr. Henry was wonderfully displeas'd, and gave Command, that the very greatest of the Engines which were rais'd against the Castle, should be pli'd Day and Night without ceasing: And so he led his Uncle the Bishop to Don Lewis of Spain, who in the Name of Sr. Charles of Blois received him kindly, as well for the Accession of so considerable a Person, as for Sr. Henry his Nephew's sake. [k] Froiss. c. 81.

VII. The mean while the Countess of Montford made ready Halls and Chambers to entertain the Lords and Captains of England that were coming, and she sent out the Chief of her Court to welcome them in the Haven upon their Landing. When they were landed she her self went forth to meet them, and shew'd all along great Respect to the Captains and feasted them highly, and gave them hearty Thanks, and lodged all the Knights and Others at their Ease in the Castle and the Town. The next day she made them a very noble Dinner in the Castle (now all the night before, and all that morning, the great Engines cast mighty Stones against the Castle) wherefore after Dinner the Lord Walter Manny, who was General of all the English Forces, enquired of the condition of the Town, and of the Army without, and having heard a full Account of all, he said, "Surely Gentlemen, I have a desire "to sally out and break down this Great Engine that stands so near us, if any man "will follow me. Then Sr. Pierce of Triguier and the Lord of Landerneau said, they would not fail to follow him in this his first Adventure. So they immediately arm'd themselves, and went out privily at a certain Postern with 300 Archers, and about 40 Men of Arms. The Archers shot so thick altogether, that those who kept the Engine fled away, and the Men of Arms who came after the Archers, pursu'd and slew many of those that fled, and then with Axes they beat down the Engine to the ground and brake it all to pieces. Nor content herewith they ran in among the Tents and Lodgings that stood neerest, setting Fire in divers Places, and killing and wounding till the whole Army began to stirr. Then they put themselves in good Order and withdrew fair and softly, they of the Host running after them like Mad-men. Hereupon Sr. Walter Manny said aloud, "Let me never be beloved of my Lady, if I re-"fuse to take a Turn with one or two of these Pursuers! And therewithall he couched his Spear and faced about to his Enemies; so did the two Brethren of Landale, Sr. Hayes of Brabant, Sr. Pierce of Triguier and the Lord of Landerneau, with the other Knights of Bretagne and of England that were there. Then might have been seen a fierce Medley indeed, Spears shivering to pieces, Horses falling down and Men revers'd upon the Earth: But those from the Camp encreasing upon the Others continually, it behoved the English by little and little to endeavour to recover the Town. In this honourable Retreat it was a gallant sight to behold, how here a Prisoner was taken, and immediately rescued again; here a Knight was unhorsed and forthwith remounted upon his Enemies Beast. The Lord Walter Manny shew'd himself both a

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

Wiſe Captain and a valiant Knight: For all the while he fought couragiouſly in the Reer of his Men, as he retired diſcreetly to the Ditches: Where the Archers being planted on each Flank, he made a ſtand with his choice Captains about him, till he ſaw all the reſt in ſafety. By which time almoſt all the Men of Arms within the Town ſallied forth with great clamour to reſcue their Friends; and about 3000 Archers more came out and ranged themſelves on each ſide the Dike in order to receive the Enemy: But they for their part prudently retired, finding it a vain Attempt to force them upon ſuch Diſadvantage; and the Engliſh returned all ſafe and victorious into the Fortreſs. At which time the Counteſs, who from the high Tower had ſeen all this brave Skirmiſh, deſcended and came forth of the Caſtle with a glad cheer, and in the Street ſhe met and kiſſed Sr. Walter Manny and his Captains one after another, twice or thrice (as Froiſard ſays) like a valiant Lady.

VIII. This bold and lucky Enterpriſe of the Engliſh Generals took off all hope from the Enemy of Prevailing; wherefore the [1] next day Don Lewis of Spain called a Council of War, and the Vicount of Rouën, the Biſhop of Leon, Sr. Henry du Leon and Sr. Otho du Rue Maſter of the Genouëſe, to know their Advice in this Juncture. They remembred how long they had lain already to little purpoſe before the ſtrong Town of Hennebond; they ſaw how mightily the Enemy was reinforced with theſe Men of Arms and Archers of England; ſo that they were ready even to have bid them Battle at their Gates: Their biggeſt Engine was broke, many of their Men ſlain and wounded; their Army weaker, the Enemy much ſtronger: So that on all theſe conſiderations they thought it but loſt time to wait for any good Succeſs there; and thereupon concluded to raiſe their Siege the next day, and to draw to the Caſtle of Auray; where ſtill Sr. Charles of Blois lay at Siege with the other half of the Army. As they had agreed the next day they began their March for Auray, whereat thoſe of the Town made great Outcries and Shoutings after them, and ſome adventur'd to follow them in the Reer, but they were ſoon beat back again; nor did they gain the Town without loſs. When Don Lewis of Spain came to the Lord Charles of Blois, he gave his Reaſons why he rais'd his Siege from before Hennebond; which were allowed. But Sr. Charles being of himſelf ſtrong enough to maintain the Siege before Auray, he ſent Don Lewis to Dinant, a Town not otherwiſe fortified than by Pales, the Water of the River Rance and a Mariſh Ground. The Spaniſh Leader in his way thither, came to a Caſtle called [m] Comper, the Captain whereof was a valiant Knight of Normandy named Sr. Anthony Manſon, who had a pretty conſiderable Garriſon under him. This Place Don Lewis reſolved to attack, and gave them a fierce Aſſault, which held till Midnight (for it was begun but in the Evening) the Defendants ſtill making their part good. The next Morning the Aſſault was renewed, and (the Ditches being then found not to be of any great Depth) the Aſſailants approached by Wading, and made a great Breach in the Wall, whereat they entred by Force and ſlew all the Garriſon, but only the Knight their Captain, whom they took Priſoner. When Don Lewis had ſet here a new Garriſon of 60 choſen Men under a good Captain, he went forward and lay down before Dinant.

[1] Froiſ. c. 82. fol. 42. b.

[m] Sic corrigo Froiſard Conqueſt: Nam inter Auray & Dinant non reperitur Conqueſt, ſed immane quantum ab utriſque occidentem verſus diſtat: Vt ex Tab. Geogr.

IX. Now when firſt Don Lewis had ſat down before Comper, immediately one was diſpatch'd away with News to the Counteſs of Montford; who thereupon ſaid to the Lord Walter Manny, "That if he could relieve that Place, it would be as ſatisfacto-"ry to her, as honourable to himſelf. Sr. Walter agreed, and the next Morning began his March towards Comper with moſt of the Forces of Hennebond: About Noon he came to the Caſtle, wherein now was a Garriſon of Spaniards and French, for it had been won the Day before. Sr. Walter was vext when he ſaw that Don Lewis himſelf was not there; for he came with a reſolution to give him Battle: However he ſaid to his Men, "Gentlemen, I am not in the mind to ſtirr hence, till I know who are in "the Caſtle and how they came there. So the Aſſault was begun, and the French and Spaniards within ſtood ſtifly to their Defence: But the Engliſh Archers held them ſo ſhort, that (the Ditch being now alſo gaged with Spears and found paſſable) the Men of Arms came eaſily to the Walls; and preſently finding the Breach, at which the French had entred before; they alſo entred the Caſtle the ſame way and ſlew all they found there, but ten whom they took to Mercy. The Lord Manny would not leave any Garriſon there, for he ſaw well the Place was not tenable; wherefore having ſet it on fire, he returned with his Engliſh and Bretons to the Counteſs to Hennebond: for he durſt not go too far from that Fortreſs having almoſt drained the Garriſon.

X. In the mean time Don Lewis lay at Siege before Dinant, wherein was Captain the the young Sr. Reynald of Dinant, Son to the Lord of Guingand, who had ſo well acquitted himſelf againſt Sr. Gerard of Morlaix, as we ſhewed a little before. He valued nothing the Threats of Don Lewis, but always gave him his hands full of work when he came to aſſault them. But Don [n] Lewis within a little while had got together ſeveral Boats and little Barks; ſo that now he could attack the Place both by Land and Water at once. Wherefore when the Burgeſſes of the Town ſaw their condition, they reſolved to yield, and begun to perſwade Sr. Reynald their Captain thereto; but he diſdaining their Motion, proteſted he would never endure to be ſo baſely diſloyal: Wherefore theſe Barbarous Wretches laid hands upon the noble-hearted young Gentleman, and moſt inhumanly murder'd him in the open Market-place. When thus Don Lewis had gain'd the Town, he releaſed Sr. Gerard of Morlaix (whom he found there a Priſoner) and made both him and his Friend Sr. Pierce Portbeuf Captains thereof, with a ſufficient Garriſon under them. From thence Don Lewis marched back again till he came to a great Town on the Sea ſide, between the Vilaine and the Loire, called Guerande: Where he found ſeveral Merchants Ships, which had been come laden with Wine from Poictou and Rochel. The Wine was all ſold off, but the Payment was not very good: For Don Lewis ſeiſed on all the Veſſels and what he found therein, and having mann'd them, aſſaulted the Town the next day both by Sea and Land. The Beſieged could not make good their Defence both theſe ways at one time; wherefore the Place was carried by Force, the Town robb'd, all the Souls therein both Men, Women and Children put to the Sword without Mercy; and Five Churches were violated and ſet on Fire. Which laſt fact ſo highly diſpleaſed Don Lewis, that he commanded 24 of thoſe who had done it, to be forthwith hanged for their pains. In this Place there was found much Treaſure and Riches, ſo that every Man was maſter of more than he could bear away, wherefore they were fain to pick and chooſe the moſt valuable things, and leave the reſt againſt their Wills behind them. For it was a Town of great Traffick and Merchandiſe.

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

[n] Froiſ. c. 82. fol. 43.

XI. After this cruel Execution done at Guerande, Don Lewis enter'd into the Ships, which he had found there with Sr. Otho du Rue, and a good Number of Genouëſe and Spaniards, reſolving to coaſt along by the Sea ſide in hopes to find ſome Purchaſe. But the Vicount of Rouën, the Biſhop of Leon, and Sr. Henry du Leon his Nephew, with all the reſt of that Army, return'd back to the Lord Charles of Blois, who lay ſtill before Auray. There they found many Lords and Knights of France, as the Lord Lewis of Poictiers, the Earl of Valence, the Earl of Auxerre, the Earl of Porcien, the Earl of Joigny, the Earl of Boulogne and ſeveral Others, whom King Philip had newly ſent thither to reinforce the Lord Charles againſt the Engliſh; beſides not a few, who of their own Good will came to ſerve him.

Until this time the Caſtle of Auray held out very well: But now there began to rage ſuch a Famine among them within, that they fed upon whatſoever they could meet with, having for ſeven days before dieted upon their Horſes: And yet even this Plague which tameth all other Creatures, could not make theſe Warriers yield: Becauſe the Lord Charles would not grant them Honourable conditions; but demanded them to yield abſolutely to his Pleaſure.

However one dark Night theſe valiant Men, ſeeing they could do no better, went all ſilently out of the Caſtle on Foot, and as God would have it, eſcaped quite thrô the Hoſt, except ſome few of the Weakeſt; who being left behind, were perceived and ſlain. But the two Loyal Brothers, Sr. Henry Pennefort and Sr. Oliver, by means of a little Wood hard by, got off clearly with moſt of their Men, and came to the Counteſs to Hennebond, but about 4 French Miles from Auray.

XII. Thus after ten Weeks Siege Sr. Charles of Blois hardly at laſt gain'd the ſtrong Caſtle of Auray, which he ſupplied with a good Garriſon and Proviſion, and ſo went and laid Siege to the Great City of Vannes. The Captain of Vannes was the Lord Geoffry of Maleſtroit, a Loyal and valiant Gentleman, who reſolved to defend the Place to the laſt. The Day after Vannes was beſieged, a part of the Garriſon of Ploermel, which being little more than 7 French Miles from thence, held for the Counteſs, rode forth early in the Morning to the Camp of Charles of Blois, where falling ſuddenly on, they ſlew, and wounded and terrified many: But having no expert Leader, they engaged themſelves too far, and ſo were well-nigh encloſed unawares, before they could get back: So that they loſt many of their Company, and the reſt were chaſed almoſt to the Gates of Ploermel. When the Bloiſians were returned from this Chaſe, the Lord Charles commanded a general Aſſault upon Vannes: Whereupon within a while the Barriers were won by Force: So that there was held a Bloody

Conteſt

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

Conteſt at the Gates of the City, which laſted till Night: At what time a Truce was by the Beſieged required, and granted for all the day following. The next day the Burgeſſes of the City, mauger all that the Lord Geoffry could do or ſay, concluded to yield up the Place to Sr. Charles; but however, during the time of the Treaty, the Captain ſeeing how things would go, got privately out of the Town, and with a few of his own Mind came ſafe to Hennebond. The Lord Charles enter'd the Town peaceably, and had the Homages of all the Inhabitants yielded to him; and ſo having tarried there five days to ſet things in Order, he went thence and ſat down before Karhais, upon the River Aufene.

[o] Froiſ. c.84. fol. 43. b.

XIII. The mean while [o] Don Lewis of Spain, who with his Troops had taken Ship at the Port of Guerande, which he had ſo cruelly deſtroy'd, ſailed forth, till he came into Bretagne Bretonant to the Haven of Quimperlay, near Quimpercorentin. Here he landed, and burnt, and waſted all the Country about, and gat a vaſt quantity of Riches and ſpoil; which having ſent on board, himſelf proceeded on farther, ravaging about in thoſe parts. Sr. Walter Manny, and Sr. Emery Cliſſon heard at Hennebond of all theſe proceedings; wherefore calling a Council of War, they reſolv'd to ſail in queſt of Don Lewis: And ſo they ſet forth to Sea with 3000 Archers, and a competent Number of Men of Arms; till at laſt they arrived at the Haven of Quimperlay, where they found Don Lewis his Navy: Which immediately they boarded, and took with eaſe, putting all to the ſword they found therein. But they admired at the vaſt Riches and Prey, which the Spaniards had heap'd together, not as we may gueſs, with a Deſign to leave them thus for the Engliſh. However, Sr. Walter Manny was not ſatisfied with all this, unleſs he might diſpute his Right thereto with the Owners themſelves. He therefore leaves his own Veſſels, and thoſe he had won to the Protection of 300 Archers, and with the Reſt of his Forces, takes Land and Marches up into the Country in queſt of Don Lewis, being ranged in three diſtinct Battails, diſtant about half a Mile from each other, that the Enemy might not eſcape them. And thus (Command being given to fire all Towns which had owned Charles of Blois) they went on, driving the Country before them. When Don Lewis heard of theſe new Intruders, he drew all his Men together, and endeavour'd with all ſpeed to recover his Ships, which as yet he knew not to be in his Enemies Power. Upon his Return, he encountred with One of the three Engliſh Battails, and finding he could not well avoid them, he reſolv'd to engage with them; ſo he order'd his Men, and made ſeveral new Knights (among whom was his Nephew, Don Alphonſo, a young hopefull Gentleman) and preſently gave the Engliſh a brisk Onſet. In all likelihood He had ſoon prevail'd over this Brigade; but by the Cry and Noiſe of the Country people, who had ſufficient cauſe to hate the Spaniard, the other two Battalions of the Engliſh were in good time directed thither. Then the Archers of England ſhot ſo fiercely; that neither the Spaniards, nor Genoueſe could any longer keep their Array. So they were all beaten down, diſcomfited and ſlain: For after the Flight was once begun, the Country People fell in with Prongs, Staves, and Stones, and ſlew all they met, without Mercy. Of 6000 there eſcaped ſcarce 300: Don Lewis himſelf (thô not without ſeveral wounds) hardly with a few being able to reach the Haven: But his Nephew, Don Alphonſo was ſlain. When Don Lewis came to the Ships, he could find no entrance for the Archers of England, who kept him off with their ſhot; But at laſt, with much difficulty he made ſhift to get into a little ſwift Barge; wherein with ſome few of his Company he ſail'd away, as faſt as he could.

XIV. Sr. Walter Manny upon his Return, hearing of the Eſcape of Don Lewis, took the beſt and nimbleſt Veſſel he had, which he made the Admiral, and follow'd hard in the chace of him, the whole Navy ſailing after. But the Spaniard had got ſuch a Start before him and fled ſo faſt, that they could not overtake him, till he had taken Land at the Haven of Redon in the River of Vilaine. Don Lewis and his Company had entred the Town, but durſt not tarry there; for the Engliſh were then juſt ready to land at the ſame Place, and had immediately been upon their Backs, had not the Spaniard got for Himſelf and his Men ſuch Horſes as came firſt to hand: Wherewith he eſcaped to the City of Rennes, which was but about ten French Miles off. However ſome of his Company who were not well horſed, fell into the hands of the Engliſh, who purſued them ſome part of the Way: And then Sr. Walter Manny return'd back to Redon, where He and his Men lay all that night. The next Day he went on Board again, intending for Hennebond, where the Counteſs was ſtill: But being driven by contrary Winds he was fain to land about three Leagues from Dinant, where having ſent his Navy back to Hennebond with a ſufficient Convoy, he took took such Horses as he could get, many whereof had no Saddles or Bridles, and so came at last to the Castle of Rosternan. Then Sr. Walter Manny spake to his Followers, "Gentlemen, if our Company were not so over-toil'd already, I would make "one Attempt upon this Place gladly. The other Captains repli'd, "Sir, begin when "you please; we shall not fail you thô we die for't. And so saying, they began the Assault: But Sr. Gerard of Morlaix, who being lately sent thither from Dinant, was Captain there now, made so good a Defence, that in the Assault many English Men were grievously Wounded, the chief whereof were Sr. John Butler, and Sr. Matthew Trelauny, two Valiant Knights; who presently thereupon were carried aside into a Fair Meadow hard by, to have their Wounds dressed, and look'd to: The mean while the Assault was carried on with more Fury than before.

AN. DOM. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

Now [p] this Sr. Gerard of Morlaix had a Brother, named Reginald of Morlaix, who was Captain of a little Fortress hard by, named le Favoet: When he heard of the Danger his Brother Gerard was in; taking 40 Spears along with him, he resolv'd to go out to his Assistance. As he rode toward Rosternan, he came by the side of a Wood thrô that same Meadow, where he found the foresaid two Knights, and others, English and Bretons, all Wounded, together with those that attended them. Those that were hurt, he easily made his Prisoners, and led them all back with him to Favoet; all Wounded, as they were: The rest fled directly to Rosternan to Sr. Walter Manny, and told him what had befell them. Upon this News, He caused the Assault to cease, and with all his Forces in great haste followed those that had carried away the Prisoners towards Favoet. They were all got into the Castle before Sr. Walter could come up to them; but however, as weary as he and his Men were, they began to Assault this Place also. But because the Fortress was well Defended, and it began to be late, they presently gave over for that time; resolving, when they should have the day before them, to make another Tryal the next Morning. Sr. Gerard of Morlaix knew in what jeopardy his Brother was, and to requite his last Kindness, of which he had had Intelligence, took this Course to deliver him. That Night he mounted his Horse, and rode all alone to Dinant, which he reach'd a little before Day; and there made Declaration of all the Matter to his Old Friend and Companion, Sr. Pierce Portbeufe, Captain of the Town. Sr. Pierce, when it was day, Assembled all the Burgesses of the Town in the Common-Hall, and there Sr. Gerard of Morlaix, with the others Assistance, so perswaded them, that they all agreed to send Succours to Favoet, and so one with another they made up a Body of 6000 Men. The mean while Sr. Walter Manny, just as he was going to renew the Assault, was informed of all this by an Espy; whereupon he call'd a Council of War, by whom it was concluded, "that if Sr. Charles of Blois should come upon them on one side, as "those of Dinant were ready to do on the other, they hazarded all upon one Stake: "Wherefore they judg'd it best to leave their Friends in Prison, till some better op-"portunity, and with all speed to make now directly for Hennebond. In their Return, they came to a Castle, called Gony en la Foreſt, which had been deliver'd up to the Lord Charles of Blois, but fifteen days before. Sr. Walter taking Indignation at the Treachery of those Men, who had yielded up so Strong a Place, said aloud, "that "he would go no farther, as weary as He was, till he had attack'd that Castle, and "try'd the Demeanour of those within, and whether they had as much Courage, as "they had shew'd falshood. So a fierce Assault began, nor were the Besieged backward to Defend themselves: Sr. Walter encouraged his Men, and was always himself among the foremost: The Archers play'd so thick with their shot, that none hardly durst appear at the Battlements: Wherefore within a while the Ditch in one place was filled with Faggots, Turfs, Bushes, Wood, and other solid Matter; so that the Pioneers might approach the Walls; whom the Archers Defended so well, that they presently made a Considerable Breach: Then the Men of Arms entred, and slew all they found therein; and having lodged there that Night, the next Day they all return'd to Hennebond.

[p] Froiſ. c. 85. fol. 44.

When the [q] Countess of Montford heard of their coming, she went forth and met them, and (as Froisard says) kissed the Lords, and made them great Cheer, entertaining them all at a Noble Dinner in her Castle: But now, when it was known that Vannes also was newly taken, and Karhais Besieged by the Lord Charles, and that his Power daily encreased by his Succours from France, the Countess and the Lord Walter Manny agreed to send certain Messengers to the King of England, to inform him of the wonderfull Success of Sr. Charles, and that without more Powerfull Forces, than hitherto he had sent, he would be like to bear down all before him: These Messengers arriving safe in Cornwall, rode unto Windsor to the King.

[q] Froiſ. c. 86.

XV. All

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

XV. All this while the Lord Charles of Blois, who lay before Karhais, had so closely preſt the Town with his frequent Aſſaults and terrible Engines of Battery, that at laſt they thought beſt to yield themſelves unto him, and to own him for their Lord and Soveraign. Having therefore received the Town, he tarried there fifteen days, in making new Officers and giving neceſſary Orders for the Defence of the Place. And this done, thô he well knew the ſtrength of Hennebond, he reſolved to lay Siege thereto again, becauſe that was the only Important Place almoſt which he had not reduced, and there lay the Head of the War, the Counteſs and her Son. So thither he went with all his Forces and lay down before the Town: The Fourth day after the Siege began, Don Lewis of Spain came again unto him, after he had been detain'd in the City of Rennes ſix Weeks together, by the Wounds he received in the Fields of Quimperlay; which not till now were perfectly healed. He was extreamly welcome to Sr. Charles of Blois; for he was a Prince of great Courage and Conduct, and very conſiderable among the Men of War. Beſides the Acceſſion of ſo notable a Perſon, the French Army that lay before the Town encreaſed daily at a wonderfull rate: For many Lords and Knights of France, who had deſigned to go into Spain to aſſiſt King Alphonſo and the Chriſtians againſt the King of Granada, as in their Paſſage thrô Poictou they heard of theſe Wars in Bretagne, ſtop'd in their intended Journey, and drew thither to the Part of the Lord Charles of Blois. And now had the French reared againſt the Town fifteen or ſixteen vaſt Engines of Battery: But the Beſieged valued them not, for they had before by means of ſoft Woolpacks, and the like Inventions provided againſt them: ſometimes the Townſmen would in contempt mock the Frenchmen from the Walls, crying out in Deriſion, "Go, go, Meſſieurs, and gather "together your valiant Troops that lie idle in the fields of Quimperlay. This Sarcaſme was a Corroſive and a Stab to the Soul of Don Lewis of Spain, who loſt that Battle and his Nephew Alphonſo therein, and hardly eſcap'd away, wounded himſelf.

[1] Froiſ. c. 87.

[1] Wherefore one day he came to the Tent of the Lord Charles of Blois, and by way of Friendſhip, and in lieu of all the Service he ever had or ſhould do for him, deſired only one Boon in the preſence of ſeveral great Lords of France. Sr. Charles, beſides the Reſpect he bore to his Quality, had ever found him a conſtant and uſefull Friend, and ſo frankly promiſed to grant him whatever he ſhould demand. "Sir, ſaid "Don Lewis, then I require that you would inſtantly ſend Order for the two Engliſh "Knights who are Priſoners in Favoet, that is to ſay, Sr. John Butler and Sr. Mat- "thew Trelauny to be brought hither, and to be given to me, to do with them as I "ſhall think good. This Sir is the only Boon that I deſire of You: They have cha- "ced, diſcomfited and hurt me, and ſlain my Nephew Alphonſo, with many Hundreds "of my Men. I know no better way to be revenged of theſe Engliſhmen, who have "done me all this Miſchief, than if I ſtrike off the Heads of theſe two Knights before "the Town in the ſight of their Company. The Lord Charles who was a moſt ac- compliſh'd Gentleman, was amaz'd at this ungenerous Procedure, and made this An- ſwer. "Certainly [f] my Lord Lewis, the Priſoners I yield unto you with a very good "will, ſince you have deſired them of me. But doubtleſs it would be a diſhonoura- "ble Action, to put to Death two ſuch valiant Knights as theſe in cold Blood; and "it will give Occaſion to our Enemies to deal in the ſame manner with us, if we "ſhall fall into their Hands: Which, ſince War is ſo uncertain, we know not when "we may. If they have affronted you, provoked you, wounded you, ſlain your Ne- "phew, they were your Enemies, they did it in open Field; you could expect no o- "therwiſe; nay youl'd have done the ſame to them. Now revenge all this in Gods "Name, I allow it; but do it in an honourable way; let not two Innocent Men, "whoſe hands are ti'd, be a Sacrifice to the Anger of the Noble Don Lewis. Dear "Coſin, I deſire you of all love to be better advis'd, and ask of me any other thing, "that I may not be aſham'd to grant you. Don Lewis, who was nothing at all mov'd with theſe Words, repli'd ſullenly, "Sir, if you will not keep your Word with me, "be aſſured, that I ſhall forſake both your Company and Cauſe, and never after either "ſerve or love You again while I live. When Sr. Charles ſaw him ſo peremptory, and that nothing could perſwade him to alter his Mind, he ſent to Favoet for the two Engliſh Knights, who were brought the next Morning early to his Tent. Then the Lord Charles renew'd his Requeſts in their behalf to the angry Don Lewis, but for all that could be ſaid, he was inexorable, and ſware by God and St. Jago, they ſhould both looſe their Heads after dinner in ſight of the Town.

[f] Froiſ. c. 87. fol. 46. & 47.

XVI. But it pleaſed God that all this Diſcourſe, and the Reſolution taken about theſe poor Gentlemen was preſently brought to the Lord Walter Manny, with the exact exact time when they were to suffer. Sr. Walter being mightily concern'd, calls a Council of War to consider of the matter. Some said one thing and some another; but none could see any Remedy in the case: For the Lord Charles his Forces were not to be fought with in plain Field by those of the Town. At last the Gallant Lord Manny stood up and said, "Gentlemen, it would certainly redound much to our Ho-"nour, if we could deliver yonder two Knights from Destruction. And if we should "but endeavour to save them, thô we fell short of our Purpose, yet King Edward our "Master would give us many Thanks, and so would all Persons of Honour, that should "afterwards hear of the Case: For they will say, that however we did our Devoir to "save the Lives of our Companions in Arms. Methinks therefore a Man that dare "look Death in the face, should not scruple to venture his life for the Safety of two "such valiant Captains, his Friends and Countrymen. Now this is my Advice, that "we divide our whole Power into two Parts, the one to pass out at the Great Gate "immediately and to range themselves along on the Dike, thereby to provoke the Army "(as I believe every Man of them will) to draw that way: The other Party in the mean "time to try another Experiment. You my Lord, Emery Clisson, shall be Captain of "the First Company, and shall take with you Six thousand good tall Archers, and "Three hundred Men of Arms; and I the mean while with an hundred Men of Arms "and 500 Archers on Horseback, will sally privily out at the Postern, and taking a "Course will dash into their Camp, among the Lodgings behind, which I verily think "to find as good as unguarded. Here I have such Men with me, as will shew me the "Tent of Charles of Blois, where I am sure to find the two Knights Prisoners, and "then let me alone to bring them off. This Project took immediately, and so they "prepared to put it in Execution.

AN. DOM. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

About Dinner-time the Lord Emery Clysson set open the chief Gate which look'd toward the Enemy, and marched out with all his Company, some whereof struck suddenly in upon the Skirts of the Host, and slew and hurt divers. The whole Army was alarm'd at this unexpected boldness of the Besieged, and made all the haste possible to chace them back again into the Town. They for their parts retired fair and softly to their main Battle, not ceasing to skirmish all the way: The mean while Sr. Emery drew forth his Men along upon the Dike without the Barriers, and placed the Archers ready on both sides the way to receive the Enemy. The Noise and Cry of Men and Martial Instruments was so great, that all the whole Army drew thitherward, expecting a full decision by Battle; only their Pages and Valets being left in the Camp. At that very time Sr. Walter Manny with his 600 Men sallied out privily at the Postern Gate, and fetching a Compass behind the Camp, entred the Lodgings of the French Lords; where they met with no Resistance; for all were at the Skirmish. Sr. Walter (being directed) went straight to the Lord Charles of Blois his Tent, where he found the two Knights Prisoners, Sr. John Butler and Sr. Matthew Trelauny, with their Faces cover'd and their Hands ti'd behind them: For all the Servants left about them were run away. Sr. Walter unbound them himself, and made them leap upon two good Horses brought thither for that purpose, gave them each a Sword in their Hands, and immediately without doing any harm, return'd the same way he came and enter'd Hennebond with all his Company; where he was received of the Countess with great joy.

All this while the Battle waxed hot near the Great Gate, till the Valets who fled from before Sr. Walter, brought word how the Prisoners were rescued. When Don Lewis heard this Report, he thought the Lord Charles had put a Trick upon him, and ask'd in great fury which way they were gone, that made the Rescue; they told him toward Hennebond. Then he left the Shirmish in great Displeasure, and with his Troops retreated to the Camp; at which time also Sr. Charles sounded a general Retreat: For he found himself cheated, and that there was no good to be done. As the Frenchmen retired, the Lord of Landerneau and the Governour of Guingand pursued after them so eagerly, that they were both taken Prisoners, and carried to the Lord Charles his Tent, where they were so beset with Threats and Promises, that they presently acknowledged him Duke of Bretagne, and rendred him their Homage and Fealty. Thus for the Recovery of two Friends the Countess lost two other, but however by this Action she gain'd such a Reputation from her Enemies, that they reckon'd her at that time Invincible.

XVII. For three days after this brisk Exploit, at a Council of War in the Lord Charles his Tent it was consider'd, "That Hennebond was not to be forced; that by "these Wars the Country had been so wasted and robbed by both Parties, that there

An. Dom. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

"was hardly any Forage or Provision to be got, that Winter also was near at hand; for "it was now [t] between the Feast of Remigius and All Saints: Wherefore they agreed "to raise their Siege for that time; only it was advis'd, that the Lord Charles should "take care to reinforce all his Fortresses which he had won, with Provision, Soldiers "and Captains; that so they might the next Year find their Affairs in no worse Posture "than now they left them: And for the better security of their Men in Winter Quar- "ters, it was order'd, that if any desired a Truce till Whitsuntide, it should not be "refused. This was the Result of what was agreed in this Council before Hennebond in the Moneth of October MCCCXLII.

[t] October.

Whereupon [u] they brake up the Siege, and except only such of the Lords as the Lord Charles of Blois retain'd with him to advise him in his Affairs, all the Captains with their Forces went to their several Homes, or the Quarters assigned them: The Army breaking up at the strong Town of Karhais, where some time after the Lord Charles of Blois remained.

[u] Froiss. c. 88. fol. 47.

Now during his Stay at Karhais, a certain rich Merchant, being a wealthy and powerfull Burgess of Jugon (a Town standing on the River Arguenon, about 7 Leagues from St. Brieu and 5 from Dinant) was taken up by the Marshall Sr. Robert Beaumanoir and brought to his Lord Sr. Charles. This Merchant by Commission from the Countess of Montford, had the chief Rule of the Town of Jugon, and was greatly also beloved and respected by the Inhabitants thereof. Him Sr. Charles put in fear of his Life, and pretended to be unwilling to accept of any Ransom whatsoever: So that what thrô Fear and other Arts us'd upon him, he began to listen to a Proposal of Betraying the Town. At last it was agreed, that as he who kept the Keys of the Town, he should on such a Night leave open such a certain Gate: For the Accomplishment whereof he left his Son in Hostage; and Sr. Charles on his Part promised to give him in Requital of that Service five hundred Pounds of yearly Revenue.

This Agreement was performed on the Alderman's Part; and on the Night appointed Sr. Charles enter'd the Town at such a Gate with considerable Forces: But the Watchman of the Castle perceiv'd them and gave the Alarm, crying out Treason, Treason. At this the Inhabitants began to run to their Arms; but seeing all lost they fled to the Castle for security by Heaps, and to set a good Face upon the Matter, the Alderman who was author of the Plot, fled along with them. In the morning Sr. Charles of Blois sent such a number of his Men to search and plunder the Houses, and he himself with the rest came before the Castle; and thô he saw and knew the great Strength thereof, yet considering how thronged it was now with new Comers, whereby their Provisions would be mightily wasted, he said aloud, "That he would not stir thence "till he had it at his Devotion. The mean while Sr. Gerard of Rochfort, who was Captain of the Castle, perceiving evidently, and upon strict Examination finding, that this Burgess the Governour of the Town had betrayed all, presently took him and hang'd him for an Example over the Walls; after which considering that his Provision would not serve above ten Days, and that the Lord Charles had made a vow not to depart till he had one way or other reduced the Place, he Capitulated to yield on Condition, that the Goods and Lives of all within should be saved, which was granted. The Lord Charles took them all to his Homage, and left the Castle to the Government of the same Captain, Sr. Gerard of Rochefort, whose Loyalty he approved even thô lately contrary to him: Thus both Town and Castle of Jugon were put in a good posture of Defence, only the Master was changed.

XVIII. But now by the Mediation of many sober Men on both Parties, a Truce was at last concluded between the Lord Charles of Blois and the Countess of Montford, and consented to by all their Aiders and Assisters, to endure to the Fifteenth of May then next ensuing: Whereupon (the King of England having before sent for the Countess of Montford) as soon as this Truce was ratified; She together with her young Son John, took the Sea and went for England, under the Conduct of the Earl of Northampton, about the Middle of December and arrived in safety at Plimouth, whence She was honourably convey'd to the King, who received her graciously, and for a long while after took Care of her Son here in England. For her sake King Edward renewed those publique Rejoycings, which were usual in his Days, with his accustomed Magnificence. All the Christmas Holydays there were daily Tournaments, Running at the Ring, Dancings, Balls, Splendid Collations and Princely Banquets; so that the Countess look'd upon the Court of England as another Paradise. And here for many Years her Son was exercised in those honourable Methods of Education, which fitted him for the Character he was afterwards to bear, and enabled him to purchase the Glorious Sirname of Valiant.

XIX. This

XIX. This Year the Renowned Earl of Salisbury is said to have Conquer'd the Isle of Man; in consideration whereof, and because [x] his Father was Married to one of the Sisters of Orry, King of Man (descended from Orry Son to the King of Denmark) he [y] was now by King Edward, his Gracious Master, Crowned King of the said Island: which was in like manner enjoy'd by his Son, till he sold it to the Lord Scroop in King Richard the Seconds days; thô it is certain, [z] that he bore the Title of Lord of the said Isle unto the Day of his Death.

On the [a] 25 of April this Year, Pope Benedict the XII died at Avignion, after he had sat 7 Years, 4 Moneths, and six Days. Clement the VI succeeded him, a Man of great Learning, but (as 'tis said) very Prodigal, especially of what was not his own: For he took up by way of Provision, as well throughout England, as elsewhere, most of the best Spiritual Preferments; which he [b] conferr'd on his Cardinals, and others; till he forced King Edward flatly to oppose this his Tyrannous Usurpation, as We shall see hereafter.

AN. DOM. 1342. An. Regni Angliæ XVI. Franciæ III.

[x] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 644.
[y] Id. ibid. p. 646.
[z] Id. ibid. p. 648.
[a] Labbe Chronol. Tech. ad hunc annum, & Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc an. §. 1.
[b] Vid. Walsingh. hist. p. 149.

CHAPTER the TWENTY FIRST.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward prepares on all hands against the next Campagne; but chiefly embraces the Countess of Montford's Interest; to whose Aid he commands the Lord Robert of Artois in all haste to address himself: But not finding the Scots sure, he resolves forthwith to bring them down. II. He enjoyns his Clergy by Proclamation to make Publique Prayers for the Success of his Arms. III. A Truce for two Years taken between the Englisn and Scots, to which the French King gives his Consent. IV. The Lord Robert of Artois, Admiral of the Englisn Fleet, Engages with Don Lewis of Spain, Charles of Blois his Admiral; but a Tempest parts them. V. The Lord Robert of Artois Landing in Bretagne, lays Siege to Vannes, and takes it by Stratagem. VI. The Englisn lay Siege to Rennes. VII. The Bloisian Lords come suddenly before Vannes, and retake it by Storm. VIII. The Lord Robert of Artois dies in England of his Wounds received at Vannes; King Edward vows to revenge his Death. IX. A Parliament; wherein Edward, the Kings Eldest Son is created Prince of Wales. X. The Commons in Parliament complain of the Popes Provisions, and Reservations of Benefices in England; whereupon by the Kings leave, the two Houses send an Address to the Pope, with the Event. XI. The Popes Letter to the King about the Premises. XII. Another of the Popes Letters to the same purpose directed to his Council. XIII. King Edwards notable Answer unto the Pope in behalf of the Liberties of the Church of England; with his Proceedings thereupon. XIV. The King goes in Person into Bretagne, and lays Siege to Vannes, with Charles of Blois's Preparations to resist him; and King Edwards march against him; whereupon he Besieges him in Nants: And at the same time takes in Dinant, Ploermel, Malestroit, and other Towns. XV. The Lord Clisson, and the Lord Henry du Leon taken by the Englisn before Vannes: Don Lewis of Spain distresses the Kings Navy; which being Succoured, for the more security is removed, part to Brest, and part to Hennebond. XVI. John Duke of Normandy comes into Bretagne with an Army against King Edward. XVII. The two Armies confront without offering Battle on either side; by the Mediation of the Pope, a Truce agreed on, and a time limited for a further Treaty; King Edward returns into England. XVIII. The Treaty fully Ratified; whereupon some Englisn Lords go to the Holy War. XIX. The Year concludes with the Death of King Robert of Sicily, of King Philip of Navarre, and others: The Foundation of Trinity-Hall, of Pembroke-Hall, and Gonvill and Caius College in Cambridge.

I. NOw while King Edward was keeping his Christmas with great Solemnity, and entertaining the Fair Countess of Montford, and the Lords of Bretagne, he [a] received sundry Letters of great Importance from several places. From Gascogne and Bayonne his Captains desired a supply of Men to secure the Frontiers: From Flanders Jacob van Arteveld sent him Letters, import-

[a] Froiss. c. 89.

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

ing, how He hop'd ſhortly to bring it about, that his Eldeſt Son, Edward Duke of Cornwall, ſhould marry the Daughter of the Earl of Flanders, (for him and his Son they intended to expell) and ſo ſhould be Lord and Duke of Flanders; with many other Politick Devices, which I paſs over, becauſe they never took effect. From Scotland at the ſame time, King Bailiol, who was Governour of Barwick for King Edward, the Lord Ros of Hamlake, and the Lord Henry Piercy of Northumberland, ſent alſo their Letters, ſignifying to the King, that the Scots did not hold the Peace over punctually; but that they made great Trainings, and Muſter'd many Souldiers; to what intent, as they knew not, his Majeſty might eaſily gueſs. Beſides all this, his ſeveral Captains in Ponthieu Xaintogne, Rochel, and Bourdelois, ſent him Word, how the French made vaſt Preparations for the enſuing Campaigne, and that therefore the Truce made at Arras, being well-nigh expired, it would become his Majeſties Wiſdom to look about him. And ſo He did, and anſwer'd all theſe Letters diſtinctly, promiſing to provide a timely Remedy for all their Doubts: But in eſpecial manner, notwithſtanding all theſe Avocations, he was [b] reſolv'd to embrace the Intereſts of the Counteſs of Montford, who was then at London with her Son in the Queens Company. Wherefore he commanded his Couſin the Lord Robert of Artois with ſuch a Number of Archers, and ſo many Men of Arms to undertake this Expedition. He alſo [c] ſent the Lord Thomas Holland, and Sr. John Darvel to Bayonne with 200 Men of Arms, and 400 Archers, to defend the Frontiers there. But as for the Scots, thô the King intended to War upon them in Perſon, till they themſelves required a Peace in the moſt ſubmiſſive manner, yet his Lords perſwaded him, rather at this time to ſend unto them in order to Treat for a Truce between the two Realms for two or three Years: For they ſaid, "how it was great Wiſdom in a Prince, that hath War in ſe-"veral places at One time, to make a Truce with One, to pacifie the Other by mild "Words, and on the Third to employ his Power, By theſe and the like Perſwaſions, he was content to ſend [d] Richard Bury Lord Biſhop of Durham, Ralph Lord Nevill of Raby, the Lord John Striveling, and others, to Treat about the Premiſes. But King David, either becauſe He thought this Offer was extorted by ſome great Neceſſity, or for that he was really ſo obliged to King Philip, return'd anſwer, that he neither could, nor would ſtrike up a Peace with England, without the Conſent of the King of France: That this was one of the Articles in the laſt Truce, and muſt be for ever, that nothing of Agreement could be laſting between England and Scotland, without the Allowance of the King of France. King Edward was ſo nettled at ſo brisk a Reply from a Prince, whom he had drove out of his Kingdom, that in great Indignation, he vow'd openly; "That now therefore he would for a while intend to no other bu-"ſineſs, but the War with Scotland only; till he had reduced that Kingdom to ſuch "Deſtruction, as ſhould be remembred, while the World endur'd. And immediately he gave out his Commands for all his Men of War to meet him at Barwick by Eaſter, except ſuch only, who were appointed for the Wars in Bretagne.

[b] Froiſ. c. 90. fol. 46.

[c] Froiſ. ibid. & Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 74.

[d] Dugd. 2. Vol. p. 143. a. & Froiſ. ibid.

II. Nor did this Heroick Prince truſt alone in the Arm of Fleſh; but truly conſidering, that God Almighty was the ſole Diſpoſer of the Succeſs of all Mans endeavours, he now iſſues forth his pious Commands to all the Clergy of England, that with one Voice they would inceſſantly ſtorm Heaven, and by their importunate Prayers extort a Bleſſing upon his Arms. Behold a Copy of his Letters, [e] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 147. n. 10. Speed p. 574. §. 68.

EDWARD [e] by the Grace of God, King of England, and France, and Lord of Ireland, to the Reverend his Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, &c. Greeting in the Lord.

"The King of Heaven is Terrible in his Judgements, and in Wiſdom inſcrutable: "Who juſtly correcteth the Sons, whom He loveth, and often ſhews unto his People "that offend, hard things, by humbling Sinners for their Iniquities; that ſo returning "unto him, they may ſeek his Holy Name with fear. We therefore, duly conſider-"ing, with what hazards of War and Adverſities, both We and the People under Us, "either for our ſins, or for theirs, or rather, both for ours and theirs, have been of a long "while, and ſtill are exceedingly moleſted, and very much damnifi'd, and exhauſted "thereby of our Treaſure; and further, weighing the Dangerous inconveniences, that "ſtill in all likelihood hang over the heads of Us, and of our People, unleſs Divine Pro-"vidence ſhall more graciouſly reſpect Us from on High: In the midſt of ſuch Diffi-"culties and Troubles, while We behold our own Weakneſs, in all our Actions We "have our recourſe to the Divine Omnipotence, truſting, that the Juſt Judge, the "True God, will kindly reſpect the Truth and Juſtice of our Cauſe, and will humble "our Adverſary. And ſo in confidence of his Heavenly Compaſſion, attempting an Ar-"duous Affair, We have ordained our Paſſage towards the parts of France with a ſtrong

"and

"and well-armed Power; and another Army We have order'd to be conducted toward "the parts of Scotland; that so, by the Grace of God, We may prevent the Dangers "threatned unto Us, and prepare unto our Liege Subjects, after those Storms of Trouble "they have suffer'd, the Halcyon-days of Peace and Quiet.

"Seeing therefore You are constituted of God, on the behalf of Men, to offer up "Gifts and Sacrifices for sin, attend, We pray You, to the foresaid Dangers, not of "Us only, but of our People, pouring forth to the most High, Prayers for our happy Suc- "cess, supplying the place of Moses; that by the lifting up of your Hands, We and "Our Armies may prevail against the Enemy: And that by the Multitude of Interces- "sors, an Augmentation of Grace may be afforded Us; do You cause thrô all our Ci- "ties, and Towns in your respective Dioceses, Prayers, and Processions to be made, "and other parts of Pious Attonement to be meekly performed; that the God of Mer- "cies would vouchsafe to extend the Hand of his Benediction over Us, and our Ar- "mies, and so direct our Actions according to his Good Pleasure, that they may "redound to his Praise, to our own Comfort, and to the Quiet and Advantage of "Our Liege-Subjects. Dated, &c. In the Year of Our Reign of England, the [f] 17, "and of France the 4.

AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

[f] Apud Walsingh. dat. Angl. 16. Fran. 3. hoc est sub fine præcedentis anni.

III. And having thus begun with Heaven, King Edward, as he had appointed with his Men of War, kept his [g] Easter at Barwick, and for three Weeks held a great Court there; for all the Chief Lords and Knights of the Land were then about him. But the Divine Goodness was yet willing to defer the further punishment of Scotland: For in the mean time there were found certain Pious Men, who labour'd so earnestly on both sides, that at last a Truce was agreed on to endure for two Years; to which also the French King, for the sake of the Common good of that harassed Kingdom, consented. Thus were these two Tempests of War for that time scattered, without breaking upon one another; saving, that during the time of the Treaty, some few skirmishes passed between the two Armies; and we find, [h] that in one of them, which happen'd at Barwick, the Lord Ralph Nevill of Raby was taken Prisoner, and carried to Dunbar, whence soon after he was redeemed. Only we must not omit, that before King Edwards Arrival at Barwick, the Scots willing to be beforehand with him, had laid Siege to the strong [i] Castle of Loughmaban, which King Edward had committed to the Custody of William Bohun Earl of Northampton, but he upon his late going into Bretagne, had left it to the Defence and Care of Sr. Walter Selby, a Valiant Knight. The King hearing of this Siege, sent thither presently the Earl of Darby, the Earls of [k] Glouceſter and Northampton (who both return'd out of Bretagne with the Countess) and the Earl of Warwick, and the Lord Robert Hufford Junior, Eldest Son to the Earl of Suffolk with a considerable Body to relieve the Castle. But the Valour of the aforesaid Sr. Walter Selby, with the Assistance of John Kirkeby, Bishop of Carlile, and Thomas Son and Heir to the Lord Anthony Lucy, had raised the Siege and beat away the Scots before they came. And soon after the King, as we shew'd, coming to Barwick with all his Forces, the foresaid Truce for two Years was taken.

[g] Froiſ. c. 90. fol. 46.

[h] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 294.

[i] Walsing. hist. p. 150.

[k] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 751.

IV. The mean [l] while the Lord Robert of Artois busied himself in Preparations for his Expedition into Bretagne: But however, he was not able to take the Sea, till about the beginning of May, in the middle of which Moneth the Truce taken between the Lord Charles of Blois, and the Countess of Montford was to expire. The Lord Charles was not ignorant of the Assistance, which the King of England had promised to send into Bretagne along with the Countess; and therefore against their coming, he had set forth under the Command of Don Lewis of Spain, and the Captains of Genoa, a Fleet of 32 Sail with a 1000 Men of Arms, and 3000 Genouese, besides others, who hover'd about the Isle of Garnsey to intercept the English. The Lord Robert of Artois was now upon the Sea with the Countess of Montford (who had left her young Son John for his better security in England) and these Persons of Quality, namely, William Montague, King of Man, and Earl of Salisbury, John Vere Earl of Oxford, Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, Lawrence Hastings Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Ralph Stafford, the Lord Hugh Spencer (Grandchild to the unfortunate Hugh le Despencer the Elder, who was Earl of Wincheſter, in the Days of King Edward the Second) the Lord Robert Bourchier, the Lord John Tibetot, or Tiptot, the Lord Roger Northwood, and others: All whom Don Lewis of Spain met with before the Isle of Garnsey. When first the English Mariners espi'd the Fleet of Don Lewis consisting of Spaniards, Genouese, French, and Bretons, they warn'd all the Lords and Captains of their Danger. They all commanded their Trumpets immediately to be sounded, and rear-reared up their Banners and Standards, with their ſeveral Arms and Devices, together with St. George's Banner, the Red Croſs of England; and ſo betook themſelves to their Arms in their appointed Order, the Archers being planted on the Decks; and then as the Wind ſerved, they went forward Couragiouſly.

[l] Froiſ. c. 90. & 91. f. 46. a & b.

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

The Engliſh conſiſted of 46 veſſels Great and Small, the Spaniards making but 32, as we ſaid before, but among the latter were nine Spaniſh Carricks high-built and greater than any one of the Engliſh, beſides three huge Galeons, wherein were the three Admirals, Don Lewis of Spain, the Lord Charles of Germaulx, and Sr. Otho de Rue. At the joyning of the two Fleets, there was a fierce Medly between the Croſsbows of Genoua and the Engliſh Archers: But when the Men of Arms began to board one another, then the Face of the Battle look'd terrible indeed. [m] The Counteſs of Montford her ſelf was that day inferiour to none of the Lords of either ſide, ſhe had the Heart of a Lion, and in her Hand a ſharp Sword, wherewith ſhe laid about her to the pleaſure of her Friends, the terrour of her Enemies, and the Wonder of all. The Spaniards and Genoueſe from their great Carricks caſt down bars of Iron, Timber and the like, which much offended the Engliſh Archers; but however they ſtood with their Arrows ready nook'd, to take off what ever Head appear'd. This Engagement muſt of neceſſity have been very bloody to either ſide, for it was carried on with much Fury and Bravery of both Parts; but the God of Battles order'd it otherwiſe: For the Fight having begun about Evenſong, a Night came upon them ſo dark and diſmal, that they were all forced as it were by Conſent to give over; for they could diſcern nothing to any purpoſe. Hereupon they withdrew from each other, and caſt Anchor at ſome diſtance, but ſtill kept to their Arms; for they thought to renew the Fight again early the next Morning. But about Midnight there aroſe ſuch a Storm, as ſeem'd to threaten a Mixture of Heaven and Earth together, and the Elements fought with as great animoſity as lately the two Fleets had joyn'd. At this horrible Tempeſt all their warlike Ardour was quaſh'd, and the boldeſt Heart among them wiſh'd for nothing more than Land: For the Ships daſhed ſo roughly together, they feared that they would ſplit in ten thouſand Pieces. The Lords of England enquired of the Mariners what courſe they had beſt to take in this Extremity, and they adviſ'd to make up to Land, becauſe their veſſels were not able to ride out ſo great a Tempeſt, and there was no danger that their ſmall Ships ſhould be ſtruck upon the Shoar; wherefore they drew up their Anchors and bare but a quarter Sail, and ſo at laſt without much loſs they came ſafe to Land. But the Spaniards and Genoueſe on the other ſide hal'd up their Anchors and took the main Sea; for their Ships were better able to ride out, but they could not hope to touch the Land without inevitable Ruine. Upon their Departure they met with four Engliſh Veſſels, which being laden with Proviſion, had been ſcatter'd from the Fleet; theſe they took and tow'd after them. But ſtill the Storm encreaſed ſo outragiouſly, that in leſs than a Day, they were driven more than an 100 Leagues from the Place where the Battle was fought. All that Night and the next Day till Noon the Storm laſted without ceaſing one jot, to their great danger and no little dammage; for they loſt two good Ships with the Men and all that was therein. The third Day about Prime the Sea was calm, and then upon enquiry of the Mariners Don Lewis was informed, how the next landing place was in the Kingdom of Navarre, and that they had been carried from Bretagne more than ſixcore Leagues. There then they caſt Anchor, and when the Tide came the Wind ſtood fair for Rochell: So they coaſted Bayonne, but would not come near it, becauſe the Engliſh were Lords there: In their way toward Rochell they met with 4 Ships of Bayonne coming from Flanders; theſe they boarded, took them preſently, ſlew all they found therein, and held on their courſe towards the Garonne and Rochel, in order to recover Bretagne. Thus ſtrangely was the Deciſion of this Engagement prevented by a Tempeſt, ſo that it could not be known which Side had the better: For they both were parted againſt their Wills.

[m] Froiſ. ibid.

V. The Engliſh when the Storm was over, landed in Bretagne near the City of Vannes, whereupon having unladed all their Horſe, Armour and Proviſion, they concluded to ſend away their Navy to Hennebond, and preſently to go and lay Siege to Vannes. The Captains, who were there for the Lord Charles of Blois, were the Lord Henry du Leon, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, the Lord of Tumine and the Lord Guy of Loheaire: Who upon the Approach of the Engliſh, like Men of Honour ſeriouſly appli'd themſelves to make good the Place; and at every Gate they ſet a Knight with ten Men of Arms and 20 Croſsbows, and for all the other Defences, both in the Town and Caſtle, they provided very carefully and wiſely.

The

The Lord Robert of Artois had at this Siege, beſide thoſe whom he had ſent to Hennebond with the Navy, a 1000 Men of Arms and 3000 Archers, not reckoning the Foot. He waſted all the Country about, and burnt and deſtroy'd as far as Dinant on the other ſide of Bretagne, and unto Gony en la Foreſt: So that none durſt abide in the plain Country. Every day there were ſeveral Aſſaults and Skirmiſhes at the Barriers of Vannes, but as yet no great matter was gained. AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

The mean while Don Lewis having recover'd of the Tempeſt, paſſed by Rochell and Poictou, and came up beyond the Mouth of the Loire and landed at Guerande in Bretagne, where he firſt heard that Vannes was beſieged by the Engliſh: Of which he preſently ſent word to the Lord Charles of Blois.

The Counteſs of Montford would not return with the Fleet to Hennebond; ſhe had rather in the open Fields adventure her ſelf in the Company of her Engliſh Friends before Vannes. But yet ſhe ſent word of all to the Lord Walter Manny, who was her chief Captain in Hennebond, and bad him act as ſhould ſeem beſt to his Wiſdom. Sr. Walter having had this account of Affairs from thoſe who return'd with the Fleet, deliver'd the Keeping of the Town to Sr. Willaim Cadudal and Sr. Gerard of Rochefort (who had now left his Command of Jugon, and return'd to the Service of his firſt Miſtreſs the Counteſs) and took with him the Lord of Triguier and an 100 Men of Arms and 200 Archers, whom he led to the Siege of Vannes. Upon his Arrival there was a great Aſſault made at three Places at once, during which time the Archers ſo well obſerv'd the Walls that the Defendants had much ado to make good their Stations. It was a fierce Aſſault indeed and laſted a whole Day, ſo at Nights approach it ceaſed, the Engliſh withdrawing to their Camp; as thoſe of the Town did to reſt; many of them being wounded and all extreamly wearied. Wherefore they unarmed themſelves, and only ſetting the uſual Guards upon Duty, intended to eaſe themſelves for that Night. On the contrary, the Engliſh kept on their Armour ſtill, except their Head-pieces, and ſo drank and refreſhed themſelves: All this was done by the Counſel of the Lord Robert of Artois, who order'd now again three Battalia's as before; two whereof were appointed to renew the Aſſault at the Gates, and the Third to keep aloof till they had continued the Aſſault for ſome time: And when in all likelihood it might be ſuppoſed, that the chief Strength of the Town ſhould be drawn to the Gates, then this Battalion in great privacy with Ladders, Ropes and Hooks of Iron ſhould ſcale the Town in the Weakeſt place. As it is [n] ſaid of Wolves, that going in great numbers to aſſail a flock of Sheep by Night; they ſet ſome one or two of their Company on the Wind-ſide of the Fold afar off, who by their Scent and Howling give a falſe Alarm, and ſo draw off the Dogs and Shepherds towards the purſuit of them: While the other ſecurely enter the Fold on another ſide and deſtroy the whole Flock. This being reſolv'd on, about Midnight the Lord Robert of Artois return'd with the firſt Battle, and gave a fierce Aſſault at one of the Gates; and the Earl of Salisbury with the ſecond Battle did the like at another. And becauſe it was dark, and to ſtrike the greater Terrour into the Beſieged, the Engliſh made many great Fires, the light whereof ſhone over all the City, ſo that they within thought their Houſes had been on fire, and crying Treaſon, roſe preſently out of their Beds and ran toward the Light without either Order or Command; and thoſe who were up flew ſtraight to their Arms and repaired to their Defences. While the whole Town was thus engaged at the two Gates, the Earl of Oxford and the Lord Walter Manny approached ſilently with the third Battalion to the Walls, where no Defence being made, without any Difficulty they mounted up with the Scaling-ladders and entred the Town. The Frenchmen and Bretons had no heed of them, they were ſo buſied in other Places, till they ſaw them in Martial Array in their very Streets. Then every Man fled away to ſave himſelf, the Captains not having time enough to gain the Caſtle, took their Horſes in a great Hurry, and with much ado getting out at a privy Poſtern eſcaped. Happy was he who made the ſame Advantage of that Poſtern: For all that ever were ſeen by the Engliſh were ſlain or taken; the Caſtle was immediately ſummon'd and yielded, the Town overrun and rob'd; and the Counteſs and the Lord Robert of Artois entred the City with great joy at their happy Succeſs.

[n] Leiceſter's Com. Wealth p. 160.

VI. Thus was the ſtrong City of Vannes taken by Stratagem; but the Triumph of the Conquerours was not of long Continuance: For when their Strength was divided, it was again recovered with no mean intereſt. Five Days [o] after this Victory, the Counteſs of Montford and the Lord Walter Manny with many other Knights of England and Bretagne returned to Hennebond: Soon after that the Earls of Salisbury, Pembroke, Oxford and Suffolk went from Vannes with a 1000 Men of Arms and 3000 Archers, [o] Froiſ. c. 93. f. 47.

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

Archers, and laid Siege to the City of Rennes, from whence the Lord Charles of Blois had been gone but four Days before; thô he had left the Place well furniſhed with Captains and Men of War; and had alſo refreſhed Don Lewis his Navy, and ſet him again to keep the Sea; ſo that this Year they did much Harm upon the Coaſts of England, and none could paſs without their Danger between Bretagne and England.

VII. This Winning of the City of Vannes amazed all the whole Country; for 'twas thought the Place being ſo ſtrong, and the Captains ſuch Choice Men both for Skill and Courage; that if they had been as True as they ſhould have been, the Town was ſo well provided of Men of War, and Artillery, that it might have held out much longer againſt any Forces whatſoever. Sr. Henry du Leon, and Sr. Oliver Cliſſon were infinitely troubled and aſham'd at theſe Reports; and their Enemies and Enviers made them yet more concerned; for they cry'd ſhame on them, and laid direct Treaſon to their Charge. Wherefore what thrô ſhame and indignation, and what thrô hope of Succeſs, they both privately reſolved to make one vigorous Effort; if by any means they might recover the Town, and thereby reeſtabliſh their tottering Credit. At laſt they got together ſuch a Number of Knights and Eſquires, Men of Arms, and others; that on an appointed Day, there met before the City of Vannes more than 12000 Men, the Chief whereof, beſide themſelves, was the Lord Robert Beaumanoir Marſhal of Bretagne, under the Lord Charles of Blois. When the Lord Robert of Artois ſaw, how of a ſudden he was cloſely beſieged on all ſides, he was not at all negligent to do what became his Wiſdom and Courage; but he was ſomething ſurpris'd to be taken at ſuch a time, when moſt of his beſt Friends were abſent with the Earl of Salisbury, who lay then before Rennes, but knew nothing of this matter, it had been carried on ſo privately. When the Beſiegers had made good their Approaches, and rightly fitted themſelves, they immediately fell on the Aſſault, which they maintain'd with incredible Fury and Reſolution: For they feared, leſt the Earl of Salisbury ſhould be informed of this their undertaking, before they had effected their Deſign. The Lords Henry du Leon, and Sr. Oliver Cliſſon gave the greateſt Encouragement, and ſet the beſt Example; ſo that never any Attack was carried on with more Ardour, nor obtain'd better Succeſs: For there were ſo many places to be Mann'd, and ſo few hands to perform, that at laſt they wan the Barriers, not long after the Gates, and ſo they entred the City by force; the Engliſh being now in their turn put to the chace, many hurt and taken, and more ſlain. The Lord Robert of Artois eſcaped very narrowly thrô a Poſtern, thô grievouſly wounded, and with him the Lord Stafford, who both got to the Counteſs to Hennebond. The Lord Hugh Spencer was taken by the Lord Henry du Leon, but ſo grievouſly wounded, as Froiſard ſays, that he died within three Days after. Thô this is a miſtake; for this Baron Spencer died not till [p] ſix Years after, as appears from the Records; only indeed a Brother of his, Sr. Edward Spencer, we find to have departed this Life about this time: But neither will I affirm, that he was the Man; for his Death is ſet a little more forward.

[p] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 395.

VIII. Thus [q] was the City of Vannes retaken and fortified, and repaired with all Expedition imaginable for fear of a Relapſe; ſo that within a ſhort ſpace, it was much better provided to endure a Siege, than ever before. The Lord Robert of Artois tarried a while at Hennebond, to ſeek remedy for his Wounds; but neither did the Air agree with him, nor the Phyſick: For he found but little good there. So he was adviſ'd to return into England, where he might get more skilfull Chirurgeons: But in his voyage the Sea and the Weather us'd him ſo unkindly, that his ſores feſter'd, inſomuch that being brought to London, he there died ſoon after. Surely thô his High Spirit, not being able to brook an injury from one, whom He had in a manner raiſed to a Crown, had urged him to open Enmity with his own Country, yet for his Valour, Conduct, and Loyalty to King Edward, he ought not to be deprived of his due Commendations; eſpecially ſince his fault againſt his Country may ſeem to have been expiated by his violent Death; but the Worth of the Man may appear to have been conſiderable, ſince his fall was bemoan'd as a Publique Loſs over all England, and King Edward himſelf being preſent at his Funeral in St. Pauls Cathedral, perform'd his Obſequies as ſolemnly as if he had been his own Coſin, Henry Plantagenet, the moſt Noble and Valiant Earl of Darby. Nor that only, but he made a vow, that he would ſeverely revenge his Death, "and to that purpoſe would go himſelf in "Perſon into Bretagne, and bring the Country into ſuch heavy deſolation, that it "ſhould not be recover'd of fourty Years. He that could reſolve to do ſo much for his ſake after Death, cannot but be ſuppoſed to have had an high eſteem for his Perſon, when living: Althô I do not find, that he had any Monument raiſed for him over

[q] Froiſ. c. 93. fol. 47. b.

over the place of his Burial. Perhaps King Edward thought, as the late Noble Montroſs wrote for his Martyr'd Prince, that it was more fitting "To ſing his Obſequies with Trumpets Sounds,

"And write his Epitaph in Blood and Wounds.

However the Kingdom of France did not gain much by his Fall; for her evil Genius ſoon after rais'd up another Native of her own, who prov'd as great a Firebrand of the War againſt Her.

AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

IX. But we muſt not omit a Memorable Parliament, which King Edward held this Year at his Palace of Weſtminſter; die Lunæ poſt Quindenam Paſchæ, that is, on * the 28 Day of April; during the Seſſions whereof, viz. on the 12 of May, being a Monday, King Edward created [r] his Eldeſt Son, Edward, who was now in the Thirteenth Year of his Age, Prince of Wales, inveſting him with a Coronet, a Gold Ring, and a ſilver Rod: And that he might be enabled to maintain a Port according to his Style and Dignity (beſides his former Titles and Profits annexed thereto) he added ſeveral other Lands, which are all particularly enumerated in a Writ directed to William Emelden, ordering him to deliver them unto this Prince, or his Attorney, together with this Dignity. Further, the King granted him all Debts and Arrears of Foreign Rents due to himſelf for what cauſe ſoever, in North and South-Wales, to the time of his being created Prince of Wales; as alſo all Victuals, Arms, Horſes, Oxen, Cows, and other things in and upon all the Caſtles and Lands which he held by the Kings Grant. At the ſame time the King Knighted ſeveral young Noblemen, particularly [r] John Beauchamp younger Brother to Thomas Earl of Warwick, to whom he then gave an allowance of twenty pounds per annum, toward his better ſupport in the Kings Service.

* E. Lit. Dom. Paſcha 13. April.

[r] Aſhmole's Garter p. 671. & Adam Murimouth & M. S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 226. ad hunc an. &c.

[r] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 231.

Now it was Enacted, [t] that the Statute made at Weſtminſter 15 of Edward 3. (which the King had ſoon after revoked, as we have ſhewn) ſhould accordingly be utterly Repealed, and loſe the Name of a Statute; as contrary to the Laws, and the Kings Prerogative. But foraſmuch as the Articles there made, were Reaſonable; it was Enacted, that ſuch Articles, and others agreed on in this Parliament, ſhould be made into a Statute by Advice of the [u] Juſtices.

[t] M.S. Rot. Parl. p. 50. §. 23. & Sr. Rob. Cotton. p. 38. §. 23.

[u] i. e. of the Kings Bench and Common Pleas.

X. In this Parliament it is Recorded, [x] That the Commons of England made great Complaint of the Proviſions, and Reſervations coming from the Court of Rome: Whereby the Pope took up beforehand the future vacancies of Eccleſiaſtical Dignities for Aliens, and ſuch as had nothing to do within this Realm. They remonſtrated to the King the Manifold Inconveniences enſuing thereby; as the Decay of Hoſpitality, the tranſporting of the Treaſure of the Realm to the Maintenance of the Kings Mortal Enemies; the Diſcovering of the Secrets of the Kingdom, and the utter diſcouragement, diſabling, and impoveriſhing of Scholars, Natives of the Land. Among other inſtances, they alſo ſhewed how the Pope had ſecretly granted unto two New Cardinals ſundry Livings within the Realm of England, and particularly to the Cardinal of Perigort above ten Thouſand Marks, Yearly Collections. Whereupon they humbly require the King and his Lords to find a Remedy for theſe Intolerable Encroachments; for that they neither could, nor would any longer bear thoſe heavy Oppreſſions; or elſe they deſired, that his Majeſty and the Lords would help them forceably to expel the Papal Power out of this Realm.

[x] 17. Ed. 3. n. 59. in Dorſo. Vid. M.S. Rot. Parl. p. 54. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgement p. 41. & Fox Acts & Mon. p. 388. &c.

The King in Conſideration of the Premiſes, willeth, that the Lords and Commons among themſelves, conſult of the moſt Decent and fitting way, promiſing his conſent to any reaſonable Remedy. Hereupon the King, Lords, and Commons, preſently ſent for an Act made at Carlile in the [y] 25 Year of Edward the Firſt, upon the like Complaint: Which utterly forbad to bring, or attempt to bring any thing into this Realm, which ſhould tend to the Diminution of the Kings Prerogative, or the Prejudice of his Lords and Commons. And ſo at this time the Famous Act of Proviſion was made, prohibiting the bringing in of any Bull, or the like Trinkets from the Court of Rome, or the uſing, allowing, or enjoying of any ſuch Bull, Proceſs, or any other Inſtrument obtained from thence, as there at large doth appear. This Act however, [z] as One obſerves, could not be agreed to by the Biſhops, and the reſt of the Clergy, but they rather ſeem'd reſolv'd to proteſt againſt it, till the King peremptorily commanded them to ſurceaſe ſuch Preſumption.

[y] So in M.S. Rot. Parl. & Sr Rob. Cotton: But Fox ſays the 34. and yet puts it to the Year of our Lord 1307. which was the 35. and laſt of Ed. 1. I rather believe it ſhould be 35. Ed. 1.

[z] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 921.

However the Lords Temporal only, and the Commons by themſelves, wrote a Letter to his Holineſs, the Purport whereof followeth, [a] from the Original French.

[a] Adam Murimouth & Fox Acts & Mon. p. 352. & Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 921.

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

"To the moſt Holy Father in God, the Lord Clement, by Divine Providence, of "the Holy Roman and Catholick Church the Chief Biſhop; his Humble and Devout "Children the Princes, Dukes, Earls, Barons, Knights, Citizens, Burgeſſes, and all the "Commonalty of the Realm of England, aſſembled in Parliament at Weſtminſter on "the 28 Day of April laſt paſt, Devout Kiſſings of his Holy Feet. MOST HOLY "FATHER, the Pious Diſcretion, Prudence and Equity which ſeem, and ought in- "deed to be in You (who are ſo Holy and ſo High a Prelate, Head of the Holy "Church, by whom the Catholick Church and People of God ſhould, as by the Sun- "beams be enlightned) do give us good Hope, that the juſt Petitions hereunder by "us declared, to the honour of Jeſus Chriſt, of his Holy Church and of your Holi- "neſs alſo, ſhall be of You gratiouſly conſider'd; and that all Errours and Injuſtice "ſhall be quite removed, inſtead whereof fruitfull Amendment and neceſſary Remedies "(thrô the Grace of the Holy Spirit, which You in ſo eminent a Degree have received) "may be by You gratiouſly ordained and applied.

"Wherefore (moſt Holy Father) after great Deliberation, We all with one Aſſent "come unto your Holineſs, ſhewing and declaring, that the moſt Noble Kings of Eng- "land, Progenitors to his Majeſty that now is, as alſo our Anceſtors and our Selves "too (according to the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt to them and to us given) every "one of his own Devotion have eſtabliſhed, founded and endowed within the Realm "of England Cathedrals and other Churches, Colleges, Abbeys, Priories, and divers "other Religious Houſes: And to the Prelates and Governours of the ſame have gi- "ven and granted Lands, Poſſeſſions, Patrimonies, Franchiſes, Advowſons and Patro- "nages of Dignities, Revenues, Offices, Churches, with many and divers other Ad- "vantages and Emoluments: Whereby the Service of God and the Faith of Chriſt "might be honoured and had in Reverence, Hoſpitals and Alms-houſes, with all other "Edifices, Churches and Colleges might be honeſtly kept and maintain'd, and Devout "Prayers in the ſame Places made for the Souls of the Founders; and the Poor alſo of "the ſeveral Pariſhes conveniently aided and nouriſhed: Of all which ſuch only were "to have the Cure, who were able to take Confeſſions, and were otherwiſe meet in "their own Mother Tongue of England effectually to teach and inform their Flock.

"And foraſmuch (moſt Holy Father) as You cannot well attain the knowledge of "divers ſuch Errours and Abuſes, as are crept in among us; nor yet be able to under- "ſtand the Conditions and Cuſtomes of Places, being your ſelf ſo far diſtant, unleſs "your Holineſs be of others duly informed and inſtructed: We therefore having full and "perfect Notice and Intelligence of all the Errours and Abuſes of the ſaid Places with- "in the ſaid Realm, have thought fit to ſignifie the ſame unto your Holineſs, namely, "That divers Reſervations, Proviſions, and Collations by your Apoſtolick Predeceſſors "of the Church of Rome, and by You alſo in Your time (moſt Holy Father) have been "granted (and now more largely than heretofore) unto divers Perſons, as well Stran- "gers and of other Nations, as unto ſome, who are our profeſſed Enemies, and who have "little or no Underſtanding at all of our Language, and of the Conditions and Cuſtoms "of thoſe, of whom they have the Government and Cure: Whereby a great number "of Souls are in peril, many of the Pariſhioners in Danger, the Service of God neg- "lected, the Alms and Devotion of all Men diminiſhed, the Hoſpitals brought to "Decay, the Churches with their Appurtenances ruin'd and dilapidated; Charity wax- "eth cold; the good and honeſt Natives of our own Country unadvanced; the Charge "and Cure of Souls unregarded, the pious Zeal of the People reſtrained, many Poor "Scholars of our own unpreferred, and the Treaſure of the Realm exported, againſt "the Mind and Intention of the Founders.

"All which Errours, Abuſes and Slanders (moſt Holy Father) We neither can nor "ought any longer to ſuffer or endure: Wherefore we moſt humbly require Your Ho- "lineſs, that the Slanders, Abuſes and Errours, which we have declared unto You may "of your great Prudence be throughly conſider'd; and that it may pleaſe You, that ſuch "Reſervations, Proviſions and Collations may be utterly repealed; that the ſame from "henceforth be no more uſed among us; and that ſuch Order and Remedy be forth- "with taken therein, that the ſaid Benefices, Edifices, Offices and Rights with their "Appurtenances, may by our Countrymen to the Honour of God be ſupplied, occu- "pied and governed. And that it may further pleaſe Your Holineſs, by your Letters "to ſignifie unto us without Delay, or further protracting of Time, what your Plea- "ſure is touching this our lawfull Requeſt and Demand; that we may diligently do "our Devoir herein for the Remedy, Correction and Amendment of thoſe Enormities "above ſpecified. In witneſs whereof unto theſe Letters Patents We have ſet to our "Hands

"Hands and Seals. Given in full Parliament at Weſtminſter the 18 Day of May, "Anno Domini 1343. Theſe Letters were diſpatch'd away [b] to the Pope by Sr. John Shoreditch Knight, a Man of great Gravity and deep Knowledge in the Law: Who coming to Avignion, and being conducted into the Pope's Privy Chamber, where his Holineſs then ſat among his Cardinals, humbly preſented theſe Letters from the Three Eſtates of England aſſembled together in Parliament. The Letters being once read, the Knight made Anſwer to what the Pope thought fit to object againſt them; and particularly he inſtanced in the Deanry of York, which his Holineſs had lately taken up for one of the Kings Enemies: Whereat the Pope with ſome Emotion reply'd, ---"Well, well, it is not unknown to Us who made and endited theſe Letters, and "We are ſenſible, how you are not the Author: But there is one, who endeavours "to pinch us narrowly, whom we ſhall find a way to bring down: For we underſtand "theſe Affairs well enough; and will not ſuffer them to be too nicely handled by o-"thers. He added, that there was a Knight of England, who accuſtomed himſelf to "ſpeak derogatory to the Church of Rome, wherewith he could not but be highly "offended; eſpecially ſince he ſaw his Honour invaded with Impunity. In concluſion he promiſed to anſwer the Letters of the Lords and Commons of England, in reference to the Contents thereof. Whereat the Cardinals roſe up and departed in great ſeeming Diſpleaſure, and the Knight having taken his leave, left the Court, and without longer tarrying went for Bourdeaux in Guienne about other of the Kings Buſineſs: Either becauſe he was ſo commanded, or leaſt otherwiſe on ſome Pretence or other he might have been detained there againſt his Will. The Pope nevertheleſs ſoon after ſent an Anſwer, directed to the King, in Behalf of thoſe Cardinals, for whom he had before made Proviſions, which now the King by vertue of his Prerogative Royal had deprived them of. The Tenour whereof followeth [c].

AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

[b] Holinſhead ibid. p. 922. Sandfords Geneal. Hiſt. p. 164. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 150. n. 20 & hypod. p. 116. Adam Murimouth. M.S.

XI. "CLEMENT the Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his moſt Dear Son "in Chriſt, the Lord Edward the Illuſtrious King of England, Greeting and Apoſtolical "Benediction. Lately after the Creation of new Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, "having before taken a provident and mature Deliberation, We judg'd it highly re-"quiſite, both for the Honour of God and of his Holy Church, and alſo for the pub-"lick Utility, that thoſe Cardinals, who partake with Us of our Labours and Bur-"thens in diſpatching thoſe great Affairs, which from all Parts, as to their proper Cha-"nel, flow into the Apoſtolick See, ſhould alſo have agreeably, wherewithall to ſupply "their Neceſſities, according to the Dignity of their State and Condition.

"Whereupon having conſider'd of the moſt proper and lawfull Ways and Means, "whereby the ſaid Proviſion might with leſs burthen to the Churches and their Clergy, "be made; We gave out of Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, then vacant in ſundry Realms of "Chriſtendom, and alſo of ſuch as ſhould from that time be vacant, unto each of the "ſaid new Cardinals for their Support, our Special Grants, unto ſuch a certain Summ, "and under certain Forms and Limitations, ſo diſtinguiſhed, as We judged might be pro-"portionable to the ſeveral Provinces.

"Now ſince unto two Cardinals born in the Dukedom of Aquitain, to wit, our be-"loved Sons, [d] Ademare of the Title of St. Anaſtaſia, and Gerard of the Title of "St. Sabina, Prieſts, We have made the like Grants of Benefices within your King-"dom and Territories (moſt Dear Son) contained in Form for them and other the "ſaid Cardinals, with great Deliberation ordained, and they for the obtaining the ſaid "Grants have ſent their Proctors and Eccleſiaſtick Meſſengers, being Perſons of Wiſ-"dom and Learning unto the Parts of your Kingdom of England; the ſaid Proctors "and Meſſengers when being enter'd the ſaid Kingdom, they began there to purſue "the Buſineſs of their ſaid Lords, were not only hinder'd in their ſaid Buſineſs by the Kings "Subjects and Officers, but alſo confined, and after that in very Diſgracefull manner "ejected the ſaid Kingdom, as We have too well underſtood by the too-unwelcome "Relations thereof.

[c] Antiquitates Britannicæ p. 237. n. 50. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 152. n. 10. Adam Murimouth &c.

[d] Victorellus de Vit. Pontif. p. 894, 895. concordat cum Hiſtoricis noſtris.

"Truly (moſt Beloved Son) if the Premiſes, which about the ſaid Proctors We "have premiſed, are founded upon real Truth, conſidering the ſincere Devotion which "You are known to bear towards the Lord, and toward the Holy Roman Church "your Mother, as the Kings of England, your Progenitors of Famous Memory in their "Days have born, We cannot eaſily believe that they proceeded from your Know-"ledge. But this is certain, that not only in your ſaid Kingdom and Territories, but "in a manner in all Kingdoms and Countries as well near as remote, whereever the "Catholick Faith flouriſhes, We have made the like Grant to other new Car-"dinals: Where notwithſtanding, except the ſaid Rebellious Denial, which if it be true,

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

"We mention with grief of Heart, We have hitherto heard of no manner of Refusal. "For We thought and still do think it sufficiently advantageous for your Royal Ho- "nour and Interest, that Cardinals (especially such, who are naturally affected to your "Royal Honour and Interest) should obtain Ecclesiastical Benefices in your Kingdom "and Territories: Because thereby they may be induced more freely and frequently to "promote your Princely Advantage.

"And we wish to God, that those, who are fed with the Crums of the said Roman "Church, and by her have been exalted to Honours and Preferments, were not too "probably suspected (not without a Note of most Detestable ingratitude, and to their "own peril) to have procured the foresaid impediments unto Her! Whereby they have "to the great hazard of their Souls rendred themselves liable to Excommunication, and "other Punishments and Sentences promulged against such Persons by the Canons: "Which respect the happy Encrease of the Health, Fame and Honour of your Maje- "sty, towards which if with Loyal Endeavours these Men had attended, they would "not, by doing the contrary, so eagerly hunt after their own filthy Lucre, under the pre- "tence of their Prince's Service.

"Finally We entreat your Royal Excellence, and most earnestly exhort You in the "Lord, that diligently within your Princely Breast considering the Premises, and what "else shall occurr to your Royal Wisdom, You would graciously order those things, "which were done against the said Proctors and Others, authorized by the said Cardi- "nal Ademare, who are reported to have been afterwards taken and confin'd, to be "decently amended and revoked; and that your Royal Majesty would cause the said "Proctors, being upheld by the Royal Favour, in the Prosecution of the said Affairs "in the same Kingdom, to rejoyce with full Security for the Reverence of God, and of "Us, and of the said See, not lending your Royal Ears to those things which may "bring any Offence to God, Dishonour to the said Church, or harm to your Imperial Ho- "nour, Safety and Dignity: That so you may render the Lord always propitious unto "You, and the foresaid See still more ready to serve your Occasions: We desire You "would again write unto Us, most Beloved Son, what your Royal Wisdom shall think "fit to ordain in these Matters. Dated at Villeneuve in the Diœcese of Avignion, "the v. of the Kalends of September, in the second Year of our Pontificate.

XII. This Letter to the King of England, was accompanied by another of the same Date, directed to his Council, which being no where extant, but in [e] Adam Murimouth, whose Authentick and Ancient MS. was kindly communicated unto me by the Learned and Reverend Linguist and Philologist, Dr. John Covel Dean of York, I also thought fit to set it down faithfully translated from the Original.

[e] Adam Murimouth ad An. Ed. 3. 17.

"CLEMENT the Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his Beloved Sons, the "Counsellours of his most Dear Son in Christ, Edward the Illustrious King of Eng- "land, Greeting and Apostolick Benediction: A Displeasing and most ungratefull Ru- "mour hath in these Days reported unto Us, how that when our Dear Sons Ademare, "of the Title of St. Anastasia, and Gerard of the Title of Sabina, Priests Cardinals, "did send their Proctors to the Parts of the Kingdom of England, in order to pursue "the Grants lately by Us granted unto them (as unto other new Cardinals in divers "parts of the World) of Ecclesiastical Benefices, being in the Parts of the said Kingdom "of England; the said Proctors, thô both Learned, and also Ecclesiastical Persons, "were not only hindred in the Pursuance of the said Affairs; but also by the procu- "rance of some, who have been fed with the Crums of the said Roman Church, and "by her have been exalted to Honours and Preferments, as it is probably supposed: "(whereby as well they as others, who procured or perpetrated the same, have to "their great Danger rendred themselves liable to Excommunication, and other Pu- "nishments and Sentences, promulged against such Persons by the Canons) have been "ignominiously taken, and then expelled the said Kingdom; certain other Proctors of "the foresaid Cardinal Ademare, being afterwards taken and detained Prisoners.

"But since We cannot by any means believe, that the Premises, which (if Truth "agrees with the Relation) would redound to the Offence of the Divine Majesty, the "Discredit of the Roman Church, and the exceeding Reproach of the said Cardinals, "could proceed from the Knowledge of our most Dear Son in Christ, Edward the Il- "lustrious King of England, considering his Devotion, which he beareth to God and "the Holy Roman Church, his Mother; as neither can We by any means imagine, "that He, to whom We write also about this Matter, would endure such things as are "contrary to his Honour, Safety, and Dignity: We therefore entreat Your Wisdom, "and in the Lord more earnestly exhort You; That You, whose Office is to direct

"the

"the Actions and Affairs of the said King by the way of Honesty, Righteousness, and "Justice, the Contrary whereof, if it should happen, which God forbid, would be im- "puted to You; do prudently, speedily, and discreetly take Care, that whatsoever "Matters in this part have undecently, and unjustly proceeded, be revoked and a- "mended: Knowing, that in divers other parts of Christendom, as well near, as re- "mote, wherein We have made the like Grants, to other New Cardinals, We have not "heard of any notable impediment given unto them, or unto their Proctors, which "therefore they have sent to those parts long since. Given at Villeneuve in the Diocese "of Avignon [f] V. Kal. Septemb. in the second Year of our Pontificate.

AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

[f] i. e. 28 Aug.

XIII. To these Letters of the Pope, the King immediately return'd this Famous Epistle in behalf of the Liberties of the Church of England, [g] "To the most Holy Fa- "ther in God, the Lord Clement, by Divine Providence of the Holy Roman Catho- "lick Church, the Chief Bishop: EDWARD by the Grace of God, King of France, and "of England, and Lord of Ireland, Devout Kissings of his Holy Feet. When We se- "riously consider the Goodness of the Apostolick See, which is wont to be most so- "licitous concerning the Encrease of Devotion in Christs Flock, and the Welfare of "their Souls, not seeking that which is its own, but rather those things which are "Christs, We have a very probable hope, that Your Wisdom, being now worthily "placed in the Watch-tower of the Apostolick Eminence, will graciously take Care "to reform those things, which detract from the Honour of the Church, and the De- "votion of the People; and threaten inevitable Danger to the Souls and Goods of Man- "kind. We nothing doubt; but that it is now publiquely known, how from the ve- "ry first rise of Christianity in our Kingdom of England, our Progenitors, the Kings of "England, and the Lords, and other Subjects of the said Realm, have for the augmen- "tation of Divine Worship, built Churches, enriched them with ample Possessions, "and endowed them with large Privileges, placing fit Ministers therein, who have (nor "without Success) Preached the Catholick Faith to the People in their Mother Tongues: "By whose Care and Diligence the Vineyard of the Lord of Sabaoth hath wonderfully "prospered both in Culture and Fruit. But now, which is to be lamented, the slips "of this very Vine are degenerated into a Wild-vine, and the Boar out of the Wood "doth waste it, and the [h] Wild-Beast of the Field doth devour it: While by the Im- "positions and Provisions of the Apostolick See (which now grow more insupportable "than ever) its own proper Goods, against the Pious intent and appointment of the "Donors, are held in the Hands of the Unworthy, and especially of Foreigners; and "its Dignities, and Chief Benefices are confer'd upon Strangers, who for the most part "are Persons, at least, suspected unto Us; and who neither reside on the said Benefi- "ces, nor know the Face, nor understand the voice of the Flock committed unto them; "but wholly neglecting the Cure of Souls, like Hirelings, only seek their own Profit "and Temporal Advantage: And so the Worship of Christ is empaired, the Cure of "Souls neglected, Hospitality withdrawn, the Rights of the Churches lost, the Hou- "ses of the Clergy dilapidated, the Devotion of the People extinguished, the Clergy "of the said Kingdom, who are Men of great Learning and Honest Conversation, and "are both able and willing effectually to perform the Work of Ministers, and would "also be very fit for our, and the Publique Service; forsake their Studies, because the "Hope of a Reasonable Preferment is thus taken away: Which things, We know, "can be no ways acceptable to the Divine Pleasure; but will most certainly prove a "Mighty Prejudice, and unspeakable Calamity both to Us, and Our Subjects, unless "We take more sound and speedy Care in this Matter. For the Right of Patronage, "which We and Our Subjects have in these Benefices, is thereby infringed: Our Court, "in which only Cases concerning the Right of Patronage to the said Benefices, ought "to be discussed, is deluded; and so the Rights of our very Crown are both shame- "fully, and to our great Detriment, invaded; the Treasure of our Kingdom exported "to Foreigners, not to say, to our Enemies, perhaps with this subtle Intent; that thus "the Priesthood of the Kingdom being depressed, and its Wealth exhausted, the "Realm it self may be rendred more weak against the Storms of Adversity: All "which Incommodities, together with others, which follow from the Premises, were "lately made manifest unto Us in our Parliament, by the Community of the said "Realm, together with their Unanimous and Earnest Petition subjoyned; that We "would speedily prevent the foresaid Mischiefs, which seem utterly insupportable to our "said Community.

[g] Adam Murimouth & Antiq. Brit. p.238. & Walsingh. hist. p.150. & 2 M.S. ex Vatican apud Odoric. Raynald. ad hunc annum §. 90.

[h] Ita Hebraicè: singularis fera Latinè, i.e. Quadriennis aper Ὑς μόνιος Græcè, sanglier Gallicé; singular, English: vid. Wase on Gratius p.69.

"We therefore by this their Representation plainly beholding the Depression of the "Church of England, and the Dishersion of our Crown, with all the foresaid Evils,

"which

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

"which if longer diſſembled, would probably very much encreaſe, do now refer them "unto You, who are the Succeſſour of the Prince of the Apoſtles, who received Com- "mand from Chriſt to Feed, and not to Sheer the Lords Sheep, and to confirm, and "not depreſs his Brethren; heartily requeſting, that duly weighing and conſidering "the Premiſes; how of Right, Magiſtrates are to be created from among the People, "and that according to the ſaying of the Prophet, They ſhall make Vinedreſſers of the "People from the ſame place: Which We read to have been the Practiſe of the bleſ- "ſed Apoſtles, when they ſet over the Converted Heathen, Perſons, who had know- "ledge of their tongues: And alſo remembring that Exuberance of Devotion, where- "with our Royal Family, and the Clergy, and People of our ſaid Kingdom, have hi- "therto continued in the Obedience of the ſaid See, wherefore Your Paternal Affe- "ction ought not to heap Burthens and Grievances upon them; but rather, as a Fa- "ther, who lays up for his Children, to alleviate the Weight of the ſaid Impoſitions "and Proviſions, and Burthens, which thus ariſe from the Apoſtolick See: Permit- "ting further, that Patrons may not loſe their Right of Patronage, and that the Ca- "thedral, and other Churches of the ſaid Kingdom, may have their free Elections, "and the Effects thereof: Which Churches our ſaid Progenitors have long ſince, up- "on each of their Vacations, freely of their Royal Prerogative, confer'd on fit Per- "ſons; and afterward, at the Requeſt and inſtance of the ſaid See, have under certain "Forms and Conditions granted, that the Elections ſhould be made in the ſaid Churches, "by the Chapters of the ſame; which Grant was alſo on due deliberation confirmed by the "Apoſtolick See.

"But yet now againſt the Form of the Conceſſion and Confirmation of the ſaid Chur- "ches, the ſaid See, by theſe her Reſervations and Proviſions, doth take away the ſaid "Elections, from the ſaid Chapters, and from Us alſo our Right and Prerogative, "which according to the Form of the ſaid Conceſſion, belong unto Us in this part: "wherefore by the Law of our ſaid Kingdom, ſince the Conditions of our Grant are not "obſerved, the Conceſſion it ſelf is revolved unto Us again, and the whole ſtate of the "Matter reverts to its Original.

"Upon the Premiſes therefore We pray, that your Goodneſs would vouchſafe to "the Honour of God, and the ſalvation of Souls, and alſo to take away the foreſaid "Scandals and Prejudices, to provide a ſpeedy and wholſome Remedy; that We and "our Subjects, who deſire, as We ought, to Revere your moſt Holy Perſon, and "the Holy Roman Church (theſe Intolerable Evils being once removed) may reſt in "the ſweetneſs of your Fatherly Love, and that our Devotion may flouriſh again, be- "ing refreſhed by the Clemency of your Pious Moderation extended unto Us: The "moſt High preſerve You in the Government of his Church many and happy Days. "Given at Weſtminſter the 26 of September, in the 4 Year of Our Reign of France, "and of England the 17. This Letter is ſaid to have been of ſuch force, [i] that neither the Pope, nor his Cardinals, could tell reaſonably how to anſwer it for that time; wherefore they were obliged to comply therewith. King Edward, notwith- ſtanding what Odoricus Rainaldus ſays, by Advice of his Parliament [k] proceeded to prohibit theſe Collations and Proviſions in his Realm on pain of Impriſonment and Death it ſelf: Wherefore the Pope ſeeing him proceed with ſo High an hand, thought fit ſomewhat to diſſemble the Matter, for fear of exaſperating too far; till at laſt by de- grees his Compliance gain'd, what by ſeverity could not be expected. However now We find that King Edward in the beginning of the next Year ſet forth his Royal Pro- hibition againſt the Popes Proviſors, bearing date 20 of January, in the Year of his Reign of England the 18, and of France the 5. But this being extant in Adam Mu- rimouth's Ancient M. S. We ſhall refer the Curious thither, having already (as We fear) dwelt too long on this Matter. And thus, as my Author ſays, had the King perſevered accordingly, he had utterly taken away all manner of Proviſions; but in ſuch a noiſe of War, as followed, he thought it ſafer now and then to yield ſomewhat to ſo * powerfull a Father; than to ſtand at open Defiance with him. And now to the Wars of Bretagne, wherein We ſhall find the King Perſonally Engaged about this time.

[i] Walſing. & Brit. Antiq. in titulo hujus Epiſtolæ.

[k] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 922.

* Lat. tam irrita bilem patrem.

XIV. King Edward according to the Vow he had made, to take a ſevere Revenge for the Death of his Dear Friend, the Lord Robert of Artois, was within little more then a Moneth after his Death, with a great Army ready to take the Sea at Sandwich. On the [l] Fourth of October He went on board in a Ship called the George, and landed at a Port not far from Vannes, at the very place where the Lord Robert of Artois had landed after his Fight at Sea with Don Lewis. The Kings Preparations [m] were ſo great, that that he was three Days in landing all his Warlike Proviſion, and ſo on the Fourth Day he marched ſtraight to Vannes, which he intended to Beſiege, having before ſent to view it, the Lord Walter Manny, who came to wait on him from the Counteſs then at Hennebond; the Lord John Striveling, and the Lord William Fitz-Warine le Frere, who upon their return encouraged him to attempt the Place. But they knew not, how the City was now in an Extraordinary manner provided with all things neceſſary, and many good Souldiers were there under the Command of the former Captains, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, and the Lord Henry du Leon, to whom were added the Lord of Lomine, and the Lord of Loeheair, with another Valiant Gentleman, who had now left his Miſtreſs the Counteſs for the Lord Charles of Blois, and his name was Sr. Geoffry de Maleſtroit.

[l] Aſhmole p. 653.

[m] Froiſ. c. 93.

AN. DOM. 1343. AN. REGNI Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

[n] Knighton p. 2582. n. 40.

King Edward having inveſted the Place, [o] gave them a very brave and vigorous Attack, which endured half a day; but yet little good was done thereby; the City was in ſuch good Caſe at this time. The Counteſs of Montford hearing that King Edward was come into Bretagne, and lay now before Vannes, went from Hennebond accompanied with the Lord Walter Manny (who lately was return'd unto her from the King) and divers other Knights and Eſquires, to ſee his Majeſty, and his Lords, and to diſcourſe about her Matters of Neceſſity and Weight, as well as to bid them welcome into her Country: In which viſit having ſpent four Days, ſhe then took her leave, and returned back to Hennebond with all her Company, excepting the Lord Walter Manny, and two or three Lords more, of England and Bretagne. And all this while, ever ſince a little after the firſt taking of Vannes by the Lord Robert of Artois, the Earls of Salisbury, Oxford, Pembroke, and Suffolk lay at Siege before Rennes.

[o] Froiſ. c. 94.

Wherefore the Lord Charles of Blois, when beſide thoſe great Forces that came from England before, he underſtood alſo, how King Edward was come now after them himſelf with another great Army, ſends word thereof unto his Uncle, Philip King of France; declaring, that he muſt be inevitably ruin'd, without a very ſpeedy, and very conſiderable ſupply: Whereupon King Philip commanded his Eldeſt Son, John Duke of Normandy to addreſs himſelf effectually to Succour his Kinſman.

The mean while King Edward finding the ſtrength of the City of Vannes, and being informed, that ſo great an Army as his, could not be ſupply'd in that place, by reaſon the Country round about was ſo greatly waſted and haraſſed, that it was difficult to get any Forage for Man or Beaſt; upon theſe accounts he reſolved to divide his Army: And firſt the Earl of Arundel, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord Stafford, the Lord of Triguier, and Sr. Gerard of Rochefort, with 600 Men of Arms, and 6000 Archers were to carry on the Siege before Vannes, and to ravage, and feed on the Country all about: He himſelf with the Reſidue of the Army reſolv'd to go unto Rennes, to ſee how the Siege went on there; and ſo he did, being highly welcomed by the Lords that lay before that place.

When King Edward had been before Rennes about five Days, he heard how Sr. Charles of Blois made great Preparations to raiſe a ſufficient Army at Nantes: Wherefore leaving thoſe whom he had found at Rennes (except the Earl of Oxford) to carry on the Siege there ſtill, he marched forth to Nantes, with a Reſolution to give Battle unto the Lord Charles, or to hold him Beſieged within the City. He could not here furniſh his Siege quite round, becauſe of the Extent of the place, and of the River of Loire, that ran beſides it: Wherefore he pitch'd his Tents on a little Mountain without the Town, and ſet his Men in Battle Array thereby, hoping ſo to provoke the Valorous young Lord Charles, to come forth and accept of a deciſive Battle. But having ſtood thus from Morning till High Noon, and found not the leaſt offer of a Sally from the Town, he ſent his Van-Currours to skirmiſh at the Barriers, and to ſet the Suburbs on fire; which being done accordingly, he withdrew his Men into their Entrenchments.

While thus King Edward lay before Nantes, the Earl of [p] Northampton Marſhal of his Hoſt rode forth every day, ravaging and fetching in Prey out of the Country round about, and taking of Caſtles, Towns, and Fortreſſes, as Pont de Launay, and others: Wherefore now the Lord Charles of Blois repeated his Letters every Day to the French King, laying open the great Neceſſity he ſtood in, and requeſting Succour with all ſpeed. The Duke of Normandy, having before received Orders from the King his Father; was at that time at the City of Angiers, near the Borders of Bretagne, where he made his Rendezvous, and was now again call'd upon by his Father to make all Expedition poſſible.

[p] Knighton p. 2582. n. 50.

King Edward this mean while had given many Aſſaults to the City of Nantes, but was

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

was not able to gain any great Advantage, nor could by any means oblige the Lord Charles of Blois to make a Sally: Wherefore being displeased, that he lay so long and lost so many Men to so little purpose; he again divides his Army, resolving himself to go before Dinant, leaving still 600 Men of Arms and 2000 Archers to maintain the Siege before Nantes, and to ravage the Country round about. With these he left the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Henry Piercy, the Lord William Ros of Hamlake, the Lord John Moubray, the Lord John Delaware, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord John Lisle and Others; to whom Froisard adds the Lord Henry Vicount Beaumont: But the [q] Elder Henry who bore this Title, had been now Dead above two Years before; and his Son and Heir John died also a little before this, leaving behind him his Son Henry the Younger, who was at that time but two Years of Age, and whom we shew'd to have been born in Flanders: So that this Mistake of that Ancient Historian is to be excus'd, as well as this short Digression of ours, which was made only to witness our Diligence, and not in the least design to expose an Author, from whom I have borrowed so much my self.

[q] Dugd. 2. Vol. p. 52. a & b.

These Lords being left before Nantes, King Edward himself [r] went and laid Siege to the strong Town of Dinant, between Rennes and St. Malo, upon the River of Rance; having in his way thither taken the strong Towns of [f] Ploermel and Malestroit: So that now at one time he held Siege before three strong Cities, as Vannes, Rennes and Nantes, besides one good Town called Dinant in Bretagne. The Captain of Dinant at that time was Sr. Pierce Portbeufe, a valiant and worthy Gentleman, who for a while maintained the Place maugre all the fierce Attacks of the English; so that he worthily gain'd the Reputation of a Noble Knight. But after four Days, King Edward having got together a competent number of Boats and Barges, filled them with Archers and Others, commanding them to row up to the Pales, wherewith the Town was enclosed toward the Water, only; having on that side no other Walls or Fortifications. This piece of Service the Archers performed so well, that none of the Inhabitants durst look over the Pales at their Defence, so that while the Archers shot thus, certain Men of Arms in the Boats, who were appointed for that purpose, hewed down the Pales with their Axes, and so enter'd on that part by Force. The Inhabitants upon this fled to the Market-place with those of the Garrison, but not with much Discretion: For thereupon those few, who enter'd by the Pales, marched up to the Chief Gate and set it open for the King to enter. Thus all was lost in a Trice, the Besieged put to the Sword, except their Captain Sr. Pierce Portbeufe, who was taken to Mercy, the Town utterly sack'd and plunder'd of all its Riches; for it was very considerable in Merchandise: Soon after which the King return'd to the Siege before Vannes, leaving the Town of Dinant waste and Desolate.

[r] Froiss. c. 94. f. 48. & c. 96. &c.

[f] Knighton p. 2582. n. 60.

[t] Froiss. c. 95.

XV. Now the mean [t] while, that King Edward was thus busied about Dinant and other Parts of Bretagne, his Captains, whom he had left before Vannes, gave many gallant Assaults to that City, and especially at the Barriers and the chief Gate. One Day in particular there was a very warm Attack made, and many proper Feats of Arms done on both Sides: So that at last the Besieged boldly set open their Gates and came to the Barriers, because they saw there the Banners of the Earl of Warwick, and of Arundel, of the Lord Stafford and the Lord Manny, whereupon they hop'd for some Advantage, seeing the chief Lords of the Host adventur'd themselves rashly, as they thought, being so far from the Camp. Wherefore the Lord Cliffon and Sr. Henry du Leon came forth couragiously to the Barriers, and there began a very notable Skirmish with the Enemies: In the end the English, hoping to allure them to come forth of their Barriers, or really unwilling to stand longer at such Disadvantage, retired back in much seeming Confusion. Then the fond Desire of Glory blinded the Eyes of the two valiant Lords of Bretagne, for having appointed six other Knights to keep the Gates, they open'd the Barriers and sallied forth upon the Lords of England, who retired back on purpose, now and then making a faint Offer of Resisting. But when they had train'd them far enough, they all together made a stop, faced about and gave so vigorous a Shock to their Pursuers; that seeing themselves deceived, they now began to take their turn of Retiring; but immediately they were charged home, and many of them hurt, slain and taken: Which when the Besieged observed, fearing to loose all, they closed the Barriers in so unlucky a time, that the Lord Cliffon and the Lord Henry du Leon were shut out, and so both taken Prisoners, [u] together with Alard du Leon, Brother to the Lord Henry, and 5 other Persons of Quality, and 30 Men of Arms, Knights and Esquires. On the other [x] side the Lord Ralph Stafford had pursued so far, that he at the same time was shut in among his Enemies between the Gate and [u] Knighton p. 2581. n. 30. & 40.

[x] Froiss. c. 95.

the

the Barriers, and so was taken Prisoner, with several of his Company, some few being slain. Upon this the Bretons retired into the City, and the English to their Camp: But there were no more Sallies after that. AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

It would be but superfluous to busie our Pen about what was done before Rennes or Nantes, since, as we shall shew by and by, those Sieges were both raised before they came to any Effect, by the Kings own Command, upon his expecting a General Battle with the Duke of Normandy. But we shall take occasion to mention one thing [y] concerning Don Lewis of Spain, Sr. Charles of Germaulx, and Sr. Otho de Rue, the three Admirals of Charles of Blois, who were at this time upon the Sea with 8 Galeons, 13 good Barks, and 30 other Ships of Genoua and Spain, and kept the Coasts between England and Bretagne, doing much harm to those who brought Provision to the Army before Vannes. Once among the rest they adventur'd on the Kings Navy, lying at Anchor in a little Port beside Vannes; at which time they slew many of those who kept the Ships, and had done much more Mischief, if a good Detachment from the Besiegers had not been sent thither in all haste to their Assistance: However by that time they came to the Port, Don Lewis had taken four Ships laden with Provision, and had sunk three other Vessels with all that was therein. Upon which loss King Edward was advised to send Part of his Navy to Brest, and the other Part to Hennebond; which was done, and the Sieges still continued before the Cities of Vannes, Nantes and Rennes.

[y] Froiss. c. 96.

XVI. And now 'tis time to look out and see what Succour the Duke of Normandy hath raised for his Cousin Charles of Blois. [z] He well enough knew, what the King of England had done in Bretagne, what Towns he had taken, and what he had besieged, and made all the haste he could to stop his Proceedings. So now at last all things being ready, he began his March from the City of Angiers, and took the High-way to Nantes, being conducted by the two Marshals of France, the Lord Charles Monmorency, and the Lord of St. Venant. His Army consisted of more than 3000 Men of Arms, Knights and Esquires, and above 30000 others; the chief Captains whereof were Charles of Valois Earl of Alenson, the Duke of Normandy his Uncle, Guy Castilion Earl of Blois, Father to the Lord Charles of Blois, his Cousin, the Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of Ponthieu, the Earl of Boulogne, the Earl of Vendosme, the Earl of Dampmartin, the Lord of Craon, the Lord of Coucy, the Lord of Suilly, the Lord of Fresnes, the Lord of Roye, and many other Lords, Knights and Esquires of Normandy, Auvergne, Berry, Limosin, Poictou, Xantogne and Anjou.

[z] Froiss. c. 97.

First of all Tidings came to the Earl of Oxford, and the rest of the English Captains, who lay before Nantes, that the Duke of Normandy was coming directly upon them with 40000 Men of War: Whereupon they presently dispatch'd away Word to the King their Master, who lay then before Vannes. King Edward having studied a little upon the Matter, presently told his Lords, that he thought it would be best to raise two of his Sieges, this before Vannes and the other before Rennes, and so go and joyn his other Forces lying before Nantes, and then to meet the Frenchmen. But his Council were of another Opinion, and made it appear in this manner: "Sir, your Majesty "is now in a good sure place, nor only so, but near to your Navy, the greater Part "whereof lies at Hennebond: Wherefore it seems better, that You command those "who lie before Nantes, to quit the Siege and come hither to You; and those who "lie at the Siege of Rennes may tarry still there, for they are not so far off, but they "can come hither at any time upon your Command: But surely the Commodity of "the Place, wherein you are now encamped, ought not easily to be quitted. This Counsel taking, the Siege was raised from before Nantes, and the English Lords came back to the King before Vannes: Within a day or two of their Departure, the Duke of Normandy [a] came with all his Host to Nantes, where he was extreamly welcom to the Lord Charles of Blois; and Himself with his Lords and chief Captains lodged in the City; but their Men were quartered about in the Country; for both the City and Suburbs were unable to hold them, and besides the Suburbs had been lately burnt by the English.

[a] Froiss. c. 98. fol. 49.

While the Duke of Normandy lay thus at Nantes, The Earl of Salisbury and the other Lords of England who were still before Rennes, made one Day above the rest a fierce and terrible Assault upon the City, which endured with all possible Animosity for all that Day; and yet, thô they had also divers Engines and Instruments to batter and shake the Walls, they gain'd no Advantage, but lost many Men in the Assault. Those that so well defended this Place were (besides the Bishop of Rennes) the Lord of Ancenis, the Lord of Pontrieux, Sr. John de Malestroit, Sr. Owen Charnells, and a young Breton named Bertram de Clequin, who afterwards became the most considerable Captain of his Days, and was in time Constable of France; of whose notable Exploits this Work will not be silent. Nor let any Man wonder, that these Cities of Vannes, Rennes and Nantes should hold out so stifly now against the Forces of King Edward, when as we shall find them all to have changed their Lord more than once within the space of two Years: For when Bretagne only fought against Bretagne, the People were divided, some enclining to one side and some to the other, and easily altering their Minds again: But now they look'd upon the English as a common Enemy, and beside the Lord Charles was better provided at this time than formerly. However the Earl of Salisbury continued his Siege before Rennes for all this, and daily wasted and ravaged the Country round about.

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

Now when the Duke of Normandy, who had well consider'd of the Business he had in hand, was certainly informed how Rennes was in little or no danger, but that Vannes was in much hazard of being lost, it was so mightily prest by the King of England, thither he resolv'd first to bend his Course, and either by Battle or otherwise to raise the Siege. The two Marshals of the Host, the Lord Charles of Monmorency and the Lord of St. Venant led the Van, the Duke himself was in the Main Body, and the Lord Geoffry Charny, with the Earl of Guisnes, brought up the Reer. In this Order they came before Vannes, and lay over against the King of England in a fair Meadow between the Rivers of Claye and Vilaine, and made a great and deep Ditch round about their Host: but the Marshals and Van-currours of each Army met often and skirmished together.

XVII. King Edward upon the news of their Approach had sent for the Earls of Salisbury and Pembroke to break up their Siege from before Rennes, and come strait to the Camp to him, which they did; for he expected to have Battle with the Frenchmen at this time without fail. His Forces, both English and Bretons, made up but about [b] 2500 Men of Arms, and 6000 Archers, and about 6000 Others on Foot, beside those who were left to keep the Navy, and Others in Garrisons, and with the Countess at Hennebond. But these few were all select Men under good Leaders, strongly entrench'd in their Camp: So that the French could not without Disadvantage to themselves oblige them to a Battle, thô they on the other hand were four times their Number at least, together with the Reinforcement of the Lord Charles of Blois from Nantes, and all well appointed for the War.

[b] Froiſ. c. 98.

Thus these two Armies lay fronting one another for several Days, without any Action further than some light Skirmishes: For the French, as was shew'd, could not force the English to a Battle, nor durst they attempt them in their Camp; and King Edward thought it not Wisdom to leave his Defences and attack the Enemy at such odds, to so great a Disadvantage as he knew the Aggressor must needs submit himself unto; especially since he must then leave so strong a City at his back to second the Enemy: Nor yet did he give any more Assaults to the Place, because of keeping his Men fresh and entire, against the time a Battle should be offer'd, which then he resolv'd to accept. Wherefore different Considerations deterring both Armies from Engaging, the Winter began to incommode them not a little; when it pleased God to incline the Heart of Pope Clement the VI. to labour earnestly for a Peace between them. He had now sent thither two Cardinals [c] Peter of Palestrina or Præneste, and Annibald of Tusculum, who rode daily between both Parties: But as yet neither of them would accept of any equal Conditions. For the French thought to keep the King there in manner of a Siege, till he should even be forced to come forth and give them Battle to his great Disadvantage; and the King expected, that at last they must adventure to force him, considering he was inferiour in Number, and more conveniently encamp'd for the Weather than they. Yet to say Truth, both Armies endur'd their Inconveniences; the French found much vexation with Wet and Cold, for it rain'd upon them Night and Day, whereby many of their Horses died, and at last they were obliged to dislodge and remove into the plain Fields; their Tents were so full of Water in the Meadow. And the English, thô they were more dry and warm, durst not go a Foraging, but in very considerable Bodies, for fear of the French who infested the Country; and Don Lewis of Spain so narrowly watched the Sea-coasts with his Fleet, that little Provision could be brought to the Kings Army but with great Danger. These difficulties prepared the Minds of both Princes, and rendred them more susceptible of the Cardinals Offers: Wherefore they were at last both brought to allow of a Peace for Bretagne, and because the Cardinals urged that Point also; to appoint a Time for a Treaty of a final Accommodation between England and France: But only here the [c] Rot. Parl. 17. Ed. 3. n. 8. vid. Clauſ. de eod. an. p. 1. 25. Dorſ. & Victorell. p. 892. & Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc an. §. 24.

King

King protested, that he would never allow the Pope any Power to determin of his Quarrel, but added, "That unless a Treaty might be had both honourable to Himself, "and profitable for his Allies, he would never consent to have the same brought before "the Pope, nor then neither, but only as before[d] an indifferent Friend and no Judge; "otherwise he would pursue his Quarrel. However at last these Holy Men labour'd so effectually, that they obtain'd a Truce between England and France, and their Allies to hold for three Years, during which time, the whole Controversie then depending should be weigh'd and impartially consider'd, and some equal Method of Peace devised by the Pope (* not as a Judge) but only as a Friend to the common Peace of Christendom.

AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

[d] M. S. p. 48. & §. 8 & Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 37. §. 8. & Ashmole p. 653. & * Gaguin l. 8. p. 139.

This Truce being sworn to by King Edward of England in his own Name, and by the Duke of Normandy, in the Name of the King of France his Father, a Time was appointed in January following to treat more fully thereof at Malestroit in Bretagne, where the Plenipotentiaries of either King were then to meet. And so for that time both Armies brake up, and King Edward having first made an Exchange between the Lord Ralph Stafford of England, and the Lord Oliver Clisson of Bretagne, went with his other Prisoner, the Lord Henry du Leon to Hennebond, where shortly after he took Shipping for England, with the said Lord Henry, and seven other Noble Bretons his Prisoners.

Upon his Return it is said, that for five Weeks together he was tossed about with Tempests upon the Sea, as we observ'd it to happen usually unto him; so that he expected no less than inevitable Death. Being at [e] last cast upon the Coasts of Spain, King Alphonso's Fleet, that lay cruising about those Parts, made up to him, but beholding the Banner Royal of England, they humbled themselves to Him and begg'd his Pardon: For however Don Lewis of Spain of his own head assisted Charles of Blois, there was Friendship between the two Crowns at that time. The [f] Dutchess of Bretagne with much ado got safe to Land in Devonshire, Sr. Peter Vele and his Son Henry Vele, and Sr. John Reyner were cast away, together with their Ships and all therein; the King himself after much difficulty landed at Weymouth, and came safe to London to the Queen soon after; where he set forth a Proclamation to give publick Notice of the [g] Truce late taken in Bretagne.

[e] Knighton p. 2583. n. 10. &c.

[f] Holinshead Engl. Chron. p. 920.

[g] Ashmole p. 653.

XVIII. In the mean time the [h] Commissioners on both Sides met in the Priory of St. Mary Magdalene in Malestroit, a Town of Bretagne, where by the Mediation of the Cardinals aforesaid, these Points following were fully ratifi'd, agreed, sign'd, seal'd and sworn to, viz.

[h] Walsing. hist. p. 147. n. 40. & Holinsh. Engl. Chron. p. 920.

1. "Imprimis, That certain Nobles of the Blood of both the Kings of England and "of France, with others, having full Power and Instructions to ordain, confirm and ratifie a Peace, shall be sent to the Court of Rome, there to treat about all and singular the Controversies and Dissentions, then impending between the said Kings, by the "Mediation of our Lord the Pope, and of the said Nobles of either Party: And the "Parties shall say and propose their Reasons before our Lord the Pope, but not as to "any final Determination of the Controversie, or Pronouncing of Sentence, but only "in order to make a firmer Treaty and Peace.

2. "Item, That the foresaid Nobles, who shall be sent to the Court of Rome, shall "be in the said Court before the Feast of St. John Baptist next ensuing, and that "the foresaid Negotiations with the Divine Assistance concurring, and the Popes earnest "Diligence, be fully dispatched and agreed on, with the Assent of the said Nobles, "before the Nativity of our Lord, that Term by no means being prolonged: Saving, "that if our Lord the Pope be hindred, or shall not be able to reform the Peace be-"tween the said Kings, however the Truce [lately taken and sworn before Vannes] "shall remain firm to the Term hereunder appointed, and be kept inviolably by all. "And to the end the foresaid Negotiation shall take fuller Effect, let the Truce be "granted unto the Feast of St. Michael next ensuing, and from the said Feast to the "full End of Three Years next to come after, between the foresaid Kings of England "and of France, and also the King of Scotland, the Earl of Hainalt, the Dukes of "Brabant and of Gueldre, the Marquess of Juliers, the Lord John of Hainalt, and the "Nation of Flanders, and all their Adherents, in all their Lands, from the time of "the Date of this present Truce, during all the Time aboveſaid.

3. "Item, that the King of Scotland, the Earl of Hainalt, and other Noblemen, "Allies of the said Kings, shall send their Envoys to the said Court, with full power "of Assenting and Confirming, according to the Treaty, to be had before our Lord "the Pope, in what belongs unto them, against the foresaid Feast of St. John Bap-

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

"tiſt; ſaving, that if any of the ſaid Noblemen, Allies of the ſaid Kings, ſhall neglect "to ſend their Envoys (as is Premiſed) to the Court of Rome, the ſaid Negotiation ſhall "by no means be deferred upon that account.

4. "Item, The foreſaid Truce ſhall be kept in Bretagn between the ſaid Kings, and their "Adherents, even thô both Parties claim a Right to that Dukedom: But that du-"ring the Truce, the City of Vannes ſhall be detained in the Hands of the Cardinals, "in the Name of our Lord the Pope; and the Truce ended, they may do what they "pleaſe with the ſaid City.

5. "Item, The Cardinals ſhall diligently do their parts toward the Abſolution of the "Flemings, by taking off the Interdiction, which they had (again) incurred, and ſhall "curiouſly ſtudy and labour, that a good and rational way be found out therefore. The "Earl of Flanders, as Lord without an Umpire, and as Umpire without a Superior, du-"ring the Truce, ſhall remain in Flanders, yet ſo, as that it be done with the Aſſent of "the People of Flanders.

6. "Item, If any in Gaſcoigne, or elſewhere, during the Truce, do raiſe War againſt "their Neighbours, or Enemies of either Party; the ſaid Kings ſhall by no means, either "by themſelves, or others, directly or indirectly intereſt themſelves; nor ſhall the Truce "be broken for this. But the ſaid Kings ſhall diligently apply their endeavours with-"out fraud, that the Subjects of the one Party, during the Truce, ſhall not any way "move War againſt the Subjects of the Other, either in Gaſcoigne or Bretagne; and "that the Subjects of the One, during the Truce, ſhall not be permitted to make "League, or Friendſhip with the other Party; and that during the Truce, nothing "be either given or promiſed for the raiſing or maintaining of War directly or in-"directly: But that this Truce be firmly kept of all, as well by Land, as by "Sea: And that in Gaſcoigne, and in Flanders, the Truce ſhall be Proclaimed "within fifteen Days after the Date hereof; and in England and Scotland, within "40 Days after.

7. "Item, That all Priſoners of either part, who have been taken from between "the Sunday before the Feaſt of St. Vincent laſt paſt, unto this preſent Day, ſhall "be Releaſed, their Goods taken, reſtored, and themſelves as Reaſon requires, ſet free.

8. "Item, That no Damages or Invaſions, during the Truce, ſhall be made between "the Parties, in prejudice or deſpight of the Truce.

9. "Item, That the ſaid Kings and their Allies, during the Truce, ſhall remain in the "ſame Poſſeſſion and Seiſin, as they have at this Day, in all thoſe Goods, Lands, and "Poſſeſſions which they hold, or have any way acquired.

10. "Item, That they ſhall go from one Country to another, as well Merchants "with their Merchandiſe, as any other Subjects, either by Land, or by Water, only "paying their uſual Cuſtoms, freely and ſecurely, as they were wont to go and come "in the time of the Predeceſſors of the ſaid Kings: Except ſuch as are baniſhed the ſaid "Realms for other cauſes, than for the Wars of the ſaid Kings. But the Barons of Gaſcoign, "and others baniſhed out of the ſaid Dukedom, are contained in the ſaid Truce, and may "come and go, during the Truce ſo often remembred: Only the Baniſhed and Fugitives "of the Country of Flanders, who have been on the part of the King of France, ſhall not, "during the Truce, return into Flanders.

11. "Item, The ſaid Truce ſhall contain and compriſe Spain, Catalaunia, Ge-"noua, Provence, the Biſhop and Chapter of Cambray, the Caſtles of Cambreſis, the "Lord of Albret, the Vicount of Fronſac, the Lord of Tricouleon, the Lord John de "Vernon, and the Lord of Roye.

12. To all which Articles and Agreements, the Lord Otho Duke of Burgundy, the Lord Peter Duke of Bourbon, with the Earls of Boulogne, Auxerre, Sancerre, Foigny, and Porcien, the Lords Milo de Nogheres, and Ingelram de Coucy, upon the Soul of the Lord Philip King of France, and the Lord Henry de Lancaſter Earl of Darby, the Lord William Bohun Earl of Northampton, the Lord William Montagu Earl of Saliſbury, Ralph Lord Stafford, Bartholomew Lord Burwaſh, Nicolas Lord Cantilupe, Reginald Lord Cobham, Walter Lord Manny, Maurice Lord Barkley, and Doctor John Hufford Archdeacon of Ely, on the Soul of the Lord Edward King of England (according to a Commiſſion by the ſaid Kings to them made) have taken their Corporal Oath, by laying their Hands upon the Holy Goſpel. Given in the Priory of St. Mary Magdalene, in Maleſtroit, of the Order of St. Benedict, in the Diœceſe of Nantes, 19 January, 1343.

Thus the Articles of the Truce being ſolemnly confirmed by the Oaths of the Lords abovemention'd, the Cardinals cauſed a Charter thereof to be drawn up in the form aforeaforesaid, to which all the said Persons set to their Hands and Seals, on the Day and Year above written, in the presence of the Cardinals themselves, and many great Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen of either Nation. And thus We end the Transactions of this Year, relating to the Wars of Bretagne, and shall therewith conclude this Chapter also, when We have after our usual Custom added two or three Occurrences, which could not be properly ranged in any other place, or method. AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

This Truce thus taken [i] many great Lords and valiant Knights of England, France, and Bretagne took their journey with all haste into Spain, to help King Alphonso against the Saracens of Granada; among whom are reckon'd the Noble Lord [k] Henry Earl of Darby, William Earl of Salisbury, Sr. Maurice Son to the Lord Thomas Berkley, with a goodly Band of young Gentlemen Voluntiers: They found King Alphonso at the Siege of Algezira, before which he had now layn a long time; and here among others, the Earl of Darby and his English Troops, who had fought twice with the Pagans (who came to relieve the place) to their great Honour, behav'd themselves so well, together with the other Christian Worthies; that now at length after a Siege of three Years, the City was yielded up to the King of Spain; and Jutzeph King of Granada who had held the place against him, became [l] thenceforth his Vassal, and paid him a Yearly Tribute of 12000 Florens. The Pope [l] hearing of the taking of this City, made it an Episcopal Seat, and subjected the Bishop thereof, as a Suffragan to the Metropolitan Church of Hispalis, or Sevil.

But the two English Earls went not only this time in Quality of Champions of Christ, but also of [m] Ambassadors from the King, their Master, to treat with Alphonso King of Castille, for the composing of certain differences betwixt the Subjects of that King, and the Subjects of King Edward; especially Mariners and Citizens of Bayonne. All which Matters both of War and Peace, being happily by them performed, they shortly after return'd home with great Glory.

On the [n] 28, or as others say, on the * 20 of January, this Year 1343, that most Noble and Learned Prince Robert, King of Sicily, Naples, and Jerusalem, departed this Life, after he had Reigned 33 Years, 4 Moneths, and 24 Days. He was, as Mazzella, Collenutius, and other Neopolitan Writers testifie, a Wise and Learned King, and much Renowned for his Skill in Astrology, as We have more then once intimated. He made Honourable Wars with Henry the VII, Emperour of Germany, and Father to John of Luxemburgh King of Bohemia; also with Frederick King of Sicily; and lastly in Tuscany, in behalf of the Florentines, where in the Famous overthrow of Montacatino (in a Battle fought between the Guelphs and the Gibellines) he lost Philip Prince of Tarentum, and Peter Earl of Gravina his Brothers. He sent his Son Charles, sirnamed Sans-Terre, against Frederick King of Sicily; and went himself against Castruccio Castricani, the Head of the Gibellines, at what time the Dominion of Florence was given unto Charles Sans-Terre. He was a Religious Prince, and a Lover of Learned Men, as who could best judge of them; whereof We shall produce but two instances; the One, That Marvellous stately Church, and other things, which he builded in Naples; and the Second, may be the Great Familiarity which he constantly held with those bright Lights of Tuscany, Petrarch, and Boccace. Our Stories do mention a Son of his slain at Southampton, when that Town was fired by the French; but I find no other Son, that he had except Charles Sans-Terre, whom being Famous for his Prowess and Valour, I dare not avouch to have died then. However he left his Kingdom to Joan, the sole Daughter of his Son Charles aforesaid, who [o] being enslaved with the Love of her own Cousin Lewis Prince of Tarentum, and not satisfied with the cold embraces of her Husband Andrew, Son to the King of Hungary, caused him to be hanged in a silken Sash out of her Chamber Window. But his Father Charles Humbert in Revenge hereof did so much interrupt her unlawfull Pleasures; that ever after she lived in no less disquiet, than Disgrace; till at last she also was caused to be hanged by Charles of Durazzo, who succeeeded her in the Kingdom: As may be seen at large in the Histories of Italy and Naples.

On the 16 of September this same Year, [p] Philip King of Navarre Deceased, whose Son Charles, by the French sirnamed the Wicked, succeeded to the Crown, being then under Age, and in the Tuition of his Mother, Queen Joan of France. He was a Prince of extraordinary parts of Mind and of Body, of exquisite Beauty, Courage, and Address; but his Inconstant Nature, his unseasonable Ambition, and his inveterate Envy to the House of France, to which he was so nearly ally'd, rendred him low and vile in the Eyes of all Men.

Walsingham [q] reports a strange and almost (but that it is attested with such Circumstances)

[i] Hocsemius in Alphonso c.28.
[k] Knighton p. 2583. n.20. & Hocsem. ibid. ubi pro Darby legit Arbidi & pro Salisbury, Soluz beri, satis imperitè.
[l] Walsing. hist. p.154. n.20. & Odoric. Rainald. ad an. 1344. §.51. ad §.53.
[m] Rot. Fran. 17. Ed.3.m.12.ex Dudg. 1 Vol. p.784.
[n] Mezeray p. 21.
* Scipio Mazzella's Hist. of Naples. p. 157.
[o] Giovanni Villani l.12. c. 50. & 51.
[p] Mezeray p. 21.
[q] Hist. p. 153. n.30. &c.

An. Dom. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

stances) incredible Story of an Accident that happen'd about this time in the North-parts of England, to a certain Young Man of the Lord [r] William Baron of Greyſtokes Family. As this Young Man (ſays my Author) was riding thrô Corn-fields, and beheld the Corn waving like the Sea (growing thereby perhaps giddy) he thought, he ſaw a certain Ruddy-complexion'd little Pygmy-fellow to raiſe his Head by degrees above the Corn, till the more he conſider'd him, ſtill the more he ſeem'd to encreaſe in Stature; who coming towards the Young Man took hold of his Bridle, and whether he would, or no, led him into the corn, to a place, where it ſeem'd to him, there ſat a moſt Beautifull Lady among many young Damſels, like her ſelf. This Lady commanded him preſently to be taken from off his Horſe, and to be torn and mangled over all his Body, and after all to be flead. Whereupon ſhe her ſelf, as he thought, having diſſected his Scull in the middle, took out his Brains, and then clos'd up the empty Scull again. This done, ſhe order'd him to be ſet again upon his Horſe, and ſo let him go: Immediately upon which, being wholly void and deſtitute of underſtanding, he began to fall mad, and to make furious geſtures, as it appeared, when he came to the next Town. Hereupon a certain young Damſel, who alſo belonged to his Lords Family, and had loved him moſt tenderly, came to him with ſome Aſſiſtants, and took care of him, and leſt he ſhould do any Miſchief to himſelf, or thoſe who tended him, cauſed him to be lock'd in Fetters. This Maid carried him to many Holy places beyond Sea, for the recovery of his Wits; but having found no Remedy there, ſhe at laſt returned with him into England, and ſtill he complain'd of being haunted by the little Red fellow, who at firſt appeared unto him: At whoſe preſence, thô bound with three or four Chains, he would always break them. Having remain'd in this condition for ſix Years, he was then at the Shrine of St. John of Beverley in Yorkſhire, made whole again in this manner. Being fallen into a gentle ſlumber, it ſeem'd to him, that another moſt Beautifull Lady did again open his Scull and reſtore his Brains, (which had been taken away by the former Lady) to their right place. Accordingly upon his waking, being perfectly recover'd of his ſenſes, he Married the foreſaid Damſel, who had ſo lovingly taken Care of him in his Madneſs; of whom in time he begat 15 Sons. After which his Wife dying, he went into Holy Orders, and was made Prieſt, and promoted to the Church of Thorp-Baſſet in Yorkſhire. But while one day he was celebrating Maſs with Great Devotion, and as the Cuſtom was, elevated the Hoſt for the People to behold; the foreſaid Red Fellow appear'd unto him again, ſaying, "From "henceforth let him whom You hold in your Hand be your Keeper: For he knows better "how to keep you than I do.

[r] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 741.

As I give no credit, ſo neither do I deſire to gain any, to this Story; But I muſt needs Remark, that with a ſtrong Conſonancy thereto, Arioſto the Italian Poet, acccording to the Tradition of the Church, hath made St. John the Preſident, and Healer of Madmen. And [t] Mezeray tells us of a certain Plague of Frenzy, which was called St. John's Dance.

[t] Ad an. 1373.

This Year died [u] Dr. Anthony Beck Biſhop of Norwich, being, as was ſuppoſed, poiſon'd by his own ſervants, for his boiſterous and turbulent Humour; for his ſeverity to the Monks of his Church, and for his Appealing to the Court of Rome in oppoſition to John Stratford Archbiſhop of Canterbury: Who by a ſtrange miſtake in Godwin [x] is called Robert Winchelſey; when he himſelf in the Title of Canterbury acknowledges John Stratford Archbiſhop of that See, and no where mentions the other after the ſixth Year of Edward the Second. In his ſtead William Bateman [x] Doctor of the Civil Law, and a Cambridge Man of Corpus Chriſti College, Born at Norwich, and Archdeacon of the ſame Church, was now elected Biſhop by the general Conſent of the whole Convent. He is acknowledged the Founder of Trinity-Hall in Cambridge, and to have given certain Lands to the Maintenance thereof: Which College is now Worthily Governed by the Worſhipfull Sr. Thomas Exton Knight, Doctor of the Laws; a Man in our Days Renowned for his Loyalty, Wiſdom, and Generoſity. He alſo Founded the Hall of the Annunciation of our Lady, and gave one of the Univerſity Cheſts. Nor content to have done good himſelf, he perſwaded one Gonwell, or Gonvill, to Found another Hall in the ſame Univerſity, which many Years after, being much enlarged at the Coſt and Charges of a Learned Phyſician, named John Key, or Caius, is now called Gonvill and Caius's College, in Reſpect of both the Founders: And the Maſter hereof at this time is the Learned and Worſhipfull Robert Brady Dr. in Phyſick, and a ſtout Aſſerter of the Rights of Engliſh Monarchy in the worſt of times: Wherefore, together with the forementiond'd Sr. Thomas Exton, our Loyal Univerſity hath more than once choſe him for her Burgeſs in Parliament.

[u] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 154. n. 10.

[x] Catal. Bps p. 425.

[x] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 426.

This

This Year also the Lady Mary de Valence, Daughter of Guy de Chastillon, Earl of St. Paul, Kinswoman to King Edward, and Third Wife of Emery de Valence Earl of Pembroke, being [y] desirous to advance Learning, Founded a College in Cambridge, called by her Title, Pembroke-Hall, Endowing it with Large Possessions: From which Princely Seminary many notable Lights of Learning and Piety have continually been brought forth; and many more are daily expected; it being at present under the Care and Custody of the Reverend Nathaniel Coga, Doctor in Divinity, a Person of great Loyalty, Judgement, and Candour.

AN. DOM. 1343. An. Regni Angliæ XVII. Franciæ IV.

[y] Mill's Catal. of Nobility p. 1096

CHAPTER the TWENTY SECOND.

The CONTENTS.

I. Upon the Popes pressing the two Kings to hasten the Treaty of Peace, they send their several Agents to Avignon: Some Heads of their several Pleas; but nothing done. II. King Edwards Resolute Answer to a Nip of the Popes: The Pope writing about the Matter of Provisions gains ground. III. King Edward begins his Round-Table at Windsor, with the Description, Antiquity, and Gradual Encrease of that Castle. King Philip in Emulation hereof, sets up also a Round-Table at Paris. IV. The Round-Table of Windsor being the Seminary of the Order of the Garter (which was Instituted Five Years after) the said Order is here enquired into, its Original, as vulgarly given, exploded, and One far more Ancient and Mystical, Asserted. V. The time of this First Round-Table of King Edwards, with the Manner of its Solemnity: The Death of William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, occasion'd thereby, with an account of his Worth, Pedigree, and Issue. VI. King Edwards Buildings at Windsor, and his Institution of the most Noble Order of the Garter, with the Names of the First XXVI Founders. VII. A short View of the Honour of this most Noble Order, and how many Foreign Princes, &c. have been thereof. VIII. Word brought to King Edward, how King Philip of France had put to Death several Lords of Bretagne, his Friends. IX. King Philips cruelty to the Messengers of this News; and King Edwards Raillery on his Tax upon Salt. X. King Edward sends a Defiance to King Philip. XI. But is Alarum'd from all Parts to look to himself: The Pope makes Don Lewis of Spain, Prince of the Fortunate Isles. XII. King Edward sends Forces into Gascogne, Bretagne, and to the Frontiers of Scotland. XIII. And sends a Remonstrance to the Pope, with the Popes Endeavours to pacifie him, and the Sum of a Parliament at Westminster. XIV. The Earl of Darby Lands in Gascogne: His Actions. XV. His Triumphant Return to Bourdeaux. He takes King Philips Lieutenant before Auberoche. XVI. Queen Philippa of England deliver'd of a Daughter: John Earl of Montford acquitted his Prison: Oliver Lord Ingham, Seneschal of Bourdeaux dies: His Issue.

I. NOW it is to be remembred, that whereas in the Articles of the Truce, it was agreed; that each Party should send their Commissioners to the Court of Rome, in order to hold a Treaty of Peace, before the Feast of St. John Baptist or the 24 of June following; King Edward upon more mature Deliberation and Advice wrote unto the Pope, [a] desiring the Term to be prolonged unto the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, or the 8 of September: That in the mean while the Earl of Montford, who in the beginning of the Wars of Bretagne had been taken Prisoner at Nantes might be restored to his Liberty; and that King David of Scotland might be admonished to keep the Truce Religiously. But whatever King Edwards Meaning hereby was, the Pope being jealous that he had his thoughts upon War, [b] wrote earnestly unto him in the beginning of this Year, taking occasion from the late Winning of Smyrna from the Turks by the Christians, to exhort him to turn his victorious Arms against the Enemies of Christendom, where he should find such matter for his Sword, as would crown his Name with Immortal Honour: And that he would seriously resolve on Peace with France, in order to distress the Pagans. Dat. Avin. Kal. Februarii, An°. Pontificatûs nostri III. To the same purpose also he wrote to

AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[a] Odoric. Raynald. ad an. 1343. §. 24.

[b] Tom. 3. Secr. Epist. 718. extat etiam in M.S. Arch. Vat. de rebus transmarin. p. 63. & Odoric. Raynald. ad an. 1344. §. 4.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

to the French King; who according to the First Agreement made in the late Truce, ſent his Ambaſſadors to the Court of Rome at Avignion, where they were punctually met by King Edwards Commiſſioners; [c] who were Hugh le Deſpenſer or Spencer, Lord of Glamorgan, Ralph Lord Stafford, William de Norwich Dean of Lincoln, Sr. William Truſſel, and Andrew Hufford a Civilian. Their Commiſſion bearing Date 20 Maii, gave them Authority to treat in Preſence of the Pope, not as a Judge, but private Perſon and Friend to both Parties, with the Agents of his Couſin the Lord Philip de Valois, upon the King's Right to the Crown of France; as alſo upon whatſoever Dominions, Dignities, Honours, Lands, Poſſeſſions, Places and Rights appertained to Him, concerning which any Controverſie had riſen between them, or was like to ariſe. And [d] on the 19 of Auguſt following another Commiſſion iſſued forth, containing the ſame Powers, to Henry of Lancaſter Earl of Darby, Thomas de Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, Robert de Vfford Earl of Suffolk, Hugh le Deſpenſer Lord of Glamorgan, Ralph de Nevil, Bartholomew de Burgherſh, John le Grey de Ruthyn, Reginald de Cobham, and Thomas de Bradeſtan, Barons of the Realm, William de Norwich, Dean of Lincoln, John de Hufford Archdeacon of Ely, Robert Herward Archdeacon of Taunton, and Andrew de Hufford Profeſſor of the Civil Law, or to any 12, 11, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, or 3 of them; who were to treat before his Holineſs, of the King their Maſter's Right to the Crown of France; not as before a Judge, but only as a Private Perſon and Common Friend, not in Form or Judicial Manner of Proceeding. Here again was the Kings Right ſtated by the Engliſh before the Pope and ſeveral Cardinals, with all the Arguments, which may be ſeen at large in the M.S. of the Reverend and Learned Dean of St. Paul's, at the Title, De jure & titulo Regis Angliæ ad Coronam & Regnum Franciæ: Primò factum præſupponitur & ſequuntur Rationes & Argumenta pro utrâque Parte. It begins thus, Philippus Filius ſancti Lodovici, Rex Francorum genuit Philippum dictum Pulchrum, & Carolum de Valois: Eidem Philippo, filio ſancti Lodovici ſucceſſit in Regno Philippus Pulcher ipſius Primogenitus, qui deceſſit relictis tribus Filiis, videlicet Lodovico, Philippo & Carolo, & unâ Filiâ, videlicet Dominâ Iſabellâ, Reginâ Angliæ; quæ vivente Patre ſuo peperit Dominum Edvardum, tunc Regem Angliæ, &c. And ſo it goes on, propounding Arguments, and ſolving Objections of all ſorts, by the Laws of the Tables, by Reaſon, by Example and Scripture; but becauſe moſt of theſe things have been touched before, we ſhall only inſtance a little in the Objection of his Homage done to the King of France, and in the Famous Queſtion of the Salique Law, which latter was yet little on either Side inſiſted on in thoſe days: Nec Homagium, quod fecit Rex Angliæ Poſſeſſori Regni Franciæ, ſibi nocebit, quia præſtitit Homagium, ut Dux Aquitaniæ; ergo ſi veniat alio jure, ut proximior Maſculus in gradu, & non ut Dux; ſibi non nocebit: Quia dicitur in Textu, ei, qui alio jure venit, quàm eo quod amiſit, non nocet id, quod perdidit; ſed prodeſt id, quod habet, &c. Prætereà præſtitit Homagium, ut Ducatum integrum conſequeretur; & non obtinuit, quod ſperavit, ergò non nocet ſibi Homagium: Quia ſi Patroni filius petat Legatum relictum in teſtamento liberti, excluditur, &c. Sed ſi non obtinuerit Legatum, quod ſperavit, petitio Legati ſibi non præjudicat. Prætereà, indubiò non videtur quis juri ſuo tacitè renunciare, ubi ſcit jus ſuum ubique durare, &c. Sed hìc ſcit Rex Angliæ jus ſuum ubique durare; quare non videtur indubiò Regno Franciæ renunciare: Sed & Rex Angliæ ſcit Jus ſuum ubique durare, quod apparet, quùm de Jure ſuo proteſtabatur, quæ proteſtatio conſervat Jus proteſtantis, &c. Prætereà dictus Philippus Poſſeſſor Regni Franciæ admiſit Homagium ut Rex Franciæ de facto, qui Titulum in Regno non habuit, Rege Angliæ exiſtente in proximiori Gradu; ergò admiſſio Homagii non valuit, cùm ea, quæ geruntur in Perſonâ illius, qui Titulum non habuit nec habet, nec valent, nec præjudicant, &c. Prætereâ, tunc quando præſtitit Homagium, in minori ætate erat conſtitutus, &c. As to the other Point, the Engliſh Agents pleaded, that not only the Dukedoms of Normandy and Aquitain, with the Counties of Maine and Anjou, were by Lineal Deſcent belonging unto the King their Maſter, but that now alſo the whole Realm of France was his in Right of his Mother, Daughter and now Heir of King Philip the Fair; for thô the King doth not directly oppoſe their Salique Law, as claiming not for his Mother, but for himſelf as her Heir; yet neither doth he want Arguments to invalidate the Authority of that Cuſtom; for as to the Words, --In terram Salicam Mulieres nè ſuccedant, he can prove againſt the French Gloſſers; that the Realm of France was not to be underſtood thereby, and that Pharamond was not, as they pretend, the Author of this Law: For that the Land Salique is in Germany between the Rivers Elbe and Sala, not far from Kuninghofen; and that when Charles the Great, who began his Reign 343 Years after the Death of Pharamond had overcome come the Saxons, he left there a Colony of Frenchmen; who either in deteſtation of the diſhoneſt Manners of the German Women, or rather becauſe a Maſculine Government was more neceſſary for Souldiers, made a Law, that Females ſhould not ſucceed to any Inheritance within that Land, which is now called Miſnia or Meiſſen by the Germans, a Province in the Upper Saxony. And further, that this which now they call a Law, was but a wicked and Uſurpatious Cuſtom firſt of all introduced by [f] Clotaire the Firſt, to the Excluſion of his Nieces Chrotherge and Chroteſinda, Daughters of his Elder Brother Childebert the Firſt: And further, that even this ſuppoſed Law had not always been obſerved in France it ſelf, which was proved by ſeveral Inſtances. As that King Pepin the Father of Charles the Great, who depoſed King Childeric the Third, and laſt of the Merovean Race, claimed the Crown of France of Pope Zachary as Heir General, being deſcended of Blithildis, Daughter of King Clotaire the Firſt: Further, that Hugh Capet, who upon the Death of Lewis V. uſurped the Crown, which was challenged by Charles Duke of Lorraine, the ſole Heir Male of the Line of Charles the Great; to make his Title good, pretended to come of the Lady Lindgardis Daughter of King Charles II. ſirnamed the Bald, who was Son of Lewis Debonnaire the Emperour, and Grandſon to Charles the Great. Alſo that Lewis the IX (who was Canonized but [g] 45 Years before, and hath been ſince called St. Lewis) becauſe he deſcended in a direct Line from the Uſurper Hugh Capet, could never be throughly ſatisfied in his Conſcience, how he might juſtly keep and enjoy the Crown of France, till he was well informed, and at laſt fully perſwaded, that Queen Iſabell, or Elizabeth his Grandmother, Daughter to Baldwin of Hainalt, was lineally deſcended from the Lady Ermingardis, Daughter and Heir to the foreſaid Charles Duke of Lorrain, by which Marriage the Blood and Line of Charles the Great was again united and reſtored to the Crown of France: So that it is manifeſt as day to thoſe who are not wilfully blinded with Prejudice, that the Title of King Pepin, the Claim of Hugh Capet, the Right of St. Lewis, and conſequently of the Royal Houſe of France to that day, were derived and conveyed from the Heir Female: Thô now under pretence of ſuch a Law they would debarr the King of England of his Right and Lawfull Inheritance. Nor was Scripture forgot to be quoted in an Aſſembly, where ſuch Eminent Perſons of the Clergy of both Nations, beſides the Head of the Church himſelf, were preſent; eſpecially that fully deciſive [h] Text ſo often upon this Occaſion uſed, wherein God himſelf declares, "That when a Man dies without a Son, the Inheritance ſhould deſcend to the "Daughter: If a Man die and have no Son, ye ſhall cauſe his Inheritance to paſs unto "his Daughter. Which was made a ſtanding Law by God himſelf in the Caſe of the Daughters of Zelophehad. Much to this purpoſe was urged in King Edwards Behalf by the Engliſh Commiſſioners, but the French alledged many things to the Contrary, as the expreſs Words of the Salique Law, which they attributed to Pharamond, and make to belong to the whole Realm of France, and therefore it is matter of Fact, that never any Woman was admitted to the Crown of that Kingdom: And if no Female have any Right in her ſelf, much leſs can ſhe transfer to another; for nemo dat quod non habet; alſo that he was a Stranger, and ſo not to be admitted to the Government of that Realm, which once before refuſed Charles Duke of Lorraine aforeſaid upon that very Account, thô he was unqueſtionably the next Heir: They further urged the Judgment of the Twelve Peers of France, who agreed the Crown to be King Philips Right; alſo King Philips preſent Poſſeſſion, and long and peaceable Enjoyment, and even King Edwards own Acknowledgment, when he rendred Homage to him, as to the true and lawfull King of France. Thus on both ſides Arguments were bandied with equal Facility; the Judgment of the Law, and the Opinion of the Doctors quoted, the Niceties of Diſtinctions explained, and the Strength of Objections foiled; as may be ſeen at large in the foreſaid MS. of Dr. Stillingfleet, which Authentick Work was at the Command of King Henry V, upon his renewing the Claim to the Crown of France, collected and compiled by the venerable Father, Thomas Beckington Dr. of Law and Dean of the Arches, and afterwards Biſhop of Bath and Wells. So nothing could be ſaid on either ſide, but an Anſwer was ready for it; and to conclude this matter, nothing as to a final Peace could be agreed, but only the Triennial Truce to endure as before, without violation.

[c] Aſhmole's Garter p. 653. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 153 Holinſhead p. 921.

[d] Aſhmole ibid.

[c] § Dr. Stillingfleet's M.S. n. 8.

II. At this Treaty it is ſaid, that the Pope, thinking to terrifie King Edward, ſpake to ſome of his Agents to this purpoſe; [i] "That Lewis of Bavaria, who had been be-"fore Excommunicate, having now entirely ſubmitted himſelf unto the Arbitration of "the Apoſtolick See, had therefore merited at his Hands the Benefit of Abſolution: "And that now he had juſtly and graciouſly reſtored unto him the Empire, which be-"fore he had unjuſtly uſurped. Which when King Edward heard, being as full of

AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[f] Mezeray Eng. fol. p. 27. vid. de his omnibus Franciæ Hiſtorias & Mich. Draytons Battle of Agincourt Stanza 19 & 20. p. 5.

[g] Vid. Labbe Chron. Techn. ad ann. 1327.

[h] Numbers c. 27. v. 8.

[i] Fox Acts and Mon. p. 502. ex Chron. Alban. & Walſing. hiſt. p. 154.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

Courage as Indignation, he ſaid aloud, "If the Emperour alſo ſhall agree and combine "with Philip of Valois; I am ready to fight with them both in Defence of my "Right. That the Pope might ſay thus much in terrorem, or as a piece of Bravery, I will not deny; and that Lewis of Bavaria made more than one Offer of Submitting himſelf to the Popes Diſcretion, is [k] moſt apparent. But it is not ſo evident, by what I can find in Rainaldus his Collections; that he was ever wholly Reſtored and Abſolved; thô not a few Authors averr ſo much.

[k] Vid. Odoric. Rain. ad an. 1344. §. 10. &c. ubi illius Literæ ad Papam & Card.

However at this time it appears, that the Pope, having received by the Hands of Dr. Andrew Hufford another Letter from King Edward concerning the matter of Proviſions, return'd him his Anſwer thereto, [l] wherein among other things he ſhews, "That "the Ordinance of Parliament, which was made in Oppoſition to Reſervations and the "like, was too raſh and contrary to the Holy Conſtitutions; and that the Dignity of "the Primacy of the Roman Church was not to be queſtion'd; and that by endeavour-"ing to reſpect, and honour and advance it, he would engage the Grace of God unto "himſelf: But that otherwiſe he for his part ſhould find himſelf obliged no longer to "diſſemble thoſe Affronts done to Holy Church, but to apply a Remedy according to "his Duty. Dat. Avin. v. Id. Jul. Anno Pontif. 3. And on the [m] Kalends of October following he ſent Nicholas Archbiſhop of Ravenna, and Peter Biſhop of Aſtorga, his Nuntio's into England, with Power to call a Synod of the Engliſh Prelates, in order to remove all Innovations againſt the Apoſtolick See: And by repeated Letters he exhorted King Edward to revoke what he had done againſt the Liberties of the Church: He alſo excited the two Queens, Iſabella the Kings Mother, and Philippa his Conſort, Henry Earl of Darby, and the Chief Peers of the Realm, to move the King to reſtore Matters to their Priſtine State. John Archbiſhop of Canterbury was ſuſpected by the Pope to have been the Occaſion of all this Controverſie, who when he attempted to waſh away this Opinion with many plauſible Excuſes, was required by the Pope to clear himſelf by his Actions, and to induce the King to reſcind what had been done: And William de la Zouch Archbiſhop of York, Richard Bury Biſhop of Durham, and ſeveral other Prelates, were urged to uſe their utmoſt endeavour in this Affair. But whether upon this I cannot tell, however the Pope from henceforward gat ground in what he aim'd at, thô not without a Check now and then from the King.

[l] Odoric. Rain. ad hunc annum §. 55. uſque ad 60.

[m] Odoric. Rain. ibid.

III. Althô I am ſenſible, that this Great Engliſh Monarch did not inſtitute the Famous Order of the Garter till Five years after this Time, or the 23 Year of his Reign, yet becauſe now he began the Order of the Round Table at Windſor, which gave occaſion to that of the Garter, I ſhall in this place once for all take leave to ſay ſomething concerning ſo ſolemn and Royal a Subject.

The Caſtle of Windſor, [n] Scituate at the Eaſt point of the County of Berkſhire, being Anciently called Windleſhore, from the Windings of the ſhore thereabouts, is by ſome [o] reported to have been built by the Famous King Arthur of Britain; thô ſurely the preſent Name is of [p] Saxon Original. It is [q] certain, that King William the Conquerour; being greatly enamoured of the pleaſant ſcituation of the Place, which appeared exceeding Commodious, becauſe it lay ſo near the Thames, the Wood ſo fit for Game, and the Country yielding other Opportunities both proper and convenient for the Pleaſure and Exerciſe of Kings, and therefore a place very fit for his Reception; made an Exchange with Edwin, then Abbot of Weſtminſter, and his Monks (for King [r] Edward the Confeſſor had made a Donation of Windleſhore, and all its appurtenances to the Monaſtery of St. Peters at Weſtminſter) of certain Lands in Eſſex, and elſewhere in lieu thereof: And ſo Windſor revolved to the Crown again; where ever ſince it hath remained. The Conquerour being thus Lawfully poſſeſt of Windſor, forthwith built a Fair Caſtle upon the Hill, containing half a Hide, or Carucate of Land, being parcell of the Mannor of Clure. After him King Henry the Firſt, reedified the ſaid Caſtle, beautifying it with many goodly Buildings, and as it were to experience the Pleaſure thereof, in the [s] Eight Year of his Reign, having overcome his Enemies, kept his Eaſter there with great Triumph and Glory; as alſo two * Years after he ſummon'd thither all his Nobility, where he held his Whitſuntide with Princely State and Magnificence.

[n] Aſhmole p. 127.

[o] Froiſ. l. 1. c. 100.

[p] Wyndle-ſhora.

[q] Aſhmole p. 127. & Speed Maps Berkſhire, §. 8.

[r] Monaſt. Angl. Tom. 1. p. 61.

[s] Hen. Huntingd. l. 7. p. 379. n. 40. Francof. 1601.

* Id. ibid. n. 50.

This [t] Caſtle from an high Hill, which riſeth with an eaſie and gentle Aſſent, yields a moſt delightfull proſpect round about, for from the Front it overlooks a fruitfull Vale, which lying out far and wide, is adorned with Corn-fields, flouriſhes with delightfull Meadows, is flanked on each ſide with pleaſant Groves, and water'd with the Calm and Wealthy Streams of the Royal River of Thames: Which haſting with a nimble, but ſmooth ſpeed from Oxford, runs along on the Edge of Barkſhire, as if reſol-reſolving to viſit this Capitol of our Engliſh Kings. Behind the Caſtle ſeveral Hills ſhoot up, which being neither too rough, nor over high, are ſo bedecked with frequent Woods, as if Nature had even dedicated them to the game of Hunting. AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[t] Cambden. in Atrebat.

Within this place was our King Edward born, (whence he was commonly called Edward of Windſor, as his Father was of Caernarvon) whereby the Affection he bore thereto, became ſo great, that he ſeem'd to prefer it by much to all his Royal Palaces and Manſions. For this Year firſt he began to hold a Round-Table therein (of which by and by) and after that he Inſtituted the Honourable Order of the Garter here; and even until the Fourty Eighth of his Reign (thô not without ſome intermiſſion by Reaſon of his many Wars) continued to augment and adorn it with moſt Magnificent Buildings and Fortifications, making it alſo the perpetual Seat of the foreſaid moſt Noble Order: So that even in his Days it became a very Famous and Illuſtrious Structure. But ſince that in Memory of ſo Renowned a Conquerour, and in reſpect to the Commodious Scituation of the Place, as alſo for the greater Honour of the foreſaid moſt Glorious Order, ſucceeding Kings, as Edward IV, Henry VII, and Henry VIII, the Queens Mary and Elizabeth, King James I, and King Charles I, have enlarged its Buildings, Beautified its Proſpect, ſupply'd it with Water, deriv'd from Blackmore Park into a Fountain of Curious Workmanſhip, and made it more freſh and gay with conſtant Repairs, pleaſant Terraſes, and other Ornaments: After all whom the late King Charles II, out of a particular Reſpect to this Illuſtrious Place, and in Imitation of all theſe his Royal Progenitors, laid out vaſt Sums of Money upon its Repair, and furniſhed it with a Curious and Gallant Magazine of Arms, ſo well order'd and kept; that it both Entices and Rewards the Curioſity of every Traveller that comes that way. And thô the Seat be chiefly deſign'd for pleaſure, yet is it nevertheleſs, beſide the ſtrength it receives from the foremention'd Arſenal, fortify'd with deep Grafts and high Towers, which command all its Avenues.

It is Scituate ſome twenty Miles from London upon the Banks of the Thames, that furniſhes it with Waters, which embelliſh its Gardens with Fruitfull Currents: Its circumference and extent is now ſo conſiderable, that it may ſeem to vie with ſome Cities. In ſhort, the Air is pure and ſerene, the Architecture regular, and well contrived, all its Apartments Royally furniſhed, its Gardens and Walks full of Diverſion, its Parks of Game; and all things Worthy the Preſence of the moſt Fortunate of Mankind.

The Scituation of this Place, with its moſt Royal Fabrick, thô Poetically, is truly deſcribed by Sr. John Denham's ingenious * Muſe after this Manner: * In Cooper's Hill.

Windſor the next (where Mars and Venus dwells, Beauty with Strength) above the Valley ſwells
Into mine Eyes, and doth it ſelf Preſent
With ſuch an eaſie and unforc'd Aſcent,
That no ſtupendious Precipice denies Acceſs; no Horror turns away our Eyes:
But ſuch a Riſe, as doth at once invite
A Pleaſure and a Reverence from our ſight.
Thy Mighty Maſter's Emblem! In whoſe Face
Sat Meekneſs heightned with Majeſtick Grace:
Such ſeems thy Gentle Height, made only Proud
To be the Baſis of that Pompous load;
Than which a Nobler weight no Mountain bears,
But Atlas only, that ſupports the Spheres.

In this Place King Edward at this time [u] began to Erect a certain Houſe, called the Round-Table, the Semidiameter of whoſe Floor, viz. from the Center to the Circumference, contained one 100 Foot, ſo that the Diameter being 200, the whole Circumference comes to 600 Foot, and about three quarters more: For the Circumference exceeds the Diameter in like proportion, as 22 bears to ſeven. Towards the finiſhing of this Noble Work, the King allowed an 100 l. Sterling to be expended Weekly; thô afterwards by reaſon of his Wars, he retrenched that allowance to 20 l. per Week. But here it will not be amiſs to ſpeak ſomething of the Original, Uſe, and Meaning of theſe Round-Tables: And ſurely, thô Arthur the Famous King of Britain, is generally held to have been the Author of this Invention; yet, as we obſerved before in the Second Year of this Hiſtory, We find by Athenæus, that it was Cuſtomary for the Knights of Gaul to ſit at Round-Tables, to avoid Contention a- [u] Walſing. Hypod. p. 117.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

bout Priority. This Custom was renewed by King Arthur, who from among [x] all those both Brittish and Foreign Worthies, who came to his Court, as to a Seminary of Military Discipline, to give Evidence of their Skill in the Exercise of Arms, selected certain of the most Noble and Expert Knights, to the Number of 25, besides himself, (thô some say but 24) whom he united under him, into a Fellowship, or Order, who sitting in their Chapters at a Round-Table, were called Knights of the Round-Table. The Place where the Founder first Instituted this Order, was, as [y] Froisard witnesses, Windsor, thô not then called by that Name, but by a Brittish Title, Kaerguent. And yet other Places were upon occasion allowed for the Assembly of the Society, as [z] Wincheſter in Hantshire, Camelot in Somersetshire, and Caer-leon in Monmouthshire: To one of these every Whitsuntide, these Knights made their repair, where they held their Chapters, and gave a due Relation of all their Actions and Adventures, still attributing the Praise of all to God, and the Virgin Mary.

[x] Ashmole p.95.
[y] Froiſ. l. 1. c. 100.
[z] Vid. Selden's notes on Poly-Olbion Song IV.

[a] Ashmole f.96.

We find these Round-Tables to have been renewed long after him [a] by King Stephen, and Richard the First, called for his couragious Soul Cœur du Leon, or Lyon-Heart, and We have also intimated before, how in the Days of Edward the First, the Lord Roger Mortimer, Lord of Wigmore (but not Earl of March, as both Sr. William Dugdale, and Esquire Ashmole inadvertently call him) held the Celebration of a Round-Table with Tilting and Tourneaments; which consisted of an 100 Knights, and as many Fair Ladies of the Highest Quality. And now King Edward the Third, in like Manner, designing [b] to recover the Memory of King Arthur, and to restore the Honour of the Round-Table; that he might inflame the Minds of his own Lords with Military Glory, and invite also to his side the bravest Sons of Valour from Foreign Parts, resolved to hold a Solemn Justs at Windsor, and caused this his Resolution to be [c] Proclaimed, not only in his own Dominions, but also in Scotland, France, Burgundy, Hainalt, Flanders, Brabant, and the Empire; offering by his Heralds to all Knights and Esquires, that would come to the said Feast, his Royal Conduct for fifteen Days before, and for as many after the Solemnity: Which was to begin at Windsor on St. George's Day, or the 23 of April, as Froisard says, then next ensuing: But We shall prove hereafter, that the appointed time was the 19 of January, 1344, the full Institution of the Order, of which that Saint was made the Patron, not being till five Years after. And in the Proclamation it was signified, that King Edward himself would be there with the Chiefest of his Nobility, Knights, and Esquires, and the Queen also to be accompanied with 300 of the Fairest Ladies and Virgins in their Richest Attire, all of Noble and Honourable Families. According to this Proclamation there came at the time appointed many Worthy and Valiant Knights from all the Parts aforesaid, except France only; For there King Philip gave a strict command to the Contrary, and in hopes to render this High Design of his Adversary of England less effectual, He [d] also at the same time set up a Round-Table at Paris; to which many Knights came from Bohemia, Luxemburgh, Germany, and Italy. And at the same time also he gave [e] free leave to any of his Subjects, to fell down Timber for making of Ships, and encreasing his Navy: Whereby no little Dammage was afterwards done to the Sea-Coasts of England. But however, as for the Round-Table he Erected, it proved of no great Advantage to him; for King Edward here gain'd the Point of him most notoriously by adding to his Round-Table a peculiar Device of the Blew-Garter: With which he Honoured his Order. For thô the whole Design was not as now consummated, more time being Requisite to settle so substantial a Society, together with all its Laws, Ordinances, and other Circumstances, yet because at least the Design was now formed, and this Years meeting did certainly give Occasion for the Foundation of that most Noble Order, which in the [f] 23d. of this King received its full Establishment, I shall, to clear my self once for all of this Subject, take leave in this place to discourse of the Institution and Original of the Knights of the Garter.

[b] Ut Arturi memoriam refricaret. Vincent. Lupani de Magistratib. Francorum l. 1.
[c] Froiſ. c. 100.

[d] Walsing. Hypod. p. 117. Daniels hist. p. 223 Speed, &c.
[e] Fox Acts & Monum. ad an. 1344. ex Walsingh. Hypod. p. 117. ad hunc an.

[f] Ità expresse Statuta ipsius Fundatoris, Ad honorem Omnipotentis Dei, Sanctæ Mariæ Virginis gloriosæ, & Sancti Georgii Martyris, Dominus noster supremus Edvardus post Conquestum Tertius Rex Angliæ, anno Regni sui 23^tio Ordinavit, Stabilivit, & Fundavit, quandam Societatem, sive Ordinem Militarem, infra Castrum suum de Windesore, in hunc modum, &c. Idem affirmatur in Copiâ Hattoniana, in Statutis per Henricum V. reformatis, ut & in Statutis per Henricum VIII. Latinis apud Ashmole in Appendice, Anglicis in M. S. penes me. Vid. Ashmole's Garter p. 187.

IV. It has been a Common and current Opinion; that Joan Plantagenet, called by some Countess of Salisbury, by chance letting fall her Garter in a Dance, the Amorous King snatching it up for the sake of the Beautifull Owner, contrived thus to make it Honourable to all Ages: but this we have already shew'd to want Authority, when We overthrew the very occasion of it, by proving, that King Edward was not in love with this Lady; to which We now add, that even Froisard, who makes him to have been in love with her, yet when he comes to the Order of the Blew-Garter, takes no Notice, that it was

was ever intended as an Honour or remembrance of this, or any other Ladies Garter. Polydor Virgil, a Man of indifferent Reputation, being the First that ever mention'd such a thing, brings it yet but as founded upon Fama Vulgi, Publique Rumor only. Besides, of all those that hold this Opinion, there are different judgements as to the Name, and Person of the Lady; some calling her Joan, some Alice, some Katherine; others making her Countess of Salisbury, and others again saying, 'twas Queen Philippa her self, who once departing from the Kings presence to her own Apartment, he soon after following, happen'd to espy a Blew-Garter on the ground, which his Attendants slightly passing by, the King, who knew the Owner, commanded it to be taken up and given to him; at the Receipt whereof he said, "You make but small account of "this Garter, but within a little while the very best of You shall be glad to Reve- "rence the like: And that the Motto of the Garter, HONI SOIT, QUI MAL Y PENSE, was the Queens Answer, when the King asked what she thought, Men would conjecture of her, upon dropping her Garter in such a Manner. This Mr Ashmole [g] quotes (thrô lapse of Memory) as from Du Chesne, who yet [h] in the place alledged has no such matter; but only speaks of the Countess of Salisbury, whose Garter he says, when the Lords seeing the King take up, smiled, he said in French, as aforesaid, which signifies, Let him be ashamed, that thinks any Evil.

AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[g] Ashmole Garter p. 180.
[h] Du Chesne Histoire Generale D' Angleterre, D' Escosse, & D' Ireland p. 670.

Now thô all must acknowledge our King Edward to have been the first Founder of this Order of the Garter; yet some have sought higher for the Original, even up to the time of King Richard the First, who began his Reign, Anno Domini MCLXXXIX.

This valiant Prince say they, [i] after he had Conquer'd the Isle and Kingdom of Cyprus, and lay now before Acon or Ptolemais, a famous City of Phœnicia on the Borders of Palestine, held then by the Sarazens; being much wearied with the Tediousness of the Siege, at last thrô some secret Impulse, at the intercession and mediation of St. George (as he imagin'd) was inspired with fresh Courage, and bethought himself of this Device, to tie about the Left Legs of a select Number of Knights a Leathern Thong or Garter (for no better were then at hand) whereby being put in mind of the Glory, that should accrue to them in vanquishing their Enemies, together with an Assurance of proportionable Rewards if they succeeded, they might be roused up to behave themselves gallantly, and with more vigour in those Christian Wars. Which Fact of his was done in Imitation of the Ancient Romans, among whom were various Crowns invented, for the honour and encouragement of those, who had, or should do well in the Service of their Country. Some of the Names of which Knights, as many as I have met with, for Antiquity sake I shall here remember: Sr. [k] Michael Carrington, King Richard's Standard-Bearer, from whom Sr. Francis Smith Lord Carrington is descended: Sr. John [l] St. John, Sr. Frederick [m] Tilney, who received the Order of Knighthood at Acon or Ptolemais aforesaid, Sr. William Waterville, Sr. Rob. Sackville, Sr. Richard [n] Camville, who leaving his Fellow Sr. Robert Turneham in the Government of Cyprus, without the Kings Leave waited upon him at the Siege of Acon, but died there. These and some other valiant Knights being thus encouraged, were soon after by their Emulous Valour, chief Instruments of Winning that Great City from the Pagans: Whereupon King Richard, after his Return home from the Wars and his Imprisonment in Germany, determin'd with himself to institute and settle this most Noble Order of St. George and the Garter, by the Patronage of which Saint, and the Emblem of which Badge, the English Nation had atchieved such Honour. As for King Arthur, thô the Original of the Round Table in this Nation is by many attributed unto him, yet none, as I can find do carry up the least Notion of the Garter so far: Wherefore the Summ of all that hath hitherto been deliver'd upon this Subject is, that althô King Edward III must be allowed to have been the First Founder of this Order of the Garter; yet some say, that King Richard gave the First Occasion in this Manner, as we have related; others as to one Part of the Ceremony at least go higher, and make King Arthur the Founder of the Knights of St. George and the Round Table. But higher than this hath no one sought, as to the Original and Antiquity of the Blew Garter: Now as I allow not that vain Report, that Garter being King Edward's Watchword in some Great Battle wherein he succeeded, was the first Occasion of Instituting this Order; because in the Battle of Cressy, the King himself stood by only, as a Spectator of his Sons valour, as we shall see; and all his other Great Battles were either too long before the Institution, or too long after; so neither on the other hand doth it seem to me, that either a Ladies Garter or that Leathern Thong could be a sufficieut Motive (especially considering what we have heretofore said as to that Point) to so solemn a Matter. Nor that [i] Black-Book Preface p. 13.

[k] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 470.
[l] Weevers Fun. Mon. 318. & 319.
[m] Id. p. 818.
[n] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 627. & 662.

King

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

King Arthur (whom in part our Edward follow'd) could without some Mystery dedicate his Order to St. George. After much study, once by chance I met with some Hints, which seem'd to me to bear a near reference to this matter; and if so, will make its Original much more Ancient, than perhaps any other Knightly Order in the World could ever boast of.

It is well known to those, who have read any thing of the ancient Heathen Learning, [o] that among the Samothracians (who inhabit an Island of the Ægæan Sea, near unto Thrace, and retaining unto this day the Name of Samandrachi) it was a Custom to initiate certain Great and Honourable Personages, whether Natives or Strangers, into the Ceremonies of the Cabiri or Potent Gods, whose Names were Axierus Axiocersa, and Axiocersus: These it was piacular for any, but those who had been initiated, so much as to name. The manner of the Initiation was to tie a Blew or Purple Fillet, or Bordure about the Body underneath the Paps: The profit and Effect of these Ceremonies, was to be perpetually secur'd against the most turbulent Tempests of the Sea; and therefore Casmilus, that is Mercury, was added to those other Gods; because the skill of Astronomy, over which Mercury presides, is necessary for Sailers. And thus we read, [p] that when the Argonauts were in great peril by a Tempest, Orpheus the Thracian Priest, who also was an Heroe of the Royal Blood, initiated himself after this manner to the Samothracian Gods, in the Name of all the Princes and Knights, his Fellow-Adventurers. Whereupon the Winds ceasing and the Seas lying still, at which time also two bright Stars appear'd upon the Heads of the Sons of Tyndarus, the Heroes all wondred, as believing themselves deliver'd by the Power of those Gods, to whose protection Orpheus had committed the Vessel and all therein: Whence even among the Grecians it became a Custom to invoke the Samothracian Cabiri, and to use their Ceremonies in Storms and Tempests. Nay, we read, that [q] Agamemnon, and Achilles, and Ulysses (and afterwards * Philip, the Father of Alexander the Great) were all initiated in Samothracia, only Ulysses would needs make use of a [q] white Fillet, instead of one of Purple. Upon which presumptuous Transgression of the Ancient Usage he afterwards fell into those distresses and Miseries at Sea, which the King of Poets describes at large in his Odysseia. Cælius [r] Rhodiginus also affirms, that when the Grecians, being commanded after the Taking of Troy to go on board in boisterous Weather, murmured against their Leaders; as fearing to be destroyed by Tempests, Agamemnon by shewing this Purple Cincture about his Belly under his Coat of Male, quieted their Sedition: And that by this means even Ulysses himself escaped finally perishing at Sea. Nor is Homer himself silent in this Matter; for upon the great peril wherein Ulysses was at Sea, he makes Leucothea a Samothracian Goddess also, and together with her Son [s] Palæmon, Patroness of Ships at Sea, to deliver the distressed Heroe a Blue Garter or Fillet with these Words, [o] Natal. Comes l. 5. c. 5. p. 447. ex Scholiast. Apollonii Rhod. ad l. 1. p. 93. &c.

[p] Natal. Comes ibid. & p. 607.

[q] Natal. Comes p. 445.
* Plutarch in vit. Alexandri M. p. 665.

[r] Cæl. Rhod. Antiq. Lect. l. 16. c. 20.

[s] Orpheus Hym. in Palæm.

Τῆνδε τόδε Κρήδεμνον ὑπὸ στέρνοιο πανύσσαι
Ἄμβροτον. Οὐδέν τι παθέειν δέος, οὐδ' ὀπιθεύσῃ.
Hom. Odyss. ε. v. 345, &c.

Behold this Sacred Azure Fillet here:
Bind this beneath thy Paps, and never fear
To drown or suffer harm, thô Storms appear.

Now all this being thus premised, we first suppose the Opinion of [t] a late Writer very probable, who in his Book called Antiqua Britannia Illustrata, proves the old Brittains or Welch Natives of this Land to have been a Colony of Phœnicians, both for their Manners, Laws and Ceremonies, as also for other strong Arguments, which he there produces. Now if the Intelligent Reader will but take the pains to consider all this, and withall how many Heathen Customs have been brought into Christianity with some little Change, as we could frequently instance; but that we know the Learned readily grant the same, we may easily imagin, that King Arthur, who was crowned in the Year of our Lord DXVI, when it may be supposed, that the Memory of their Pagan-Fathers Traditions was not wholly worn out, and from him King Edward, might by Changing their Patrons from Heathen to Christian [u] Saints, and the Carnal intent of the Ceremony to a Spiritual, retain, or renew this ancient and significative Institution of the Samothracian Rites, wherein now the World is emblematized by the tempestuous Ocean, by the Blew-Garter, Heavenly Mindedness or Unity of Faith, and Concord or Amity, because it is but one, and knit close together with a Buckle of pure Gold about the Leg. And as for St. George, he might very well be made the Patron of this Order, as who was Martyr'd [x] above 200 Years before, and was already in those days of high Renown over all the Christian World: Especially since the Christians attributed unto him the same Protection of sea-faring Men, as the old Phœnicians did to their Cabiri; which will evidently appear from these two following Passages, the

[t] Aylett Sammes ex Bocharto hæc rettulit in l. Antiq. Brit. Illustrat. Quanquam Herodotus & ex eo Dr. Stillingfl. in Orig. Sacr. Cabiros non Phœnicibus, sed Pelasgis tribuunt.

[u] K. Arthur us'd St. George v. Harding c. 72

[x] D. Georgius Martyr. coronat. An. Dom. 290. An. Diocletiani Imperatoris 6°. Selden's Titles of Hon. p. 795. ex Baron. Collat. cum Labbæo ad hunc annum.

the one of an old Saxon MS. and the other of an old Engliſh MS. Legend in Verſe, both which I ſhall here make bold to produce in a Language ſomething more intelligible, becauſe the very Words are to be ſeen in their Primitive Obſcurity in the Learned Seldens Titles of Honour, [y] "And St. George (upon the Point of his Martyrdom in "the Days of Dioclesian the Emperour) prayed to the Lord and ſaid, Jeſu Chriſt re- "ceive my Soul! And I beſeech thee, that whoſoever ſhall commemorate me on "Earth, all Fraud, Peril, Hunger and Sickneſs be far from his Houſe; and that "whoſoever ſhall in any danger ON THE SEA, or elſewhere make uſe of "my Name, Thou wilt be mercifull unto him. Then came a Voice from Heaven, ſay- "ing, Come thou Bleſſed, and whoſoever ſhall in any Danger or Place, call on my "Name thrô Thee, him will I hear. The ſame Senſe is thus expreſſed in the other [z] MS. in Meeter,

AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[y] Saxon M.S. apud Selden Titles of Honour p. 812.

[z] Apud Selden ibid. p. 813.

His Hands he held up on High, adown he ſet his knee,
Lord, he ſaid, Jeſu Chriſt, this only thing might I ſee;
Grant me, if it is thy Will; that whoſo in fair manere,
Holds well my Day in [a] Aperil, for my Love on Earth here;
That there never fall in his Houſe no Harm in all the Year;
Nor great Sickneſs, nor Famine ſtrong, that thereof there be no fear.
And WHOSO IN PERIL OF SEA, thrô me ſhall make his Boon,
Or in other Caſes Perillous, heal him thereof full ſoon.
Then heard he a Voice from Heaven, that to him ſaid, I wis, Come forth to me, my Bleſſed Child, thy Boon heared is:
Then his Head was off y-ſmitten, &c.

[a] April 23d St. George's Day.

Some ſmall Account of this ancient Original I gave about ten or eleven Years ſince to that Learned Antiquary, Eſquire Aſhmole in the Lodgings of my worthy Friend and Maſter Dr. Goad, then at Merchant-Taylors School in London, who ſeem'd not a little pleas'd at the probable Authentick Occaſion of this moſt Noble Order. But I leave the Judgment of all to the Candid Reader, being content with thoſe Reaſons, that induced me to make theſe Conjectures, as I readily allow others to follow what may ſeem more Rational to them.

V. And having thus at leaſt endeavour'd to find out hidden Truth from among the groſs Rubbiſh of Antiquity, we ſhall now proceed. When this Mighty Prince had formed in his Head this moſt Honourable Deſign, and had begun to hold his Round Table at Windſor, upon [b] New-years Day this Year (1344.) He iſſued out his Royal Letters of Protection, as we ſhew'd before, for the ſafe Coming and Return of Foreign Knights, their Servants and what belonged unto them, who being deſirous to try their Valour, ſhould come to thoſe ſolemn Juſts, by him intended to be held at Windſor, on the [c] Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Hilary next enſuing (which happen'd then to be on the * 19 Day of January.) And theſe Letters of ſafe Conduct continued in Force till the Octaves of the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, being in the 18 Year of his Reign.

[b] Aſhmole p. 186 b. c.

[c] Pat. 17. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 2. * Dom. Lit. D. C.

The Time appointed being come, the King provided a Royal Supper to open the Solemnity, and then firſt Ordained, that this Feſtival ſhould be annually held there at Whitſuntide. The next Day and during all this ſplendid Convention from before Candlemas unto Lent, the Lords of England and of other Lands exerciſed themſelves in all kind of Knightly Feats of Arms, as Juſts and Tourneaments, and Running at the Ring: The Queen and her Ladies, that they might with more Convenience behold this Spectacle, were orderly ſeated upon a firm Baluſtrade or Scaffold with Rails before it, running all round the Liſts. And certainly their extraordinary Beauties, ſet ſo advantageouſly forth with exceſſive Finery and Riches of Apparel, did prove a Sight as full of pleaſant Encouragement to the Combatants, as the fierce Bucklings of Men and Horſes, gallantly armed, was a delightfull Terrour to the Feminine Beholders.

During theſe Martial ſports, William Montagu, the Great Earl of Salisbury, King of the Iſle of Man, and Marſhal of England, thrô his immoderate Courage and Labour for 3 or 4 Days together, was at laſt ſo bruiſed and wearied with thoſe boiſterous Encounters, that falling [d] into a Feavour thereby, he died within 8 Days after, in the [e] 43d. Year of his Age, on the 30 of January, being then a Fryday, to the infinite regret of the King, and all the Court, as well Strangers, as Engliſh; and was afterwards Honourably buried in the White-Fryers at London. This Mans Father, named William Lord Montagu, [f] Son of Simon Lord Montagu, and being deſcended of [d] Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 924.

[e] Vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 640. ubi Anno 13. Ed. 2. aged 18. & vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 647. Aſhmole 690.

[f] Mills Catal. Honor. p. 1041.

Drû

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

Drû, or Drogo, who was branched from the Lines of the Ancient Kings of Man, did Marry Aufric Daughter of Fergus, and Widow of Olaus King of Man; or as others report, she was [g] Sister of Orry King of Man, who was descended from Orry, Son to the King of Denmark: Which Lady, discerning her Brother and all his Blood to be overcome, and ruin'd by Alexander King of Scots, fled into England with the Charter of that Isle, and being there Honourably received of King Edward I, was by him given in Marriage to William Lord Montagu aforesaid, who in her Right, by Aid of the said King Edward I, recover'd the said Isle, till at length he mortgag'd it for seven Years to Anthony Beck, Bishop of Durham; from whom it should seem to have been taken by the Scots: Till this Earl William, as we shew'd before, reconquer'd it from the Scots, and was by King Edward III made King of the said Isle, as was also his Son after him, till the 16 of Richard II, when he sold the Crown thereof to William Lord Scroop, as some say, thô 'tis certain, that even [h] to his Death he retain'd the Title of Lord thereof; as appears by his Will, bearing Date at Christ-Church-Twynham 20 April, Anno 1397 (20 Richardi 2) where he calls himself Earl of Salisbury, and Lord of the Isles of Man and Wight: Within 6 Weeks after the Date whereof he departed this Life. But now at the Death of his Father, the first Earl, he was found to be but 15 Years old and an half, thô in time, he became no less renowned, than his Father, and was One of those 25 whom King Edward chose together with himself, Founders of the Order of the Garter. But of his Heroick Father, who died at this time, [i] Walsingham takes his leave in these Words, "This Year, says "he, departed this Life, the Lord William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, King of Man, "and Marshal of England, of whose Valorous Acts worthily to write, would be a Work of great Commendation.

[g] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 633.

[h] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 648.

[i] Hypod. p. 117. ad an. 1344.

And thus died this Valiant Worthy in the strength of his Age, full of Glory, and even by those Martial Exercises, which he ever principally affected: But the Solemnity notwithstanding was continued to its appointed End; and all the while, as the Men of War thus spent the Days in Sports more agreeable to their Robust Nature; so were a great part of the Nights devoted to Publique Balls, Masquerades, and Dancings with the Ladies, which attended the Queen thither. And perhaps this gave occasion to some, who could not penetrate into the true Original of the Garter, to conjecture, that at some of these Balls, either the Queens, or the Countess of Salisbury's Garter slipping off, might afford the First hint of this Devise.

VI. Immediately after these First Martial Exercises were over (to the end better accommodation might be had for the Knights that should afterwards come thither) the King caused [k] Carpenters, Masons, and Carriages to be impress't for the Erecting the foresaid Building of the Round-Table in the Castle; four Years after by his Letters [l] Patents, bearing Teste at Westminster on the VI Day of August An°. Regni 22. he new Founded the Ancient Chappel of Windsor to the Honour and Praise of the Omnipotent God, of the Glorious Virgin Mary, of St. George the Martyr, and of St. Edward the Confessour, and ordained that to the Eight Canons of King Henry the First, there should be added One Custos, fifteen Canons more, twenty four Alms Knights, together with other Ministers, all under the Command of the said Custos; and these to be maintained out of the Revenues, wherewith this Chappel was, and should be endowed. And thus what as to the College, Chappel, and Castle, We find him the most part of his Reign after this, Augmenting, Building, Repairing, and Endowing this Darling Seat of his, as may be seen more [m] particularly in the IV Chapter and the first Section of Esquire Ashmole's elaborate History of the Garter.

[k] Pat. 18. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 39. Dorso.

[l] Extant apud Ashmole Appendix, N.

[m] Ashmole p. 128. & p. 129.

From this Seminary of the Round-Table begun thus, as We have seen, five Years after he reared that Illustrious and Solemn Order of the Garter, [n] consisting of 26 Knights in all, whereof himself was Sovereign and Chief: All whose Habits in token of Fellowship, Amity and Concord, were alike; and first the Collars, each consisted of 26 Garters, every one enclosing a Rose, united with the Buckle, each Garter interchangeably divided with a Knot, all Emblems of Amity; saving that at the end of the Middle Garter before, hangs down the great George, representing an Armed Knight on a barbed Horse, tilting at a Dragon, who is thrown on his Back. Then the Caps, Mantle, Surcoat, and Hood, are all alike, saving, that the Number of Garters, Embroider'd on the Surcoat, varies according to the different Degrees of the Knights Companions. And lastly the Garter, the Chief Ensign of the Order, being of blew Velvet, is richly Embroider'd with these Letters and Stops of Gold, HONI. SOIT. QUI. MAL. Y. PENSE. all Garnished with Diamonds and other precious Stones: The Buckle and Pendant whereof are all of pure Gold, as also the Plate next the Hinge, [n] V. Ashmole's Garter, ubi & harum rerum descriptiones & imagines fusius & ob oculos habentur.

Hinge, whereon the Sovereign's Picture to the Breast is Curiously cut in flat-stitch, Crown'd with a Laurel, and vested in the Military Habit of the First Roman Emperours: As also on the back side of the Tab or Pendant, is engraven a George on Horseback, as before. There is also a lesser George, enclosed in Diamonds, and appointed to be worn pendant, first on a Golden Chain, and since that, on a Blew-Ruband, upon more ordinary occasions. We must yet confess, that all this Splendour was not at first, (every thing usually gathering growth by Degrees) for it appears, that the Material of the first Founders Mantle was only most [o] fine Woollen-Cloth, Blew-Colour; and it is not unlikely, as Mr. Ashmole well observes, that the Founder made choice of Cloth for the Robes of the Order (rather than any other Richer Stuff) to the end he might thereby give a Reputation to that our homebred, and Native Commodity. Albeit, we find in the Statutes of Institution, a Permission for the Proxies of Foreign Princes, to bring over with them Mantles of [p] Silk or Velvet, at their coming to receive the Possession of their Principals Stalls; either because other Countries were better furnished with such Commodities, than with our English Cloth, or that it might rather stand with the liking or esteem of foreign Princes, as accounting Silk or Velvet the more Honourable Material. Some also have deliver'd, that at the first Institution the Habit consisted only of the Garter, Mantle, Surcoat, and Hood, and that the George and Collar were afterwards added by Henry VIII. It is certain, that at the Original there was more simplicity in all; the Materials both of Surcoat, Hood, and Mantle, were at first all the same, and of the same Colour, all garnished, or powder'd all over with little Garters, embroider'd with Silk and Gold Plate, in each whereof was neatly wrought the Motto, Honi soit qui mal y pense. Besides the Buckles and Pendants to these small Garters were Silver Gilt: And it is Recorded, that of these Embroider'd Garters, there were laid upon the first Surcoat and Hood made for the Founder, no less than an Hundred Sixty Eight. The left Shoulder of each of the Mantles, from the very Institution, hath been adorned with one Large, Fair Garter, containing the Motto, Honi soit qui mal y pense; which were distinguished from the other lesser Garters, by the Name of Garters gross. Within this Great Garter were embroider'd the Arms of St. George, namely Argent a Cross Gules; which of old was wrought upon Sattin, with Gold, Silver, and Silk; but in succeeding times more cost was bestow'd upon this Salutary Ensign; the Embroidery being curiously wrought upon Velvet, with Damask, Gold and sundry sorts of Purls, Plates, Venice-twists, and Silks, and the Letters of the Motto, and Borders of the Garter, composed of fine Oriental Pearl. To which, lastly, King Charles the First added the Rays, or Glory, as 'tis commonly called, darting out thrô the Garter from all parts of the Sacred Cross, till without the Garter, it self also terminates Cross-wise. But leaving the minuter Prosecution of these things, with all the particular Mutations, Statutes, and Circumstances thereto belonging, to that Learned and Authentick Work of Esquire Ashmole's, wherein he has most accurately and fully handled all things relating to this Order, I shall only add, what yet remains of our Subject;

1. That King EDWARD himself first took this Habit in the Chappel of St. George from the hands of William Edington Bishop of Winchester (which Bishop by Statute is always Prelate of the Order) and then he proceeded to give the same Habit to the other 25 Knights Companions, as in Order they follow;

2. His Eldest Son, Edward, Prince of Wales, now but in the 14, then in the 19 Year of his Age.

3. His Noble and Valiant Cousin, Henry, at that time Earl of Lancaster, and afterwards Duke of the same Title.

4. Thomas Beauchamp, the thrice Noble and Valiant Earl of Warwick.

5. John [q] de Greilly, Captal of Buch, which is a great Lordship in Aquitain, the Governour whereof is stiled Captal, and the Country it self is called le Captalat de Buch, or Busch; the chief Town whereof, called la Teste de Buch, is about seven Leagues Westward of Bourdeaux: This Gentleman was a Mighty Man of Valour, and most firm of all others to the English side; so that after many Renowned Exploits, whereof this History will not be silent, being at last taken Prisoner by the French, he chose rather to die in Prison, than to swear never more to bear Arms for England.

6. The next Knight in Order was Ralph Lord Stafford, Earl of Stafford.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[o] Ashmole p. 209. ex Rotul. Comp. Jo. Coke Cler. Mag. Garderob. ad an. 21. & 23. Ed. 3. m. 8. penes Remem. Regis in Scaccario.

[p] Ed. 3. Statut. Art. 20. vid. Hen. V. Stat. Art. 20. in Appendic. ad Ashmole.

[q] Here Mr. Ashmole is stagger'd, because whereas he finds it on Record, that John de Greilly, Son of Peter, was Captal of Buch, from the 5 to the 29 of King Edward the III; as indeed he was from the 5 to the 50. Yet notwithstanding upon the Original Plate of his Name, set up in the Chappel at Windsor, it is engraven Piers Capitow de la Bouch, as if his Name also was Peter: When as it is evident, that these Plates were not set up at the Foundation; but many Years after, perhaps after King Edward's Death; as may be made manifest to any strict enquirer: And his Father being of the Name of Peter might cause a mistake at least in the Engraver: From whence afterward Authority grew also even to other writings. Nay, I shall hereafter prove, that as great a Mistake as this was engraven upon Queen Philippa's Tomb; thô done in King Edwards Life.

7. William

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

7. William Montagu, the hopefull young Earl of Salisbury.

8. Roger Lord Mortimer, Grandſon to Roger Earl of March, who five Years after obtain'd a Revocation of the Judgement againſt his Grandfather, and thereupon was reſtored in Blood, and to the Earldom of March, and to all his ſaid Grandfathers Lands, Honours, and Poſſeſſions: Being for his Valour and Worth highly meriting to be inſerted into this moſt Noble Order.

9. After him was inveſted the Couragious Knight John Lord Liſle.

10. Then Bartholomew Lord Burgherſh, aliàs Burwaſh, Junior, at that time but twenty Years old; but every way Worthy of this Honour.

11. John Lord Beauchamp, younger Brother to Thomas Earl of Warwick; a Noble Martialiſt of that Age.

12. John Lord Mohun of Dunſtor, a Conſtant Attendant of the Black-Prince in all his Wars.

13. Hugh Lord Courtney, Son to Hugh Courtney Earl of Devonſhire.

14. Thomas Lord Holland of Holland in Lancaſhire, who about the time of this his Creation, or the 23d. of King Edward, was Married to the Beauty of England, Joan Siſter to the Earl of Kent.

15. John Lord Grey of Codonore in Derbyſhire.

16. Sr. Richard Fitz-Simon, whoſe Services in War rais'd him to this Honourable Title.

17. Sr. Miles Stapleton, a Man of Great Nobility, and Integrity, and Expert in Martial Affairs.

18. Sr. Thomas Wale, a Knight of great Vertue and Worthineſs; but one, who thô by his early Valour he merited ſo High a Rank, yet by his too early Death, which happen'd within three Years after the Inſtitution, left his Stall void the Firſt of all theſe Founders.

19. Sr. Hugh Wrotteſly of Wrotteſly, in the County of Stafford Knight, from whom in a direct Line is Sr. Walter Wrotteſly of Wrotteſly in the foreſaid County Baronet, now [r] living deſcended.

[r] Aſhmole ità An°. Domini 1672.

20. Sr. Nele Loring, a Knight of great Valour and Nobility; and whom we have ſhewn to have been firſt Knighted for his ſignal Courage in the Naval Fight at Sluce.

21. The Lord John Chandos, a moſt Illuſtrious Hero, of whoſe Generoſity and Valour to write ſufficiently, would require a large Volume.

22. The Lord James Audley, a moſt Adventurous and Fortunate Commander, and Couſin to Nicolas Audley, Earl of Glouceſter.

23. Sr. Otho Holland, Brother to the Lord Thomas Holland aforeſaid.

24. Sr. Henry Eam of Brabant, commonly by Hiſtorians called Sr. Henry of Flanders; a Valiant and Loyal Servant to King Edward.

25. Sr. Sanchio Dambreticourt, a Valiant Knight of Heinalt, now Naturaliz'd in England.

26. Sr. Walter Pavely, who was Famous for his Exploits in ſeveral Warlike Expeditions.

Theſe were the Names, and this the Order, of the Firſt Knights of the Garter, whom the thrice Noble King Edward choſe to be his Companions and Fellows, in this Honourable Society: All Men of moſt ſignal Valour and Conduct, of High Birth and untainted Loyalty; So Generous and Heroick, that they might all ſeem Worthy to be Kings; and their Perſeverance in Vertue to the laſt, as it partly declares the ſharp Judgement the King uſed in their Election; ſo it ſhews of what Power and Efficacy that Honourable Tye was, and what Obligations to Vertuous Behaviour it laid upon them. But methinks it may juſtly be Wonder'd, how it came to paſs that this Great Honour being confer'd on ſo few, thoſe other Worthy Barons, who deſerv'd it no leſs, being laid aſide, ſhould notwithſtanding never ſhew the leaſt diſguſt at the Matter. For certainly the Noble and Heroick Lord Walter Manny, the Valiant and Daring Lord Reginald Cobham, Richard Fitz-Alan, the Great Earl of Arundel, Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, Lawrence Haſtings Earl of Pembroke, William Clinton Earl of Huntingdon, Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and his Warlike Brother, William Bohun Earl of Northampton, the Lord Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote, the Lord Roger Delaware and many more for Birth, Wiſdom, Loyalty, Wealth, Vertue, or Valour, were well Worthy of the Higheſt Honours. But this Prudent Prince would not make his Inſtitution cheap, by communicating it to many; nor have any of his Succeſſors to this Day exceeded the Number of 26. The mean while 'tis highly probable, that the other Lords thought it more Noble to grow emulous, who of them ſhould be moſt Worthy to ascend the first vacant Place, and we find by Degrees, that most of them did, as the Stalls fell void, atttain to that Dignity; as the two Earls of Essex and Northampton, the Earls of Arundel and Suffolk, the Lord Walter Manny, and Reginald Lord Cobham, and others; but the Rest either died, or were decrepit, and past Action almost, before their turns came, and so found no Room at all. AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

aſcend

VII. The Order being thus well-stockt at the beginning, has since that obtain'd such an High Esteem thrô all the Christian World; that divers [f] Emperours, Kings, and Sovereign Princes, have reputed it among their greatest Honours, to be chosen and admitted thereunto; insomuch as some of them have with Impatience Courted the Honour of Election. And we find remaining upon this Registry of True Glory, no less than Eight Emperours of Germany, Five French Kings, Five Kings of Denmark, Three Kings of Spain, Two Kings of Scotland, before the Realms were happily United Five Kings of Portugal, Two Kings of Sweedland, One King of Poland, One King of Bohemia, One King of Aragon, Two Kings of Castille, Two Kings of Naples, Two Arch-Dukes, One Duke of Guelderland, One Duke of Holland, Two Dukes of Burgundy, Two Dukes of Brunswicke, One Duke of Milain, Two Dukes of Urbin, One Duke of Ferrara, One Duke of Savoy, Two Dukes of Holstein, One Duke of Saxony, and One Duke of Wertemberg, Seven Count Palatines of the Rhyne, Four Princes of Orange, One Marques of Brandenberg, all Strangers; besides many other Worthies, and Persons of the Highest Rank and Vertue, both at home and abroad, to the Number of well near 500, since the First Institution: All whose Names, together with the Escutcheons of their Arms are still remaining Engraven on Square Plates of Mettal affixed to their several Stalls in the most Beautifull Chappel of St. George, and every Knights Banner is set up over his Head, during his Natural Life. So that We may justly conclude with our Learned Selden; that it exceeds in Majesty, Honour, and Fame, all Chevalrous Orders in the World.

[f] Ashmole p. 189.

VIII. No less Designs, than these, busied the Active Mind of this Illustrious Monarch, when he met with any Respit from War; which now is hasting on apace: For while by the Device of his Round-Table He was thus laying a Foundation for this Royal and Heroick Institution; King Philip of France, who already had begun to countermine him with another Table of his Erecting at Paris, and was extreamly offended with whatever King Edward went about, began to be jealous of certain of his Lords and others, who hitherto had served him faithfully; as if they secretly for all that favour'd King Edwards cause. Whether that was True, or no, whereof they were suspected, is no where made appear; but however King [t] Philip, under pretence of a Solemn Tourneament, which he then held at Paris in imitation of King Edwards at Windsor, as we shew'd; train'd thither the Lord Oliver Clisson, with ten or twelve other Lords of Bretagne in company of the Lord Charles of Blois, and there the most Loyal and Valiant Lord Clisson was suddenly by the jealous Kings Order apprehended, and clapt up in Prison, no Man being able to imagine for what reason; unless, that because King Edward had chose rather to release him by Exchange for the Lord Stafford, he was therefore suspected to be a secret Friend to the English. And notwithstanding, that he had so gallantly recover'd Vannes from the English, and at the same time had rid King Philip of the Lord Robert of Artois, one of his most mortal Enemies, now without any Process or hearing, he was adjudged to be drawn thrô the City to the Place of Execution; where [u] he lost his Head; and after that, his Body was hanged in Chains upon a Gibbet, and his Head sent to Nantes in Bretagne; where it was advanced upon a Pole over the Gates of the City, To the great [x] Astonishment of all Men and the infinite Regret and Indignation of the Nobility; whose Blood, till now, was not used to be shed; but in Battle for that Cruel Princes quarrel. This Lord Clisson left behind him a young Son, named Oliver, as his Father was; him his Relations, upon this Disaster, took up presently, and carry'd unto the Countess of Montford, where he was bred up with her young Son John, who was just about the same Age with him. Soon after there died in the same manner, and for as little matter, Sr. John, and Sr. Godfry de Malestroit, the Father and Son, two Valiant and Worthy Bretons also, Sr. John de Montauban, Sr. William Bruce, Sr. John Cablet, and Sr. John du Plessis Knights, and John Malestroit, Nephew to the foresaid Sr. John the Elder, Esquire, as also Robert Bruce, John and David de Sennes, Esquires. Shortly after there were also Executed in Paris, or as some say, [y] starved to Death, three Valiant Knights of Normandy, Sr. William Bacon, Sr. Richard Percy, and Sr. Rouland de la Rochetessone, all whose Heads were sent to Carentan, a Chief City in Normandy, which afterwards proved the utter Ruine of that Place; as we shall shew. Sr. Godfry of Harecourt [t] Froiss. c. 99. & Mezeray p. 21.

[u] Fabian p. 272.

[x] Mezeray p. 21.

[y] Froiss. c. 99.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

court himſelf, who was Lord of St. Saviour le Vicount, and Brother of the Lord Lewis Earl of Harcourt, had been ſerved in no better manner; but that he wiſely kept aloof; nor would he by any means obey King Philips Summons, but at laſt deſpairing of any tolerable ſecurity in thoſe parts, he came over into England to King Edward; who received him gladly, and made good uſe both of his Valour and Counſel in the following War, whereof he became a ſecond Firebrand, as the Lord Robert of Artois had been before him. And King Philip after his old manner to enflame the buſineſs the more, proceeded againſt him with an High Hand, and openly proſcribed him as a Traytor, and Enemy to the Crown of France; but King Edward on the other hand, being then again at Enmity with Philip, called him Couſin, allowed him an Honourable Maintenance, and made him one of the Marſhals of his Hoſt: But this happen'd after the Death of the Lord Cliſſon [z] almoſt a Year. Thus King Philip, when he ſhould rather have endeavoured of Enemies to make Friends, by his raſh ſeverity, and want of Princely connivence, and temporizing a little, rendred even many of his own Subjects Enemies unto him.

[z] Froiſ. c. 114.

IX. Of the firſt part of this Tragedy, King Edward had News immediately; for while [a] at Windſor he was buſied in preparing his Round-Table, of which we have ſpoken; Mr. Henry [b] Maleſtroit, a Deacon in Holy Orders, Maſter of the Requeſts to King Philip, and younger Brother to Sr. Godfry of Maleſtroit, whom the ſaid King had unjuſtly put to Death, came over to England in deep diſpleaſure; and told the King, complaining unto him moſt lamentably, "of the Death of his Father, Brother, and Couſin, "and how cruelly, and without all Reaſon King Philip had Executed ſeveral other Lords, "Knights, and Eſquires, and eſpecially the noble Lord Cliſſon, who had ſo faithfully and "valiantly ſerved againſt the Engliſh; only becauſe he had a jealouſie, that they were "ſecretly King Edwards Friends: Wherefore he exhorted him earneſtly, that ſince the "French King had thereby broken the Truce, he would renew the War againſt him, "and Revenge the Blood of thoſe his Innocent Friends. How King Edward reſented this News, We ſhall ſhew, when we have firſt diſpatch'd what concerns this Meſſenger, Mr. Henry Maleſtroit: To him the King preſently aſſigned a place of good Authority in the City of Vannes, in Bretagne, which was then held of England; but ſhortly after when the Truce was broken, was deliver'd up to the French by the two Cardinals, who were Guaranties of the Truce. There this poor Gentleman being found was ſent away Priſoner to Paris; where he was ſoon after put in a Tumbrell, or Dung-Cart, to which he was faſtned with Chains of Iron, and ſo convey'd bare-headed with great noiſe and outcries of the People, from the Caſtle down thrô the High-ſtreet of Paris, till he came to the Biſhops Palace; where they deliver'd him up to the Biſhop; and he by vertue of a Commiſſion purchas'd by King Philip from the Pope, then and there degraded and deprived of all Degrees, and holy Orders, the ſaid Maſter Henry, and ſo deliver'd him back again to the Secular Power. Then he was judged to ſtand in the Pillory at ſuch an hour, for three Days together in the moſt Publique place of the City; but he was ſo cruelly pelted with rotten eggs, apples, and other filth and ordure of the City; that on the third Day he was found dead, and afterwards had no better burial, than a Dog.

[a] Froiſ. c. 101.

[b] Fabian. p. 273.

King Philip not content with theſe ſeverities to cool the affections of his Grandees, at the ſame time (beſide thoſe notable Subſidies, which his Subjects of France had freely granted him to the maintenance of his Wars) [c] levied ſtrange and unheard of Taxes, and which was worſe ſettled a Gabelle upon Salt, for which cauſe our Edward by way of Raillery called him the Author of the Salique Law. This Impoſt, which makes the Sun and Water to be ſold, was the Invention of the Jews, Mortal Enemies to the Chriſtian Name, as the word Gabelle denotes, which comes from the [d] Hebrew.

[c] Mezeray ad an. 1344. Fabian p. 271.

[d] גָּבַל terminavit.

X. But to return; when King Edward had received the News which Mr. Henry Maleſtroit brought him, how the Lord Cliſſon and others had loſt their Lives for his Sake, he took deep [e] Indignation at this Inveterate Malice of the French King's, and was once in mind to have ſerved the Lord Henry du Leon, who was now his Priſoner, in the ſame manner. But his Couſin the Generous Earl of Darby, ſhew'd to him and his Council ſuch Reaſons as alter'd his furious Intention, and ſomething calm'd his Paſſion, "Sir ſaid "he, thô King Philip being ſtung with mortal Jealouſie, hath raſhly done ſo baſe an "Action, as unjuſtly to put to Death ſuch valiant and worthy Knights: Yet for Gods "ſake, let not the bright Splendour of your Name be ſullied with any ſuch black and "ſhamefull Deed. And to ſay the Truth, your Priſoner Sr. Henry, as he was no way "acceſſary to his Maſters Fault, ſo methinks ought not to find any harder Uſage for "the ſame; but rather to be put to a reaſonable Ranſom, as a Man of Honour taken "in the Wars.

[e] Froiſ. c. 101. & Mezeray ad hunc annum.

Here-

Hereupon the King, who always was inclinable to hear Reaſon, became ſomething more pacified, and ſent for the Lord Henry du Leon to come before him, at which time he ſpake thus unto him, ſhaking his Head for anger: "Ah! Sr. Henry, Sr. Hen- "ry! Mine Adverſary, Philip de Valois hath ſhew'd in a moſt cruel manner his extream "Tyranny, unjuſtly to put to death ſuch Worthy Knights: Wherewith I am infinite- "ly diſpleaſed (althô I never held any Correſpondence with any of them) becauſe I "queſtion not but he did it in deſpight of Us. And therefore, if I would contend with "him in Malice, I could now ſerve you in like manner; for you have done to Me and "mine more diſpleaſure in Bretagne than any other. But this I will paſs by and (let "Philip do his worſt) to our Power we ſhall preſerve our Reputation, and not care "to imitate him in his ignoble and unprincely Actions. Wherefore for my Couſin of "Darby's ſake, who hath entreated me in your Behalf, I am content to deliver you "for a ſmall Ranſom, on Condition you will do as I ſhall require you. The Knight an-ſwer'd, making a low Reverence, "Sir, I ſhall readily do what you ſhall pleaſe to com- "mand me. Then the King proceeded, "I know well you are one of the moſt ſub- "ſtantial Knights in Bretagne, and (if I would be ſtrict with you) that you are well "able to pay me thirty or fourty thouſand [f] Scutes: But if you will engage upon your "Honour to go to mine Adverſary, Philip de Valois, and to ſhew him from me, that "ſince he hath ſo cruelly and unjuſtly put to Death ſuch valiant Knights in Spight of "Me, I ſay and will prove, that he hath broken the Truce taken between Me and "Him; wherefore alſo I renounce it utterly on my Part, and from this Day forward "mortally defie him: This Meſſage if you will truly perform, your Ranſom ſhall be "but 10000 Scutes which you ſhall truly pay, and ſend to Bruges within 15 days af- "ter you have croſt the Seas. And moreover you ſhall ſay to all Knights and Eſquires "of thoſe Parts, that for all this they forbear not to come to our Feaſt at Windſor, for "they ſhall be welcome to Us, and enjoy the benefit of our ſafe Conduct as We have "declared. "Sir replied the Knight, to the beſt of my Power I ſhall perform your "Commands; and God reward your Majeſty for the Great Clemency You are pleas'd "to ſhew unto me: And I heartily thank my Noble Lord of Darby for his Good word "in my Behalf. So Sr. Henry du Leon took his leave of the King, and within a few days went on Board at Southhampton, with intent to go to Harfleur in Normandy, and ſo to Paris to deliver King Edwards Defiance: But a ſtorm took him in ſuch a manner, that being forced among other things to fling all his horſes overboard, he was beſide ſo toſſed and haraſſed, that he never after recovered his Health; thô at laſt he gain'd land at Crotoy in Picardy, at the mouth of the River Somme. From thence both he and all his Company were fain to foot it to Abbeville, about five French miles journey, where they gat Horſes: But Sr. Henry was ſo ſick, that he was fain to be carried in a Litter to Paris, where he did his Meſſage to King Philip very punctually; but as he was returning homeward into Bretagne, he died by the way at the City of Angiers, juſt upon the Borders of his own Country: A very noble and valiant but unfortunate Gentleman, who never had any reſt or comfort after he had betray'd his Maſter, John of Montford, in the City of Nantes, as we have related.

[f] A Scute is 6 s. 8 d. Sterling.

AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

XI. In this very ſeaſon, before the Solemnity at Windſor was over, King [g] Edward heard News from Gaſcoigne by the Lord De le Sparre, the Lord of Chaumont, and the Lord of Mucidan, who were ſent into England by the Lord De la Brett, aliàs de Albreth, the Lord of Pamiers, the Lord of Montferant, the Lord of Duras, the Lord of Craon, and the Lord John Greilly with Others, who held of the King of England, to ſhew unto him the State of the Countreys thereabout. And other Meſſengers alſo at the ſame time came from Bayonne and Bourdeaux to the ſame purpoſe. All theſe were highly entertained by the King, to whom they diſtinctly ſhew'd the weak Condition of his Country of Guienne and Gaſcoigne, and eſpecially of his good Cities of Bourdeaux and Bayonne; wherefore they deſired him to ſend thither ſuch Commanders, and ſuch Forces as might be able to keep the Field againſt the French, who were already preparing for the next Campagne; and both ſecretly attempted to debauch the Loyalty of his Friends, and other ways alſo to run counter to the expreſs Form of the Truce. And moreover a little before, Pope [h] Clement the VI. had in the Publique Conſiſtory created Don Lewis of Spain, Prince of the Fortunate Iſlands, he being then Earl of Cleremont, and one of the French Ambaſſadors: Upon which Occaſion his Holineſs took this Text, [i] "I will make Thee a Prince over a Great Nation. Theſe Iſles are the ſame with the Canaries, which are ſeven Iſlands of Africa in the Atlantick Sea, and which as [k] one ſays, would have proved a gift worthy of Acceptance, had his Holineſs alſo given a peaceable and quiet Poſſeſſion thereof. But the Inhabitants were Ma-

[g] Froiſ. c. 102.

[h] Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc ann. §. 39. ad §. 50. &c.

[i] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 155.

[k] Walſing. ibid.

hometans,

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

hometans, and must first be conquer'd, before they would accept of a Spanish Prince; wherefore the English [l] Ambassadors who were then at Avignon, and understanding hereof concluded, that his Holiness had design'd him to be Prince of Great Britain, as which was one of the most Happy and Fortunate Islands in the World; not to say, that among the [m] Ancients it was so accounted indeed. When they saw that Don Lewis began thereupon to raise Men of War, in his own and the Pope's Name over all France, Spain and Italy, they no longer doubted, but that all these Preparations were design'd against England, wherefore they secretly left Avignon, and made all speed home they could, where they related these Matters to the King their Master, which yet ought to be imputed rather to their Zeal, than their so gross Ignorance of Topography, [n] as some suppose. And Du Chesne himself confesses, that all this was really intended against King Edward, thô being a Frenchman he qualifies the Matter, saying, it was only in order to resist the New War, which was lately threatned by the Mouth of Sr. Henry du Leon. But then I cannot see what need there should be of all this Dissimulation, unless these Preparations were begun before that Defiance, and so consequently could not but give just matter of Jealousie to England. However upon these frequent Alarms, King Edward resolv'd not to be taken napping, but to provide for the Defence of his own Land, and to keep the War on foot in Bretagne, Gascoigne, and where else there should be occasion.

[l] Du Chesne p. 660. ex R. Avesbury, &c.
[m] Tzetzes in Lycophr.
[n] Dr. Hakewills Apology, &c. l. 3. c. 3. p. 280.

XII. First therefore [o] by his Letters Patents he constitutes his Noble Cousin Henry Plantagenet Earl of Darby, and Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, his Lieutenants in the Dukedom of Aquitain, and the Countries adjoyning, with power to govern and defend those Territories, to demand and receive the Possession of the Castles, Places and Rights, unjustly detained from him, and to receive such as should return to their Obedience, to the Grace and Favour of the King, as also the Homage and Fidelity, from whomsoever in those Parts due; and generally to do all things for the Defence and Recovery of the King's Rights, and the good Government of those Countries and his Subjects, with Command to all Archbishops, Bishops and other Officers both Spiritual and Temporal, to yield Obedience to these Earls in his Name.

[o] Ashmole p. 679. ex Rot. Vasc. 18. Ed. 3. m. 9. & Knighton p. 2583. n. 60.

And whereas the King upon false Suggestions had been deceived in many of his Grants and Donations in that Dukedom; by other Letters Patents, he now gave Power to the Earl of Darby to seise into his Hands all the Castles, Lands, Liberties and Profits, formerly granted by him; and those that should appear to have been obtained upon untrue Suggestions, to retain without Restitution, but if otherwise, to restore entirely. The Earls had also a like Commission, extending to those Grants, which were made by his Father King Edward II. upon the same Pretences, as well as by himself. Besides this they had a General Commission, to treat and conclude with all Persons of whatsoever State or Condition, Kingdome or Nation, for the Settling of Alliances and mutual Assistance between the King and them; to retain Men for the Kings Service, and to agree about Fees, Wages and Rewards to be paid unto them.

By other Commissions they had Power to treat and conclude with Alphonso, King of Castille and Leon (there stiled Alphonsus Rex Castiliæ & Legionis, Algeziræ, Toleti, Gallœciæ, Seviliæ, Cordubæ, Murciæ, Giennii, & Algarbiæ, Comes Molinæ) or his Deputies, upon all differences arising between their Subjects, especially Mariners and Citizens of Bayonne, amicably to compose them; as also about a perpetual League of Friendship between them, their Friends and Subjects, and to afford each other their mutual Assistance, with Power to make Substitutes in their stead.

The like Commissions they had with the same Powers to treat with Don Alphonso sirnamed the Brave, King of Portugal, and Don Pedro King of Aragon, both Neighbours also to France, on the side of Navarre and the Pyrenæan Mountains. All which Commissions bare Date 24 March 18 Edw. 3.

About this time also the King [p] order'd a Noble and Valiant Knight of England, named Sr. Thomas Dagworth, who was afterwards a Baron of the Realm, to go into Bretagne with an 100 Men of Arms and 200 Archers to reinforce the Countess of Montford; for he doubted not, but King Philip would renew the War there too, because of the Defiance lately sent him by Sr. Henry du Leon.

[p] Froiss. c. 102. fol. 50.

The Young [q] Earl of Salisbury and Others to the number of 600 Men of Arms, and 2000 Archers, he sent under the Leading of Edward Baliol to look to the Motions of the Scots, and to guard the Marches beyond the Trent. And thus did this vigilant young Monarch send forth his Men of War into divers Parts, according to the exigence of Affairs, as he either found or foresaw a Storm, and he deliver'd to all the Captains Gold and Silver sufficient to pay their Wages, and to retain Souldiers.

[q] Froiss. ibid. & Knighton p. 2584. n. 30.

XIII. But

XIII. But yet at the ſame time, that he was thus taking up Arms, to let the Chriſtian World know, that he did not without great Provocations thus again go about to diſturb the Peace of Chriſtendom, he ſent [r] his Letters to the Pope, ſhewing how King Philip had deſpightfully ſlain, and put to Death Good and Loyal Knights and Gentlemen upon his Account, and for hate of his Perſon; whereby he had notoriouſly violated the Truce lately taken between them; which as he could not but highly reſent, ſo he was preparing to revenge it: But yet if King Philip would according as Reaſon requireth, retract for what he had done amiſs, and offer Satisfaction for theſe injuries, he would at the time appointed ſend other Ambaſſadors to the Apoſtolick See, and give them Inſtructions for making Peace. The Pope having heard thus much, return'd an Anſwer to this Purpoſe, "After having manifeſted to King Edward in how "great Dangers the whole Chriſtian World was toſſed, and that this Mortal War thus "kindled between France and England did grievouſly afflict the Church; he then told "him that King Philip had granted Letters of ſafe Conduct, as the Engliſh Ambaſſa"dors had required; and as to the Death of the Lords, Eſquires and Others, King Phi"lip had wrote unto him, that they for their enormous Crimes, Murders and Rapines, "had been juſtly put to Death by him, not thereby to break the Truce, but by the "fear of their Puniſhment to terrifie others from the Breach thereof; and that he had "added, how the King of England's Garriſons had attempted many things againſt the "Truce. Then he begg'd the King, to let him know his Secret Reſolutions, for that "he would never divulge them, but uſe his utmoſt to make a final Peace, which was "ſo profitable and advantagious to the Expedition againſt the Turks. And he aſſured him, "that hitherto he had defer'd to diſpence with the Canon-Law, for the Marriage be"tween his Eldeſt Son and the Duke of Brabant's Daughter, in hopes that by that Bond "of Affinity tied in France a ſure Peace would enſue, &c. Thus the Pope neglected not to heal theſe Wounds of Bleeding Chriſtendom, but King Edward was too much exaſperated by his Adverſary to ſtop now, ſince nothing of Satisfaction was offer'd, but only frivolous and falſe Excuſes. Wherefore in order to enable himſelf the better to carry on this War, he now held his High Court of Parliament at Weſtminſter on the 7 Day of June, being the [f] Monday next after the Octaves of Holy Trinity. On which day in preſence of the King, certain of the Lords and Commons being then aſſembled in St. Edwards Chamber, otherwiſe called the Painted Chamber, and the Lord Chancellor at the Kings Command declared, how ſundry things of the laſt Parliament were left to be done at this. And that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, had againſt the time of the ſaid Parliament called a Convocation of his Clergy: At which Parliament and Convocation ſundry of all Eſtates were abſent, &c. Whereat the King did no leſs muſe than he was thereat offended. Wherefore he charged the Archbiſhop for his part to puniſh the Defaults of the Clergy, and he would do the like touching the Parliament.

Hereupon Proclamation was made, that none ſhould wear Armour or Weapons in or about London and Weſtminſter, during the Seſſion of the Parliament.

Receivours of Petitions for England, Gaſcogne, Wales, Ireland, Bretagne, Scotland, and the Foreign Iſles and other Places beyond the Seas: Sr. Thomas Drayton appointed Clark of the Parliament, and this is all was done that Day, being Monday.

On the Tueſday the Names of the Lords of the Parliament were examined before the King, that ſuch as made default in being abſent might abide the Kings Order.

On Thurſday after, the Chancellour in full Parliament, in Preſence of the King, and of his Son the Prince of Wales, declared the Cauſe of the ſame Parliament, viz. The Articles of the Truce, and the Breaches of the ſame by the French King, which were there particularly inſtanced. Whereupon the Three Eſtates were willed to adviſe upon the Premiſes, and to ſhew their Opinion of them by Monday next enſuing. The ſame Monday they had their time enlarged untill Wedneſday in the Week of St. John, being the 23 of June, on which day every of the Lords and Commons by themſelves with one Aſſent, required the King to end the ſame War, either by Battle or Honourable Peace. And if the King ſhall attempt War eſtſoons, that he do not ſtay the ſame at the Letters or Requeſts of the Pope, or of any whomſoever, but to end the ſame by Dint of Sword.

Whereunto the King agreed; but foraſmuch as the ſame could not be atchieved without Aid, the Clergy of Canterbury granted unto the King a Deſme Triennial: And the Commons granted unto him Two Fifteenths of Counties, and Two Deſmes of Cities and of Towns; on Condition, that the ſame be leavied in ſuch manner as the laſt was; that the Commons Petitions be Granted, and that the ſame may be imployed upon the Wars with the Aſſent of the Lords: That the Prince and Sr. Edward Bailiol may

AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[r] Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc annum §. 61. & 62.

[f] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 56. 18 Ed. 3. §. 1. Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgment p. 44, &c. v. Statute Books.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

may lie on the North-Marches: And becauſe the King ſhould paſs over the Seas in Perſon to end this Quarrel, they further grant unto the King a Third Fifteenth.

Then after the Petitions of the Commons and Clergy, with their Anſwers; the Commons by their Petition recite the Act of Proviſion made in the laſt Parliament, and becauſe no Penalty was provided therefore, requeſt; that ſuch as incurr the breach of the ſame, by receipt, procuring, or Counſel in ſtay of any temporal judgement, ſhall lie in perpetual Priſon, or be forejudged the Land: And that all Juſtices of Aſſiſes, Goal-Delivery, and Oyer and Terminer may determine the ſame: And that the Act of Proviſion may continue for ever. That if any Archbiſhop or other Perſon, Religieux, or other, do not preſent within four Moneths ſome able Clerk to any Dignity, whereof any Perſon hath obtained from the Court of Rome any Proviſion, but ſurceaſe the ſame; that then the King may preſent ſome able Clerk himſelf. That if any Biſhop Elect ſhall refuſe to take ſuch[t] Biſhop, other than by ſuch, then ſuch Clerk ſhall not enter, nor enjoy his Temporalities without the Kings ſpecial Licence. That the King ſhall diſpoſe of all ſuch Benefices and Dignities of ſuch Aliens his Enemies, as remain in ſuch Countries of his Enemies; and employ the Profits thereof to the Defence of the Realm. That Commiſſions be ſent into all the Kings Ports, to apprehend all ſuch Perſons, as ſhall bring in any ſuch Inſtrument from the Court of Rome; and to bring them forthwith before the Council to anſwer thereto. That the Deanery of York, which is recoverable by Judgement in the Kings Court, may be beſtowed upon ſome Able Man within the Realm, who will maintain the ſame againſt him, who holdeth the ſame by Proviſion from the Court of Rome, being the Common Enemy to the King, and to the Realm, and that the Main Profits may be employed upon the Defence of the Realm.

[t] Ità M.S. ſed Brother, in Sr. Rob. Cotton.

To all which Petitions Anſwer was made in form following; It is agreed by the King, Earls, Barons, Juſtices, and other Wiſe Men of the Realm; that the Petitions aforeſaid be made in ſufficient form of Law.

According to the Petitions aforeſaid, certain Proceſſes made againſt Sr. William de la Pole, and Reginald at Conduit out of the Exchequer, are revoked as Erroneous: And that they ſhall be charged anew to accompt for Moneys received for the Kings Wooll, notwithſtanding any Letter of Acquittance to them made. The which Accord was ſent to the King, to know his Pleaſure therein.

The Petitions of the Clerks of the Chancery; that whereas the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper for the time being, ought to have the Cogniſance of all Pleas of Treſpaſſes, done by the ſaid Clerks, or other Servants, where the Chancery ſhall remain: Yet notwithſtanding, the Sheriffs of London had attached one Gilbert de Chriſhull, a Clerk of the ſaid Chancery in London, at the Suit of one Killingbury, a Draper, upon a Bill of Treſpaſs: Which Gilbert brought a Superſedeas of Priviledge to the ſaid Sheriffs; which they would not allow, but drew him to find ſureties: The Clerks pray Remedy therefore and maintenance of their Liberties.

The Parliament doth confirm their Liberties, and reciting the Contempt for neglecting the Proceſs, conclude; that Writs be ſent to the Mayor of London, to attach the Sheriffs, and others, who were Parties, and Maintainers of the Quarrel, by their Bodies, to appear before the King in Chancery at a certain day, to anſwer, as well to the Contempt of the proceſs, as to the Breach of the Liberty, and Damage of the Party.

At the Petition of the Commons of Nottingham, it is enacted; that as well the Goal of Nottingham, which the King hath granted to Sr. John Brocas, during his Life, as all other Goals in the like Caſe, ſhould be annexed to the Sheriffwick of every County, according to an Act made An°. 14. Ed. 3.

That no man within Cities, or Towns, or elſewhere, do carry Maces of ſilver, but only the Kings Serjeants; but that they carry Maces of Copper only, and of no other Mettal.

It was anſwer'd, the ſame ſhould be ſo; excepting, that the Serjeants of the City of London, may carry their Maces of ſilver within the Liberties of London, before the Mayor, in the preſence of the King.

It is to be obſerved, that of the Oaths of Juſtices, and of the Clerks of the Chancery, expreſſed in the [u] Printed Statutes, there is no mention made in the Record. And this is the Sum of this Seſſions of Parliament; the reſt being to be had in the Statute Books of this Year.

[u] An°. 18. Ed. 3. p. 88.

[x] Froiſ. c. 102.

XIV. And now the [x] Earls of Darby and Arundel, with the Earls of Pembroke and Oxford, the Lord Ralph Stafford, the Lord Walter Manny, Sr. Frank van Hall, an Almain Lord of great Valour and Fidelity to the Engliſh, Sr. Henry Eam of Brabant, Sr. Richard Fitz-Simon, Sr. Hugh Haſtings, Sr. Stephen Tombey, Sr. Richard Haydon, Sr. John

John Norwich, Sr. Richard Radcliff, Sr. Robert Oxenden, and others, to the Number of 500 Knights and Eſquires, and 2000 Archers, were ready to paſs the Seas. The King upon taking leave of his Couſin the Earl of Darby, ſaid unto him, "Take with you "Gold and Silver enough, and beſtow it freely among thoſe that do well; for in ſo "doing, You will win their hearts, which is beyond all Worldly Treaſure. The Earl took ſhipping at Southampton, and on the 6 of June Landed at Bayonne, a good and ſtrong City of Gaſcogne, that held of King Edward. There he tarried ſeven Days, and on the Eighth marched to Bourdeaux, having largely encreaſed his Forces: At this City he was received with Solemn Proceſſion; and here alſo he tarried a while, being lodged in the Stately Abbey of St. Andrew.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

At this time there was a Valiant French Lord, called Gaſton Earl of Laille, Deputy for the French King in Guienne, who excepting the loſs he ſuffer'd at Bourdeaux by the Lord Oliver Ingham, of which we * ſpake, had hitherto kept footing in that Country very well, having taken divers Towns and Caſtles from the Engliſh. He was endued with Abſolute Power, as the Kings Lieutenant, that he might be render'd more able to reduce and defend thoſe parts: Wherefore underſtanding now of the Earl of Darby's arrival at Bourdeaux, he ſent for the Earls of Cominges and of Perigord, the Vicount of Carmain, the Earl of Valentinois, the Lord of Mirande, and the Lord of Duras; for the Viſcount of Villemur, for the Lord De la Bard, the Lord of Picornet, the Viſcount of Chaſtillon, the Lord of [y] Chaſteauneufe, the Lord of Leſcun, the Abbot of St. Salvin, and all other Lords thereabout, that held for France; of whom the Earl of Laille, demanded, "what they thought as to the coming of the Earl of Darby? They "anſwer'd, how they thought themſelves ſtrong enough to defend the Paſſage at Berge- "rac. This anſwer ſatisfied the Earl, and thereupon he ſent for Men from all Parts, to reinforce his Troops, and ſo went and kept the ſuburbs of Bergerac, which were ſtrong and of large extent, and encloſed with the River of Dordogne.

* C. 15. §. 1. p. 163.

[y] Ita Du Cheſne.

The [z] Earl of Darby had been now at Bourdeaux about 15 Days, when hearing what Proviſion was made to reſiſt him at Bergerac, he reſolved firſt of all to march thitherward. The Marſhals of the Hoſt were Sr. Walter Manny, and Sr. Frank van Hall, who rode the firſt Morning three Leagues to a Caſtle of their own, called Monlieu, where they tarried the Remainder of that Day, and all that Night. The next Morning early the Marſhals Forerunners rode up to the very Barriers of Bergerac, and having there well view'd the Demeanor of the French, return'd and told the Lord Manny, that they found nothing formidable in what they had ſeen. That Morning the Engliſh dined betimes, becauſe they deſign'd the reſidue of the Day for Action; and as they ſat at dinner, Sr. Walter Manny applying himſelf to the Earl of Darby, ſaid merrily, "My Lord, if We were good Men of Arms, We ſhould drink this evening "with the French Lords in the Suburbs or City of Bergerac. The Earl reply'd, "it "ſhall not be my fault if we fail, I'll aſſure you. When the Captains heard that, they ſaid to one another, "Let us haſte to Arms, for we are now for Bergerac; and accordingly every Man was Armed, and on Horſeback, and the Captains ranged them in Order of Battle, without any other command given. When the Earl of Darby ſaw the great Ardour and Alacrity of his Souldiers, he took great Pleaſure thereat, and ſaid aloud, "Let us then ride on to our Enemies in the Name of God and St. George. Thus they rode forth with their Banners diſplayed in the heat of the Day, till they came before Bergerac to the Barriers, which were not eaſie to be won, becauſe part of the great and rapid River of Dordogne runs about them. But ſometimes the raſhneſs of Men themſelves contributes more to their own Ruine, than either the Force or Malice of their Enemies: For when theſe Frenchmen ſaw the Engliſh come ſo forward to aſſail them in leſs Numbers than they had expected, they iſſued out againſt them in very good Order, ſaying among themſelves, how they ſhould ſoon be driven back again with a Vengeance. But they did not conſider, that moſt of their Foot were Country Bores, and poor-ſpirited Peaſants, of ſmall Courage, and leſs Skill, undiſciplin'd, and but ill-armed; Who when now they ſaw the Engliſh approaching them undauntedly, and felt, and ſaw how fiercely the Archers ſhot among them, and beheld the dreadfull appearance of ſhining ſteel, glittering Banners, and Standards waving in the wind, to which they had been but little accuſtomed, they preſently turned their Backs and fell foul among their own Men of Arms; the Engliſh at the ſame time with a terrible ſhout falling in upon them, and beating them down on every ſide. As for the French Men of Arms, they could neither move forward for the Confuſion of them that fled, nor backward for others of their own Footmen, who were behind, and recoyled now without any Array. The Archers of England were on each Wing, and ſhot ſo thick together on the Flank of the Enemy, that neither was there any ſafety on that part; and the mean while the Men of Arms in very good Order, made a terrible havock among the confuſed Ranks of the Frenchmen. So that with wonderfull loſs, and in much diſorder, they were utterly beaten back into the Suburbs of Bergerac; but ſo unfortunately, that the firſt Bridge and Barrs were won by fine force, for the Engliſh fell in with them pell mell; and there upon the Cauſey were many Knights beaten down, ſlain, and wounded, and not a few taken Priſoners of them, who hoped in that narrow Paſſage to beat the Engliſh back. Among others the Lord of Mirepoix was ſlain under the Banner of Sr. Walter Manny, who purſuing the matter, was the firſt that enter'd the Suburbs. When the Lord of Laille ſaw the Faux-bourg enter'd, and that his Men were broken, diſorder'd, and in utter confuſion, then he thought it high time to Retreat into the City, and ſave himſelf, and as many as he might: So in haſte he paſſed the ſecond Bridge; thô not without much difficulty; for before the Bridge there was a fierce Skirmiſh, the Lords and Knights on both ſides fighting there Hand to Hand; and ſtill the Lord Manny advanced himſelf with ſingular Courage among the thickeſt and the foremoſt, that he was in great Danger of being taken, or ſlain: But his Incomparable Valour, and the terrour that poſſeſt the French, together with his good Fortune, preſerved him to more Honourable Actions. There the Lord of Chaſteauneufe, the Lord of Chaſtillon, the Lord of Bouquentine, and the Lord of Leſcun, and many other Perſons of the greateſt Rank and Valour were taken, others ſlain, and the reſt with much adoe were brought off into the Town; when preſently they let down their Portcullis, cloſed their Gates, and ſo mounted the Walls to defend them. This Bickering was not ended, till late in the Evening, when the Engliſh being very weary and tired with the heat of the Day, and of the Action, drew back into the Suburbs, which they had entirely won. And here they found ſuch plenty of Wine, and other Proviſion, as was ſufficient to ſerve their whole Army for two Moneths.

[z] Froiſ. c. 103. fol. 50. b.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

The next Morning the Earl of Darby ſounded his Trumpets, order'd his Battails, approached the Town, and began a terrible Aſſault, which laſted till Noon: When ſeeing nothing was to be got that way (for the place was ſtrong and well defended) the Aſſault ceaſed, and the Lords of England went to Council. There they determin'd to Aſſault the Town by Water; for they found, that on that ſide, it was only cloſed with Pales, whereupon the Earl of Darby ſent to the Navy at Bourdeaux for Ships; and had accordingly 60 Ships and Barges brought to him. The next Day in the Evening, they order'd their Land Battails, and the Morning following by Sun-riſe, the Navy was ready under the Command of Ralph Lord Stafford, to begin the Aſſault by Water. The Engliſh Men of Arms adventur'd themſelves boldly under the Protection of the Archers, and came to the great Barrs before the Pales, which they preſently began to hew down with Axes; and then the Townſmen ſent to the Earl of Laille and his Captains, deſiring them well to conſider their Condition, for they were all in Danger to be loſt. "And that if the Town was once enter'd by force; their Lives were "all forfeited: Wherefore they conceiv'd it better to yield to the Earl of Darby, than "to put all to the hazard by remaining obſtinate too long. "Well, ſaid the Earl of "Laille, let us then go where this great Danger is: For we will not yield up this "Place ſo tamely; and ſaying ſo, with a choice Company of Men of Arms, and 200 Croſsbows of Genoua, he went to defend the Pales. The Engliſh Archers ſhot ſo cloſe together, that none could appear at the Defence of the Pales, without imminent Danger; but the Genoueſe Croſsbows, who were all fenced with Targets againſt their ſhot, held them hard at Work all that Day; ſo that many were hurt on both ſides. But at laſt in the very cloſe of the Day, the Engliſh reſolving to overcome all Difficulties, contended ſo Couragiouſly, that they brake down a great Pane of the Pales; at which the Beſieged retiring back deſired to come to a Treaty. Whereupon becauſe it was late, a Truce was granted for the Remainder of that Day, and the Night following, on Condition, that the Men of Bergerac ſhould not fortifie, or mend up their Pales in the mean time. So either Party withdrew, but the French Lords went together to conſult, what was beſt to do in this exigence: And the Reſult was, that about Midnight they truſſed up bag and baggage, and ſecretly left the Town, taking the way to la Reole, a ſtrong Town upon the Garonne, about 11 French Miles from Bergerac. The next Morning early the Engliſh came again in their Barks and Boats, under the Command of the Lord Ralph Stafford, before the Pales of the Town, where they had broken down that large Pane the Day before. Here they found certain of the greateſt Burgeſſes in a Suppliant Manner, who deſired of the Lord Stafford, and the other Engliſh Captains, that they would intreat the Earl of Darby of his wonted Goodneſs to receive them them to Mercy, granting them their Lives and Goods; and that from thenceforward they would be good Subjects to the King of England. The Earls of Oxford and Pembroke promiſed to do their beſt for them, and ſo leaving the Lord Stafford there ſtill with his Veſſels, went to the Earl of Darby, and ſhew'd him the Requeſt of the Burgeſſes. Then ſaid the Earl of Darby, "He that deſireth Mercy, ought to have it: Bid them "open their Gates immediately, and they ſhall ſuffer no harm from Me or Mine. The two Earls returned, and related what the Earl of Darby had ſaid, whereupon the Burgeſſes Aſſembled all the Inhabitants, rang their Bells, open'd wide their Gates, and went forth Men and Women in Proceſſion, and humbly met the Earl of Darby, preſenting him the Keys of the Town, and ſo they went back with him into the Chief Church, where they ſware unto him Faith and Homage, in the Name of the King of England, by Vertue of a Commiſſion which as we ſhew'd before, he had for that purpoſe.

AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

That ſame day [a] the Earl of Laille being eſcaped with all his remaining Forces from Bergerac to Reole, reſolv'd to ſeparate his Company, becauſe he was not able as then to keep the Field againſt the Earl of Darby, and to ſend ſome into one Fortreſs and ſome into another, to hold Frontier War againſt the Engliſh. The Seneſchall of Tholouſe, and the Viſcount of Villemur went to Auberoche, Sr. Bertram du Pleſſis to Peligrue, the Lord of Montbrandon to Mandurant, the Lord Philip of Dijon to Montagret, a chief Town belonging to the Earl of Laille, and Sr. Arnold of Dijon to Montgiſe, Sr. Robert of Malmore to the great Town of Beaumont en Laillois, which was part of the Earl of Laille's Poſſeſſion, and Sr. Charles of Poictiers to Pennes in Agenois. Thus were theſe Knights diſperſed into ſeveral Garriſons, but the Earl of Laille himſelf remained ſtill in Reole, and repaired the Caſtle and ſtrengthned the Fortifications, and gather'd ſtore of Proviſions, as one that expected a ſudden Siege.

[a] Froiſ. c. 104. & Du Cheſne p. 661. Aſhmole p. 680. Holinſhead, &c.

Now when the Earl of Darby had tarried at Bergerac the ſpace of two days to ſettle Affairs there, he demanded of the Seneſchal of Bourdeaux Sr. Oliver Ingham, what way was beſt for him to take further; for he ſaid, he would not looſe the Summer without Action. The Seneſchal told him, he thought it beſt to march toward Perigord, and into High Gaſcogne. Accordingly the Earl of Darby began his March that way, having left a Valiant and Loyal Knight, named Sr. John St. John his Captain in Bergerac: The firſt Place the Earl met with in his March was the Caſtle of la Linde upon the Dordogne, Captain whereof was the [b] Viguier of Tholouſe; and this the Earl thought not reaſonable to leave behind him, wherefore he gave Order to attack it; but the firſt Attempt proved wholly fruitleſs. But the next day the Souldiers brought thither Faggots, Timber, Turf and other Stuff, wherewith they filled the Ditches; So that now they might come cloſe to digg at the Walls, or to ſcale them. Things being in this Readineſs, Sr. Frank van Hall exhorted the Beſieged to yield in time, for if they continued obſtinate a little longer, it would be too late: For the Earl was already not a little incenſed againſt them, becauſe they thus protracted his other Deſigns. Hereupon after Reſpite demanded and given for Conſultation, they yielded on Condition of receiving no Corporal Dammage, but to go whither they would, bearing nothing with them. So they were all permitted to go away to Monſac, and the Earl left in their Place 30 Archers, and a few Others under the Command of an Engliſh Eſquire called Timothy Lyon.

[b] It ſignifies an ordinary Judge of a Town.

Thence He rode to a Town called le Lac, but he was met with in the way by the Townſmen, who brought him their Keys, and made their Homage to him in the Name of the King his Maſter. Having ſettled Affairs here, he paſſed on to Mandurant, which he took by Aſſault, and when he had regulated Matters there alſo, he proceeded and came before the Caſtle of Mongiſe, which alſo he carried by Force, and only ſpar'd the Captain Sr. Arnold of Dijon, whom he ſent away Priſoner to Bourdeaux. Thence he rode to Punache, and the Caſtle de la Lewe, which he wan ſucceſſively, but tarried at the latter three days. On the Fourth he went to Forſaithe, which he got eaſily, as alſo the Tower of Pondaire, where he found but ſmall Oppoſition. Thence he proceeded to the Great Town of Beaumont en Laillois, part of the Earl of Laille's Inheritance, which Place held out againſt all his Aſſaults very well for three days, but at laſt that alſo followed the Fate of the reſt, and moſt of the Defendants were put to the Sword. Having furniſhed this Town with new Captains and Men of War, the Earl paſſed on to Montagret, the chief Town belonging to the Earl of Laille, whereof the Lord Philip of Dijon was Captain. The firſt Day the Bars of the Town were won by reaſon of the thick Shot of the Archers, whereby they were not ſuffer'd to keep at their Defences. The next Morning the Aſſault was renew'd in many places at once, and carried on ſo furiouſly, that the Defendants knew not which way to turn themſelves;

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

wherefore in all haſte they deſired Peace. Upon this the Earl of Darby ſent unto them an Herald to proffer them one Days Reſpit, wherein they might make an Agreement: which being gladly accepted, the Earl himſelf, being accompanied with the Lord Manny and the Lord Stafford, went to the Bars to ſpeak with them. The Earl firſt would have them yield abſolutely, but upon earneſt Suit, at laſt he allow'd to take them into his Protection, they ſwearing perpetual Fidelity to the King of England, and to give him Twelve of their chief Burgeſſes as Hoſtages, to remain in the City of Bourdeaux. Thus was Montagret taken, and the Lords and Knights of France departed under ſafe Conduct, and went to the Earl of Laille at Reole.

[c] Ita Froiſ. & Aſhmole p.680. ſed Bounal apud Du Cheſne.

After this Succeſs the Earl of Darby went to [c] Bonu, which after a vigorous Aſſault, thô not without ſome Loſs, he took and ſet therein a Garriſon of his own: Thence he paſſed forward into the Country of Perigord, and thô he was adviſ'd to go forward to Bourdeilles, he reſolved firſt to attempt the City of Perigeux. The Earl of that Name was then in the City, and the Lord Roger of Perigort his Uncle, and the Lord of Duras, with Sixſcore Knights and Eſquires of the Country, beſides other Men of Arms and common Soldiers. The Earl of Darby having diligently view'd the Scituation and Strength of the Place, concluded at laſt not to hazard the Lives of his Men before a Town ſo well provided, and of no abſolute Importance. Wherefore he went and encamped about two Leagues off by a little River, with intent next day to attack the Caſtle of Peligrue. But about Midnight there iſſued out of Perigeux 200 Spears, who before Dawn came ſuddenly into the Engliſh Camp, where they ſlew and hurt many, and diſturbed the whole Hoſt; and ſome of them going in to the Earl of Oxford's Tent, thô they found him putting on his Arms, attacked him ſo ſharply, that they took him Priſoner, with three more Knights his Servants. And by that ſeeing it high time to retire, they drew back and with great ſpeed made homeward, but they were ſo hotly purſued; that had not their Gates been kept open for them they had all been either ſlain or taken. However being with much ado got all ſafe in at the Bars, they alighted and defended the Paſs, and came to Handy-ſtroaks with the Engliſh; ſo that they had no dammage for all that daring Enterpriſe. The Engliſh not being able therefore to do any good here return'd to their Camp before Peligrue, where they tarried ſix days continually aſſaulting the Caſtle, thô to little purpoſe. All this while the Earl of Darby, who deſired at any rate to redeem the Earl of Oxford and the three Knights with him, offer'd by his Meſſengers to the Earl of Perigord, to make an Exchange of Priſoners with him. So that at laſt the Engliſh Earl and the three Knights were deliver'd for the Vicount of Bouquentine, the Vicount of Chaſtillon, the Lord of Leſcun, and the Lord of Chaſteauneufe, who had all been taken in the Suburbs of Bergerac as we ſhewed before, with this Condition moreover (for the Earl of Oxford countervail'd all theſe Diſadvantages) that the Lands of Perigort being on their Side obliged to make no War upon the Engliſh for three Years, only the Lords and Knights of thoſe Parts might take which Side they pleaſed, the Engliſh during that Space ſhould make no War nor Deſolation in that Country. By this Agreement the Earl of Darby was obliged preſently to riſe from before Peligrue, for that was belonging to the Earldom of Perigord, and ſo he marched on to Auberoche, a very beautifull and ſtrong Caſtle, not above 5 French Leagues from Perigeux, but yet belonging to the Archbiſhop of Tholouſe. Here the Engliſh began to meaſure out their Ground, to mark out their Lodgings and to ſet up their Tents, as if they intended to hold a long Siege there; and having inveſted the Town ſent Word by their Heralds, "That it behoved them to think of Yielding in "time, for if they ſhould be taken by Force, they were all but Dead men without "Mercy. This peremptory Meſſage and this dreadfull Appearance ſo terrified them within, eſpecially ſince they knew the Earl of Laille durſt not keep the Field, and they could hope for no Succour but from him; that forthwith they ſubmitted and ſwore Fidelity to the King of England.

The Earl of Darby took Poſſeſſion of the Place, and after a Day or two, having left the Lord Frank van Hall, Sr. Alan Finefroid and Sr. John Lendal, with a convenient Garriſon to maintain the Town, he drew back deſigning for Bourdeaux, within 9 French Leagues whereof he met with a good Town called Libourne, which he thought ſo ill a Neighbour, that he declar'd, "He would not ſtirr thence, till he had it in his Power. The Inhabitants hearing his Reſolution took Advice, ſo that all things conſider'd, they concluded to yield, and make their Homage, and ſwear themſelves Subjects to the Crown of England. Here the Earl tarried three Days, and having left a Garriſon in the Place under the Command of the Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Stafford, Sr. Stephen Tombey, and Sr. Alexander Huſſey, he himſelf with the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Walter Manny and the reſt rode ſtraight to Bourdeaux.

XV. He

XV. He was [d] received with great Triumph, and met on his way in ſolemn Proceſſion by the Clergy and People of that City; where they offer'd Themſelves, their Lives and Fortunes to his Diſpoſe: And thô Winter was far off (for it was but about the End of July) yet becauſe he judged it vain to take more ſtrong Holds, unleſs he ſhould Man them well againſt the French, and that his Forces were already ſo diminiſhed, that he could not ſpare any more of his Men into Garriſons, without making himſelf too weak to keep the Field; on theſe Conſiderations he concluded to ſtirr no more abroad that Year, but to ſtand by and look to what he had already won, being always in a readineſs to aſſert what the Enemy ſhould once offer to recover. At Bourdeaux therefore he tarried and feaſted, and took his pleaſure with the Chief Burgeſſes and Ladies of the City; thô all the while he had a vigilant Eye over what he had won, and kept Spies abroad thrô all the Country; his Deſign being ſhortly to paſs over into England to augment his Forces (which as we ſaid, were much diminiſhed by Furniſhing ſo many Garriſons) that he might purſue the War more vigorouſly at the opening of the next Campaigne. AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[d] Froiſ. c. 106. fol. 52.

Now the Earl of Laille, who was yet at Reole, when he had underſtood, that the Earl of Darby lay ſtill at Bourdeaux without any Appearance of taking the Field again that Year, wrote immediately to the Earl of Perigord, the Viſcount of Carmain, the Earls of Cominges and Bouquentine and the reſt of the Lords of Gaſcogne who held of France, that they ſhould all ſecretly aſſemble their Forces, and meet him by ſuch a day before Auberoche: For he reſolved to attempt that Place. His Command was obey'd, for he was Viceroy for King Philip in thoſe Parts of Gaſcogne; and Auberoche was formally beſieged. The Lords and Knights of England were not in the leaſt aware of any ſuch Matter, till they ſaw themſelves actually Inveſted, and the Siege laid round, ſo that none could paſs out or in without being in danger of the Enemy. The Frenchmen brought with them Four great Engines from Tholouſe, with which they caſt mighty Stones againſt the Caſtle Day and Night, reſolving to make no other Aſſault, but thus to beat down the Walls and Towers about their ears, or to make them yield abſolutely to their Diſcretion: By which means they had within ſix Days batter'd down the Roofs of their Lodgings at ſuch a Rate, that the Beſieged durſt not repoſe themſelves but in low Vaults, or Cellars under ground. The Earl of Darby had knowledge that Auberoche was beſieged; but he knew not that his Friends were ſo ill handled by this ſevere way of Battery: For as for Aſſaults he doubted not, but they were well able to hold out a conſiderable time againſt greater Forces, than the Enemy now had. However as became a wiſe and carefull General, he had his Spies abroad continually, by whom he received due Information of Matters as they fell. When Sr. Frank van Hall, Sr. Alan Finefroyd and Sr. John Lendal, who were the Captains of Auberoche, ſaw in what a Condition they were, and that unleſs the Earl of Darby ſhould come to their Reſcue, they muſt yield at Diſcrétion, or be beaten to pieces with Engines, or all ruſh out deſperately againſt more than ten times their Number, they demanded among their Servants and Valets, if any one of them would for a good Reward undertake to convey a Letter to the Earl of Darby at Bourdeaux. Immediately one of them ſtept forth and ſaid, that he would venture to carry it, not ſo much for the lucre of Reward, as the hope he had to ſerve thoſe Gallant Men his Maſters in ſuch an imminent Danger. In the Dark night this Valet took the Letter, ſealed with the Seal of the Lord Frank van Hall, which was [e] Gules, a Golden Dragon Crown'd, with his Wings Expanded, and his Dexter Paw raiſed, a Spread Eagle Sable in a Shield Gules upon his Breaſt, the Whole ſurrounded with an Azure Bordure, intermixt with a Lion and Flower du Lis Or, mutually ſucceeding one another. This Seal with thoſe of the other Engliſh Knights was affixed to the Letter, with which this Daring Fellow, being let down into the Ditch adventur'd, ſince there was no other Remedy to paſs thrô the Hoſt. He was met by the firſt Watch and eſcaped them well enough, for he ſpake good Gaſcogne and named a Lord of the Army, to whom he ſaid he belonged: But yet after this he was taken among the Tents, and ſo brought into the Heart of the Camp, where being narrowly ſearched the Letters were found about him: So he was kept ſafe till the Morning, at which time the whole Matter was declared to the French Lords aſſembled in Council. The Earl of Laille, and thoſe that ſat with him having read the Letters, and thereby underſtood, that the Beſieged were not able to hold out much longer, were very well pleaſed with their Diſcovery. Then they hung the Letter about the Valets Neck, and put the poor Fellow into one of their Battering Engines, and ſo cauſed him to be ſhot into the Town. The Valet fell down ſtone Dead in the Streets, at which Diſmal ſight, as well as their Diſappointment, the Beſieged were caſt into a great Con[e] Aſhmoles Garter p. 709. Plate 50.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

Consternation. And at that very instant the Earl of Perigord, and Sr. Roger his Uncle, Sr. Charles of Poictiers, the Viscount of Carmain, and the Lord Duras, being on Horseback, rode about the Walls of the Town as near as they durst, and scoffingly cry'd out to them within, "Gentlemen, pray ask your Messenger, where he found the "Earl of Darby, since he went out but last Night to carry Letters to him and is come "back again unto you already. To this Jeer Sr. Frank van Hall replied saying, Mes- "sieurs, thô now we are here Besieged, we shall Sally out well enough, when it shall "please God and the Earl of Darby. And I would to God the Earl did but know, in "what Condition we are, for if he did but know it, the Proudest of you All durst not "tarry here. And if you dare send him Word thereof, one of the Chief of Us shall "in requital of that Kindness yield himself a Prisoner unto you, to be ransomed accor- "ding to his Quality. The French said, "Nay, nay, Sirs, the Earl of Darby shall have "perfect Intelligence of all these Matters, when with our Engines we shall have beaten "down the Castle to the ground, and you shall be buried in these Ruines, or yield your "selves up simply to save your Lives only. Certainly, said the Couragious Sr. Frank "van Hall, that we shall never doe: We will all rather die here, or upon heaps of "Frenchmen, than make so ignoble a Bargain. Therewith the French returned to their Camp, and the three English Knights continued in great trouble, for the Stones that fell in the Town made such a terrible Noise, as if it had been Thunder falling from Heaven.

[f] Froiss. c. 107. fol. 52. b.

Now for all this insulting of the French Lords, the whole Story [f] of the Messengers being taken with the Letters, and the great Distress of the English in Auberoche was brought presently to the Earl of Darby's Ears by a spie that had been in the French Camp. Whereupon immediately he sent to the Earl of Pembroke (who having been remanded from Liburne was now at Bergerac, as being a Place of more Consequence) to come back and meet him at Liburne with his Forces the next Day, or that Night; if he could: He sent also to the Lord Stafford, and Sr. Stephen Tombey, who were still at Liburne, to be ready there against his coming: And that Night the Earl himself, with the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Walter Manny, and the rest that were with him, went from Bourdeaux towards Auberoche: They rode so secretly, and with such Guides, that knew all the by-ways, that they came unperceived to Liburne before Morning: Where they tarried a day for the Earl of Pembroke; of whom they could hear no News all that while. However, when the Earl of Darby saw that he came not at the time appointed, nor that yet there was any appearance of his coming, thrô the ardent desire he had of saving his Friends in Auberoche, he notwithstanding resolved to march forward. There were now with the Earl of Darby, the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Robert Ferrers of Chartley, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord Hugh Hastings, who was [g] of kin to Laurence Hastings Earl of Pembroke; Sr. Stephen Tombey, and others, all who went from Liburne in the dark of the Evening, taking the direct way to Auberoche; so that early the next Morning they were within two little Leagues of the Place. Then [h] being all entred into a Wood, they alighted and tyed their Horses to Pasture, still waiting with much impatience for the Earl of Pembroke, till it was high Noon. Then he not yet appearing, they knew not what Course to take, for in all they made but 300 Spears, and six Hundred Archers, and the French before Auberoche, they knew to be between [i] ten and twelve Thousand Men. Yet they thought it a great Dishonour, as well as loss, to suffer such Valiant Men to perish for want of Succour: while thus they were in serious debate on the Matter, the Gallant Lord Walter Manny at last said, "Gentlemen, let us all leap on our Horses with a good Cou- "rage, and let us Coast privately under the Covert of this Wood, till we come on "that side of the Wood, which joyns to their Host, and then when we are near, let "us set spurs to our Horses, and cry St. George, a Darby; we shall find them all at "Supper, unawares, and unprepared to resist; and you shall see them upon our ap- "proach, fall into such Confusion, that they shall never be able to recover any "Order.

[g] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 578.

[h] Froiss. c. 107. fol. 53. a.

[i] Froiss. ibid.

To this brave Resolution all the Lords and Knights agreed, whereupon every Man took his Horse, and having order'd all their Servants and Pages to tarry there with the Baggage, till they heard other News, they all rode forth silently, and in good Order along by the Wood, till they came to a little River, named haulte Vezere, in a Valley, near the French Host. Being pass'd over, they displayed their Banners and Penons, and dashing their Horses, came in a Front into the French Camp among the Gascogners, who were nothing aware of this sudden Attack from behind; for they were then going to Supper, and some ready set at their meat. The English cryed a Darby, a Darby! and overoverthrew Tents and Pavilions, and ſlew, and hurt great Numbers, bearing down all before them: For the Frenchmen knew not which way to turn, they were ſo ſurpriſed, and had ſo ſhort a time, and ſo various Reſolutions to take. Thoſe that went out into the Field to range themſelves in ſome Order, were warmly received by the Archers on Horſeback, who rode about ſcouring the Field, and whereever they eſpied any extraordinary Concourſe of Men gathering together, thither they rode up, and diſſolved them by their thick flights of Arrows: The mean while the Men of Arms eaſily beat down thoſe whom they found unranged, and diſorder'd in the Camp. The Earl of Laille himſelf, being firſt grievouſly wounded, was taken Priſoner in his own Tent, and the Earl of Perigord, and Sr. Roger his Uncle in theirs: The Lord Duras was ſlain, Sr. Charles of Poictiers, and the Earl of Valentinois his Brother, were taken, with many more of their Captains; and thus this Camp was broken and diſcomfited, every Man flying where he beſt could, to avoid being taken or ſlain: But for all this the one half of the Frenchmen remain'd, as yet entire and undiſturbed; for now the Earl of Cominges, the Vicount of Carmain, the Viſcount of Villemur, the Lord of Bouquentine, the Lord de la Bard, the Lord of Tarbe, and others, who were encamped with a Moiety of the Army on the other ſide the Town, and had timely notice of the Enemies approach, were riſen and drawn out into the Fields in good Order of Battle, with their Banners diſplayed. The [k] Engliſh, who by this time had fully vanquiſhed all the reſt, ſpur'd on now with generous Indignation, to ſee ſo Glorious a Victory ready to be ſnatch'd out of their hands, being rallied and in good Order, with a Diviſion of Archers on each Wing, ſtrack in furiouſly among them, thô they were ſtill more than treble their Numbers; the Trumpets loudly ſounding a Charge on both ſides. This Battle was well fought indeed, and here a Victory was not to be obtained by the Engliſh without great Courage and Induſtry: Many Noble Feats of Arms were done on both ſides, in taking and reſcuing again; the Engliſh Lords were ever in the heat of the Battle, Matters being now brought to the utmoſt puſh, encouraging their Men by their Words and Actions. At which inſtant the Beſieged alſo being Alarum'd by this unuſual Noiſe, and the ſound of the Trumpets, blowing a Charge, obſerving alſo (thô it was almoſt Dark Night, and the New-Moon was not above a Day old, ſome Engliſh Banners from their High Tower) Armed themſelves immediately, and with all their Forces ſallied out, and came upon the Backs of the French, making a terrible Noiſe and Clamour. Theſe Men ruſhing among the thickeſt of the Enemies, brought good and timely Comfort to their Friends, who had been fighting all this while, and to be brief, turned the hitherto doubtfull Scales of Victory wholly to their own ſide. For the New-Comers, being extreamly irritated with their late ſufferings, handled them that fell into their hands with more Cruelty, and fought with a full Reſolution, either then to end the Siege, or their Lives. Above 7000 of the enemy in all were ſlain, and many taken Priſoners, among the latter whereof, were Nine Earls and Viſcounts, of Lords and Knights 200, and of Eſquires, and other Souldiers, ſo many, that every Engliſh-man had two or three Priſoners: The Reſt were ſaved by the Nights approach. This Battle was thus ſtruck on St. Laurence Eve, or the Ninth of Auguſt, being a Monday, in the Year of our Lord MCCCXLIV.

AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

[k] Froiſ. c. 107.

The Engliſh dealt very kindly with their Priſoners, and let many of them go upon their Oath and Promiſe to return with Money for their Ranſomes, or to render up their Bodies by ſuch a Day at Bergerac, or Bourdeaux. The Fight ended, they all entred into Auberoche, and there the Earl of Darby gave a Supper to the moſt part of the Earls and Viſcounts Priſoners, and to many of the Knights and Eſquires; part whereof without doubt was of their own Proviſions, now taken in their Camp. At the ſame time the Pious Leader gave Order, that Publique and Private [l] Thankſgiving ſhould be return'd to God, becauſe by his Good Hand of Providence [m] a Thouſand of them had overcome twelve Thouſand of the Enemy; and had ſeaſonably relieved the Town of Auberoche, and ſaved their Friends within, who in all likelyhood would have been loſt within two or three Days more. The next Day by Sun-riſe there came thither the long-expected Earl of Pembroke with 300 Men of Arms, and 4000 Archers in his Company; who when he ſaw that all was done already to his hand; ſaid with ſome Diſpleaſure to the Earl of Darby, "Surely, Couſin, You have not dealt kindly "with me, to fight the Enemy before my coming: For ſince You ſent for me, You "might have been ſure I would not fail to come to You, "Dear Couſin, ſaid the "Courteous Commander, We deſired with all our hearts, that You ſhould have ſha-"red with Us in the Action of laſt Night: But You was not only too ſlow for "our Expectation, and the Urgency of Affairs the other Night, when We waited "for [l] Froiſ. c. 107.

[m] Froiſ. & Mezeray p. 23.

An. Dom. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

"for Your coming at Liburne; but yesterday also, when We tarried for You in the "Wood, till it was far gone in the Afternoon: Wherefore despairing of Your co- "ming in any time, We were obliged to put our Lives in our hands; and venture to "attack the Enemy. For if We had stayed there longer, We justly feared some "French spies would have discovered Us: And then they would have had as much "Advantage over Us, as now We, by the Grace of God, have had over them. Where- "fore, pray Cousin, be satisfied, and help to guard Us back to Bourdeaux; for of "our selves We are not strong enough to ride openly thrô the Country. After this, the Earl of Darby set Sr. Alexander Chaumont, a Valiant and Loyal Knight of Gascogne over the Town with a good Garrison, and having tarried all that Day, and the next Night in Auberoche, in which time the Enemies Engines were brought into the Town, and their Camp spoiled, He departed betimes the next Morning with the Earl of Pembroke, S. Frank van Hall and his own Forces for Bourdeaux. The Inhabitants of this City knew not how to express their Joy, nor with what Acclamations to receive and welcome the Earl of Darby, and the Lord Walter Manny; and more than [n] twelve Hundred Prisoners, Lords, Knights, and Esquires with him. As for the Earl of Darby, when he saw the Chief Force of the Enemy in those Parts to be broken by this Blow, he soon after dispos'd of his Men into Winter Quarters, and return'd himself into England to provide more effectually against the next Campaigne.

[n] Ita lego apud Froiss. nè aliàs sibi non consentiat, qui suprà dicit omnes Anglos armatos ultra duos aut tres Captivos habuisse, &c.

The Earl of [o] Oxford also, having first been in Bretagne, took the Sea about the Feast of the Blessed Virgin, and by Tempest was cast upon the Coasts of Connaught in Ireland: Where he and his Company suffer'd much Misery from those Barbarous People there, who pillaged them of all they had: So that with much difficulty they escaped alive out of their hands, and afterwards came safe into England.

[o] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 193. ex Chro. Fr. Joh. Clinne, M.S. in Bodlei. Bibl. f. 99. Tom. 4. p. 70.

XVI. About this time was Queen Philippa of England brought to Bed of a Fair Daughter named Mary, who was afterwards married to John Montford, who in time obtain'd the sirname of Valiant, and having conquer'd his Enemies, became Duke of Bretagne. His Father John of Montford, of whose Taking at Nantes we spake before, was by vertue of the late Truce at Malestroit, most [p] certainly deliver'd out of Prison this Year, on Condition that he should not depart from Court: But this notwithstanding he made his Escape, and put himself in the Head of his Troops in Bretagne, having obtained succour from England, as we shall shew hereafter: But because in the September following he died, his Release from Imprisonment was not taken notice of by some Authors.

[p] Mezeray ad hunc an. Fabian p. 270. &c.

This Year there died at Bourdeaux the valiant Lord [q] Oliver Ingham Seneschall of the said City, in the Fifty Ninth Year of his Age, without Issue Male: Wherefore his younger Daughter Joan, Wife to the Lord Roger le Strange of Knokyn, and Mary his Grandaughter (by Elizabeth his eldest Daughter, and her Husband Sr. John Curson) became his Heirs.

[q] Dugd. 2. Vol. p. 104.

CHAPTER the Twenty Third.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward demands of the Pope Satisfaction on the French Kings Part, or declares that he will renounce the Truce. II. The Earl of Northampton commission'd to defie the French King, &c. III. King Edward's Manifesto touching the Dissolution of the Truce. IV. He sends Henry Earl of Darby into Aquitain. V. A particular Account of his Actions there during the Campaign. VI. The Lord Manny finds his Fathers Bones in the City of Reole. VII. The strong Castle of Reole yielded, the Town being taken before. VIII. The Earl of Darby proceeds in Taking of Towns and Castles. IX. He wins Mirapont, Tonneins, Damasan and Augoulesme, where he makes the Lord John Norwich Governour, and so returns to Bourdeaux.

I. Before this Expedition of the Earl of Darby's into Gascogne, we shew'd, how the Pope endeavour'd to compose Matters with King Edward, to whom we do not find that the King return'd any Answer, till after the Earls Arrival at Bourdeaux; when he made a solemn Complaint to him, bearing Date the [a] Fourth of August, which he sent by John Hufford Dean of Lincoln, Sr. Hugh Nevil

[a] 4 Aug. Rot. Franc. 18 Ed. 3. m. 3. & Ashmole p. 654.

Nevil and Nicolas de Fliſco, willing them to demand a Reformation, and Security for the Obſervance of the ſaid Truce untill the Expiration of the Term appointed, and ſworn by each of the Kings Deputies: And in caſe that ſhould not be done (as it was not expected) then they to ſurrender the Copy of the Truce into the Pope's Hands, and to defie Philip of Valois as the Kings Enemy. Yet notwithſtanding, theſe Amicable and Chriſtian-like Deſires of the King of England met with nothing but Flams and Dilatory Anſwers: For on the 20 of October following, Dr. William Bateman Biſhop of Norwich, John Hufford Dean of Lincoln, and John Thoresby one of the Canons of Lincoln, Sr. Hugh Nevil and Sr. Ralph Spigurnel Knights, together with the foreſaid Nicolas de Fliſco were Commiſſionated to declare before the Pope, in what Particulars the Truce had been broken, and inſtantly to demand Reparations. AN. DOM. 1344. An. Regni Angliæ XVIII. Franciæ V.

II. But after all this, little Satisfaction being offer'd, and none at all given to the King, his Majeſty ſeeing the Truce manifeſtly and openly violated, and that the Pope and his Legates were too evidently Partial on the French Side, gave Commiſſion to William Bohun Earl of Northampton, bearing Date the 24 [b] of April, to defie Philip of Valois, as a Violator of the Truce, an unjuſt Uſurper of his Inheritance of the Realm of France, and his Capital Enemy. Which Defiance being made, he was order'd to go with John Earl of Montford into Bretagne, as the King of England's Lieutenant General, to defend that Dutchy againſt the Lord Charles of Blois, being empowred to receive the Fealty and Homage of thoſe People in the Kings Name, which was due unto him as True King of France; a like Power having [c] three Years before been given him in the ſame Parts. And ſhortly after the King ſet forth a Manifeſto, bearing Date the [d] 14 of June, touching the Diſſolution of the Truce, wherein the Cauſes were declared at large; being in Subſtance the ſame with thoſe Letters, which he had ſent to the Pope and Four Cardinals, bearing Date [e] 26 of May, the Month preceding the Date of this Defiance, a Copy whereof followeth, agreeing with the other, which is to be ſeen in the Original Latine, both in Adam Murimouth's M. S. and alſo in Dr. Stillingfleets, aforemention'd. AN. DOM. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

[b] Aſhmole p.654 ex Rot. Franc. 19 Ed.3.m.4. p.1.
[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 185. ex Rot. Fr. 16 Ed.3. n.25.
[d] Aſhmole p.654
[e] Rot. Rom. 19 Ed.3. m.2. n.4.

III. "[f] EDWARD, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of "Ireland, to all and ſingular to whom theſe Preſents ſhall come, Greeting. We doubt "not, but it is now publiquely known, how that after the Deceaſe of Charles of Fa- "mous Memory, King of France, and Brother to the moſt Serene Lady Iſabella Queen "of England, our Mother, the Crown of the ſaid Kingdom being incommutably de- "volved unto Us, as unto the next Heir Male of the ſaid King, then being alive; the "Lord Philip of Valois, who is but Son to the Uncle of the ſaid King, and ſo related "unto him in a more remote Degree of Conſanguinity, did in the time of our Minority "by Force, and contrary to God and Juſtice uſurp the ſaid Kingdom, and ſtill doth uſurp "and detain it: Invading moreover, and ſpoiling our Lands in our Dukedom of Aqui- "tain, and Confederating againſt Us with our Rebellious Enemies the Scots; and o- "therwiſe to the utmoſt of his Power, labouring and endeavouring to procure the Ru- "ine and Subverſion of Us and of Ours both by Land and Sea. And thô we to pre- "vent the ineſtimable Dangers, which it is probably feared may happen by a Commotion "of War between Us and Him, have offer'd to the ſaid Philip divers Friendly Me- "thods of Peace, not without a great Diminution of our own Rights, that ſo we might, "as we deſire, purſue the War of Chriſt, in the Holy Expedition beyond Sea, againſt "the Blaſphemers of the Chriſtian Name, which alaſs! is too much neglected to the "no ſmall Ignominy of Chriſtendom; he by his Fox-craft driving us off with Incertainties, "would in effect yield nothing unto Us, but ſtill by feigned Treaties, hath abundantly "heaped Injuries upon Injuries. Wherefore not willing to neglect the Gift of God, "who in the Devolution of the ſaid Kingdom hath ſhewed unto Us his marvellous "Kindneſs; but deſiring as it is fitting, in hope of the Divine Aſſiſtance, and a Confi- "dence of our Righteous Cauſe, to take pains about the Recovering and Maintaining "of our Hereditary Rights (ſince by peaceable Ways we could not prevail) Neceſſi- "ty ſo requiring we deſcended with an Armed Power into Bretagne, to reform the Inju- "ries done, and to prevent thoſe, that otherwiſe by him would be done unto Us; and alſo "to the Obtaining of our Hereditary Rights: Being willing to ſet forth powerfully to "the Succour of thoſe that adhered unto Us, rather than to expect at home the Dan- "gers threatned unto Us. And while thus we were occupied in our Wars, there re- "paired unto Us the Reverend Fathers, Peter Biſhop of Paleſtrina, and Annibald Biſhop "of Tuſculan, Cardinals, Nuntio's of the moſt Holy Father in Chriſt Pope Clement "VI, and of the Apoſtolick See, deſiring us in the Name of the ſaid Lord the Pope, "to admit of a Truce with the foreſaid Lord Philip for a time, during which ſpace there [f] Fox Acts and Mon. An. 1345. Adam Murimouth M.S. Dr. Covel & M.S. Dr. Stillingfleet, quibus cum Foxo collatis, illius fides aut peritia videbitur deſiderari.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

"might be a Treaty held before the Lord, the Chief Biſhop, concerning a final Peace, and "adding, that the ſaid Lord the Pope did believe to find out a way, whereby a Peace "might very well be reformed: And in hope of an Agreeable Peace to be made by "his Holy Mediation, and eſpecially for Reverence of the ſaid Lord the Pope, and the "ſaid See, We conſented to the ſaid Truce. And moreover We took care to ſend "Commiſſioners endued with ſufficient Power, to his Holineſſes Preſence; and accor- "dingly there was a Truce taken between Us and the ſaid Lord Philip; ſo that it "was to be obſerved every where within the Dominions of both Parties, eſpecially "within the Dukedom of Aquitain, between Us and the ſaid Philip, and our Adhe- "rents and his, even thô they ſhould pretend to have a Right in the ſaid Dukedom "of Aquitain; and that all Coadjutors and Allies of the Parties ſhould remain in ſuch "a Poſſeſſion of Things and Goods, as they had in the time of making the Truce, "and under other Forms and Conditions more fully expreſſed in the ſame. And when "thrô a ſmiling hope of Peace, in Confidence of the ſaid Truce, returning into Eng- "land, having ſent a few of our Servants into Bretagne for the Governance of thoſe "Parts, and of our Coadjutors there, we had deſigned to ſend our Commiſſioners to "the Preſence of the ſaid Lord the Pope, in order to a Treaty of Peace, there came unto "Us certain News not a little ſtinging our Mind, namely of the Death of certain No- "blemen our Adherents, who were taken in Bretagne, and by the ſpecial Command "of the ſaid Philip, contrary to the Form of the ſaid Truce, ſhamefully and tyran- "nouſly put to Death at Paris: And alſo of the great Slaughter and Devaſtation of "our Liege People and Places in Bretagne, Gaſcogne and elſewhere; and of his ſubtle "and ſecret Treaties held with our Allies and Subjects, whom ſo he endeavoured to "take off from Us and to Bind unto himſelf; and of other his Injuries not eaſily to "be numbred, and of his Offences againſt the ſaid Truce, on the Part of the ſaid Phi- "lip done and attempted both by Land and by Sea; whereby the ſaid Truce on the Part "of the ſaid Philip is notoriouſly known to be diſſolved: And althô the Truce be- "ing thrô Fault of the ſaid Philip thus broken, we might, as even yet lawfully we may, "have juſtly reſumed War againſt him forthwith: Yet notwithſtanding to avoid the "ill Effects of War, being deſirous firſt to prove, if by any Amicable way we might ob- "tain a Reparation as to the Premiſes, more than once we ſent ſundry our Ambaſſa- "dors to the Preſence of the Lord the Pope, as well to treat of the Peace aforeſaid, as to "require Reformation of the ſaid Abuſes, attempted and done within the Limits ap- "pointed for the ſaid Treaty, for that Purpoſe alſo frequently prolonging the ſaid Term, "reſerving always unto our ſelves a Liberty of Reſuming the War, by Default of "the ſaid Philip ſought out againſt Us. And truly the Terms appointed for the Treaty are "now paſt, and no Reaſonable way of Peace hath yet been opened unto Us, or our ſaid "Ambaſſadors: Nor hath the ſaid Philip in the leaſt taken care to reform the ſaid Abuſes, "althô he hath been thereto required and admoniſhed by the Letters of the ſaid Lord "the Pope, as the ſaid Lord the Pope by his Letters unto Us hath written; but there "are always multiplied againſt Us Tyrannies, Conſpiracies and Alliances to our Subver- "ſion, by the ſaid Philip, who ſubtily practiſes againſt the Form of the ſaid Truce: "Not to ſay any thing of the exceſſive Enormities of the Pope's Legate, lately ſent into "Bretagne for the Conſervation of the ſaid Truce, who more earneſtly rais'd the contention "which he ought to have allayed; not approving himſelf a Conſervator of the Truce, "but rather a Party againſt Us and Ours: Concerning which the ſaid Lord the Pope, "(by his leave) did apply no Remedy; althô (as was fitting) he was thereto required. "Wherefore We ought to be excuſed before God and his Holineſs, if when We "can receive no other Remedy, We endeavour to repell the Violence and Injury done "unto Us: Eſpecially ſince We have a moſt juſt Cauſe, and which is moſt notorious "to the world. And therefore eſteeming the foreſaid Truce to be, as indeed it is, diſſol- "ved and broken (from the Cauſes aforeſaid, which we know, and in place and time "will prove to be True) by the foreſaid Philip and his Adherents, eſpecially thoſe "who in the ſaid Dukedom of Bretagne pretend to have Right, and that We are free "and acquitted of the Obſervance thereof: Him the ſaid Philip, as a Violator of the "ſaid Truce, and our Enemy and Deadly Perſecutor, and an Unjuſt Uſurper of "our Kingdom of France, and a Raſh Invader of our other Rights, juſtly (Neceſſi- "ty ſo requiring) We defie, proteſting, that We will not attempt any thing to the "Offence (which God forbid) of his Holineſs, or of the Apoſtolick See, which by all "means We deſire to revere as we ought, nor to the injury of any One; but only with "due Moderation to purſue our Rights, and to defend Our Selves and our Rights: For it "is always our Intention amicably to admit of a Reaſonable Peace when We may obtain it.

"But

"But these things, [g] which We do unwillingly, and for want of a Remedy, We "thought good to signifie to the said Lord, the Pope, and the foresaid Cardinals, by "whose Mediation We Consented to the said Truce, to be by them as Persons in- "different to either Party, insinuated to those, who might have another Perswasion of "our Actions: And lest Nimble Fame by her hasty Relations should cause You to "think amiss of Us, that We may settle the Minds of our Friends, We have thought "fit to unfold the Naked Truth unto You, recommending unto You all our Inno- "cence, and the Justice of our Cause. Dat. at Westminster the 14 Day of June, In the "Year of our Reign of England the XIX, and of our Reign of France VI.

AN. DOM. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

[g] The Letter to the Pope differs from this in the conclusion. vid. M.S. Dr. Stillingfleet. n. 7.

IV. After having thus Published his Intentions, the King seriously [h] sets himself to provide for the War, and to equip a Royal Army, wherewith to enter France in Person the following Year. But in the mean time he provided, that what was won the last Year in Gascogne, should now be well maintain'd; and therefore [i] before the Date of this Manifesto, he renew'd his [k] Commission to the Valiant Lord Henry Plantagenet Earl of Darby, empowering him to Treat and Conclude with all Persons of whatsoever State, or Condition, Kingdom, or Nation, for settling firm Alliances, and mutual Assistance between the King and them; as also to retain Men for the Kings Service, and to agree about their Fees, Wages, and other Rewards: And in consideration of his late great Successes, and his Extraordinary Abilities for the War, within a few [l] Days after he constituted him his sole Lieutenant and Captain in the Dutchy of Aquitain, and the Parts adjacent, with Power to do and Execute all things belonging to that Character: And he issued out his Royal Proclamation to all Archbishops, and other Prelates, Earls, Barons, Viscounts, Governours of Fortresses, and other Officers, commanding them all to yield Obedience to him, as unto the Kings Lieutenant.

[h] Ashmole p. 654.

[i] Ashmole p. 680.

[k] Maii 10. ex Rot. Vasc. 19. Ed. 3.

[l] 15 Maii Rot. Vasc. 19. Ed. 3. m. 6. & Rot. Franc. 19. Ed. 3. m. 6.

V. On the [m] 11 of June, the Earl having shipt most of his Horse at Southampton, and being himself ready to depart, Command was sent to the Sheriff of London, to make Proclamation; That all Men of Arms, Archers, and others, who were to go with him, should with all possible speed repair to Southampton. Being on board, he had a fair Wind, and without any let or stay Landed at Bayonne in Gascogne, whence he went to Bourdeaux; and having for Encouragement sake made 50 New Knights, immediately after his [n] Arrival he took the Field, with a great Number of Men of Arms, and Archers, with a Resolution to lay Siege to la Reole upon the Garonne, about 9 Leagues from Bourdeaux. The first Day he rode from Bourdeaux to Bergerac, where he met with the Earl of Pembroke, who was ready to joyn him: Having tarried there three Days, they all began to March, being in Number a 1000 Men of Arms, and 2000 Archers on Horseback, besides others. Thus they rode forth, till they came to [o] St. Basil, a Castle of considerable strength, which they laid Siege to: But the Garrison, considering, that the greatest part of the Lords, Knights, and Captains of their side, were either slain, or in Prison; and seeing no likelyhood of any timely Succour from any other Part, concluded to deliver up the Place, and so yielded themselves, and swore Fealty to the King of England. Matters being duly settled here, the Earl Marched forward, taking the way to the strong Castle of Aiguillon in Agennois: But meeting in his march with a Fort called Rochemillone, thô he knew it was furnished with Souldiers, and Artillery, yet he commanded it to be Assaulted: Which was done with much Bravery. But the Defendants cast forth huge Stones, Barrs of Iron, Pots of quick Lime, and other offensive Matter, whereby many of the most forward and venturous were grievously annoyed: The Earl of Darby seeing this, sounded a Retreat for that time, and resolved to use another Method. The next day he compelled the Bores of the Country to bring thither great quantities of Bushes, Faggots, Dung, Straw, and Earth; with which a great part of the Ditch was so well filled; that they might approach close to the Walls: Then he caused 200 Men of the Country to go before, having great Pick-Axes in their hands, and strong Targets over their Heads, lockt together in manner of a Penthouse, like the old Roman Testudo: These were followed by 300 choice Archers, who, while the other undermin'd the Wall, shot so fiercely, and so close together, that hardly any Man could appear at his Defence, but he was taken off. Yet the French held out obstinately, thô this manner of Attack was carried on thus most part of the Day; till at last the Miners made so great a Breach thrô the Wall, that ten Men might enter a breast. This unexpected Misfortune quite brake the Courages of the Defendants, so that immediately every Man began to look out for himself; some flying into the Church, and some few stealing away by a back Gate: But that Passage being soon secur'd, most of the Garrison

[m] Clauf. 19. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 12.

[n] These things being taken from the Records, We must pardon Froisard who thought he winter'd at Bourdeaux and took the Field in May.

[o] Froiss. c. 108. & Du Chesne p. 662. & Ashmole p. 680.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

was put to the Sword, except thoſe, whom being fled to the Church, the Earl of Darby pardon'd for that Reſpect, and becauſe they implor'd his Mercy. Both the Town and Caſtle were immediately taken and plunder'd, but nothing deſtroy'd; for the Earl intended to Repair the breach, and to leave a Garriſon there; which he did under the Command of Richard Mills, and Robert Scott, Eſquires. Thence he proceeded and laid Siege to the Town of Monſegur, the Captain whereof was Sr. Hugh Bâtefoile, a Man of great Courage, Experience, and Honour: Who being ſummon'd, rejected all Conditions of Peace, and ſaid, he was ready either to maintain the place or to die in the Action. Wherefore the Earl of Darby being reſolv'd not to have his Succeſſes ſcandal'd with a foile here, ſent for Engines of Battery to Bourdeaux, and to Bergerac wherewith he caſt Mighty Stones againſt the Town, which brake down Walls, Roofs of Chambers, and Houſes. Now when the nimble Courſe of his Victories had received a Check here for 15 Days, he reſolv'd a General Aſſault, but firſt after his uſual Method, ſent again to the Inhabitants, to warn them, "that if they were "taken by force, they muſt all expect nothing but Death; but if they would own the "King of England for their Lord, he would then both Pardon, and take them for "his Friends. The Townſmen would very gladly have accepted theſe Conditions: But as yet they had no Power ſo to do, wherefore they went in a Body to ſpeak with their Captain, as it were by way of asking Advice, to learn what his Reſolution might be. He anſwer'd them in a few words bravely, "Gentlemen, look to your Defences "in your ſeveral Stations, as I ſhall in mine: I tell you, we are able to keep this Town "half a Year, if there be occaſion. Hereupon they went away very well content, as to outward appearance; but at Night, when he little thought of it, they ſeiſed him ſuddenly, and clap'd him in Priſon, vowing never to let him out; unleſs he would conſent to yield, and make their Peace with the Earl of Darby. Whereupon, he ſwearing to do his endeavour, they let him out, and ſo he went to the Town Barrs, and made a ſign to ſpeak with ſome body, whereat the Lord Manny coming up to him, he ſaid, "Sr. Walter Manny, You need not think it ſtrange, that at your firſt coming, We "ſhut our Gates againſt You; for We have all ſworn Allegiance to the French King: "Thô I ſee well there is no ſufficient Captain in his behalf, that comes forth to ſtop "You in your Career: So that I doubt, You are like to proceed further. But Sir, as "for my ſelf and thoſe of this Garriſon, I deſire of You, that We may be permitted to re-"main as We are upon this Compoſition; that neither of Us offer, or do any the leaſt "hurt to other for the ſpace of one Moneth; that if within that time the French King, "or the Duke of Normandy come in Perſon into this Country ſo ſtrong, as to fight "with You, then We to be quit of our Covenant; but if neither the One, nor the "Other appear on our behalf, then We all to put our ſelves entirely under the Obe-"dience of the King of England. Sr. Walter Manny went ſtraight to the Earl of Darby to know his Pleaſure in this Matter; the Earl becauſe he would not linger there, was content, on Condition, that thoſe within ſhould make no new Repairs, or Fortifications, during the term, and alſo, that if any of his Men wanted Victuals, or ought elſe, they might have it of them for Money. This was all agreed, and 12 of their Richeſt Burgeſſes ſent as Hoſtages to Bordeaux; they alſo refreſhed the Engliſh with Victuals, but would not let a Man enter. Matters thus ſettled here, the Earl proceeded, waſting and ſpoiling all the Country, which was Pleaſant and Fruitfull; and ſo at laſt came and ſat down before the ſtrong Caſtle of Aiguillon: Where he had ſcarce appeared, but the Captain of the Caſtle came and yielded all up unto him, only conditioning for Life and Goods.

All the Country thereabouts was amazed at this eaſie Bargain; for it was reputed One of the ſtrongeſt Caſtles in all the World, and it ſtood moſt Advantagiouſly ſcituated between the Lot and the Garonne, two great Rivers, able to bear Ships of Burthen. The Earl of Darby newly Repair'd what was out of Order in the Caſtle, and left within it the Lord John Moubray with an 120 luſty Souldiers to defend it. But the Captain, who had thus baſely yielded ſo Noble a Fortreſs, without one ſtroke giving, or taking, failed not of the Reward his Cowardiſe deſerved: For being come to Tholouſe about 20 common French Miles from Aiguillon, they apprehended him, condemned him of Treaſon, and hung him up immediately. The Earl of Darby the mean while went and lay before Segart, which having taken by Aſſault, and put all within to the Sword, he marched thence to the Town of Reole, ſtanding on the Garonne.

[p] Froiſ. c. 109. This was [p] a great and ſtrong Place, wherefore the Earl of Darby inveſted it quite Round, and made Baſtions near the High-ways, and other Avenues, to hinder Proviſion from coming into the Town; and almoſt every Day he alarum'd them with his Attacks.

But

But ſtill the Beſieged held out; ſo that while the Earl lay here, the Moneth being now expired, wherein they of Monſegur had Covenanted, unleſs they were Defended by a Royal Army, to yield themſelves, and embrace the Service of the King of England, he ſent thither, requiring them according to Compoſition, to make Performance. They all readily agreed; and that Hardy Loyal Captain, Sr. Hugh Bâtefoile himſelf, not thinking Him fit to Reign over France, who in all that while either durſt not, or would not, or could not Protect his Subjects, own'd Edward of England for his Sovereign, and he, and all his Men enter'd into his Service on certain Wages. Now the Earl of Darby had layn before Reole more than 9 Weeks, in which time he had made two vaſt Belfroys, or Baſtilles of Maſſy timber, with three Stages, or Floors, each of the Belfroys running on four huge Wheels, bound about with thick Hoops of Iron; and the ſides, and other parts, that any way reſpected the Town, were cover'd with Raw Hides, thick laid, to defend the Engines from fire and ſhot. In every one of theſe Stages were placed an 100 Archers, and between the two Baſtilles, there were two Hundred Men with Pick-Axes and Mattocks. From theſe ſix Stages ſix Hundred Archers ſhot ſo fiercely all together, that no Man could appear at his Defence without a ſufficient Puniſhment: So that the Belfroys being brought upon Wheels by the ſtrength of Men over a part of the Ditch, which was purpoſely made plain and level by the Faggots, Earth and Stones caſt upon them; the 200 Pioneers ply'd their Work ſo well under the Protection of theſe Engines, that they made a conſiderable Breach thrô the Walls of the Town. Hereupon the Burgeſſes came to one of the Gates, and deſired parly: The Earl of Darby ſent thither the Lord Walter Manny, and the Lord Ralph Stafford to hear their Propoſals; which were, "that they would accept the King of England for their Lord, ſo they might ſuffer no harm either in their Bodies or "Goods. Sr. Agouſt de les Baux, a Native of Provence, who was Chief Commander within, when he ſaw they were reſolv'd to yield up the Town, retired into the Caſtle with all his Men, and while the Townſmen were buſie about the Treaty, he convey'd into the Caſtle great quantities of Wine and other Proviſions; and then cloſing the Gates, ſaid, "he was not minded to yield as yet. This mean while the two Engliſh Lords aforeſaid, went back, and told the Earl of Darby, that the Town would yield upon ſecurity of Life and Goods: Then the Earl ſent to know, if the Caſtle would do the like; but word was brought, they intended the Contrary. After a little muſing ſaid the Earl, "Well, go, take them of the Town to Mercy, for by the Town We "ſhall win the Caſtle. Then the ſaid Lords took the Town to Mercy, on Condition, they ſhould all go forth into the Field, and preſent the Keys of the Town to the Earl of Darby, ſaying, "Sir, from this time forward We acknowledge our ſelves Sub-"jects, and will ever be obedient to the King of England. This they did, and ſware "further, that they would never give any Aſſiſtance to thoſe within the Caſtle, but "rather offend them to the beſt of their Power, till they were reduced. After this, the Earl having proclaim'd, that none ſhould preſume to do any the leaſt harm to the Town or Inhabitants of Reole, made his entry into the Place, and immediately began to inveſt the Caſtle round about, as much as he might; and then raiſed his Engines, which caſt againſt the Walls Day and Night, but to little purpoſe, they were ſo thick and ſtrongly cemented of moſt hard ſtone, molten-lead and morter. It is thought that this Caſtle of old time had been wrought by the hands of the Saracens, who made their Works ſo ſtrong, that the later Buildings were no way comparable to them. Wherefore the Earl, ſeeing, that with his Engines he could do no good, called unto him the Captains of his Pioneers, and gave them Command to make a great Mine under the Walls; which yet was not expected to be done under many Days.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

VI. Now [q] during this Siege, and while the Mine was carrying on, the Lord Walter Manny remembred, that his Father, who had been heretofore Aſſaſſined in his Return from a Pilgrimage to St. James of Compoſtella, was buried, as he had heard in his Youth, in Reole, or thereabout. Wherefore now being deſirous to find where his Bones lay, he enquired about the Town, offering an 100 Crowns to any Man, that could ſhew him his Tomb. Within a while there came an old Man of the Town to Sr. Walter, who ſaid, "Sir, I believe I can bring You to the very Place, where my Lord, your "Father was buried. Sr. Walter told him, if his Words proved true, he would keep his Promiſe with him, and ſomething more.

[q] Froiſ. c. 110. fol. 54.

The Lord Manny's Father is reported to have been ſlain upon this Occaſion. Almoſt 24 Years before this, there was a Gaſcogner of the Houſe of Mirepoix, Biſhop of Cambray, in whoſe Days happen'd a Solemn Tournament before the City of Cambray, in which on both Sides there were no leſs than 500 Knights. It was the Fortune

of

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

of the Lord of Manny an Hainalder, Sr. Walter's Father, to juſt with a certain Knight of Gaſcogne, who was near of Kin to the ſaid Biſhop. But the young Gaſcogner was ſo roughly handled by him, that he lived but a few Days after: Wherefore the Lord Manny incurr'd the heavy Indignation of the Biſhop and all his Kindred. But two or three Years after ſome Pious Men by their great Diligence labour'd to compoſe Matters, and to make a Reconciliation between the Lord Manny and his Enemies. So that the Biſhop and his Relations either did, or at leaſt pretended to pardon all, and a Friendſhip was made, only the Lord of Manny was enjoyned by way of Penance to go on Pilgrimage to St. James of Compoſtella. In his going thither he paſſed by Reole, where he then found Charles of Valois Father to King Philip that now reigned, laying his Siege to that Town, which then, together with all Guien and Gaſcogne belonged to King Edward II of England. Having ended his Pilgrimage, and returning the ſame way, he gave a Viſit to the ſaid Earl Charles in the Town of Reole, which by that time [t] was upon Compoſition yielded up to him by Edmund Earl of Kent. He was entertain'd at Supper that Night by the ſaid Charles Earl of Valois, but going home late to his Lodgings, he was ſet upon, as was thought, by ſome of the Kindred of that Gaſcogner, whoſe Death he had occaſion'd, and there barbarouſly murder'd. The Authors of the Murther could no ways be clearly proved, thô the ſaid Biſhops Kindred were generally ſuſpected: But they were as then ſo high, and the Truth was ſo dark, eſpecially the Lord of Manny having no Friend there to purſue his Quarrel, that the matter was huſh'd, and by degrees quite put up. However the Earl of Valois cauſed him to be decently interred within a little Chappel in the Field, then without the Town; but afterwards the Lord Charles having won the Place, enlarged the Walls, and ſo took in that Chappel alſo into its Compaſs. Thus was Sr. Walter's Father ſlain, and the Old Man remembred all very well, as one who then belonged to Charles of Valois, and was at his Burial. Sr. Walter therefore followed this old Man, and went with him into the Chappel aforeſaid, where he ſhew'd him a little plain Stone of Marble, which his Servants had laid over him, and ſaid, "Sir, moſt certainly my Lord your Father lies buried under this Stone. Then the Lord Manny drew near to view the Tomb, and there he found a Latin Inſcription, which imported that the Lord of Manny's Body lay there. He could not forbear Weeping to find this poor Remembrance of his Dear Father, whom he could ſcarce remember to have ſeen alive; for he was but young at his Death: The old Man he rewarded as he had promiſed, and two Days after took up his Fathers Bones, and putting them in a rich Coffer, ſent them to Valenciennes in his native Country of Hainalt, and there cauſed them to be depoſited in the Church of the Fryars, and his Obſequies to be kept Annually with great Solemnity, which for many Years after were commemorated.

[t] Giovan. Villan. l. 9. c. 169.

[f] Froiſ. c. 111.

VII. All this [f] while the Earl of Darby held his Siege before the ſtrong Caſtle of Reole, and now when it had held out near 11 Weeks, the Miners were at laſt come under the Baſe Court, but under the Dungeon they could not get by any means, for it ſtood on an hard Rock. Sr. Agouſt de les Baux the Captain of the Caſtle, perceived how he was undermined, and told his Officers their Danger. Then they ſaid, "Sir, the Peril is common to us all, and we fear now inevitable, unleſs you in your great "Wiſdom contrive a Remedy. You are our Chief, whom as hitherto we have o- "bey'd, ſo now will we follow your Determination. But ſurely we have ſo long and "ſo worthily held out already, that if we could now come to any good Compoſition, no "man could blame us for Yielding at laſt. Try if you can get the Earl of Darby to "grant us our Lives and Goods, and ſo to accept the Caſtle. Upon this the Captain went down from the High Tower, and looking out at a little Window, made a ſign, that he deſired to ſpeak with ſome Body. Being demanded what he would have, he anſwer'd, how he would gladly ſpeak with the Earl of Darby or the Lord Walter Manny. The Earl hearing hereof, took along with him the Lord Manny and the Lord Stafford, ſaying, "Come, let us go to the Fortreſs, and know, what the Captain has "to ſay now. So they all rode to the Caſtle, and when Sr. Agouſt de les Baux ſaw them he took off his Cap, and ſaluting them all three in their Order, ſaid, "My Lord "of Darby, I muſt confeſs the French King ſent me hither, to defend and keep this "Town and Caſtle to my Power: And you know very well, how I have acquitted "my ſelf hitherto in this my Charge, and ſtill would if I might: But a Man cannot "always ſtay where he is beſt pleaſed. Therefore my Noble Lord of Darby, if it may ſo "pleaſe you, I and my Company, upon ſecurity for our Lives and Goods, are now wil- "ling to depart, and to reſign the Fortreſs into your Hands. "Nay ſaid the Earl of "Darby, Sr. Agouſt, you are not like to leave us ſo: You muſt needs know that we "have

"have so undermin'd you, that we may have you when we will; for the Walls of "your Castle only stand upon Props of Wood: If therefore you will yield upon Dis- "cretion, we will receive you to Mercy. "Why truly Sir (reply'd Sr. Agoust) if "we should do so, I verily believe, there is so much Honour and Generosity in your "Princely Person, that you would not but deal courteously with us, as you would desire the "French King to deal with any of your Knights, whom he should take at the like "Advantage. For Godsake Sir, blemish not your Honour for a poor Sort of Souldiers, "that are here within, who with much pain and peril have hardly won a small Liveli- "hood, and whom I have brought hither out of Provence, and Savoy, and the Dau- "phiné. For Sir, be assured, that if we thought the least of us should not come to "Mercy as well as the Greatest, we should sell our Lives so dearly, that all the World "should speak of Us. Sir, we heartily desire you to bear us some Company of Arms, "and to use us like Souldiers, and we shall pray for You. At this the Earl and the two Lords drew aside together to commune upon the Captains Words: They saw all was true he had said and consider'd, that he was a Stranger, and they also knew they could never undermine the Dungeon, wherefore they agreed to take them to Mercy, but to let them bear nothing away but their Horses and Armour. Then the Earl turning again to Sr. Agoust said, "Sir, we would gladly shew our selves friendly Companions in Arms "to all Strangers, wherefore I am content, that you and all your Company march out "with your Lives assured; so that you will bear nothing away but your Arms. "So "be it then, said Sr. Agoust, if it can be no better, and saying so went back to his Men, and related how he had sped. Then they all put on their Harness, and took their Horses, whereof they had but six remaining, and came forth of the Castle: Some bought Horses of the English, for which they gave Bills of Return, which were truly paid; the rest follow'd on Foot, and so they all went to Tholouse.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

VIII. When the Earl of Darby [t] had taken his Pleasure in the Castle of Reole a day or two, having set Men at work about the Repairs of what had been broken, and filled up the Mine with Stones, Cement and Earth, he left an English Knight his Captain of the Town and Castle, and so rode forth to Monpesat, whither many of the Country had fled with their Goods, in confidence of the Strength of the Place: but the Castle was not greatly furnished with Men of War; wherefore it was soon taken by Assault and Scalade, thô several English Archers were lost in the Attack, and an English Gentleman, who bore the Lord Staffords Banner, named Sr. Richard Penfort. This Place the Earl committed to the Custody of one of his own Esquires called Thomas Lancaster, and left with him 20 Archers. Then he went before Mauron, which he assaulted long and vigorously, but was not able to carry it; however he lodged there for that Night. The next day as they held a Council of War, a Knight of Gascogne, named Sr. Alexander of Chaumont (who being the last Year left Captain of Auberoche, had now leave to joyn the English Forces) said thus to the Earl of Darby, "Sir, I desire you would make a Shew, as if you rais'd your Siege and march'd off "to some other Part, only leaving a few Men still before the Town: I know the Na- "ture of those within so well, that I durst engage they will make a Sally upon those, "whom they shall see lagging thus behind: Then let your Men fly wisely while they "Chace, but we will lie under the Olives in Ambuscado, and when they have pursued "till they are past our Ambush, some of us shall hold them in Play, while others re- "turn toward the Town, which they shall find open. This Counsel the Earl approved, and having in the Declining of the Day, order'd the Earl of Oxford with an 100 se- lect Horse only to stay behind; all well informed how to behave themselves, began to march away with the rest of his Army, Bagg and Baggage. And half a League off Sr. Walter Manny was planted with a great Ambush in a Vale among the Olives and Vines, and the Earl rode on a great way before with his Banners aloft. When those of Mauron saw in what manner the Earl departed, as it were hastily, leaving those Men behind him, and that the English Army was too far off to give them any timely Assi- stance, they said one to another, "Let us now at length sally out and fight with these "Loiterers, that lag thus indiscreetly behind their Master: We shall soon discomfit "them every Man, and get thereby no small Honour and Advantage. To this Reso- lution they all quickly agreed, and being ready mounted and armed, 400 of them made a sally. The Earl of Oxford, who desired as much, first retired back in some seeming Disorder: But when he saw them begin the Chace in good earnest, he and his Men also, as in fear, set upon the Spur, but yet so as to leave the Enemy Hopes to overtake them soon. Thus the one Party fled in Jest and the other pursued in Ear- nest, till all were past the Ambush: At that instant the Earl of Oxford turns back in great great fury upon the Enemy, and the Lord Walter Manny ruſhes out from among the Vines upon their Backs, crying out a Manny, a Manny! While another part of the Ambuſh took the Way ſtraight to the Town, where they found the Barrs and Gates left open againſt the Return of their Friends: For it was now dark and none could diſcern, but that theſe New-comers were their old Companions; till they ſaw them ſeiſe the Gates and the Bridge, and ſo make themſelves Maſters of the Town. Thoſe who had made the Sally, were all either ſlain, or taken every man of them; for they were, as we ſhew'd, encloſed both before and behind. Wherefore the Town yielded with great humility to the Earl of Darby, who of his great Grace and Clemency took them to Mercy, and ſpared their Houſes from Fire and Plunder. All that Lordſhip the Earl gave to Sr. Alexander of Chaumont, by whoſe Advice the Town was won; whereupon Sr. Alexander ſet his Brother Sr. Anthony of Chaumont as Captain there, with a ſufficient number of Archers and Men of Arms; he himſelf chooſing ſtill to follow the Earl in this his Expedition. The next Place they came to was Ville Franche in Agenois, which together with the Caſtle was taken by Aſſault, and here the Earl made an Eſquire of his, named Thomas Cook, Captain, whom thereupon he Knighted. Thus the Earl of Darby without any Reſiſtance overran the Country, and conquer'd Towns and Caſtles, and wan much Spoil and great Riches, all which like a Noble Prince, he diſtributed among his Men.

[t] Froiss. c. 112.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

[u] Froiſ. c. 113.

IX. From hence he rode to [u] Mirapont in his way toward Bourdeaux; (for all this while the Currours of his Army never went near St. Mary-Port) which having held out three Days, yielded on the Fourth, and this Place he committed to the Care of a Valiant Eſquire of his, John Briſtow. Thence he ſent out a Detachment, which took in a little encloſed Town, called Tonneins, ſtanding on the River Garonne; and after that a ſtrong Caſtle, named Damaſan, a little lower on the other ſide the ſaid River; which was furniſhed with a convenient Garriſon. Then the Earl went up higher into Angoulemois, and ſat down with all his Forces before the great City of Angouleſme, ſaying, he would not ſtir thence, till he had it at his Pleaſure. But the Citizens being terrify'd with his Succeſſes, made a Compoſition with him, to ſend 24 of their Chief Burgeſſes their Hoſtages to Bourdeaux: That he ſhould give them Reſpit for a Moneth: Within which time, if the French King ſend a ſufficient Captain to keep the Field againſt him; then they to have their Hoſtages reſtored, and to be acquitted of all Obligation: But if no ſuch Forces appear, then they without any more adoe, to ſubmit to the Government of the King of England. Upon this Compoſition the Earl rode to Blaye in Saintogne, wherein were two Valiant and Hardy Captains, Sr. Guiſchard, aliàs Sr. Richard Dangle, (afterwards for the Engliſh, and in time one of the Knights of the Honourable Order of the Garter) and the other was Sr. William of Rochechouart, of no leſs Courage and Loyalty. Theſe Knights anſwer'd the Earls Summons, "That they would yield to no Man living: Wherefore he laid to them a ſtrong and cloſe Siege, and in the mean time ſent out a Detachment to Mortagne in Saintogne by the Sea-ſide, whereof was Captain a Noble and Hardy Knight, named the Lord of Bouciquault: Who Defended the Place ſo well, that the Earl's Men deſpair'd to take it. Wherefore after ſome loſs, they wheel'd off to Mirembeau, and after that, as far as Aunay, both which alſo they found too tough for them, and ſo return'd to the Camp before Blaye. Here no Day paſſed without ſome notable feat of Arms performed; and now firſt did Sr. Richard Dangle begin to bear ſome kind inclination to the Engliſh Nation; but here he held out gallantly: So that by this time the Moneth being compleat, the Earl of Darby remembring his Agreement with the City of Angouleſme, ſent thither his two Marſhals, to whom the Citizens ſware Allegiance in behalf of the King of England, their Maſter. Whereupon their Hoſtages were reſtored, the City indemnified, and the Earl at their Requeſts ſent unto them for their Captain Sr. John Norwich, a Valiant and Politick Commander, and a [x] Baron of England, thô [y] Froiſard took him to be but an Eſquire. And now Winter being far enter'd, the Earl ſeeing the ſtout Reſiſtance at Blaye, and the ſmall Importance of the Place, reſolv'd to ſpare his Men for better Service, and to raiſe his Siege, till a more commodious ſeaſon: So he diſlodged, and repaſſing the River Garonne, went back to Bourdeaux, where he diſtributed his Men into Winter Quarters. Now if any ſhall object, that it ſeems incredible, that all this while the King of France ſhould lie ſtill; let ſuch forbear their Cenſure, till the beginning of the next Year, where they will find, that he ſent a great Man againſt him; but one, who thought not fit to act at that time, till he was conſiderably Reinforced, as we ſhall ſee in due place.

[x] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 90.
[y] Froiſ. c. 118. fol. 57.

CHAP.

AN. DOM. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

CHAPTER the TWENTY FOURTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. Henry the Old Earl of Lancaſter dies, &c. II. Jacob van Arteveld having plotted to exclude the Earl of Flanders and his Poſterity, and to ſet up in his ſtead King Edwards Eldeſt Son, propoſes the Matter to the Repreſentatives of that Country in Preſence of the King. III. They abominate the Motion ſecretly, but get off for the preſent. IV. King Edward allows Jacob van Arteveld a Guard, and pardons Sr. John Maltravers ſenior. V. Jacob van Arteveld murther'd at Gaunt by the Commons. VI. King Edward being angry therefore with the Flemings, is appeas'd by their Ambaſſadors. VII. The Earl of Hainalt ſlain in Friſeland. VIII. His Uncle, John Lord Beaumont, fetch'd over by the French King from King Edward's Service: In whoſe room the Lord Godfry of Harcourt revolts from France to England. IX. John Earl of Montford being at liberty, and aſſiſted by England, prevailes in Bretagne, but in the midſt of his Victories dies. X. The Earl of Northampton combats Charles of Blois hand to hand, and routs his Army at Morlaix: After which he wins Roche D' Arien; and ſo returns for England. XI. An Army of 30000 Scots diſcomfited by the Engliſh, whereon enſues a Truce. XII. The Death of one Lord and two Biſhops.

I. DUring the laſt Campaign, of which we ſpake in the preceding Chapter, word was brought over into Guienne to the Earl of Darby, [a] how the Good Old Earl of Lancaſter his Father, was departed this Life, and had left him with his Bleſſing, and a Greater Title, a Fair Inheritance. He was Younger Brother (and upon his Death without Iſſue) next Heir to Thomas Earl of Lancaſter, eldeſt Son to Prince Edmund Plantagenet ſirnamed Crouchback, who was Second Son to King Henry III. and Younger Brother to King Edward the Firſt. His Stile ran thus, Henry Earl of Lancaſter, Leiceſter, Darby and Provence, Lord of Monmouth and Steward of England: His true Sirname was Plantagenet, but his uſual, Torcol or de Torto Collo, becauſe his Neck ſtood ſomething awry: Which Title is thrô miſtake by [b] Sandford attributed to his Son; as alſo is the [b] Patronage of John Wickliffe: Whereas his Sons Sirname was Griſmond; and Wickliffe's Friend John of Gaunt. He had married the Lady [c] Maud, ſole Daughter and Heireſs of Sr. Patrick de Cadurcis or Chaworth, a Baron of the Realm: By whom he had this valiant Son Henry Earl of Darby, upon his Death Earl, and afterwards created Duke, of Lancaſter; and ſix Daughters, Blanch Lady Wake, Iſabell Prioreſs of Ambresbury, Maud Counteſs of Ulſter, Joan Lady Moubray of Axholme, Eleanor Counteſs of Arundel, and Mary Lady Piercy. He died at Leiceſter and was buried in the Monaſtery of Canons there, King Edward, with his Queen Conſort and the Queen Mother, and almoſt all the Biſhops and Barons of the Realm being preſent at his Funeral: Where his Son afterwards erected to his Memory a Fair Tomb on the Northſide of the High Altar in the Collegiate Church of our Lady, called the New-Warke. But there is no Coronet on his Head.

[a] Knighton p. 2585. *n.*30.

[b] *Sandford Geneal Hiſt p.*112 *& p.*113.

[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 783. Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 323. Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p. 110, &c.

II. About this time there happen'd a memorable Revolution in Flanders, which may teach us how uncertain Popular Favour is, and how ſuddain the Fall of thoſe Great Ones proves, who are not fixed on a ſure Foundation. We have frequently had occaſion to ſpeak of Jacob van Arteveld of Gaunt, who had long govern'd all Flanders with a more abſolute Sway, than ever the Earls themſelves had done. This Man, whether thrô hopes of raiſing his Family to future Time, or whether out of Inclination, or of meer Policy to ſecure his own Greatneſs by the Aid of England, was all along a faſt Friend to King Edward; and had again as much reſpect and favour from that Prince, as his Heart could deſire. He now [d] in Confidence of his boundleſs Authority among the Commons of the Country, grew ſo preſumptuous, as ſome while before this to entertain a Reſolution of Diſinheriting his Natural Lord Lewis Earl of Flanders, and to put the Government thereof into the Hands of King Edward of England: On Condition that He the ſaid King, ſhould endow his Eldeſt Son the Prince of Wales therewith, and [d] Froiſ. c. 115. *& Giov. Villani l.*12. *c.*46. p. 854.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

and make a Dukedom of the Earldom of Flanders. These things being thus privately agreed on beforehand, about the Feast of St. John Baptist, King Edward having [e] left his Son Prince Lionel of Antwerp, his Lieutenant at Home during his Absence, took Shipping at Sandwich and came before Scluse with a great Navy, the Young Prince, Edward his eldest Son, being with him, and Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, Thomas Lord Vghtred, John Lord Seagrave, John Lord Leiburn and many Others attending Him. The King lay at Anchor in the Haven of Scluse, and there kept House on Board, whither his Friends, the Chief Men of Flanders came to visit him. One Day the Flemish Burgesses being invited into the Kings Ship called the Catherine, after a [f] most Magnificent Collation bestowed on them by the King, Jacob van Arteveld rose up and made a most plausible Oration, "extolling the King of England's great "Power either to protect his Friends, or to punish his Enemies; he set forth also the "notable Good-will, which he had all along bore to his Allies and Subjects of Lower "Germany: That the Young Prince of Wales his Son, did no way come short of his "Fathers Steps, but rather promised, if God gave life, to reach the very Height of all "his Vertues: That their own Lord Lewis, unmindfull of the Welfare of his People, "had confederated with King Philip their Mortal Enemy; and had himself made War "against them, and done unto them many great Inconveniences and Dammages. Where-"fore if they judged it fit to requite their Haters with Neglect, and to pay unto their "Lovers and Protectors Friendship and Service, He must needs advise them either to "make the Earl of Flanders pay his Homage unto King Edward, to whom as to the "Rightfull King of France it was only due; or if thrô his Stubborn Obstinacy they "could not prevail with him herein, then wholly to cast off the hatefull Yoke of a "Tyrannous and an Unkind Lord, and submit to the pleasant and honourable Go-"vernment of King Edward and his Son, who would advance the Earldom of Flanders "into a Dukedom, and make them flourish above all other People in Trade and Pro-"sperity.

[e] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*167.

[f] *Mezeray p.*23 ad hunc ann.

III. When the Burgesses had all heard what secret Poison lurked in the Breast of this subtle Orator, in their Hearts they utterly abominated his Perfidious Treason, and firmly resolved never to be Guilty of so black and base a Deed, as to disinherit and depose their own Natural Lord, and his Young Son Lewis from their proper Right and Title. But however to get off handsomly, and make fair weather for the present, after a little private Conference they gave this Answer to the King. "Sir said they, there is "proposed unto us a Matter of no small Importance, which may some Ages after very "nearly concern the whole Country of Flanders and our Heirs for ever, as well as our "Selves. And thô surely, we know no Person in the World at this time, whose Pro-"motion, and encrease of Wealth and Honour We so heartily desire, as We do your "Majesties: Yet this Business we dare not of our selves determine, unless the Commo-"nalty of Flanders yield their Consent thereto. Wherefore Sir, for the present we "crave leave to return every Man to his own City, and there we shall confer with the "Generality of every Town and Corporation; and as the Major Part shall agree, we "shall act most willingly. Within a Month at fartheſt we will all return hither again, "and bring your Majesty, we doubt not, such an Answer as shall be agreeable.

IV. The King and Jacob van Arteveld urged them much to make a more speedy Return, but they could obtain no other Reply at that time; wherefore they were all dismist to their own several Homes: But Jacob tarried still with the King, bearing him all along in hand, that he would not fail to bring this Purpose to good Effect. But King Edward who was not apt to be blinded with Prosperity, and had a more piercing Judgment in publick Affairs, doubted much, not only lest this Business should miscarry, but his Friend also incurr some Danger thereby. Wherefore at parting he gave him great Caution in the Management of that Affair, and allow'd him [g] also for a Guard 500 Welchmen under the Command of Sr. John Maltravers senior, and Sr. William Sturry. Sr. John Maltravers was indeed a Baron of the Realm, and the same Person we mention'd to have been concerned, together with Sr. Thomas Gournay in the barbarous Murther of King Edward the Second; wherefore also, as we shew'd, he fled upon that Act, and was three Years after condemned in Parliament to be put to Death wherever he should be found, with the price of 500 Marks for his Head, or a 1000 for any one, that should bring him in alive. For fifteen Years after he had lived in great Penitence, and very privately in and about Flanders, and either finding some hopes from the Kings Mercy, or being not so guilty as he was represented, or in Confidence of having merited something by his late Services (for he had lost [h] all his Goods, and suffer'd much hardship upon the Kings Account in Flanders) he came now voluntarily

[g] *Holinshead Engl. Chron. p.*926.

[h] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*101. & 102.

to

to the King and rendred himſelf into his Hands: Whereupon, eſpecially ſince he had never undergone a legal Trial, he was reſpited now, and by the King ſet over theſe Welchmen, and ſix years after fully pardoned: But to return. AN. DOM. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

This Guard, ſome [i] ſay, that Jacob van Arteveld deſired himſelf, for the better ſecurity of his Perſon; becauſe he ſaid, that one Gerard Dennis, who was Dean of the Weavers, and a very ſeditious fellow, did maliciouſly plot his Ruine: And no doubt, but by this time he had Enemies enow, as we ſhall quickly find.

V. Now the [k] Burgeſſes of Gaunt, that came from Scluſe, had declared to the People, with no great Advantage, how Jacob van Arteveld went about to depoſe and exclude their Natural Lord, and his Heirs from their true Right and Title, and to introduce an Alien to rule over them; at which News the Commons began generally to murmure againſt him (for that Deſign of his did no way ſuit with their Deſires) and they ſaid, "That althô there had paſt ſome unkindneſs between the Earl and them; yet by "the Grace of God, no ſuch Diſloyalty ſhould ever be found in them, as to diſinhe-"rit and exclude their own Natural Lord, and his Iſſue, to endow a Stranger with his "Right. We may well think, that Gerard Dennis, and others, who either favour'd the Earl, or maligned Jacob van Arteveld, did not overſlip this opportunity; but uſed all their Art and Diligence to embroile matters further. They lay'd whatever had happen'd amiſs, during his Government, all to his Fault, but chiefly ſcattered about the Town ſuch Reports, as theſe; "that Jacob van Arteveld had gather'd in the whole "Revenues of Flanders for ſeven Years together, of all which he had never yet given "any account, but had ſpent it upon himſelf in Houſekeeping, and otherwiſe, as he "pleaſed. And that having ſecretly Convey'd vaſt Sums of Money into England, he "intended, when he had quite Ruin'd his Country, to make his Retreat thither, and "laugh at them. Theſe and the like malicious and falſe Reports, ſet the Minds of the Gantois on Fire. But while theſe ſeeds of Diſpleaſure were thus by his Enemies ſowing againſt him in Gaunt, this Popular Man, had wholly brought over the Men of Bruges and Ipres, to his Opinion: Whereby he became ſo blinded with Confidence, that without half his Guard of Welchmen, he came one Morning before Dinner to Gaunt, with his uſual unconcernedneſs and ſecurity. The Commons had warning of his coming beforehand, and ſo he found ſome Numbers of them met in the Streets, where he was to paſs; not as they uſed to do, to bid him Welcome, but to attend his Downfall. When they ſaw him, inſtead of making their uſual Honours, they turned aſide and began to run three Heads under one Hood, and to murmure and whiſper among themſelves ſaying one to another, "See, yonder comes our great Maſter, who will diſ-"poſe of all Flanders at his Pleaſure: But this is no longer to be endured. Jacob could not but obſerve a Wonderfull Alteration, as he rode thrô the Streets; but when he ſaw thoſe, whom he knew to be his Friends, to ſhake their Heads, and look heavily, and then turning their Backs to go into their Houſes ſilently; he began to diſtruſt, that there was no good meant unto him. Wherefore being come to his Houſe, he order'd to ſhut up his Doors, Gates, and Windows; which was ſcarce done, but the ſtreet was full of Men, who conſiſted chiefly of the ſmaller Trades, and the more Raſcally ſort of People: Such being always the firſt for any Miſchief or Sedition. Theſe preſently Aſſaulted Jacob's Houſe with all their Fury; and had made quick work, but that the Welchmen gave them ſome diverſion; for they barricado'd all the Avenues of the Houſe, and ſhot among the mixt Multitude, and threw down upon them huge Weights of Maſſy Stone and Timber; wherewith they ſlew and [l] hurt many. But when Jacob ſaw, he could not poſſibly hold out long, and that by this time near upon three parts of the whole Town was gather'd againſt him, he thought once more to try, what his tongue, that never yet had failed him, could do in this exigence. So a Parly being demanded and obtain'd, he came bare-headed to an high-Window, and ſaid with great Modeſty, "Ah! Ye good People, how comes it to paſs, that you are thus "ſtrangely ſtirr'd up againſt me? Wherein have I ever diſpleas'd You? Do but de-"clare it unto me, and I will endeavour to correct mine Errour, thô with the utmoſt "hazard of my Life, which I never yet accounted Dear, in reſpect of your Advan-"tage. As he was going on, thoſe that heard him, anſwer'd, as it were with one voice, "We will have an Account given us of the vaſt Treaſures of Flanders, which you "have ſquander'd away and diſpos'd of at your pleaſure, without the leaſt title of reaſon. "Jacob anſwer'd, Certainly, my Friends, of the treaſure of Flanders, I never convert-"ed any thing to my own private uſe; and if it will pleaſe you to retire peaceably to "your ſeveral homes, and come again to morrow in the Morning, I ſhall give you ſo "good and juſt an account of what has been in my hands, that will make you all

[i] Holinſhead ibid. p. 926.
[k] Froiſ. c. 115.
[l] Giovan. Villani p. 855.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

"well satisfied of my truth in your Service. Then they all cry'd out with more fury, "Nay, nay, we will have an account made immediately; you must not think to "escape us so. For we are very sure, you have convey'd away great Riches into Eng-"land, without acquainting us therewith: And therefore You shall die. When Ja-"cob heard that Word, he clasp'd his hands together woefully, and said, all weeping, "Sirs, such as I am, You your selves have made me, and You have all sworn to me "before now, that You would protect me against all Persons whatsoever; and yet now "You talk of slaying me without Reason. You may do it, if You are so resolved, "for I am but one Man among You all: But for Gods Sake, and your own souls sake, "be better advised, and remember the time past, and consider the great Favours and "Courtesies, that I have shewn to You and yours. Methinks you intend to give me "but a bad Reward for all the Goodness, that I have used toward You, and your "Town hitherto: You know very well, that Merchandise was almost Ruin'd through-"out this whole Country, till I prov'd the occasion of reviving it again; and that I "have govern'd You in great Peace and Prosperity; for during my Government a-"mong You, You have had all things at your desire, as Corn, Riches, and all sorts "of Merchandise. Then they all cry'd with one voice, "Come down and be hang'd, "and don't Preach to Us at such a Distance, but give Us an account of the vast Trea-"sure of Flanders, which You have had so long in your hands: For it is not the part "of a just Officer to receive the Goods of his Lord, or of his Country, without ma-"king account. When Jacob saw that nothing would prevail with them, he drew in his Head, and shut the Window, thinking, if he might, to steal out on the back-side, and to escape away on his Horse, or however, to get into the Church adjoyning, there to take Sanctuary, till this Fury of the Rabble should be abated. But by this time, his House was so broken up, that near upon four Hundred Persons were enter'd in, one of whom, named Thomas Dennis, gave him his Deaths wound; thô others say, that a certain Cobler, whose Father Jacob van Arteveld had formerly caused to be slain, followed him so close, as he was fleeing into a Stable, where his Horses stood, that overtaking him, he clove his head in sunder with an Ax; so that he fell down stark dead upon the ground.

Thus Jacob van Arteveld, who by his Popular Air, his Policy, and Wisdom, had arrived to the most absolute Government of all Flanders, was by a sudden turn of Fortune miserably slain on a [m] Sunday in the afternoon, being the * 17 of July. There accompanied him in his Death ten other Principal Persons of his Council (among whom were a Brother and a Nephew of his) besides, as many of the Welchmen, as made Resistance, to the Number of 70 in all; the Rest being spared in respect to the King their Master, got away safe unto him again, as he lay at Scluse, waiting for other kind of News, than what these Men brought him.

[m] Holinshead p. 927.
* B. Dom. Lit. Labbè ad hunc an.

VI. As [n] for Lewis Earl of Flanders, who was then at Dendermonde, a City of that part of Flanders, which belong'd to the Empire, he was very well pleas'd, when he heard of the Death of this his old Enemy: And yet for all that, he durst not put any entire Confidence in the Flemings, nor venture as yet to go to Gaunt. But when King Edward heard of it, he was infinitely displeas'd at the loss of so serviceable a Friend, and immediately departed from Scluse, and took the Sea again, grievously threatning the Gauntois, and the whole Country of Flanders, and vowing that his Death should be dearly Revenged: But for that time he returned into England. The People of Flanders expected no less; for now, when the Murther was known abroad among all the good Towns of that Country, they seriously began to consider, how ill King Edward would in all likelyhood resent this Matter; wherefore in time they determin'd to go and excuse themselves before him; especially the Burgesses of Bruges, Ipres, Cassel, Courtray, Oudenarde, Antwerp, and Franker: And it was high time for them so to do, for the Parliament of England had [o] already made their humble address to the King to break the Peace with Flanders. Presently therefore they sent after the King into England, to request his safe Conduct, that they might come according to their Duty, to make their excuse: And this the King at last yielded to, his first fit of Passion being blown over. So that about Michaelmas certain Burgesses of the best Quality came from all the Towns of Flanders, except Gaunt only; for as yet the King would not permit any of them to see his Face: The Rest were introduced before the King, then at Westminster; where they humbly excused themselves of being any way accessory to the Death of Jacob van Arteveld, and sware solemnly, "that they knew nothing of the Matter, till it was done; and that if they had, he "was the Man, whom to the best of their Powers they would have defended; and [n] Froiss. c. 115.

[o] Sr. Winston Churchill's Divi Britan. p. 24.

"that

"that they were extreamly concerned for his Death; for he had governed their Coun- AN. DOM.
"try very Wisely, and to their great Advantage. They added further, that the Gaun- 1345.
"tois themselves, who had done this barbarous Act, should make satisfaction therefore: AN. REGNI
"And they told the King and his Council, that althô this Man was Dead, yet the King Angliæ
"of England was not a jot fallen in the Love and Fidelity of the Good People of Flan- XIX.
"ders; as he should find in all things, except what pertained to the Inheritance of Franciæ
"Flanders, which they said, the Flemings were resolved by no means to presume to VI.
"give away from the Right Heirs. They said also to the King, "Sir, You have a "Fair and Noble Progeny, both Sons and Daughters, and as for the Prince of Wales,
"your Eldest Son, he cannot choose but be a great Prince, without the accession of "Flanders. But then Sir, You have a Young Daughter, and We have a Young Lord,
"the Earl's Son, who is the Heir Apparent of Flanders, and he is now in our Cu"stody. So that if it please You to make a Match between a Daughter of Yours, "and this Lord, the Earldom of Flanders will be for ever after in the hands of your "Posterity. From these words of theirs we are to observe a Mistake of [p] Mezeray's, [p] Mez. p. 24.
who tells us, how they offer'd King Edward a Daughter of their Earls to be Married to his Son the Prince of Wales; when as we can find no Daughter that Lewis had, nor could such a Marriage have signifi'd any thing to the Prince of England, when there was a Son also living, who was to inherit Flanders; and besides, before this Offer, a greater Match had been [q] this Year proposed between the Prince of Wales, and a [q] Sandford p.
Daughter of Alphonso the Brave, King of Portugal. The Flemings also added at the 184. ex Pat. 19. Ed. 3. p. 3. m. 11.
same time, how [r] they doubted not to perswade the Earl, their Lord, to do Homage unto the King of England, till when they promised not to receive him. These and [r] Holinshead p.
the like Protestations somewhat pacified the Kings displeasure; so that soon after the 927.
League between England and Flanders was renewed, and the Death of Jacob van Ar- teveld was quite forgotten: Thô he left a Young Son Philip behind him, who after King Edwards Death, became as Great in Flanders, as ever his Father had been, and by involving those People in new Combustions occasion'd a severe Revenge of his Fathers Blood, by the Lives of many thousands of the Flemings: As may be seen in the Stories of Flanders, and particularly in the second Volume of Froisards History.

However the Earl of Flanders would by no means consent to make his Homage to the King of England; but remain'd still firm to the French Interest and Title; whereby his Troubles continued, till the next Year he lost his Life, fighting against the English, in the Famous Battle of Cressy; to which we are now hasting.

VII. About this time [s] Prince William, the Young Earl of Hainalt, Holland, Zea- [s] Froiss. c. 116. vid. Engl. Atl. 4 Vol. p. 155.
land, and Friseland, King Edwards Brother in Law, having also met with some Rebellion among his Subjects both of Holland and Friseland, resolved to reduce them both to a sense of their Duty; and first he went and laid Siege to Utrecht in Holland, where one Robert van Arckell was Governour against him; after a long Siege he wan the Place, and took his Pleasure of his Enemies; making [t] five Hundred of the [t] Eng. Atl. ibid.
Principal Citizens come forth bare headed, and bare footed, and beg his Pardon;
And shortly after in the Moneth of * September, he went from Dort in Holland with a * Giov. Villani great Fleet of Valiant Souldiers, gather'd from Hainalt, Flanders, Brabant, Holland, p. 862. l. 12. c. 53.
Guelderland, and Juliers, to take Revenge of his Rebells of Friseland: For he claimed to be Lord thereof, and it was indeed his by Right; if the Frisons had not been of Barbarous and Unreasonable Principles. But here at last it was his ill Fortune to be met by the Frisons in a narrow passage, near Staveren, where being unknown he was presently slain; before any of his Friends could come up to his Assistance. He was a Prince of high Merit, and a most Famous Souldier, whereof for the short time he lived, [u] he gave many good Testimonies in his Wars against the Saracens and Moors [u] Time's store- in the Kingdom of Granada, and against the French in the behalf of his Brother in Law, house p. 721.
the King of England; also in his Victories in Lithuania, and Livonia, and against the Russian Infidels; where he loaded himself with Honour, and his Men with spoil and booty: Lastly in his Conquest of Utrecht and his frequent Victories over the Frisons; till this unhappy encounter, wherein he lost his Life. He died without Issue, whereupon he was succeeded by his Eldest Sister, Margaret the Empress, whose Son William of Bavaria, was Earl after her Decease: Which William Married the Lady Mathil- da, Daughter to Henry Plantagenet, now Earl, but then Duke of Lancaster, by whom yet he had no Issue. There was slain at the same time with this Young Valorous Earl of Hainalt, his Sisters Son, William * Marques of Juliers, and Earl of Cam- * Giov. Villani bridge, a Lord of great Power and Valour, and while he lived, a sure Friend both to p. 862. &c.
him and King Edward. His Uncle, Sr. John of Hainalt, Lord of Beaumont, was [y] not

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

[y] not in Friſeland at the time of this woefull chance, but ſoon after coming thither, when he was told of the Death of his Nephew, he rag'd like a Man diſtracted, and would immediately have taken the Field againſt the Friſons: But he was hinder'd by his ſervants, and eſpecially Sr. Robert Gluves, who was his Armour-bearer, and by a Dutifull Violence forced him into his Ship againſt his Will. So he return'd into Holland with a ſmall Company, and came to St. Geertruydenberg, where he found the Young Lady his Niece, late Wife to the ſaid Earl, named Joan, the Duke of Brabant's Eldeſt Daughter; who being informed of this heavy loſs, went and lived diſconſolate in the Land of Binche, about three Leagues Eaſtward of Mons, [z] which had been aſſign'd her for her Dowry. The Government of Hainalt was menag'd by the Lord John, till the Empreſs Margaret, his Niece, came thither to take Poſſeſſion in her own Perſon.

[y] Froiſ. c. 116.

[z] Vid. c. 10. §. 6. p. 114.

VIII. After this News was ſpread abroad in France, King Philip, whom it became to be vigilant about his own Advantage, began to think, how he might bring over the Lord John of Hainalt to his Side, now the Earl was dead, with whom, ſince his Invaſion of his Lands, he could never have hopes of Reconciliation: But the Lord John's Reſentments (he knew) were not ſo deep; wherefore he ſpake to Guy Earl of Blois (who had married the Lord John's Daughter and had by her three Sons, Lewis, John and Guy, beſides the Lord Charles, whom he had by a former Venter) to uſe his Intereſt with him, to bring him over to the French Side, and he himſelf alſo by his Royal Letters aſſured unto him greater Revenues in France than he had in England, which he promiſed to aſſign unto him in Lands, where he ſhould think beſt himſelf. But to all theſe Arguments the Noble Lord was wholly Deaf; for he conſider'd that he had ſpent all the flower of his Youth in the King of Englands Service, and ever found great Favour and Love from him; wherefore now he had no mind to leave him. When the Earl of Blois ſaw there was no fixing on him this way, he reſolved to try another, and firſt to win the Lord of Saginelles, his Chief Companion and Counſellour, and ſo by his means to work further upon the Lord of Beaumont. This Man being ſoon gain'd, as one that had no ſuch Obligation to England, it was agreed between him and the Earl of Blois, to make the Lord John believe, that King Edward would no longer pay him his uſual Penſion, but had abſolutely refus'd upon Demand, to pay it to his Uſe as he had been wont. This Device took, for the Lord John without enquiring into the Bottom of it, was ſo diſpleas'd at this ſuppoſed Unkindneſs, that he forthwith renounced his Service and Good-will, which hitherto he had born to King Edward. The French King hearing hereof, ſent immediatly ſufficient Deputies to him, and choſe him of his Council, and retained him in his Service for War at certain Wages, aſſigning him moreover in France, as much Land or more than he had in England.

But to requite the Loſs of theſe four Friends of King Edward's, Earl William, his Uncle John, the Marqueſs of Juliers, and Jacob van Arteveld, about [a] this very time came over to his Side the Couragious and Politick Lord Godfry of Harcourt, Lord of St. Saviour le Vicount, and Brother to John Earl of Harcourt. He had been once as Dear to King Philip of France, as any Lord of his whole Realm; but on [b] Occaſion of a Quarrel between his Brother and Sr. Robert Bertram Marſhal of France (which was hugely fomented by Partakers on both Sides) he ſo greatly diſpleaſed King Philip, that if he could have got him into his Power, 'twas concluded he had found no better uſage than the Lord Clyſſon had done before. But he having timely Notice from his Friends, withdrew into Brabant to the Duke his Couſin, by whom, when all his Lands were ſeiſed on by King Philip, he was adviſed to go into England and proffer his Service to the King there. He did ſo and was welcome to the King, who received him with large Demonſtrations of Good-will, and made much uſe of him in his following Wars: And this Diſpleaſure of his coſt the Realm of France dearly, eſpecially the Dukedom of Normandy; for there the ſad Effects thereof were ſeen an hundred years after.

[a] Froiſ. c. 114.

[b] Fabian p. 271.

[c] c. 22. §. 16. p. 312.

IX. In the Cloſe of the foregoing Year it may be remembred, [c] how we ſpake of the Deliverance of John Earl of Montford, who claim'd the Dukedom of Bretagne, from Priſon: And that by Vertue of the Truce King Philip was obliged in a manner to give him his Liberty, but it was done with this Proviſo; that he [d] ſhould not go into Bretagne, nor make the leaſt offer to intermeddle with the Affairs of that Country. Notwithſtanding this Tye of his Promiſe, Earl Montford took the firſt Opportunity to make his Eſcape into England, as he did about [e] Eaſter, there to require Aid from King Edward to recover his Right. And accordingly we find, that this Summer, about the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt, King Edward ſent over with him a conſiderable Power under the Com-

[d] Fabian p. 270.

[e] Knighton p. 2585.

Command of William Bohun Earl of Northampton. With whom [f] were John Vere Earl of Oxford, Hugh Lord Spencer, Richard Lord Talbot and Dr. William Killesby, each of them retaining many Men of Arms and Archers. With these Forces Earl Montford [g] wan and sack'd Dinant, and laid Siege to Quimperlay; but being suddenly taken with a Calenture or burning Feaver, he died about the end of September at Quimpercorentin, leaving the Management of his Pretensions to the Conduct of his Virago-Lady, and his young Son John who many years after, having slain Charles of Blois in Battle, obtained together with the Dukedom the honourable Sirname of Valiant. One [h] reports, that this Earl died distracted, many Devils appearing at his Departure; and that at the time of his Death such a multitude of Ravens settled upon the House wherein he lay, that 'twas thought the whole Kingdom of France could not have yielded such a Number. As for his being distracted, I shall not stand to question that, since in a Burning Feaver many a Good Man may suffer a Delirium; and God forbid that we should always judge hardly thereupon: But for this horrid Apparition it seems to me not so credible; nor could I ever find any great Evil of this Earl, except that now he broke his Word with King Philip, who yet was his Enemy, and extorted it unreasonably and violently from him: Nor if I had known him to have been a Notorious Sinner, durst I ever give the more faith to this Story. I reverence the Judgments of God, and think it not fit for Sinners as we are, to pry too sawcily into his Counsels concerning our Brethren, perhaps no worse than our selves. But this I well know, that either Superstitious or Prejudiced Persons may enhance common Accidents into Prodigies; or invent what they please against those, for whom they have no Charity. After his Death however the greater Part of Bretagne was for some time in the hands of Charles of Blois, for now [i] most of the English Souldiers return'd into Gascogne to serve the Earl of Darby: Except Sr. Thomas Dagworth, and those, who before were sent to the Assistance of the Countess of Montford.

AN. DOM. 1345. An Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

[f] Stow p. 239.
[g] Mezeray p. 23.
[h] Gaguin l. 8. p. 140.
[i] Fabian p. 219.

But however the English brake not up their Army thus till Winter, for the Earl of Northampton hearing, that the Lord Charles of Blois, presuming on the Death of John of Montford, was come to Morlaix with a great Power, intending to overrun the Country, went forward with all his Forces to meet him. In the Champaign Ground near [k] Morlaix, the two Armies of the Lord Charles of Blois, and William Bohun Earl of Northampton, joyned Battle together with Equal Courage and Bravery. And at this time it is said, that the two Generals, both the French Lord and the English Earl met together by consent in single Combat, where they fought so long at Handy-stroaks in the Field, that it would have pos'd an equal Judge to have determin'd who had the better: For three times that day being both wearied, they withdrew to take Breath, and as often both return'd to renew the Combat, which was fought with Spear and Shield, Sword and Target, after the manner of that Age. Only at last the most Noble and Valiant Lord Charles seeing his Men begin to fly, was obliged also to set Spurs to his Horse and forsake the Field, leaving the Victory to the English, who yet paid dearly for it, having lost almost as many in the Fight as the Enemy. But when the Chace began, then the Lord Charles his Men were beaten down on every side; and the Success of this Day grew more important, in that thereby the Earl of Northampton had no more Enemy to obstruct his Progress at that time; wherefore presently [l] he went and lay before a strong Fortress of Bretagne, called la Roche D' Arien, about ten French Miles Northward of Morlaix, which he took by Assault; thô after his Departure it was retaken by the other Party, till the Lord Thomas Dagworth took it again from them; as two years hence we shall shew.

[k] Lel. Collect. 1 Vol. p. 805. & Stow p. 239. &c.
[l] Leland. ibid. & Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 185. & Fabian p. 220. & p. 276

When the Earl of Northampton and the other Lords of England with him, had thus settled Affairs for the present in Bretagne, and had disposed of what Places they had won to the Custody of good Captains, with sufficient Garrisons; Winter being now well enter'd, they all came over into England to the King: And the Truce, which the Deceased Earl had broken, was again punctually observed.

XI. This Year the Scots by the Instigation of the French King, enter'd England by Westmorland, and passing over the River Ulles, burnt Penreth and [m] Carleton, and many other little Towns and Villages thereabouts: But John Kirkeby Bishop of Caerlile, with the Lord Thomas Lucy of Cockermouth, and Sr. Robert Ogle, having collected a small Body of Choice Men, went about their Host surrounding them in the Night, and so terrified them with perpetual Alarms, and Noises of Trumpets, Clarions and Horns; that the Scots could neither take Rest for Fear, nor send out their Foragers to seek Provision. And now the Lords Piercy and Nevil on the other Part, and the Men of [m] Carletonum pro Carleolum, apud Walsingh. hist. p. 156. Nam Carleolum non solum erat satis validum, sed etiam ab hoc latere nimis distans. Quod qui Walsingh. secuti sunt, parùm prospiciebant: Neq; ulla de Carleolo combusto per hos dies apud antiquos mentio, &c.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

of Lancaſhire on a Third, had appointed, together with the Biſhop and thoſe of Caerlile to fall upon the Scots all together, who would then be in a manner quite enclоſed by the Engliſh: When Sr. Alexander Straghan, being compelled of Neceſſity to go on Foraging for the Army, and going forth for that purpoſe with ſome of the moſt Select Troops of all the Scottiſh Hoſt, was luckily encountred by the Biſhop of [n] Carlile, the Lord Lucy, and Sr. Robert Ogle; which latter happening upon Sr. Alexander himſelf, fiercely ſpurred up his Horſe againſt him, and ran him quite thrô the Body with his Spear, himſelf alſo at the ſame time receiving thrô his Shield a Wound on the Left ſide, but not Mortal. In this Rencounter the Martial Biſhop alſo being Caſt from his Horſe, was in danger of being made a Priſoner; but having Valiantly recover'd his Saddle, he brought ſuch Courage to his Men, that moſt of the Scots of that Brigade, were either ſlain, or taken. Whereupon the Reſt, being alſo informed of the two other Bodies of Engliſh, that were coming upon them (beſides this loſs) wanting both Victuals and Reſt for their Bodies, fled away, having indeed purchas'd the Name of Truce-breakers, but gain'd little Praiſe for their Valour. One [o] ſays, that for want of Victuals they were compell'd to fight, upon Diſadvantage; where the Biſhop of Caerlile gave them a memorable Overthrow: But I can find no ſuch matter, unleſs the loſs under Sr. Alexander Straghan, may be ſo accounted. For what became of Sr. William Douglas? Had he been entirely beaten, he could never have eſcaped either being ſlain or taken; and he was too eminent not to be taken Notice of, both by Scotch and Engliſh Writers, had either of thoſe things happen'd unto him: And we find him alive after this; wherefore we rather choſe to relate, as we have done.

[n] Walſingh hiſt. p 156. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 262. *& Stow p.*241.

[o] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 678.

This loſs however diſpos'd King David of Scotland to admit of a Truce, which [p] preſently enſued hereupon; and the Lord Thomas Lucy, with the Biſhop aforeſaid, and others, were by King Edward joyned in Commiſſion to ſee the ſame duly obſerved: The ſaid Lord Lucy, being likewiſe conſtituted Sheriff of Cumberland, and Governour of the Caſtle at Caerlile.

[p] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*565. ex Rot. Scoc. 19. *Ed.*3. *m.*4. &c.

XII. And now we ſhall cloſe this Year after our uſual Method, when we have remembred the Names of ſome Grandees, that departed this Life about this time: The firſt was the Lord [q] Adam Welles, a Valiant and Noble Gentleman, who dying at the Age of one and fourty, left behind him John his Son and Heir, then but Eleven Years of Age; who afterwards behav'd himſelf with Great Honour in the French Wars.

[q] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 11.

On the [r] 24 of April there departed this Life at Aukland, the Renowned Dr. Richard Aungervile (commonly called of Bury) Biſhop of Durham; of whoſe Wiſdom, and other Vertues we have more than once ſpoken in theſe Papers: He died in the 58 Year of his Age, and lies buried in the South angle of his own Church. We have already ſeen, how great part of this Mans Life was taken up in publique Employments, for the Service of his Royal Pupil, King Edward: But this is memorable of him; that what ſpare time he found from theſe Weighty Affairs, he either ſpent in [s] Prayer, or Conference with his Chaplains, or elſe in ſtudy, with which he was extreamly delighted. He wrote many things, whereof ſome yet remain, and in one of them entitled Φιλόβιβλος, which Conradus [t] Geſner commends highly, he ſaith of himſelf, "* that he was powerfully hurried away with a certain Raviſhing Love of Books. And indeed his ſtudy was ſo well furniſhed; that it was thought he had more Books, than all the Biſhops in England beſide. He was alſo wonderfully taken with the Converſation and Acquaintance of Learned Men; and many Letters paſſed between him and Francis Petrarch, and others, Famous for Learning in that Age. He had ſtill in his Houſe many Chaplains, all Notable Scholars, the Chief whereof were Thomas Bradwardin, King Edwards Confeſſor, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Dr. Richard Fitz-Ralph, afterwards Archbiſhop of Armagh, Dr. Walter Burly, Tutor to the Prince of Wales, Dr. John Mauduit, Dr. Robert Holcot, Dr. Richard Killington, Dr. Richard Wentworth, who in time became Biſhop of London, and Dr. Walter Seagrave, whom Biſhop Godwin calls Biſhop of Chicheſter, thô himſelf neither in that Title, nor in any other, takes notice of any ſuch Man. It was this Biſhop of Durhams Cuſtom in Dinner and Supper time, to hear ſome one or two Paragraphs out of ſome Choice Book read to him, the Matter whereof he would afterwards diſcourſe with his Chaplains, as leiſure from other buſineſs would permit. He was of a very Charitable [r] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 662.

[s] *Godw. Catal. Bps p.*661.

[t] Conr. Geſner. in Biblioth. Univerſ. p. 582.

* Extatico quodam librorum amore potenter ſe abreptum. vid. Godwin ibid.

and

and Bountifull Diſpoſition, [u] giving a Weekly allowance of Eight Quarters of Wheat, made up into Bread, for the Relief of the Poor; beſides the Offals and Fragments from his Table. He would conſtantly, when he rode between Durham and Newcaſtle, give away Eight Pounds Sterling in Almes, in his riding from Durham to Stockton Five Pounds, from Durham to Aukland Five Markes, from Durham to Middleham Five Pounds, and ſo proportionably in other journeys. Many other Monuments of his Charity, Wiſdom, Piety, and Learning, he left behind him, which have endear'd his Name to all Poſterity. He was ſucceeded by Dr. Thomas Hatfield, the King's Secretary; of whoſe Election this [x] Story is Reported: That King Edward being by all means deſirous to prefer him to the Biſhoprick, and perhaps, doubting the Convent would not chooſe him, was content, rather then miſs of his Purpoſe, even againſt his own late Reſolution, to Requeſt of the Pope, that he would give it him; thereby opening a new Paſſage for him to Reenter into Poſſeſſion of his late Cancell'd Uſurpation. The Pope therefore glad of this Opportunity, without any Regard had to the Merit of the Man, immediately comply'd with the King's Deſire. And when ſome Cardinals made Exceptions, ſaying, that he was not only a meer Lay-man, but one of Light Carriage, and no way Worthy of that Sacred Dignity: 'Tis true, ſaid the Pope; but "if now the King of England had Requeſted me in behalf of an Aſs, he ſhould "have ſucceeded. And yet [y] this Man built Durham College in Oxford, and purchaſed certain Lands unto the ſame, for the Maintenance of ſuch Monks of Durham, as ſhould be ſent thither to ſtudy: Which College having many Years after received a new Foundation from Sr. Thomas Pope of Tyttenhanger in Hertfordſhire Knight, was by him called, as it is to this Day, Trinity-College. This Thomas Hatfield, built alſo Durham Palace in London, for the Reception of himſelf, and Succeſſours, at their Repair thither: And was a Principal Benefactour, if not the Founder of the Friery at Northallerton in Yorkſhire; and having ſat in the See 36 Year; died a Good Old Man in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXXXVI.

In this Year on the Eighteenth of July, died the Famous (or rather infamous) Adam Orleton, of whom We have ſpoken, where We Related the Trayterous and Horrid Murther, committed upon the Sacred Perſon of King Edward the Second. We there ſhew'd, how far he was concerned in that Heinous Act; but by his ſubtil Evaſions, he ſo well Handled the Matter, that he not only eſcaped Temporal Puniſhment, but within two Moneths after, by Means of his Patroneſs the Queen Mother, was Prefer'd to the Biſhoprick of Worceſter: Six Years after (thô now King Edward could not endure him) at the [z] Requeſt of the French King, he was Tranſlated by the Pope to Wincheſter: Whereat King Edward was ſo diſpleas'd, that he ſeiſed his Temporalities for a while. And We find him the Year following [a] obliged to make uſe of all his Cunning and Sophiſtry, [b] to Anſwer an Appellation, that then came out againſt him, thô not in the King's Name, and proved him Guilty of Felony, &c. Conſiſting of theſe Articles, 1. "That he Commanded and cauſed moſt Sacrilegiouſly, Violent Hands "to be laid on the King's Chancellour, Robert Baldock Biſhop of Norwich, &c. I- "tem, that in the City of Oxford, in the Moneth of November, he falſly and ma- "liciouſly Preached and Taught, and more than once Aſſerted; that the Lord Ed- "ward of Famous Memory was a Tyrant, &c. Item, that by his falſe and ſubtil "Inſinuations and Aſſertions, he ſtruck ſuch a fear into the Lady, the Queen Mo- "ther, then at Wallingford, that ſhe durſt not go to her Husband, the foreſaid "King; by occaſion whereof, the uſe of Matrimony, both as to the Procreation "of Children, and as to the Faith and Sacrament thereof, was render'd ineffe- "ctual. All which, with more, he Anſwer'd for that time very plauſibly, ſuppreſſing the moſt Dangerous Articles, and eluding and evading the Reſt, and at laſt concludes his appellant guilty of Perjury, in offering to ſwear to the Truth of what he falſly laid to his Charge. By theſe Means, and by the Aid of the Clergy, who [c] once before took him with their Paſtoral Croſiers in their Hands from the King's Tribunal, when he was to be try'd for Treaſon, he eſcaped Puniſhment in this World (except that for [d] many Years before his Death he was ſtricken ſtark blind) thô We can hardly think, that without an unfeigned and thorough Repentance, of which this his Apology gives Us little hope, he could avoid thoſe Torments, which are prepared in the other World for Murderers and Traytors. Nay, [e] ſome ſay, that Horrour of Mind at his Death gave him as great Torture, as if the [x] Walſing. Hypod. p. 118.

[u] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 662. & Stows Survey of London p. 75.
[y] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 663.
[z] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 233.
[a] An°. 1334.
[b] Vid. Apologiam Adæ Orleton, &c. apud Hiſtor. Angl. Scriptor. Antiq. p. 2763. Edit. London An°. 1652.
[c] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 874. ad an. 1324.
[d] Walſing. hiſt. p. 155. n. 50. & Godw. Catal. Bps p. 233.
[e] Sr. Winſton Churchill's Divi Britan. p. 239.

An. Dom. 1345. An. Regni Angliæ XIX. Franciæ VI.

the burning-Iron, which fear'd his Conſcience, had been thruſt into his Bowels. Which expreſſion is no doubt alluſive to the manner, whereby King Edward the Seconds Death was effected thrô his Means and Contrivance. However here now we fix him, as an Example to deter Men of ſuch Principles, from the Conſideration of the Evil Memory they are like to leave behind them.

He was ſucceeded by Dr. William Edingdon, who was very Dear to King Edward, and (the Knights of the Garter being created in his time) became the firſt Prelate of that moſt Noble Order.

The End of the Firſt Book.

THE

THE HISTORY OF King Edward III^d.

BOOK THE SECOND.

CHAPTER the First.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Philip ſends his Son John Duke of Normandy, with a mighty Army againſt the Earl of Darby, now (ſince his Father's Death) called Earl of Lancaſter. II. Duke John having retaken Miramont and Ville-Franche in Agenois, goes and ſits down before Angouleſme. III. The Earl of Lancaſter (hearing the Enemy had left Ville-Franche void) ſends thither a new Garriſon; as alſo a Reinforcement to the ſtrong Caſtle of Aiguillon. IV. The Seneſchal of Beaucaire with a Detachment from the French Hoſt wins Ancenis, and returns with a great Booty to the Camp. V. Sr. John Norwich the Engliſh Captain of Angouleſme, by a neat Device eſcapes away thrô the French Army in the Day-time with Bag and Baggage, and goes to Aiguillon: After whoſe Departure the Duke takes the City to Mercy; as alſo the Fortreſs of Damaſan by Force, and Tonneins by Compoſition. VI. The Duke of Normandy takes Port St. Mary by Force, and goes before the ſtrong Caſtle of Aiguillon. VII. The Particulars of the Famous Siege of Aiguillon, counted the moſt Notable of that Age. VIII. The French Kings Seneſchal of Guienne beaten, and taken Priſoner by a Detachment from the Earl of Lancaſter. Which Earl hovering near the Duke, cuts him ſhort.

I. ALL this while we may wonder, that between two ſuch Potent Monarchs, as Philip of France and Edward of England, althô no leſs than a Kingdom was the Prize, there ſeem'd rather a certain Tendency and Diſpoſition to War, than any deadly and irreconcileable Rupture. But this we ſhould attribute to the Goodneſs of God, who is always ſlow, when he intends to ſtrike home; and partly alſo, as well to the pious Aſſiſtance of the Pope, King Robert of Sicily, the Lady Jane of Valois, and other Peace-makers; as in a manner to the Humanity of theſe Princes themſelves, and alſo to the weight of the Affair, which required much Advice and vaſt Preparations. But now at laſt all things being ſufficiently ripened; we ſhall preſently ſee the Bloody Flag of War hung out in good earneſt, and the two Kings haſtily opening the Way to their own ſeveral Deſtinies.

King [a] Philip of France was quickly alarum'd at thoſe notable Conqueſts, which the Earl of Darby (whom henceforward we ſhall call the Earl of Lancaſter) had made in Gaſcogne the preceding Year; and reſolv'd with all Expedition to provide a wholſom Remedy againſt ſo devouring a Gangrene. While therefore himſelf was buſie in raiſing a Mighty Power for the Defence of his Kingdom, he diſpatched away his Eldeſt Son, John Duke of Normandy, with conſiderable Forces to ſtop the Engliſh Earls Career. But when he began to approach, he heard ſuch Reports of the ſtrength of the Engliſh; the Terror of their Conqueſts belike encreaſing their Numbers, that for that time [b] he return'd back to his Father again, without once looking the Earl of Lancaſter in the Face: And this was towards the Declining of the preceding Year.

[a] Froiſ. c. 118.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[b] Gaguin. l. p.140. & Fabian p.220. ità Villani l.12.c.46. p. 856. Meſſer Giovanni di Francia, --no venne al ſoccorſo, ne tenne campo, ma ſi tornò addietro.

King Philip was extreamly incenſed at this Action of his Sons: Wherefore to avoid his Fathers Diſpleaſure, he immediatly reſolves to addreſs himſelf with all his vigour to the War, and rather to venture any thing than to hazard the loſs of his Fathers Love, and his own Reputation. King [c] Philip alſo, deſiring to Reinforce him in the beſt manner, ſent forth his General Summons; That all Nobles and Others on that ſide the Loire of ſuch and ſuch Qualifications, and able for the War ſhould, laying aſide all Excuſe, repair to Orleans and Bourges, and the Parts thereabout by ſuch a Day: Whereupon there came to the King, being at Paris, Eudes Duke of Burgundy, and his only Son Philip, Earl of Artois and Boulogne with a 1000 Lances. There came alſo the Duke of Bourbon, and his Brother the Earl of Ponthieu, Ralph Earl of Eu and Guiſnes, and Conſtable of France, the Earl of Tancarville, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Earl of Foreſtes, the Earls of Dampmartin and Vendoſme. The Lords of Coucy, of Craon, of Suilly, of Freſnes, of Beaujeu and of Roye; the Lord John of Châlons, with the Biſhop of Beauvais; and under them an infinite Number of Men of Arms, who all made their Rendezvous in and between Orleans and Bourges. Theſe the Duke of Normandy lead thrô Berry, la Marche and Quercy to Tholouſe, where all thoſe on the other ſide the Loire had their Rendezvous appointed: And hereabout in Tholouſe and the Marches, he met with all the Men of War from Poictou, Xaintogne, Rochelle, Quercy and Limoſin: Having joyn'd theſe, he went back on the left hand and found more Company in the City of Rhodes, in Rovergue, who were come from Auvergne and Provence. All theſe joining with the Duke went with him back to Tholouſe, where they were lodged in and about the City; for their Numbers were too great to be contained within, amounting to [d] more than an Hundred Thouſand Men. This Army was thus compleated in the very end of the Year 1345, and the Duke was now ſo eager to begin the Campaign, that preſently after the Chriſtmas Holydays, viz. in the beginning of January this Year, he began his March from Tholouſe, his two Marſhals, the Lord of Monmorency, and the Lord of St. Venant riding before the Hoſt.

[c] Froiſ. c. 118.

[d] Froiſ. c. 118. & Du Cheſne p. 663. & Mezeray p.24. ad hunc annum.

II. They [e] firſt ſtood before the Caſtle of Miramont, which had been won toward the end of the laſt Campaign, and was Garriſon'd with an 100 Engliſh Men, under the Command of John Briſtow Eſquire. Now the Duke of Normandy had with him Don Lewis of Spain, the Titular Prince of the Fortunate Iſlands, who retain'd ſo many Genouëſe Croſsbows, that the Engliſh were not able to ſtand at their Defences for their Quarrels: Wherefore at laſt the Caſtle was won by Force, and they within ſlain every Man, Captain and all. Thence they went before Ville-Franche en Agenois, whoſe Captain Sr. Thomas Cook was not then there, but at Bourdeaux with the Earl of Lancaſter: For none could Imagine, that the Duke of Normandy would begin to take the Field ſo ſoon. Yet the Engliſh within made a [f] gallant Defence, but to little purpoſe: For they were infinitely overmatched, and ſo taken by Force, and moſt of them put to the Sword. Thence the Duke went up higher, and inveſted the City of Angouleſme, whereof the Lord John Norwich was Captain.

[e] Froiſ. ibid.

[f] Froiſ. ibid.

III. The mean while the Earl of Lancaſter heard, what a great Army of Frenchmen were now in the Field, and how they had retaken Miramont and Ville-Franche, at the latter whereof they had burnt the Town, and left the Caſtle empty. Whereupon he ſent Sr. Stephen Tombey, Sr. Richard Haydon, Sr. Hugh Haſtings and Sr. Norman Finefroid, with 60 Men of Arms and 300 Archers to Ville-Franche, commanding them to enter the Caſtle, and to fortifie the Town, and he promiſed them if the Frenchmen return'd thither to aſſault them, he would come to their Relief himſelf, thô he ſhould loſe all thereby. Then he ſpake to the Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Walter Manny, Sr. Frank van Hall, Sr. Thomas Cook, Sr. John Tuchet, Sr. Richard Bayeux, Sr. Philip Ratcliff, Sr. Robert Nevill, Sr. Thomas Biſet, and other valiant Knights and Eſquires, to the Number of 40, to take along with them 300 Men of Arms, and a proportionable Number of Archers, and with all Speed to go to the Reinforcement of Aiguillon, and to maintain that Fortreſs to their Power; for thô the Duke of Normandy had paſſed it by without Attempting it, he would not have it loſt by any means. Theſe Lords and Knights went thither accordingly, and there found Sr. John Moubray with an hundred

hundred and twenty Lusty Souldiers, whom the Earl had left there the last Year. These were all welcome to one another, and immediately they applied themselves with all their Power to fortifie the Castle, to fetch in Provision from all Parts, and to retain Labourers to make Engines, and what else they saw necessary. And the other four English Knights that were sent to Ville-Franche, found in their way thither many Beeves, and Sheep, and several Barns full of Corn, all which they took along with them to Ville-Franche, and laid up for their own Use: Then they repair'd the Castle, and mended the Walls and Gates of the Town; so that at last the Place was as strong as ever; and the Garrison consisted of 1500 Fighting Men, who had already Provision for six Months.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX Franciæ VII.

IV. All this while the Duke of Normandy held his Siege before the City of Angouleſme, but all his Attacks proved so fruitless, that when he saw that he obtained nothing thereby, but great loss of his Men; he commanded there should be no more Assaults made, but that they should make their Approaches nearer to cut off Supplies, and so to reduce them by Hunger. One day, during this Siege, the Seneschal of Beaucaire came to the Duke of Normandy, saying, "Sir, I am well acquainted with all this "Country; and if it please your Highness to let me have 600 Men of Arms, I'll un- "dertake to go forth, and fetch in some store of Provision for your Highnesses Army: "For we shall very shortly be in Want, if we continue to lie here. The Duke was well pleas'd at the Motion, and so the next day gave the Seneschal leave to take 900 Spears with him, the Captains whereof were the Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of Ponthieu his Brother, the Earl of Tancarville, the Earl of Foreſtes, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Coucy, the Lord of Aubigny, the Lord of Auſſemont, the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord Guiſchard d' Angle, the Lord of Santerre, and divers other Lords, Knights and Esquires, that were willing to partake of this Adventure. These all took Horse in the Evening, and taking their Course North-west rode all Night, till the next morning about Break of Day, they came near a great Town on the other side the Loire, called [g] Ancenis, then in the Hands of the English. At that instant a Spie came to the Seneschal and said, "Sir, there are in yon- "der Town sixscore Men of Arms, English and Bretons, and 300 Archers, who are "able to maintain the Place if you attack them. But I saw this Morning about 200 "Head of Cattle put forth of the Town to graze in the Meadows adjoyning. Then "said the Seneschal to his Company, "My Lords and Gentlemen, I think it best for "you all to tarry still in this Valley where you are, and I only with 60 Good Horse "will go and drive the Cattle hitherward: Which when the English shall see done, "I doubt not but they'll Sally out after us to recover the Prey, and then we shall "bring them into your Toyl. This was agreed too, and the Seneschal choosing out 60 of their best Horses, rode about the Town by the directions of the Spie, conceal'd in by-ways, till at last he came into the Fair Meadows, where the Cattle were. Immediatly they began to drive all the Herd before them by another way, than that they came, which yet carried them directly to the Valley, where their Companions were ready for the first Opportunity. The English, who kept Watch on the Walls and in the Castle, saw all this and presently gave the Alarm: Whereupon the Garrison began to rise and arm, and some were fain to be awaked out of their Beds (for it was early in the Morning) and then they drew together and took Horse, Sallying out after their Enemies, who were not yet got very far, because of the Cattle's slow Pace; but yet by that they were overtaken they were almost at the Valley. The English were so eager to recover their Prey, that they all followed in the Chace, leaving none but a few Servants and common Souldiers in the Town. When they were near, they spurred on upon the French, crying out, "Sirs, you must not think to steal Cattle and be "free. Then the French faced about upon them, and the Ambush came on with great Shouts, and in terrible Array: So that the English were presently surrounded, overcome, and slain every Man, except the Captain Sr. Stephen Lacy, and three or four more of his Officers. This done the Frenchmen hasted to the Town, which they easily won by Assault, for there were too few Hands to defend it: First the Duke of Bourbon's Men entred, and having slain all they found, and set new Captains of their own there, with a sufficient Garrison, they went back with their Prey and Prisoners, and return'd the next day to the Army before Angouleſme. Here they were all gladly received, and though there had been greater Lords in that Exploit than the Seneschal of Beaucaire, yet he got the highest Praise, because all was done at his Motion and under his Conduct.

[g] Du Cheſne p. 663.

V. Thus the greater part of January they [h] held Siege before Angouleſme, and overran

[h] Froiſ. c. 119. fol. 58.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

verran all thoſe parts, thrô Santogne, and Poictou, and to the Confines of Bretagne, with their ſeveral Detachments, and brought daily to the Army many Priſoners, and much Prey: But in all theſe Adventures the two Brethren of Bourbon, to their great Honour would ever be preſent among the Foremoſt.

When Sr. John Norwich ſaw, how the Duke was reſolv'd not to ſtir, till he had the Town at his Pleaſure; and that already his Victuals began to fail, and that the Earl of Lancaſter was not able to give the Enemy Battle, or to raiſe the Siege; but chiefly, becauſe he knew the Men of the Town were more enclin'd to France, than England; ſo that he was ſure they would have open'd their Gates to the Duke before now, if he had not Commanded the Caſtle: Upon theſe, and the like Conſiderations, he thought it high time to contrive how to bring himſelf, and his Men off with moſt Honour, and leaſt Diſadvantage. Hereupon, as he was a Man of a good reach, without letting any One know, what he intended, on the firſt of February, being the Eve of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, he went all alone upon the Walls of the City; where he made a ſign with his Hat towards the Army. Some of thoſe, who ſaw him wave his Hat, came to him, demanding, what he meant thereby? He ſaid, he had a great mind to ſpeak with the Duke of Normandy, or at leaſt with one of his Marſhals. The Duke being acquainted with this News, went ſtraight to the Walls with certain of the Chief Lords in his Company. When the Engliſh Captain ſaw the Duke near, he pull'd off his Hat, and ſaluted him; to whom the Duke having return'd the like, ſaid, "Sr. John, and how is it with you now? Will you at "laſt deliver up this City to Me, or no? Sir (reply'd he) as yet I have not fully "reſolv'd upon that point: But, my Lord Duke, for the preſent, I would deſire "of You, that for the Honour of the Virgin Mary, whoſe Day is now approaching, "You would grant us a ſhort Truce, only to endure for to Morrow, ſo that for that "time, neither You any way to moleſt Us, nor we You; but both ſides to remain in "full and perfect Peace and Amity all that Day. Said the Duke, "Sr. John, as to "that, I am well content, and upon my Word You may reſt aſſured; and having ſaid ſo, he rode back to his Tent, and the Captain went into the Town. Now early the next Morning, which was [1] Candlemas Day, the Lord John Norwich Arm'd himſelf and all his Men; and having truſſed up their Bag and Baggage, and being every Man furniſhed with a good Horſe from the Town, the Chief Gate being ſet open, they began in peaceable Manner to take their March thrô the French Hoſt. At firſt ſight of them the Frenchmen ran to their Arms, but the Engliſh Captain rode up before his Men, and ſpake to them ſaying, "Sirs, beware that You offer no Violence "to Us, as neither ſhall We to You; for We have a Truce granted Us for this "Day by your General, the Duke himſelf. If You know it not, go and enquire of "him: For by Vertue of this Truce, We may ride whither We pleaſe. Upon this the Duke being conſulted, anſwer'd, "Let them go whither they will; for thô they "have overreach'd me, I will by no means break my Promiſe. This was that Noble Dukes Character, to be always firm to his Word, whatever Loſs he might incurr thereby; and this Temper he kept to his dying Day; ſo that being King, he is ſaid to be the [k] Author of this Golden Sentence; "That if Faith and Truth were "Baniſhed from all Mankind, yet they ought to be found in the Mouth of Kings and "Princes. And 'twas the knowledge of this Veracity of the Duke's, that made the Engliſh Captain venture upon this Device without any further ſecurity. Wherefore now with all his Men and his Goods, he paſſed freely thrô the heart of the French Army, without any Damage or Impeachment, and went ſtraight to the ſtrong Caſtle of Aiguillon; where the Engliſh Lords received him gladly, and having heard the Manner of his Eſcape, ſaid, he had handſomly and honeſtly outwitted his Enemies. The next Day the Citizens of Angouleſme took Counſel, and reſolved to yield up the Town to the Duke of Normandy; wherefore immediately they diſpatch'd unto him certain Deputies, who at laſt by their ſubmiſſion prevail'd ſo far, that the Duke took them to Mercy, and pardon'd them all their Miſcarriages, and ſo entred, and took Poſſeſſion of the Town and Caſtle in his Fathers Name, and having left Sr. Anthony Villiers Captain of the Place, with a ſufficient Garriſon, he departed thence, and went backward, and laid Siege to the Caſtle of Damaſan, which after having endured his Aſſaults for 15 Days together, was at laſt taken by Force, and every Man within put to the ſword, both Engliſh and Gaſcogners. This Place with the Lands thereto belonging, the Duke gave to an Eſquire of Beauſſe, called George du Milly; and ſo repaſſing the Garonne, came before Tonneins: Which after a Siege of 4 Days, yielded on Condition to have their Lives and Goods ſaved, and to be ſafely convey'd to Bourdeaux. So the Engliſh Garri-

[1] 2 Febr.

[k] Mezeray p. 67. ad an. 1364.

Garriſon went away free; but thoſe of the Town ſubmitted to the Dukes Government, who tarried there till it was paſt * Eaſter. AN. DOM. 1346.

VI. Then he came to Port St. Mary, ſtanding alſo on the River Garonne, where he found 200 Engliſhmen ready to defend the Town and Paſſage; which were well fortified: But at laſt the Place was won by Force, and every Man within put to the Sword. The Duke having Repaired what was out of Order, and ſet a good Garriſon there, went now to the ſtrong Caſtle of Aiguillon, ſeated upon the Confluence of two Great Rivers, the Lot, and the Garonne. Here they laid their Siege in the Fair Meadows along by the River, which was able to bear Ships; every Lord with his own Men, and every Conſtable by himſelf; for ſo the Marſhals had order'd, as well to raiſe a mutual Emulation in the Army, as that Obedience and Diſcipline might be more readily obſerved, when the Souldiers ſhould find themſelves ſtill under their accuſtomed Leaders. The Caſtle was well fortified, beſides its moſt advantagious ſcituation, and very well victualled beforehand; but a braver Garriſon could not be found thrô the whole World, then thoſe, which were now therein. There was the Lord John Moubray with an 120 choſen Men, ſet there at firſt by the Earl of Darby; and ſince that as we ſhew'd before, there were come thither the undaunted Earl of Pembroke, the Invincible Lord Walter Manny, the Couragious Sr. Frank van Hall, and thoſe other Knights and Eſquires, to the Number of 40, which the Earl of Lancaſter and Darby aforeſaid, had lately ſent thither with 300 Men of Arms, and 600 Archers to Reinforce the Garriſon; and laſtly, to all theſe the Politick and Worthy Captain Sr. John Norwich was added, with all thoſe Valiant Men whom he had brought off ſo finely from Angouleſme; the whole Number amounting to [l] 400 Lords, Knights, and other Gentlemen, Cavaliers, and 800 Gaſcogners, and Engliſh Footmen; beſides Carpenters, Workmen, and Labourers. The Defendants wanted no more Proviſion, nor Materials, than they did Courage; and the Aſſailants were neither deficient in Numbers, nor Animoſity, nor Art, nor Induſtry; ſo that this Siege was the [m] moſt Memorable (conſidering the Place, and the few Hands to Defend it) of any We find in all that Age; whether We look upon the Attacks, or the Defences; for it laſted notwithſtanding all Oppoſition from the latter end of April, till the Feaſt of St. Remigius, or the Firſt of October, when it was Raiſed, as We ſhall ſhew in due Place; the Fortreſs being entire, and the Garriſon in Good Condition.

An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ. VII.

* Paſcha 16 April Lit. Dom. A.

[l] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 60. p. 870.

[m] Mezerayp. 24. ad hunc an.

VII. The French Army conſiſted of an [n] 100000 Men of War, both Horſe and Foot; ſo that they could eaſily afford to make two or three Aſſaults every Day, and moſt commonly from Morning, till the Evening without any intermiſſion: For ſtill, when one Party was well wearied with Storming, there came freſh Aſſailants in their ſtead, whereby they held the Defendants in continual Action. But firſt, the French Lords conſidering, that they could not come freely to the Front of the Caſtle at the Bridge and Gate; unleſs they paſſed the River Garonne, which was Large and Deep: The Duke of Normandy Commanded, that a Bridge ſhould be laid over the River, whatſoever it coſt. When the Engliſh Captains perceived the Bridge to be more then half finiſhed, then they equipp'd three Good Veſſels, and Manning them well with Select Men of Arms and Archers, ſent them forth to deſtroy the Enemies Works. Theſe Men came furiouſly upon the Workmen, and chaſed away both them and their Defenders, and preſently broke all to pieces, what they had been ſo long in making. Upon this, the French Lords prepared other Veſſels to receive thoſe of the Garriſon, and then again ſet their Workmen about a New Bridge; which they began in Confidence of theſe their Protectors. They had hardly been at this Work above one half of a day, when the Lord Walter Manny himſelf, with the Flour of the Garriſon enter'd a Ship, and came ſuddenly upon the Workmen, and in ſpight of all Oppoſition, drove them away, and utterly deſtroyed all their Labour. This Courſe was thus carried on for ſeveral Days together; till at laſt the French Lords Defended their Workmen ſo ſtrongly, that the Bridge was brought to its Perfection, thô it coſt far more than it was worth. Then the Lords, and all the Army paſſed over in Battle Array, and began an Aſſault, which they continued for an whole Day together without any Intermiſſion; but all ſignified nothing: For at Night the Frenchmen being retired to their Lodgings, the Garriſon mended what was broken; as having Materials of all ſorts, and Workmen enough. The next Day the French drew out four Great Detachments, every One to Aſſault the Caſtle in its turn, the Firſt beginning in the Morning was to continue their Attack till Nine; then immediately the Second to ſucceed, and to hold till Noon; The Third from that time till Three of the Clock, and the Fourth from [n] Froiſ. c. 120. & Du Cheſne &c.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

from thence, till Night came on: And this Method they uſed for ſix Days together; but all the while the Garriſon maintain'd their Defence ſo Bravely, that the Enemy wan nothing of them, but only the Bridge without the Caſtle. Then the Duke of Normandy was adviſ'd to go another way to Work; He ſent to Tholouſe for Eight huge Engines of Battery, and they themſelves made four greater there: And all twelve being ready, they caſt therewith vaſt Stones, both Day and Night into the Fortreſs; but the Garriſon had beforehand ſo well ſecured themſelves againſt this Device, by I know not what Art, that [o] not one Stone did them any conſiderable hurt; except that the Coverings of ſome Houſes were now and then a little broken. Beſides the Engliſh Lords within ſoon provided ſuch Counter-machines, as within a few Days brake ſix of the Aſſailants biggeſt Engines all to pieces.

[o] Froiſ. c. 120.

Frequently during this Siege the Lord Walter Manny would ſally out at the Poſtern with an 100 or an 120 Brave Companions, and go on the other ſide of the River a Foraging, and always came back again with much Corn and Cattle, in the ſight of the French Army. One time among others the Lord Charles of Monmorency, Marſhal of the Duke's Hoſt, rode alſo forth the ſame way with 500 Men in his Company, and was returning back with a great many Head of Cattle, which he had gather'd up in the Country to ſerve the Army with Proviſion: By Chance he was met by the Lord Manny, who neither well could, nor much car'd to avoid him. There happen'd between theſe two Lords a moſt fierce Rencounter, and many were unhorſed, hurt, ſlain and taken on both ſides: For the [p] French were Five to One. While this Medley laſted, News thereof was carried to Aiguillon: Whereupon the Engliſh Lords prepared haſtily to relieve their Fellows, and firſt the Earl of Pembroke with his Men rode forth, and being come to the Skirmiſh, he there found his Noble Friend, Sr. Walter Manny [q] on Foot, ſurrounded by his Enemies, but doing wonderfull Deeds of Arms. To him the Earl preſented a luſty freſh Horſe, and it was well, in the mean time ſome Frenchmen drove the Cattle away toward their Camp: For elſe they had loſt both them and themſelves too. For the Engliſh that made this Sally, ſet upon the French with ſo much Fury, that they preſently put them to the Rout, and deliver'd all their Friends, and took many of their Enemies Priſoners: So that the Lord Charles of Monmorency himſelf had much ado to make an Eſcape. And ſuch Rencounters happen'd frequently, almoſt [r] every Day; beſide the Aſſaults made upon the Caſtle.

[p] Froiſ. c. 120.

[q] Froiſ. ibid.

[r] Froiſ. ibid.

One day above the reſt the whole Hoſt was armed, and the Duke of Normandy gave Order, that the Men of Tholouſe, Carcaſſone and Beaucaire ſhould make an Aſſault from Morning till Noon; and thoſe of Rodes, Cahors and Agen from Noon till Night; and he himſelf promiſed, that whoever could win the Bridge of the Gate, ſhould have for his Reward an hundred French [s] Crowns of Gold. And the better to render this Days work effectual, he mann'd ſeveral Ships and Barges on the River, ſome whereof ply'd by the Bridge, and others paſſed the River to divert the Defendants. At laſt certain of the Frenchmen came in a Boat under the Bridge, where they caſt up great Hooks of Iron to catch hold on the Draw-Bridge, and having ſo done, never left pulling till they had broke in ſunder the Chains that held it, and ſo laid down the Bridge by Force. Then Others that were ready for that purpoſe, leap'd thereon ſo haſtily, that one overthrew another, they were all ſo greedy of the 100 Crowns. The mean while the Defendants, when they ſaw the Bridge as throng'd as ever it could be, threw down plentifully among them vaſt Bars of iron, maſſy pieces of Timber, Pots of quick Lime, with burning Pitch, Tarr and ſcalding Oyl; ſo that many were brained and ſcalded to Death, grievouſly wounded and overthrown, Dead and half-dead into the River and into the Ditch. However the Bridge remained for that time in the Poſſeſſion of the French, but it ſignified little, for they could not win the Gate for all that. So at laſt when it was late, the Retreat was ſounded to the French, and they being retired to the Camp the Defendants open'd their Gates, and raiſed up the Bridge again and made it ſtronger than ever it was, and bound it faſt to great Rings in the Wall with thicker Chains of Iron.

[s] Fr. Crown 6s.--8d.

The next Day there came to the Duke two Cunning Carpenters, well skill'd in Mathematicks, who ſaid, "Sir, if your Highneſs will allow us Timber and Workmen to "follow our Directions, we will make you Four ſtrong Scaffolds, as high or higher than "the Walls of this Caſtle, whereby your Men may come hand to hand with the De-"fendants. The Duke commanded they ſhould do ſo, and empower'd them to preſs Carpenters about in the Country at his Pay, and promiſed them liberal Rewards. So at laſt after a long Time, exceſſive Labour, and vaſt Expence, theſe four Scaffolds were ready, being built on the Decks of four Great Ships; and ſuch as were appointed for that Work were disposed in them. But having passed scarce half way in the River to give the Assault, the Defendants (who having observed all these Preparations, had by this time provided a Remedy) set up against them four tight Engines, which they had newly made to resist the Scaffolds; These four Engines cast such huge Flints and Stones with such a force, and hit the Scaffolds so luckily, that presently they were all so uncover'd and broken, that they could yield no Defence to those that were within. Wherefore they were all commanded back again; but before they reach'd the Land, one of the Scaffolds, Ship and all sunk in the River, and the greater Part of those within it were drown'd: Which was a great Loss, for none were there, but good and valiant Knights and Gentlemen, who only courted Honour by this Hazardous Enterprise. AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

Work

When the Duke saw that whatever way he went, was thus rendred unsuccessfull, he let the other three Scaffolds lie still; and repented much that ever he came thither: For now he saw no likelihood of Winning the Castle; and yet at his first coming thither, he had [t] swore a solemn Oath, that he would never rise thence, till he had the Place at his Devotion. Then he sent the Constable of France, and the Earl of Tancarville to Paris to the King his Father, to let him know the State of the Siege before Aiguillon; and it was the Kings Pleasure, that the Duke should lie there still, till he had won them by Famine, since he could not by Assault. But this latter Device signified as little as any of the former; for this Garrison was so far from allowing themselves to be pent up within Walls, that having heard of two [u] Great Ships, which were coming from Tholouse to the Army, laden with Provision of Victuals and Armour, they adventur'd forth both by Land and by Water, those beating up the Enemies Quarters in their Camp, and these fetching away the Ships, which they brought into the Castle to their great Comfort, and the infinite Loss and Vexation of the Duke of Normandy: This Action happen'd on the 16 of June.

[t] Giov. Villani l.12. c. 46. p. 856.

[u] Giov. Villani l.12. c.46. p. 856.

VIII. During this famous Siege before Aiguillon, [x] the Seneschal of Guienne, under the French King, departed from the Duke of Normandy with a Detachment of 800 Horse and 4000 Foot, designing to take in a Castle belonging to a Nephew of the Cardinal de la Motte, which was about 12 Leagues distant from Aiguillon. The Archdeacon of Unfort, who was Lord of the Castle, and held for England, understanding of the Frenchmens Approach to his Fortress, went out privily and rode Post to la Reole; where the Earl of Lancaster and Darby lay at that time with his little Army, waiting for some Advantage against the Duke of Normandy. Upon the Information and Request of this Man, the Earl appointed a certain Number of Horsemen and Archers to ride along with him: With whom the Archdeacon going back, came on the 31 of July, early in the Morning, before his own Castle called Castillon upon the Dordonne, where he found the Frenchmen, who had invested it the Day before, and made a vigorous Assault or two, but to little Purpose. The English immediatly set spurs to their Horses, and assailed the Frenchmen with such fury, that after a sharp and hard Rencounter, they totally routed them, having slain and taken Prisoners no less than 2000 Foot and 400 Horse; among whom the Seneschal himself, and many other Persons of Quality, were taken: The Residue made their escape by reason of the Wearines of the English in obtaining this Victory.

[x] Giov. Villani l.12. c.60. p. 870. & Holinshead Engl. Chr. p. 928.

Many such Successes the Earl of Lancaster had against several of the French Detachments; which either Himself, or some of his Captains Chanced to meet with: So that the Duke of Normandy was in a manner besieged himself by him and his Garrisons; for he durst never send out any Parties, but in very considerable Numbers; whereby he was not without his difficulties. Neither was he able, as oft as need required, to get in sufficient Provision for the Army, for fear of the Earl of Lancaster; who thô he was not strong enough to raise the Siege, yet so well watched his Advantages, that the Besiegers were likely to be soon wearied out.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

CHAPTER the Second.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward reſolved in Perſon to ſuccour his Friends in Aiguillon, calls a Parliament at Weſtminſter, and takes Order for the Government and Defence of the Realm, during his Abſence. II. He ſets Sail for Gaſcogne, but lands in Normandy. III. Upon his Landing he Knights his Son, Edward, Prince of Wales, and together with him certain young Noblemen. IV. King Philip, hearing of his Adverſary's Landing, ſends ſome Troops to defend Caen againſt him. V. A cruel Execution done at Paris upon a Frenchman for Aſſerting King Edward's Right to the Crown of France. VI. King Edward marches thrô Normandy in Hoſtile Manner. VII. King Philip prepares to oppoſe him. VIII. King Edward takes St. Lo and Caen. IX. Two Cardinals ſent to him from the Pope, to exhort him to Peace; but in vain: While he tarries at Poiſſy to repair the Bridge, in order to get over the Seyne, he ſends a Defiance to King Philip, with different Remarks thereupon. X. King Philip goes to his Army; King Edward gets over the Seyne, receives an Anſwer of his Challenge from King Philip, to which he replies: His Progreſs thrô France. XI. King Edward's Princely Carriage to two Fair Ladies that were taken at Poix: The Men of Poix being found Treacherous, are put to the Sword. XII. King Edward endeavours to get over the Somme, the French King following with a great Army: The Opinion of ſome Authors, as to his Flight, examin'd. XIII. A French Priſoner offers to ſhew King Edward a Paſſage over the Somme: Which yet King Philip for fear of the worſt had guarded. XIV. King Edward paſſes the Somme at Blanche ttaque, and diſcomfits thoſe that kept the Paſſage. XV. King Philip diſpleaſed hereat, returns to Abbeville for that Night; while King Edward prepares to receive him, and encamps in the Fields of Creſſy.

I. THE mean while King Edward had full Information, from the very beginning of the Duke of Normandy's Deſcent into Guienne; and had particular Notice from the Earl of Darby of all the Occurrences in thoſe Parts from time to time: Wherefore he reſolved to go now in Perſon to ſave his Lands, and ſuccour his Loyal Friends and Subjects. But firſt to ſettle Matters at home He held his High Court of Parliament [a] at Weſtminſter about the Seaſon of Lent, where he took into his own Hands all the Profits, Revenues, and other Emoluments, which the Cardinals and other Foreign Clergy held within the Land; for he thought it not reaſon, that thoſe who favour'd the Pope (who was [b] a Frenchman born) and the French King, who was his Adverſary, ſhould enjoy any ſuch Promotion or Advantage in his Realm. Here he Order'd, that all his Juſtices throughout his Dominions ſhould renounce, and utterly forbear taking of Penſions, Fees, Bribes, or any Sort of Gratuities, which before they were found to receive, both of Lords Temporal and Spiritual and Others; that ſo their Hands being free from Bribery, Juſtice might be by them more purely and uprightly adminiſtred. For this Pious Prince then thought he might expect a Bleſſing upon the Juſtice of his Cauſe, when he took Care that his Subjects might meet with Righteous Judgment. Here therefore it was, that a Form of Oath was drawn up for all Juſtices, which thô in the Book of Statutes falſly placed, in the 18 Year of this King, as we obſerved before, in the laſt Clauſe of Paragraph XIII, doth properly belong to this Place, and for its Rarity deſerves alſo to be here repeated.

[a] Holingſhead Engl. Chron. p. 929.

[b] M.S. Authoris Anonymi ex Vaticano. ſign. n. 3765. in Clem. VI. & Odoric. Rain. ad ann. 1342. §. 6.

[c] Statute Book p. 88.

"Ye ſhall ſwear, that Well and Lawfully Ye ſhall ſerve our Sovereign Lord the "King, and his People, in the Office of Juſtice, and that Lawfully You ſhall Counſel "the King in his Buſineſs, and that Ye ſhall not Counſel, nor aſſent to any thing, "which may turn him in Damage or Diſheriſon, by any Manner, Way, or Colour. "And that Ye ſhall not know the Damage, or Diſheriſon of him, Whereof Ye ſhall "not do him to be warned, by your ſelf, or by other: That Ye ſhall do even Law, "and Execution of Right to all his Subjects, Rich and Poor, without having Regard to "any Perſon. And that Ye take not by your ſelf, nor by other, privily, nor apertly, Gift,

"Gift, nor Rewards of Gold, nor Silver, nor of any other thing, which may turn to "your Profit, unleſs it be Meat, or Drink, and that of ſmall value, of any Man, that "ſhall have any Plea, or Proceſs, hanging before You, as long as the ſame Proceſs ſhall "be ſo hanging, nor after the ſame Cauſe: And that Ye take no Fee, as long as Ye "ſhall be Juſtice, nor Robes of any Great Man, or ſmall, but of the King himſelf. "And that Ye give none Advice, nor Counſel to no Man, Great, nor Small, in caſe, "where the King is Party. And in caſe, that any, of what Eſtate or Condition they "be, come before You in your Seſſions, with Force and Arms, or otherwiſe againſt the "Peace, or againſt the Form of the Statute therefore made, to diſturb Execution of the "Common Law, or to menace the People, that they may not purſue the Law, that Ye ſhall "do their Bodies to be arreſted, and put in Priſon: And in caſe, they be ſuch, that Ye "may not arreſt them, that Ye certifie the King of their Names, and of their Miſpri-"ſion, haſtily, ſo that he may thereof ordain a covenable Remedy. And that Ye by "your ſelf, nor by other, privily, nor apertly, maintain any Plea, or Quarrel, hanging "in the Kings Court, or elſewhere in the Country, and that Ye deny no Man Com-"mon Right, [d] by the Kings Letters, nor none other Mans, nor for none other Cauſe; "and in caſe any Letters come to You, contrary to the Law, that Ye do nothing by "ſuch Letters, but certifie the King thereof, and go forth to do the Law, notwith-"ſtanding the ſame Letters. And that Ye ſhall do and procure the Profit of the King, "and of his Crown, with all things, where Ye may reaſonably do the ſame. And in "caſe Ye be from henceforth found in Default, in any of the points aforeſaid, Ye ſhall "be at the Kings Will, of Body, Lands, and Goods thereof to be done, as ſhall "pleaſe him, As God You help and all his Saints. A like form, mutatis mutandis, was ſet for the Clerks of the Chancery, for which we refer the Reader to the Statute-Book: Where alſo he will find an excellent Statute made 7 Maii, Ao, Reg. Angl. 20. Fr. 7. which is to be refer'd hither.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[d] i.e. upon occaſion.

Now alſo the King, hearing [e] Complaints made againſt the Purveyors of Victuals for his Houſhold (who under Colour of their Commiſſions, abuſed the ſame; in taking up whatever they pleaſed among the Commons, at the rate only ſet in their Commiſſion) he cauſed ſtrict Inquiſition to be made of theſe Miſdemeanours; and thoſe who were found Offenders in the Premiſes, of which there were many, all condemned, ſome to the Gallows, and other to Great Fines, whereby the Groans of the Commons ceaſed; and other of the Kings Officers were made more Wary and Diſcreet.

[e] Holinſhead Eng. Chr. p. 929.

Having thus provided for the ſettlement of Juſtice, during his Abſence, he [f] left his Queen to the Care of his Couſin John Plantagenet, the Young Earl of Kent, his Second Son; Prince Lionel of Antwerp, he [g] conſtituted his Lieutenant of the Realm, appointing the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and others of his Council to aſſiſt him: And to Watch the Motions of Scotland [h] he left the Lord Henry Percy, the Lord Ralph Nevil of Raby, together with the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhop of Durham, the Biſhop of Lincoln, and the Chief Lords of the North: But he gave an eſpecial Charge to Sr. Geoffry Witchingham, Lord Mayor of London, and to John Croyden, and William Clopton Sheriffs, to take diligent Care of the Peaceable and Quiet Government of the City; and particularly, he [i] commanded them to look after the Spreaders of Falſe News in and about the City, and to apprehend all ſuch Perſons and lay them up in the Priſon of Newgate.

[f] Froiſ. c. 121.

[g] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 167. ex Rot. &c.

[h] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 929.

[i] 20 Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 18. & 26.

II. And having thus providently ſettled Affairs at home; [k] and ſent to the Prior of the Order of Fryers Preachers in London, to offer up Prayers, that God would pleaſe to Protect and Defend him, and give his Forces Victory over his Enemies, he repaired to his Army, which was now ready to go on board. And there he ſpake aloud to all his Captains and Officers, which was alſo communicated to the whole Army, [l] "That "he had more Right to the Realm of France, upon the account of Queen Iſabella, "his Mother, Daughter of Philip the Fair, than Philip of Valois had, who was Son of "the Lord Charles, Second Brother, which was, of the ſaid Philip the Fair, who now "uſurped the ſaid Realm, thô he was not in the direct Line, but collateral. He there-"fore earneſtly deſired them to play the Men; foraſmuch, as it was his Reſolution "to ſend back his Navy again, as ſoon as ever he was Arrived in the Realm of "France: Wherefore it behoved them to be Valiant, and either to Win the Land "with their Swords, or reſolve to die every Man; for they would have no place to "flye: But that if any one was in doubt, or fear, to paſs the Seas with him, he "might ev'n ſtay in England with his good leave. To this they all anſwer'd, as it "were with one Voice; That they would follow him, as their Good and Dear Lord, [k] 6 Maii Claus. 20. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 11. dorſo. vid. Rot. Franc. 20. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 2.

[l] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 62. p. 872

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

"with a good Will, even to the Death. Then the King, seeing his Men well disposed to the War, deliver'd his Letters, close Sealed, to the Admirals of his Fleet (least it should happen that by force of Wind they should be separated from the Rest) in which letters was contained, where he would have them Land, and commanded them, unless they were divided by Storm, not to open them till they came to Land. And so he went on board in the Name of God and St. George at [m] Southampton in the close of June, with a Fleet of[n] 200 Sail, thô Authors vary much in the Number; wherein were 4000 Men of Arms, 10000 Archers, and Footmen of Wales 12000, and 6000 Irishmen. The King had with him in his Company the Young Prince of Wales at that time, about sixteen Years of Age; There was also Humphry Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Essex, and his Brother William Bohun Earl of Northampton, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, John Vere Earl of Oxford, William Clinton Earl of Huntington, Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk; and of Barons, the Young Lord Roger Mortimer, the Lord Gerard ° Lisle, and his Kinsman the Lord John Lisle, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lords John and Roger Beauchamps, the Lord John Moubray, the Lord William Ros of Hamlake, the Lord Thomas Lucy of Cockermouth, the Lord William Felton, the Lord Thomas Bradestan, the Lord Ralph Basset of Sapcoate, John Lord Willoughby, of Eresby; the Lord Peter Mauley V. of the Name; * Thomas Lord Vghtred, John Lord Fitz-Walter, William Lord Kerdeston, the Lord Roger Say, the Lord Almaric de St. Amand, the Lord Robert Bourchier, the Lord John le Strange, the Lord Edward Montagu, the Lord Richard Talbot, the Lord John Mohun of Dunster, William Lord Boteler of Wemme, Robert Lord Ferrers, John Lord Seymor, John Lord Grey, William Lord Botreaux, the Lord Hugh Spencer, the Lord John Striveling, Michael Lord Poynings, Robert Lord Morley, Thomas Lord Ashley, John Lord Sutton, the Lord Nicholas Cantilupe, and Others; and of Knights Batchelours, the Lord John Chandos, the Lord Peter Audeley, and the Lord James Audeley, the Lord Bartholomew Burwash junior, the Lord Thomas Holland, the Lord Fulk FitzWarine, Sr. Richard Pembroke, and several others: There were but a few Strangers at this time with King Edward, because his Friends of Germany had fell off together with the Emperour; but the Lord Henry Eam of Brabant in Flanders, was here, and 7 or 8 Knights of Germany, whose Names are so corruptly written, that they are not to be recovered aright: And lastly, the Lord Godfry of Harcourt, a Valiant Baron of Normandy, was there at this time, enflaming the Kings Mind against his Native Country upon all occasions. Being thus therefore embarqued on the last of June, King Edward sets Sail, designing, as was thought for Bayonne, or Bourdeaux, that so he might Raise the Siege from before Aiguillon; but being pretty forward on his way toward Gascogne, on the third Day there arose a Contrary Wind, which, without any further harm, drove the whole Fleet back upon the Coasts of Cornwall. There having layn at Anchor six Days waiting for Wind, they made forward again; but a like Wind, in the very same manner, drove them back again to the same place, without any Damage, as before. Which Chance happening thus [p] twice together, and the Wind still continuing against them, the Lord Godfry of Harcourt, being of the Kings Cabinet-Council, began to take hold on that occasion, to divert the King from Gascogne to Normandy; and told him, that it seem'd, Heaven it self directed him to take another Course, and therefore Advis'd him to take Land in his Country; which was one of the most plentifull Provinces in the World, and had not seen any War for two whole Ages. "Sir, [q] said he, if You "will please to make thither, on hazard of my Head, You shall find no Impeachment "in your Landing. For besides, that the Commons of Normandy are unexpert, and "wholly ignorant of War, all the Lords, Knights, and Esquires of the Country, are "now with the Duke at the Siege before Aiguillon. And here, Sir, You shall meet "with great Towns, without Walls, or strong Fortifications; so that your Men may "gain such Wealth and Riches, as to be the better for it for Twenty Years "hence: And thus You may do without any stop, till You come to the Great City "of Caën in lower Normandy. I only beg, Your Majesty would put some Confidence "in me at this time; for as I have been a Lord of that Country, so I understand it as "well, as any other. And being now unjustly cast out of it, own her for my Ene-"my, and England that receives me, for my better Country. The King, who was then but in the Flour of his Manhood (for he had not yet seen 34 Years) and desired nothing more ardently, then Deeds of Arms, readily enclin'd to the Lord Harcourt's Advice, whom he had look'd on, as his Friend, and called him Cousin; and so he suddenly commanded his Pilots to direct their Course for Normandy. Thereupon

[m] Froiss. c. 221.
[n] Mezeray ad hunc an. p. 24. ubi 200. Knighton verò 1100 magnas naves & 500 minores ponit, p. 1585. n. 40. Stow p. 241. has a 1000 ships of Burthen and Pinaces: Speed p. 577. about a 1000 Sail. Gaguin 1100. Giov. Villani 600. &c.
° Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 738.
* Hæc nomina quæ sequuntur ad numerum 22. ex M. S. Vetust. Lat. in Bibl. C.C.C Cantab. cui titulus Acta Edvardi Filii Edvardi Tertii.

[p] Mezeray ad hunc an. p. 25.

[q] Froiss. c. 121.

upon he took into his own Ship the Standard of the Chief Admiral, (who was then the Earl of Warwick) saying, that he himself would be Admiral in that Expedition; and so set forward as chief Governour of the Fleet: And now as if Heaven consented to all this, had Wind at Will, on the 11 day of July he happily arrived with all his Fleet at the Haven of la Hogue St. Vast in Coutantine (a great Cape or Peninsula in Normandy) within 9 French Leagues of St. Sauveur la Vicomte, the right Heritage of the Lord Godfry of Harcourt. In this Haven the King found[r] 30 great Ships and Gallies, all which he took, and then endeavouring first of all to take land, he leap'd on the shore with such violence, that by a suddain Antispasis or contrary Attraction, the Blood gushed out of his Nose: Whereat his[f] Lords, abominating such an ill-boding Token, desired him to reenter his Ship, and not to land that Day; for that was no good Sign for them. But the King briskly reply'd, "That it was only a sign the Land desired to have Him.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[r] Knighton p. 1585. n. 50.
[f] Froiss. c. 122. Du Chesne p. 663.

One reports[t] that there being some Opposition at their Landing, the Earl of Warwick with one Esquire and six Archers only, Himself by reason of the great Haste, not having a very good Horse, lifted up his Hand couragiously against an Hundred Men, striking every one he met to the ground; and together with those his seven Assistants, slew no less than 60 Normans; whereby he made way for his Army to land.

[t] Walsing. hyp. p. 118.

But althô Sr. William[u] Dugdale passes by this Story without the least Remark, yet we who have a greater Obligation to examine the Truth and Probability of Reports, must either not allow this Action at all, or not in this Place, but rather at Caen; as we shall shew hereafter. For by the Kings Landing in that Manner, as we related, it appears, there was no Opposition made against him; and 'tis[x] certain, that no Soul in France knew of King Edwards Design against Normandy; much less could they be ready to resist him at this time. Nor can I understand the Connexion of the Matter, that the Earl of Warwick fought against an Hundred: For either there were more to oppose his Landing, and then he might, being but so thinly attended, be said to lift up his Hand against them all; Or if but an Hundred, there was no need of any Man of Honour to beat them away: The Boys and Pages of the Navy might have done it. A MS. by me with more probability reports this Action of the Earls, to have been done afterwards in the Night against a Company of Rovers, who thought to have made a Prize of him.

[u] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*232.

[x] *Du Serres & Speed p.*577.

III. Upon that pleasant Diversion of the Omen which King Edward gave, his Lords smil'd for the good Hopes they conceived; and so landed all with much Ease and in good Order: In which Action the residue of that day was spent. The[y] approach of the next Morning brought an unwelcome notice of their Arrival to the Inhabitants of those Parts; so that leaving their Goods behind them, they fled to hide themselves in Woods and Caves before the face of the Enemy. At * la Hogue the Lord Godfrey of Harcourt paid his Homage unto King Edward, professing to hold his Lands and Possessions in Normandy of him, as Rightfull King of France. That same Day about Noon the King removed, and took an high Hill near the Shore; from whence he made a Dreadfull Appearance over all the Country. And here[z] he presently Knighted his Eldest Son the Prince of Wales, then just 16 Years and 27 Days old; and together with him several young Noblemen, as William Montagu[a] Earl of Salisbury, Roger[b] Lord Mortimer, William Lord[c] Ros, Roger[d] de la Ware, Grandson to the Lord John de la Ware, and many Others. At which time he made John D' Arcy, son to the Lord John D' Arcy, Banneret, allowing him 200 l. per annum out of the Exchequer for his better supporr in that Dignity whereof he gave him his Letters Patent (as appears by their[e] Date) three days after.

[y] 12 July M.S. Vet-Lat. in Biblioth. C.C.C. cui Titulus Acta Edvardi Filii Edvardi Tertii.
* Id. M.S. vet. Lat. ibid.
[z] M.S. id. ibid. & Oxon. in Biblioth. Bodlei. *K.*84. fol. 116. a. Stow p. 241.
[a] Nat. annos 18.
[b] Nat. annos 20.
[c] Nat. annos 19.
[d] Nat. annos 17.
[e] Dat. 15 Julii, Rot. Franc. 20 Ed 3. m. 21. vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 372.

IV. Presently Fame[f] spread abroad, how the English were landed in Normandy, but especially the Towns of Coutantine sent word thereof to King Philip at Paris, desiring a speedy Succour from him. He for his part had heard before, how King Edward was upon the Sea with a great Navy, but he knew not which way he was resolved, whether toward Normandy, Bretagne or Gascogne; and hitherto believed, he design'd the latter, with a purpose to raise the Siege before Aiguillon. But now when he understood for certain, that he was in Normandy, he sent the Lord Robert Bertram his Constable, together with the Earl of Eu and Guisnes, and the Earl of Tancarville, who were but newly come to him from his Son, lying before Aiguillon, and had not yet returned back again thither, to the City of Caen, commanding them expresly to keep that Place against King Edward. They said they would do their Devoir, and so went from Paris thitherward with a good Band of Men of Arms, and still their Numbers encreased as they went along. These great Lords with their Troops, were gladly received by the Citizens, and those of the Country thereabout, who were all fled thither for more Surety of themselves and Goods. Then all together they fell to fortifie the [f] Froiss. c. 121.

Place

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

Place, in the beſt manner they might (for in thoſe Days it was not walled about) and to prepare all things neceſſary for Defence of the Town, like Men of good Experience.

Now King [g] Philip had deſigned to have carried the War home to King Edwards Doors, and to have invaded England with a Mighty Army: For which intent among others, he had built a Ship of incredible Magnitude in the Haven of Harfleur in Normandy, and expected every day a good Number of Ships of Burthen, which he had ſent for to the State of Genoua. But that Aſſiſtance being too much delayed, and King Edward the mean while thus coming into Normandy, that Deſign was daſh'd, and the Terrour diverted into France.

[g] Gaguin l.8. p.140.

V. About this time of King Edwards paſſing over the Sea, there was [h] one Simon Pawlett, a very Subſtantial Citizen of Compeigne in the Iſle of France, openly accuſed to have ſaid before witneſſes, "That in very Truth the Right of the Crown of France did "more juſtly belong to King Edward of England, than to Philip of Valois: For which Words he was apprehended, and on the Firſt of July put to a moſt cruel Death at Paris in this Tragical Manner: He was firſt hanged upon Tenter-hooks, like an Ox in the Shambles, and there he was gradually diſmembred alive; and ſo his Arms, and then his Legs, and laſtly, his Head being cut off from his Body, the Trunk was hung in Chains on the Common Gallows at Paris, called Monfaucon. But theſe Cruel Executions, amidſt ſuch manifold Taxes, and the Difficulties uſually attending War, did but lay more horrour upon the Dejected Minds of the People of France: So that althô they would by no means admit of an Engliſh Ruler, yet they were but little ſatisfied with this of their Own.

[h] Gaguin l.8. p.140. & Fabian p.274.

VI. King Edward the mean while upon his Landing, ſet up his Tent on the Shoar, till his Marſhals had taken the Town of Hogue, before which he Lodged that Night; during which time the Ships were diſcharged of their Horſes, and other Baggage: The next Morning [i] upon the Kings Departure, the Souldiers ſet fire to that Town, and then the King order'd his Battails after this manner. The Earl of [k] Huntington, he appointed his Admiral with an 100 Men of Arms, and 400 Archers to ply by the Sea-Coaſts, following the Courſe of the Land Army, with a ſmall part of the Navy, having ſent the [l] Reſidue, as he had before Reſolved, into England. On his Right Hand he order'd the Earl of Warwick, One of his Marſhals, with the Lord Thomas Holland, and the Lord Reginald Cobham, to lead one Battalia along by the Sea-ſide, Northward; on his Left Hand marched the other Marſhal, the Lord Godfry Harcourt, with another Battalia, and the King Himſelf, and his Son the Prince held the Main Battail; The whole Army amounting to 30000 Men Effective, beſides the Fleet: And all the Three Battails were order'd every Night to joyn, and to lodge in One Field. Being thus Order'd, they ſet forward together, the Admiral taking all the Ships, and other Veſſels, that he found at Sea, and the King and his Marſhals clear'd all by Land. That Night they lodged in [m] Wiſſel, about three Leagues North of St. Vaſt, where the King tarried five Days, in which time all the Country was waſted, and ſpoiled up to the very point of Land; and the Town of [n] Barfleur taken; the People yielding it up immediately for fear of Death: Yet neither ſo could they ſave the Town from the Rapacity of the Souldiers. For their Chief Burgeſſes, and others, being put on Board the Fleet, for fear they ſhould afterward Rebell, the Conquerours ſeiſed all the Gold, Silver, Jewels, and Plate, that ev'r they could lay their Hands on: Inſomuch that the meaneſt Footmen, and Servants of the Army ſcorn'd to meddle with good furred Garments, or any other Stuff, but Silks, Embroideries, or Plate. And this was done by the Earl of Warwicks Battalia; who paſſing thence by Coqueville and Breteville, which he took, came to a Great and Rich City, called Cherbourgh, which he alſo wan, and ſpoil'd, and partly burnt; but the Caſtle he could not preſently take, it was ſo well furniſhed, and long they could not ſtay in thoſe Parts. Thence the Battail returned back on the Left Hand to [o] Valognes, which they took and ſpoil'd, and ſet on Fire; the ſame they did afterward to Monteburgh, and all the Towns in thoſe Parts, from whence they wan much Spoil, and great Riches. At laſt they came to a Conſiderable Town, named Carentan; which was encloſed with a Trench, and Rampier, protected by a ſtrong Caſtle, and furniſhed with a good Garriſon. The Earl of Warwick from the Land, and the Earl of Huntington from the Ships, came and made a terrible Aſſault upon this Place: So that the [p] Burgeſſes being terrified thereby, to ſave the Lives of themſelves, their Wives, and Children, againſt the Mind of all the Souldiers, yielded up the Town to the Engliſh, and offer'd for ſecurity of their Lives, all their Goods to their Diſcretion. When the Souldiers ſaw the buſineſs of the Inhabitants,

[i] Stow p.241.
[k] Froiſ. c.122.
[l] Giov. Villani l.12. c.62. p.872.
[m] Stow p.241. Tho. de la More: Sed ibi malè Marcells.
[n] Imperitè alii Harfleur, cum id oppidi ſit trans Segnanam, & 30 Milliar. Gal. diſtat ab his locis: Quod miror nec Gallos Authores ipſos animadverriſſe.
[o] Du Cheſne. p.664. Mezeray ad hunc annum.
[p] Froiſ. c.122.

bitants, and that against their Wills, it was impossible for them to make good the Place, they retired to the Castle; but within two Days after were obliged to yield, thô on better Conditions, than the Townsmen; for these obtained security for Life and Goods. So the Town and Castle of Carentan were taken; and all the Inhabitants sent to the Ships, as Prisoners; but when King [q] Edward understood, that the Heads of some of his Friends, whom the French King had murther'd, were upon the Gates of that Town; he commanded them to be taken down and buried Reverently: And order'd both the Town and Castle, as a Sacrifice to their Ghosts, to be burnt and rased to the ground. AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX Franciæ VII.

[q] Du Serres in Philip de Valois p. 7. Resse's Continuation of Sr. Walter Raleigh p. 291.

These things were done by the Earl of Warwicks Battalia, which went along by the Sea-Coast; while on the other [r] side, the Lord Godfry of Harcourt rode forth on the Kings Left Hand; for he knew all the Avenues, and Passages of Normandy better than any other: He had in his Battalia 500 Men of Arms, besides Archers and Footmen, and sometimes ranged six or seven Leagues from the Kings Battail, as far as the Sea-Coast, Westward, where Normandy looks on the Isles of Jersey, and Garnesey, burning and spoiling all before him, with no less Hostility and Fury, than the English Lords used on the other side. They all found the Country very Rich and Plentifull; the Granges and Barns full of Corn and Provender, the Shops and Houses full of Rich Stuffs, and other Goods and Commodities, and the whole Country abounding with Chariots, Carts, Horses, Swine, Sheep, Oxen, and Poultry: For there had been a long Peace and Security in those Parts. The Souldiers now took of all this, what they pleas'd, and brought it to the King; but of what Gold and Silver they found, they gave no account either to him, or his Officers, but kept it to themselves. In this manner the Lord Godfry of Harcourt, and the Earl of Warwick rode forth by Day, but at Night for the most part, they both lay in the Kings Field, or very near him.

[r] Froiss. ibid.

When thus all things were clear'd behind, as to the North-point of Normandy, King Edward began to March Eastward, and went directly to St. Lo in Coutantine; but before he came thither, he encamped by the River Vire, till his two Battails might come up to him, and then he proceeded.

VII. The mean [t] while King Philip was not negligent on his Part, but enforced his Summons to his Subjects, and others, who held of him any way, and sent for all his Friends and Allies; as to the Noble and Valiant Old King of Bohemia, John of Luxemburgh, Son to Henry the VII, once Emperour of Germany, and to his Eldest Son, the Lord Charles Marquess of Moravia, who about this time was called Cæsar, being advanced in Opposition to Lewis of Bavaria; upon whose Death a Year after, He was made Emperour. King John and his Son Charles came speedily to King Philip's Assistance, with a goodly Number of Bohemians, Germans, and Luxemburghers; as did also upon the said Kings Request, Ralph Duke of Lorraine, King Philip's Nephew, and James, Son and Heir to Humbert, the Old Dauphin of Vienna, which two lead 300 Spears: Then came the Lord John of Hainalt, Lord of Beaumont, who as we shew'd, was lately brought over from the King of England's Service, with a gallant Troop of Valiant Hainalders: there was likewise Lewis Earl of Flanders, who had but few Men under him, and those only of the Gentry and Nobility of Flanders; for the Commons of that Country held all for King Edward: Thither came also James King of Majorica, who being beaten out of his Kingdom by Peter, King of Aragon, had lately for an [u] 100000 Crowns of Gold, sold unto King Philip of France, his Right to Monpellier; that thereby he might be enabled to give Battle to the King of Aragon: But at this time he could not refuse, with what Forces he had, to Assist King Philip. While thus the French King was making himself strong on all sides, he had full Information of the uncontroled Progress of his Adversary of England, and sware openly, "That he should never return again into England without Battle: And that all those "Spoils, Slaughters, and Devastations should be dearly Revenged. But many of his Auxiliary Friends came from far, and so it was long, before he had his full Assembly: Wherefore the mean while King Edward went on without any considerable Opposition.

[t] Froiss. c. 123.

[u] Odoric. Rainald. ad ann 1345. §. 13.

VIII. The English Army still kept their first Order, marching up toward High-Normandy in three Battalions: They went on fair and softly, in Battle Array, as if the Enemy was always before them; and they took up their Lodgings every day early; so that for the most part, the whole Army, except the Marshals Fore-runners, was encamped betwixt Noon and Three of the Clock. The Country was so Plentifull, wheresoever they went, that they had no need to look out for any other Provision; but Wine, (and yet here and there they also found enough of that.) Althô the King to prevent prevent the Worſt, had brought Proviſions of all ſorts along with him; and beſides [u] he gave ſtrict Command, that none ſhould preſume to make any unneceſſary waſte of Victuals, Drink, or Forage. It was no [x] great Wonder, if all the Country trembled at the ſight of this Royal Army; for till then they had ſeen nothing like War in thoſe Parts, nor knew any thing beyond the Ordinary Trainings of their Militia; ſo that generally the People fled before the Face of the Engliſh, as far as they might hear the ſound of their Name; leaving behind them their Houſes full of Goods, their Barns and Granaries full of Corn, and their Cattle in the Fields; for they knew not whither in that Hurry to bear them away: Particularly the [y] City of Bayeux for fear of him, ſending 15 Chief Citizens, as their Deputies unto him, and deſiring to enter into his Homage, and to be taken into his Protection, were admitted. And in this Manner King Edward rode forth, burning, waſting, and ravaging the Country, and leaving long tracks of Fire and Deſolation behind him, till he came to the Great Town of St. Lo, the fartheſt [z] Port of Lower Normandy, wherein were no leſs, than Eight or Nine-ſcore Rich Burgeſſes, and exceeding much Drapery. When the King came thither, he order'd his Lodgings to be ſet up without the Town (for in War time he would never endure to lodge in any Town for fear of Fire) having already ſent a ſtrong Detachment before him, who preſently took the Town, and plunder'd it, ſending their Burgeſſes Priſoners to the Ships.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[u] M.S. Vet. Latin. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr. cui titulus Acta Edwardi, Filii Edwardi Tertii.
[x] Froiſ. ibid.
[y] M.S. Vet. Latin. id. ibid. 29 Julii.
[z] D' Avila p. 974.

From hence the King (having burnt Torigny, Cormolin, Fontenay and Cheſne) marched directly toward the great City of Caen in Normandy, about eleven French Miles Eaſtward of St. Lo, which likewiſe abounded with Mercers Ware, and other Merchandiſe; and was inhabited with Rich Burgeſſes, Noble Ladies, and Fair Virgins; and adorned with goodly Churches and other Buildings, among which there were two ſtately Abbeys, the one of the Trinity, and the other of St. Stephen, which latter was built by William Duke of Normandy, who was in time King of England, ſirnamed the Conquerour; and lay then buried before the [a] High Altar in the ſaid Church of St. Stephen, under a moſt ſtately Mauſoleum, erected there for him by his Son King William, ſirnamed Rufus.

[a] Sandford Geneal. hiſt. p. 6.

On the one ſide of this City [b] ſtood the Caſtle, being the very faireſt of all Normandy, wherein was Captain Sr. Robert Wergny with 300 Genoueſe, Arbaliſters, beſides Men of Arms: And in the Town there was William Bertrand Biſhop of Bayeux, Ralph Earl of Eu and of Guiſnes, and Conſtable of France, and John Melun Earl of Tancarville and High Chamberlain, with a ſufficient Number of Men of War. King Edward [c] being deſirous to ſave the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, ſent unto them firſt Geoffry de Maldon, Fryer of the Order of the Hermits of St. Auſten, and Profeſſor of Divinity, with his Letters, wherein he exhorted them to deliver up unto him the Town and Caſtle; and he promiſed to receive them into his Grace and Protection, and to let them enjoy their Properties ſecurely. But him the Biſhop of Baieux cauſed to be clapt in Irons, and detained in the Dungeon of the Caſtle, tearing the Kings Letters in pieces, and urging the Captains to ſtand boldly to their Defence. For that day the King of England took up his Lodging early in the Afternoon by a little Port-Town called Eſtrehan, near the River Orne; whither his Admiral came to him with his Navy. The Conſtable and the other French Lords in Caen kept good Watch that Night, and the next Morning betimes were all in Arms, together with the Inhabitants, ready to ſerve their Country with the hazard of their Lives. The Conſtable's Reſolution at firſt was only to ſtand on the Defenſive Part, and therefore he gave Order, that none ſhould ſally forth by any means, but ſtand in their allotted Stations upon the Walls, Gates, Bridge and Rivers. As for the Suburbs he gave over all care of them, becauſe they were not tenable: For he thought it ſufficient, if he might make good the City it ſelf, becauſe it was only encloſed with the River. But when the Burgeſſes and chief Inhabitants heard of this Order, they ſaid, "that for their Part they would "march out againſt the King of England, for they were both able and willing to give "him Battle, for all his Puiſſance. The Conſtable ſeeing their Alacrity ſaid, "Be it "ſo then in the Name of God and St. Dennis; You ſhall not want my Company. Then they ſet open their Gates, and marched out all in good Order, making Countenance, as if they were reſolved to Conquer, or to ſell their Lives Dearly.

[b] Froiſ. c. 123. & Du Cheſne p. 664. Gaguin p. 140. Fabian p. 221.
[c] M.S. vet. Lat. &c.

That Morning being the 20 of [d] July, King * Edward roſe early, and having heard Maſs before Sun-riſe, ſet his Men in Order to go againſt the City of Caen: And ſo took horſe with the Prince his Son, and the Lord Godfry of Harcourt, one of his Marſhals, whoſe Word the King much rely'd on; and approached the Town in three well-order'd Battalia's. But when the [e] Burgeſſes of the City, who had hitherto ſtood

[d] Fabian p. 220
* Froiſ. c. 123.
[e] Froiſ. ibid. Du Cheſne & Mezeray p. 25.

ready ready to receive him in the Field, saw the Dreadfull Appearance of Standards, and Banners waving in the Wind, and the Tall Archers shooting fiercely from their long Bows, presently their Hearts began to fail them, and having scarce endured the first Brunt of the Battle, for all that the Constable could say, or do, they ignobly abandon'd both Him and their Honour, and fled precipitantly toward the Town; the English eagerly following them at the Heels. Here it was that the Archers finding some faint Resistance at the Bridge, King Edward lest they should suffer by the French Men of Arms, sent the Earl of Warwick to succour them, who by his wonderous Valour (thô he found the Archers out of all Danger, and fighting with some Advantage on their Side) so signaliz'd himself, that together with Seven Men of Arms more (if he did not as [f] Walsingham reports, slay an Hundred Normans) yet he won the Bridge, and enter'd the Town pell-mell with the Enemy. When the Constable and the Earl of Tancarville saw how things went, cursing the Cowardise of the Townsmen, and their own Credulity, they took a little Tower at the Bridge Foot, which they enter'd with certain Knights in their Company. The Bishop [g] of Bayeux with some other Captains, Knights and Esquires of France, such as knew the ready way to the Castle, hasted all thither, where they were received by the Captain Sr. Robert Wergny; for the Place was large enough. All this while the English were chasing and slaying such as they found; for as yet they gave no Quarter: And it happen'd so ill for the Town, that the River, which at other times could bear Ships of Burthen, was now so low, that Men might without Danger pass and repass it both on Horseback and on Foot. Wherefore the City was presently full of Enemies, and the French were on all hands beaten down without Mercy; so that what within the Town, and in the Chace, there fell above [h] 5000 of the Enemy. The Constable and the Earl of Tancarville beholding this Slaughter, and considering that they were not able to make good the Place wherein they were (wherefore they were like to be slain, as they saw their Men were, without Mercy) began to think of saving their Lives by yielding. So looking down along the Street, at last they espied an English Lord Sr. Thomas Holland, who with his Brother Sr. Robert and Others, were of the Retinue of Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick. Froisard says he had but one Eye; which because he also reports of William Montagu late Earl of Salisbury, of the Lord John Chandos and other English Knights, I am apt to think, that he was one of those 500 young Gentlemen, who in the Beginning of these French Wars clapt Patches on their Left Eyes, with a solemn Vow never to take them off, till they had done Exploits worthy of the Voice of Fame. However these French Lords knew him by Name (for they had seen and known him in the Holy Wars in Prussia, Granada and other Places) and called out unto Him and his Company saying, they would yield themselves his Prisoners. Then Sr. Thomas Holland went thither with his Men, and took the two Lords and 25 French Knights more, who all yielded themselves to Sr. Thomas and those with him; among whom we find one Thomas Leigh a valiant Esquire of the Lord Holland's, who took the Earl of Tancarville; for which and other his worthy Services done in this and other Expeditions, King Edward gave him the Lordship of Hanley in Broxton-Hundred, in the County Palatine of Chester, which still remains in that Ancient Family. But to the Lord Holland, besides the great Honours he arrived to afterwards, the King [k] gave 4000 Florens of Gold, and in lieu thereof took the Earl of Eu for his own Prisoner. This done, and the Prisoners committed to safe Custody, the Lord Holland remounted his Horse hastily, and rode into the Streets; where by his Authority he interposed and saved many Lives, and preserved many Ladies, young Damsels and Nuns from violation. For now the Common Souldiers rag'd exceedingly, because many of the Town being got on the tops of Houses, had flung down Tiles, Stones, Timber and Iron, wherewith they did much harm to their Enemies; and not only provoked the Souldiers, but also the King himself: Insomuch that having heard at night, how near upon 500 of his Men were in this manner either grievously hurt or killed out right by the Citizens he gave Command, that the next day they should put all to the Sword, and reduce the City to Ashes. But then the Lord Godfry of Harcourt, either in a pious Commiseration of his own Country, or that he really saw of what ill Consequences such severe Beginnings might prove to the English, stept out before the King and said, "Sir, for God's Sake refrain your Pas-"sion a little, and let what You have already done suffice for this time: For You "have still much Labour to go thrô, before You can arrive at Calais, whither You are "designed. And Sir, in this Place there are many People, who if driven to Despair, "will not fail so obstinately to defend their Houses, and to sell their Lives so dearly, "as it may cost You many of your Men, unless You resolve to destroy the City and "the

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[f] Walsingh. Hypod. p. 118.

[g] Fabian p. 221.

[h] Giov. Villan. l. 12. p. 872.

[i] Holinshead Eng. Chron. p. 931.

[k] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 74.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

"the Spoil together. Whereby peradventure You will not be able to accompliſh your "Deſign upon Calais; which muſt needs redound to your no ſmall Vexation. Where- "fore I pray Sir, ſave the Lives of your Men; for before a Month come to an end, You "will have occaſion for them, even thô You had as many more: For beſides "the many Difficult Paſſages and Rencounters You will every day meet with, I be- "lieve in my Conſcience, your Adverſary King Philip will preſent You with Battle. "But if it ſhall pleaſe Your Majeſty to proclaim a Pardon for all that ſhall ſubmit, I'll "engage, that without any more Bloodſhed You ſhall be Lord of this City and all that "is therein. The King having well weigh'd the Reaſon of theſe Words, anſwer'd, "Sr. Godfry, You are our Marſhal, order all things at your own Diſcretion. So next Morning the Lord Godfry Harcourt rode early from Street to Street, with his Banner diſ- played before him, and commanded aloud by an Herald in the Kings Name, [l] that no Man ſhould preſume to ſet fire to any Houſe, to murder any Perſon, or to violate any Woman whatſoever. The Townſmen hearing this Proclamation, freely admitted the Engliſh into their Houſes, and gave them good Entertainment, and many opened their Cloſets, and bad them take what they pleaſed, ſo they might be ſecure of their Lives: And yet for all that, there were many Rapes, Murders and Robberies committed in the Town. Thus the Engliſh were Lords of Caen, where they tarried three Days gathe- ring of the Spoil, becauſe they made Reſiſtance and were taken by Force; among other Riches of Gold and Silver and the like, there were found as One [m] reckons, no leſs than 40000 Pieces of Fine Cloath, Silks and Linnen, beſide other Wares proportio- nable. All which the King ſent down the River Orne to Eſtrehan, where the Navy lay, to be carried to St. Saviour the Vicount, from whence ſoon after by the Kings Com- mand, the Earl of Huntington conveyed all into England, as well Cloth and other Stuff for Garments, Veſſels of Gold and Silver, Jewels and other Riches, as all the Priſo- ners; whereof in this Bout at Caen there were no leſs than [n] 86 Great Lords, Barons and Knights, and above 300 Rich Citizens.

[l] M.S. vet. Lat. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. ut ante.

[m] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 62. p. 872.

[n] Giov. Villani ibid.

IX. King [o] Edward having now done his Pleaſure at Caen, after three Days without Firing the Place, departed thence (having alſo taken in Bayeux) in the ſame Order he uſed before; and continued his March thrô the Biſhopricks of [p] Liſieux and Eureux, having among others taken and ſacked a good Town called Louviers, where he found a vaſt quantity of Riches, Drapery and other Merchandiſe. He took alſo [q] Liſieux it ſelf, a chief City in Normandy, and abounding with Wealth and Merchandiſe, which his Souldiers plunder'd. And hence [r] He gave Letters of Protection and ſafe Conduct to Annibald Cardinal of Tuſculan, and Stephen Cardinal of St. John and St. Paul, ſent from the Pope to mediate Peace. Theſe Men hereupon ſoon after came to the King, he being then at [s] Gaillon (between Pont de l' Arche and Vernon) which Place he had newly ta- ken and burnt: And here they repreſented unto him; [t] how they were ſent from his Holineſs to endeavour an Accord between Him and the King of France, willing him to remit the whole Matter to the Pious Deciſion of the Pope. But King Edward, who could put no Truſt in the Pope, would not hear of any Accord, but preſently brake off all Treaty with the ſaid Legates, becauſe it appeared to him, that the Pope was much more favourable to the King of France than to Him or his Cauſe. Yet foraſmuch as ſome of them had been rifled of what they had by ſome Engliſh Souldiers, King Edward not only cauſed their own to be reſtored unto them, but gave them ſomething over and above of his own, to make them amends; and ſo they returned towards Paris. The mean time King Edward with his Detachments overran the Country far and near; and all the way he went on Burning and Spoiling whatever he met with, except ſome few ſtrong Towns and Caſtles that were fortified: For he would not give any Aſſault to ſuch, being reſolved to ſpare his Men and Artillery for a greater Enterpriſe. Thus he went on like a Torrent, overwhelming all before him on that ſide the Seyne, even to the Iſle of France and to [u] Paris it ſelf. But as for Rouën, he left that on his Left hand, paſſing it by for the Lord Godfry's Sake, for there was his Brother the Earl of Harcourt, on the French Kings part, and the Earl of Dreux in his Company, with a Choice number of Brave Souldiers. Thô others ſay, that the King of France himſelf was there on the other ſide the Seyne, coaſting the King of England all along till he came to Poiſſy; as appears by the Letters of the Kings Chaplain, which we ſhall pro- duce hereafter. Wherefore the King of England turned thence to Pont de l' Arche on the Seyne, which he took and deſtroy'd, as alſo all the Country about Rouën; the ſame he did to Vernon, and ſent a Detachment thence, which took and burnt the Town of Giſors, but would not dwell upon Attempting the Caſtle, for the Reaſons before al- ledged. The mean while the King marched along by the Seyne to Mante and Meulan, which

[o] Froiſ. c. 125.

[p] Mezeray p. 25.

[q] Aſhmole p. 654.

[r] Rot. Norman. 20 Ed. 3. m. 21. vid. Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc ann. §. 39.

[s] Aſhmole p. 654.

[t] Giov. Villan. l. 12. c. 63. p. 873. vid Epiſt. Papæ ad Edvard. Regem dat. Avin. iii Non. Auguſt. Anno Pontif. 5. apud Odor. Raynald. ad hunc an. §. 40.

[u] Mezeray ibid.

which he paſſed by, as alſo the ſtrong Caſtle of Rouleboiſe; but all along the River Seyne he found the Bridges broken, till at laſt he came to Poiſſy, a Town about five Leagues from Paris, where the Bridge indeed was broken down, but the Joiſts and Arches lay in the River. For when King [x] Philip, who moſt certainly coaſted the Engliſh Army on the other ſide the River, ſaw King Edwards Motion toward Paris, which he chiefly dreaded, and gueſſed that the Bridge of Poiſſy could not be made ſtrong enough againſt the Engliſh, becauſe thô otherwiſe the Place was ſtrong, it was not Walled about, he went thither, and as my Author was afterwards informed, with Tears in his Eyes, perſwaded the Lady Prioreſs who was his Siſter, and the reſt of the Recluſes, being of the Order of St. Dominic, to depart away for the preſent, together with all the Inhabitants, and at their going off to break down the Bridge. So they brake the Bridge, thô their Fear hindred them from doing it ſo effectually, as elſe they might have done, and fled all away to the City of Paris; and the French King intended, if the Engliſh came thither, to deſtroy the Suburbs; and all things were made ready there, as if they expected a Siege the next Day. But when King Edward was come to Poiſſy, he gave order immediatly to his Carpenters to uſe all their Diligence in Repairing the Bridge ſtrongly; and there he tarried three Days, expecting the Iſſue of their Labour: He himſelf being lodged in a New Royal Palace of King Philip's, adjoyning to the Priory, and the Prince his Son in another Palace of the ſaid Kings. But the Priory it ſelf is commended by the Ancient Author, whom I follow, for one of the moſt Delicate and Beautifull Structures that ever he ſaw. And no doubt the Town was well beloved by the later Kings of France, not only becauſe it lay ſo near to Paris upon the River Seyne, but alſo becauſe it had now been rendred famous for giving Birth to St. Lewis, Grandfather to King Philip the Fair. While King Edward thus ſtay'd at Poiſſy, his Marſhals made their Excurſions to St. German en Laye, to Mount-joy, St. Cloud, Petty Boulogne by Paris, and Bourg la Reyne, which were all taken, ſacked and fired. The Flames [y] were ſeen from St. Cloud and other Places to Paris, which put the Citizens into ſuch a Conſternation (as the French Chronicles confeſs) that if King Philip had not at that time been there upon the Spot, they had ſent and yielded up their City to King Edward. He for his part, ſeeing he could not as yet paſs the River of Seyne toward Paris, after he had uſed the Palaces and Manſions of the French King's, and drank off the Wines, and diſpoſed of what elſe he found there at his Pleaſure, ſet them on fire at his Departure, and conſumed the moſt of them either by Himſelf or his Marſhals, as at St. German, Mont-joy and Poiſſy (* eſpecially at Chaſtell du Roy, an Houſe of all moſt Dear to King Philip, and which he himſelf had built and finiſhed but about 2 Years before) and the other Places above-named. About [z] this Time the Lord Robert Ferrers of Chartley, having by means of a ſmall Boat conveyed over the Seyne his own Troops, went and gave Aſſault to the Caſtle of Roche-Guyon. The Place was thought to be impregnable; inſomuch that there was current a Prophecy or Proverb concerning it, ſignifying its great Strength; and that was

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ. VII.

x M.S. vet. Lat. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. cui Titulus, Acta Edvardi Filii Edvardi Tertii ad 12 Auguſti, &c.

y Fabian p. 221.

* M.S. id. ibid.

z M.S. vet. Lat. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. cui Titulus Acta Edvardi Filii Edvardi Tertii. 10 Auguſti.

Le Fleur du Liz perdera ſon nom,
Quand ſera gaignee la Roche-Guyon.

In Engliſh,

The Lilly loſes her Renown,
When Roche-Guyon Caſtle's won.

But however after a briſk Aſſault, in which Sr. Edward Attewood was ſlain, the Caſtle was yielded to the Lord Ferrers; who finding therein a great Number of Ladies, diſmiſt them civilly without the leaſt Abuſe, and having taken an Oath of all the Knights and Eſquires his Priſoners for the Payment of their Ranſoms, he let them go alſo, and return'd again over the Seyne to the King. While King Edward remained at Poiſſy, he [a] ſent his Defiance again to Philip of Valois, challenging him forth to Battle, and offering to meet him in the Field under the very Walls of the Louvre. Thô by ſome this was thought but a Trick to amuſe King Philip, that he might not purſue him, for that being now laden with Spoil he ſeem'd not unwilling to return. But ſince Truth is our Aim, we muſt not conceal, that all along King Edward's Actions agreed with his Defiance; and that he always ſought to meet King Philip, till in the end he obtain'd a Battle; and that if he intended to retire, he might more ſafely have done it by going back the ſame way he came, thrô a Country already conquer'd, than by making of Bridges ſo near the Metropolis of France to go further, where it ſeem'd morally ima Mezeray ad hunc an. p. 25.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

possible for him to escape a Battle. Nor do we hear of any Navy that expected him any where on the other side the Seyne, nor had he as yet any Place of Retreat in those Parts, where to secure his Booty or his Person. The Truth of it is, that he had already design'd a Siege for Calais, and therefore marched now that Way; that either before he came thither, he might try his Fortune with Philip, or at least passing so far without Battle, have a sufficient tast of his Courage, and a free Opportunity of Enriching his own Men, and ravaging the Lands of his Enemies. Nor could he intend to retreat for safety to his own Lands in the Earldom of Ponthieu, as [b] some say, because they as well as others, that belonged to him, were now in the Hands of the French King, as may appear by the King of Englands frequent Complaints thereof in his Letters. As for the Army of the Flemings, which Others [c] say he went forth to joyn in Picardy, we cannot think, that any such Design or Appointment was had or made, because no such Effect appeared afterward, even thô all Impediments were removed.

[b] Mezeray ibid.

[c] Giov. Villani. l.12.c.64.p.874

X. However [d] when the Parisians saw such Dreadfull Fires so near their own Walls, they were in great doubt of themselves: And King [e] Philip himself was extreamly incensed, to behold from his Capital City the heart of his Kingdom in Flames. Wherefore he resolved forthwith to remove to St. Dennis, having first commanded all the Penthouses in Paris to be pulled down: But when the Parisians saw their King ready to leave them, they came flocking to him, and upon their knees, said, "Ah, Gra- "cious Prince! What means Your Majesty, thus to forsake Your Royal Chamber of "Paris? The King reply'd, "Good People, fear you nothing: For the English shall "come no nearer to you, than they are already. Why Sir, said they, they are not a- "bove 2 Leagues off now; and when they shall hear of Your Departure, they will "come and Assault us, and without You, we are not able to hold out against them: Sir, "for Gods sake, tarry here still, and defend your Loyal City of Paris. Speak no more, "said the King, of this Matter: For I am resolved to go to St. Dennis to my Men "of War, and I will encounter the English, and give them Battle, whatsoever chance "shall betide me. And thereupon, [f] having left for the Guard of the City, and of his Queen, and Children, 1200 Men of Arms, besides the Inhabitants, and Footmen, he rode forth to St. Dennis, about 2 Leagues Northward of Paris, where he [g] found the King of Bohemia, and his Son Charles, Elected King of the Romans, the Lord John of Hainalt, the Duke of Lorraine, the Earl of Flanders, of Namur, of Blois, and other great Lords and Knights, with their Troops ready to serve him. All this time King Edward, while his Men were repairing the Bridge, lay at [h] Poissy in the Nunnery, where he kept the Feast of the Assumption of our Lady, on the 15 of August, and sat in his Royal Robes of Vermilion Scarlet, furr'd with Ermines, without sleeves; having the day [i] before published by Proclamation, that for Reverence of the approaching Solemnity, no man whatsoever should offer, during that Festival, to commit any outrage by Fire or Depredations, on pain of Life and Limbs: But that all should devoutly solemnize the Praises of the Mother of God. While this Bridge was thus repairing by the English, the French King [k] sent thither 2000 Souldiers to hinder the Workmen; but the Archers by their continual shooting with their home-drawn Bows, slew the greater part of them: So that the Rest flying, the Work was brought to Perfection. Wherefore the Day after this Feast, the Bridge being ready, King Edward passed over in his former Array, having [l] fired the Town of Poissy, but spared the Nunnery, in Honour of its Founder Philip, the Fair, who was his Grandfather, by the Mothers side. Being thus passed over the Seyne, and entred into le Vexin Francois, he marched toward Pont-Oyse, which is a City of great Defence, but the Vanguard being past the Town, the Rere-guard Assaulted it, and took it, where more than 300 Men of Arms of the Enemy, were slain. The next Day one of the English Marshals, namely the Lord [m] Godfry Harcourt together with the Earl of Suffolk, and the Lord Hugh Spencer, riding out on one Hand with 500 Men of Arms, and 1300 Archers, met by chance with a great Number of Burgesses of Amiens on Horseback, who upon King Philips Command, were riding to Paris for the better Defence of that City, in case of Necessity. The English immediately fell upon them with great Courage, and the French Defended themselves a while, as Valiantly; for they had four good Knights of Amiens to their Captains, and they exceeded the English in Number, and were all very well armed. So that at the beginning many were reversed on both parts, and the Skirmish continued something doubtfull: But at last the English by their obstinate Valour, and great Experience prevailed, and then the Burgesses were well-nigh all taken, or slain; so that about [n] 1200 of them remain'd Dead in the Field;

[d] Froiss. c. 125.

[e] Mezeray p.26. ad hunc annum.

[f] Giov. Villani l.12.c.65. p. 875.

[g] Froiss. Du Chesne. &c.

[h] Froiss. ibid. & Du Chesne p. 664.

[i] M.S. Vetust. Latin. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr.

[k] Fabian p.222.

[l] Fabian p.221.

[m] Froiss. c. 125. & Du Chesne p. 664.

[n] Ashmole p. 655. & Martin p. 118. & Froiss. ibid. &c.

Field; and all their Carriage, Baggage, and Harneſs, [o]being 302 Carts and Waggons, laden with Croſsbows, Quarrels, Armour, and Victuals, fell to the Conquerours ſhare; beſides 60 Gentlemen Priſoners.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

Thus the [p] King of England marched in Hoſtile Manner thrô Vexin Francois into Beauvaiſis; burning and deſtroying all before him. Now it is to be remembred, that on the Second Day after King Edward had paſſed the Seyne, he being then at Auneuil, within 3 Leagues of Beauvais, there [q] came Letters unto him from King Philip, ſignifying, that he would give him Battle, as on that Thurſday, or elſe on the Saturday, Sunday, or Monday following: On Condition he would in the mean while forbear deſtroying the Country. In Anſwer whereto King Edward immediately ſent him this Letter following.

[o] Sr Tho. de la More apud Stow p.242.

[p] Froiſ. c. 125. fol.62.

[q] Aſhmole's Garter p.655. ex Record.

"EDWARD, by the Grace of God, King of France, and England, and Lord "of Ireland, unto the Illuſtrious Lord, Philip, Earl of Valois. [r] Sr. Philip of Valois, "We have read your Letters, wherein you ſignifie unto Us, that You will Combat "with our whole Power, between St. Germaine de Prez, and Valgirart de la Paris, "or between Franconville and Pont-Oyſe, this Thurſday, or on Saturday, Sunday, or "Monday next following; provided, that neither We nor our People, do any Dam"age, Spoil, or Waſte; Whereupon We give You to know, that thrô Aſſurance "in God, and the Clear Right which We have to the Crown of France, which You "Uſurp injuriouſly, to the Diſheriſon of Us, our Country, God and Right, We are "come, not in any Pride, or Preſumption, into our ſaid Realm of France, holding our "way toward You, to make an end of the War between Us: But that when it was "in Your Power to have Battle, You cauſed the Bridges to be broken down between "You and Us; ſo that We could not approach unto You, nor paſs the Water of "Seyne, till We were come to Poiſſy; and there We took Order to Repair the Bridge, "which You had cauſed to be broken; and We tarried there three Days, waiting for "You and your Power, which You have aſſembled; unto which Place You might have "come, either on the one ſide, or the other at your Pleaſure. And becauſe We can"not have Battle with You, We have taken a Reſolution to paſs further into our ſaid "Realm to comfort thoſe that are our Friends, and Faithfull, and to chaſtiſe thoſe, "who are Rebellious unto Us, whom You unjuſtly call your Subjects. And ſurely "We will ſtay in our ſaid Realm without departing, till We have atchieved our War, "as far as We may, to our Advantage, and the Grievance of our Adverſaries. Where"fore, if You are deſirous, as your Letters report, to fight with Us, and to ſave thoſe "whom You claim, as your Subjects (if You will let Us know at what time You will "come) You ſhall find Us ready in the Field to Encounter You by the help of God: "Which thing We ardently deſire for the Benefit of Chriſtendom; ſeeing that You "will not vouchſafe either to offer or admit of any Reaſonable way of Peace with Us. "But We are not at all adviſed to be directed by You, nor to accept of Place and Day "of Battle from You on the Conditions above written. Dated at Auneville this Thurſ"day, the 17th. of Auguſt, in the Year of our Reign of France the Seventh, and of "England the Twentieth.

[r] Ex Original. Gallico apud M.S. Vet. Lat. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr. cui titulus, Acta Edvardi Filii, Edvardi Tertii, & Rot. Norman. 20. Ed. 3. m. 21. in Dorſo.

That [s] Night the King of England took up his Lodgings in a Fair Abbey, called Meſſene, near Beauvais: But being upon his March the next Morning, as he chanced to look behind him, and ſaw the Abbey on fire, he ſtraight commanded 20 of the Authors of that Fact to be hanged: For at [t] his firſt entrance into France, he had commanded by Proclamation through his Army, that no Man ſhould preſume on pain of Death to violate any Church, or burn any Religious Houſe.

[s] Froiſ. c. 125. ibid.

[t] Froiſ. ibid. & Aſhmole p. 655.

Then he paſſed by the City of Beauvais, without giving any Aſſault for the Reaſons aforemention'd: But his two Marſhals, while the King was drawing toward a little Town, called Milly, where he intended to encamp that Night, went ſo cloſe to Beauvais, that they made an Attempt in three Places, and gave a fierce Aſſault at the Barriers: But the Town was ſo well Defended, by reaſon, that the Biſhop was preſent with ſufficient Forces; that having only burnt the Suburbs, cloſe up to the very Gate, they left off toward the Evening, and proceeded, and encamped in the Kings Field. Thence the whole Army went, and encamped at Granvillers; and the next Morning, as they paſſed by Argies, finding it void, they ſet it on fire, and went directly to the Town of Poix, which was furniſhed with two Caſtles.

XI. In the Caſtles there were only [u] two Fair young Ladies (with their Servants) who were preſently taken, and had been villanouſly abuſed, had it not been for 2 Worthy Engliſh Knights, Sr. John Chandos, and Sr. Ralph Baſſet of Sapcoat; who preſerved the Honour of the two Ladies, and brought them with great Reſpect before the King, their [u] Froiſ. c. 125.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

their Maſter. King Edward pittying their Youth and flouriſhing Beauty, and careſull not to ſully his Victories with any Ignoble Stain, entertained them with Princely humanity, and after a Noble Refection, demanded of them whither they moſt deſired to go. They being encouraged by the Kings Royal Behaviour, reply'd, "To Corbie: Whereupon the King immediately cauſed them to be ſafely and Honourably conducted thither, being little more than 9 Leagues diſtant from Poix, and about four from Amiens, Eaſtward, and ſtanding alſo on the Somme. That Night King Edward lodged near Poix; the mean while the Chief of the Town came to a Compoſition with the Marſhals, offering unto the King a certain Sum of Florens, on Condition their Town might neither be burnt, nor plunder'd, neither then, nor the next Day. This being granted, the King marched off next Morning with all his Army, except ſome few, whom he had left behind to receive the Money, which the Townſmen had engaged to pay, as a Ranſom for their Town. But when theſe Frenchmen perceived, that the Army was gone off, and out of ſight, and only theſe few Collectors left behind; they reſolved to pay never a penny, and ſo rang the Alarum Bell, and began to fall upon the Engliſh, who had already ſent for Succour to the Army; and were not wholly unprovided, for they had Harneſs under their Coats for fear of the Worſt, and a good Captain over them, and were altogether in a Body, as the King had order'd them. When the Lords Sr. Reginald Cobham, and Sr. Thomas Holland, who had Charge of the Reer, heard of this, they returned back to the Town upon the Spur, and as they entred, cryed, Treaſon, Treaſon: Being come thither, they found their friends ſtill fighting, and hardly maintaining their Poſt. The Engliſh Lords enraged at this falſhood, put all they met to the Sword, ranſack'd all the Town, and Demoliſhed the two Caſtles, and ſo return'd with their Spoil to the Camp (then at Airaynes) leaving nothing but Blood and Fire behind them. While the King of England lay about Airaynes, he cauſed Proclamation to be made thrô his Hoſt; that on pain of Death no Man ſhould do any harm to the Towns of thoſe Parts; for as much, as He was minded to tarry there two or three Days, to take Advice, how he might paſs the River of Somme: For it was neceſſary for him to paſs that River; but as yet there appeared no means, how it might be done; for the Bridges were all broken down; or ſtrongly Defended.

× *Froiſ.c.*126.

XII. King × Philip the mean while having gather'd all his Forces about him, began to March from St. Dennis, and went to Compiegne, in his way to Amiens, where he tarried a while waiting King Edwards Motions. He for his part was well inform'd of the French Kings approach, and reſolved to abide him; but thought it not fit to engage, while he was encloſed between two Rivers, the Seyne and the Somme, in that Manner: Wherefore he took great Care to get a convenient Paſſage: For the River was Large and Deep, and the Bridges, as we ſhew'd before, broken down, and if any Place was ſuſpected to be fordable, that was moſt ſtrongly guarded. Firſt therefore, the two Marſhals were ſent forth with 1000 Men of Arms, and 2000 Archers, to view along by the River ſide, if they could find, or win a Paſſage. Theſe Troops Marching by Lompre, came to the Bridge of Pont de Remy, which was very ſtrongly kept by a great Number of Knights, and Eſquires of France, together with the Inhabitants. Here the Engliſh alighted from their Horſes, and made a briſk attack upon the Place: But the Defence was ſo vigorous, that after a long conteſt, which laſted a whole Morning, the Aſſailants were fain to leave off, and go to ſeek better Fortune elſewhere. In the way they took Fontaine-Sur Somme, which they pillaged, and ſet on Fire; but there was no Paſſage there; thence they went to another Town, called Longe in Ponthieu, where a Bridge was laid over the River; but it was ſo well Defended, that after a briſk Aſſay, they were fain to quit all hopes of winning it. So they paſſed on to Picquigny, where again they found the Town, Bridge, and Caſtle, ſo ſurely fortfied, that it was next to impoſſible to force them. King Philip had taken ſuch Care to ſecure all the Paſſages, with deſign, by keeping the King of England, as it were, locked up between two Rivers, either ſo to famiſh him, or to give him Battle at his great Diſadvantage. So that when the two Marſhals had thus made Tryal all along by the River, and found no likelyhood of getting over, they return'd to King Edward their Maſter, ſhewing him their ill Succeſs, and how every where the Enemy had prevented them. That ſame Night the French King came to Amiens, with more than an Hundred Thouſand Men, to be nearer the Engliſh, whoſe Motions now he reſolved to obſerve more narrowly. Amiens is the Chief City of Picardy, lying upon the Somme, and diſtant about 10 Leagues from Abbeville, but little more than ſix from Airaynes, where now the King of England lay. He for his part, knowing the King of France ſo near him, behind; and the River before him, which he could could not pass, remain'd very thoughtfull most part of that Night; but resolved now to seek a Passage himself with all his Forces: So the next Morning, having heard Mass before Sun-rise, he presently after began to decamp from about Airaynes, his two Marshals scouring along before him. As thus he rode thrô the Country of Vimeux, toward Abbeville, a good and large City of Ponthieu, upon the Somme, he found in his way a pretty considerable Town, called Fountaines les Secques, whither many of the Country People were fled with their Goods, in hopes of that little Defence that was there: But these hopes proved pernicious; for the Town was presently taken and spoil'd, and the Inhabitants put to the Sword. King Edward continued his March to Oysemont, which he also took, and lodged there for that Night, in a great Hospital near the Town.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

The mean time King Philip had left Amiens, and as in pursuit of the English, came about Noon to Airaynes, from whence King Edward was gone that Morning: Here he found great store of Provision, left there by the English upon their hasty departure, as meat ready spitted, Bread and Pasties in the Ovens, Tunns and Casks full of Wine, and Tables ready spread. All these things, as they were then Arguments to Philip, that Edward fled, so have they been to several, especially to the French Historians of the same. But whoever impartially considers, the Policy and Courage of King Edward; and that he not only now had the leisure to take Towns in his Flight, but also both before and after, shew'd his firm Resolution to abide his Enemies; and that Tables are not usually spread so early in the Morning, as when he left that Place, will easily imagine, that all these things were purposely, and designedly left there by that Prince, to nourish security in his Adversaries; as We shall find it did to their Destruction.

XIII. However there King Philip was obliged to stay that Night, for the Reer of his Army and some of his Lords which were not yet come up. King Edward the mean while, being at Oysemont, had sent out his Marshals, who overran the Country even to the Gates of Abbeville, and as far as St. Valery, where they had a brisk Skirmish at the Gates. Upon their return at Night, King Edward held a Council of War, wherein 'twas agreed to call certain of the French Prisoners before them, which being done, the King himself in a very Affable and Courteous Manner demanded, "if there "was any Man among them, that knew of any Passage beneath Abbeville, whereby "he and his Men might get over the Somme: And he added, that if any one could "rightly and truly inform him as to this point, he would grant him his Liberty, and "twenty other Frenchmen for his sake. Now there was among the Prisoners there present, a young lusty Yeoman called Gobin [y] Agace, who boldly stepping forth before the King, said, "Sir, I promise You on peril of my Neck to guide You to such a Ford, "where Your Majesty, and all your Men shall pass the Somme without Danger: There "are certain places at this Passage so broad, that 12 Men may go over in Front with "ease; and hardly knee-deep in the Water; for thô at the return of the Floud, the "River swells so intolerably, that the biggest Ships may ride there, yet during the "Ebbe, which happens twice in 12 Hours, the Water is so low, that either Horse or "Foot may pass over with security enough. And the bottom of this Passage is so "hard and firm, with Chalk, White-stones and Pebbles, (whence it is called Blan-"chetteaque, or White-Water) that all your Carriages also may go safely over. And "if it please Your Majesty to set forward very early, We may be there by Sun-rise; "for it is but about 4 Leagues of. The King said, if this proved true, he would set Gobin and all his Company at Liberty, and give him over and above an Hundred Nobles for his Pains. And thereupon, having committed the Fellow to the Marshals Custody, he sent Command thrô the Host, that every Man should be ready to March at the sound of the Trumpet.

[y] Gaguin & Du Chesne, &c.

About two days before, [z] King Philip, who understood the Country well, and doubted, that some one or other, either for hope or fear would inform King Edward of that Passage, for the more Security ordered Sr. Gondemar du Fay, a valiant Baron of Normandy, to go from Amiens on the other side the Somme, and defend Blanchetteaque with a 1000 Men of Arms, and 6000 Foot, together with the Genouese Crosbows; so this Lord went on by St. Requier, in Ponthieu, from whence he passed to Crotoy, to be there ready at hand, and he had such Help from Arras, Montrevil, Abbeville and St. Requier, that he now compleated [a] 12000 Men.

[z] Froiss. c. 127.

[a] Gaguin p. 141. & Froiss. & Mezeray p. 26. Martin p. 118, &c.

But King Edward, after he had heard of this Place by the Prisoner, took but little Rest that Night: For at Midnight he arose, commanded the Trumpets to be sounded, and all things to be ready for a March. About Break of day he left Oysemont, and rode rode after the Guidance of Gobin Agace; so that by Sun-rise they came to Blanchetteaque (by [b] Saigneville) a Place below Abbeville, between [c] St. Valery and Crotoy; where the Somme spreading it self more largely in Breadth, proves less rapid, and more shallow in Depth than elsewhere, thô even here it is not passable, but at Low Sea.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

XIV. At their first coming thither, they found the Flood up; wherefore they tarried waiting for the Fall of the Water till Prime; in which time Sr. Godmar du Fay came thither from Crotoy, and ranged his Men in Order upon the Banks, and at the Ascent of the River, to defend the Passage against the English. But King Edward no way discouraged at this daring Appearance, when the Ebbe came, commanded his Marshals to enter the Water, and himself looking back on his Men said aloud, "They that Love "me, let them Follow me, plunged in after them, the whole Army following in good Order.

[b] Fabian p.222. & Sanson's Map.
[c] D' Avila p. 1089.
[d] Du Serres, &c.

Upon this the French Men of Arms on the other side, being attended with the Crossbows, descended also into the Water, and there the Gentlemen of Artois and Picardy behav'd themselves with much Resolution, and being back'd by the Genouese Crossbows, gave the English no small trouble: But King Edwards Archers shot with such Advantage against them, that they were forced to retire from the Men of Arms, who after an obstinate Dispute were also beaten back by the English Men of Arms: and so the English took land, and still as they came up, began to order themselves in the Field. When the Lord Gondemar du Fay saw how strangely his Men gave back, and that the Landing of the Enemy could no further be impeached, he presently fled away and left the Field, with the Chief of his Horsemen; some whereof recover'd Abbeville, others St. Ricquier: But most of the Foot were slain, for the Chace endured for above three Miles. So that there were slain more than [e] 2000 [f] Men of Arms, besides Footmen, and those that were taken Prisoners. Nor did the English escape wholly without Loss, for before their Reer could get quite over, the [g] Van-Currours of the King of Bohemia, and the Lord John of Hainalt came upon them, and slew some of them before they could gain the Ford, and took some Horses and a few Carriages.

[e] Holinshead p.932. & Stow p. 242.
[f] Knighton p. 2587. n.40.
[g] Froiss. c. 127.

When now the King of England with his Army had thus escaped the great Danger they were lately in, he [h] first return'd his Thanks to God, and then called Gobin Agace before him, and gave both him and all his Company their liberty, and an 100 Nobles and a good Horse to Gobin, as he had promised. And having so done, [i] he rode forth in his former Order, designing to take up his Quarters at a great Town called Noyelle sur la Mer; but being informed that it belonged to the Countess of Aumale, who was Sister to his late Friend the Lord Robert of Artois; for the Sake and in Memory of that Lord, he forbore to do the least harm either to the Town or the Lands belonging thereto, and so went forward. But his Marshals rode up to Crotoy by the Sea-side, which after some Opposition they took and burnt, having slain above 300 Germans, whom they found therein. Here in the Haven they found many Ships, and other Vessels laden with Wines of Ponthieu, which were taken up by the Merchants of Xaintogne and Rochelle; but now the Marshals seised thereon, and brought the best to the King, the rest they disposed of as they thought fitting. Then one of the Marshals rode up even to the Gates of Abbeville, and thence to St. Ricquier, and the other unto the Town of Rue St. Esprit, attempting, if they could find any of those Places at any Disadvantage. All this was done that Morning, on which the King passed the Ford at Blanchetteaque, and the Marshals return'd to the King early after Noon.

[h] Froiss. ibid.
[i] Froiss. ibid. & Du Chesne p. 664.

XV. That same Morning which was a Fryday, and the 25 of August, the French King marched from Airaynes in pursuit of King Edward, whom he expected to find enclosed between the River of Somme and his Army: But when he heard how the Passage was won, and that the Lord Gondemar du Fay was defeated, he complain'd aloud, [k] that he was betray'd: For he thought it impossible, that 12000 Men so well posted, should not be able to defend so narrow a Passage against all the World, if they had done their Duties. However he immediatly followed the English by the Banks of the River (on the other side whereof King Edward and his Army lay) and thô he had in his Company an Army of above an Hundred Thousand Men, yet King Edward [l] offer'd him free Passage over the Ford, provided he would come over the next Tide and choose a Place apt for Battle.

[k] Gaguin p. 141.
[l] Sr. Tho. de la More apud Stow p. 242.

King Philip demanded of his Marshals, what Course he should take in this Case, they said, "Sir, You cannot pass this River, but at the Bridge of Abbeville; for now "'tis

"'tis high Tide, and if it was not, thô your Adverſary would let you paſs freely over, yet "he would then have you at Diſadvantage; your Men being not duely order'd, and beſide "that wet and weary. But if your Majeſty returning to Abbeville, will take the benefit "of this following Night for the Refreſhment of your Men, we ſhall paſs the Bridge time "enough to Morrow, and fight with our Enemies without any Diſadvantage. Upon this Advice King Philip returned to Abbeville, and King Edward marched up further into Ponthieu about 3 Leagues, till he came to the Foreſt of Creſſy, near to the Town of Creſſy, which ſtands on the River Maye, exactly between Abbeville and Heſdin. When the King ſaw here, that there was convenient Ground for two Armies to meet, conjecturing rightly, that now his Adverſary of France was reſolved to give him Battle; he ſaid to his Lords, "We will now go no further till we have look'd our Enemies in "the Face; for I have good reaſon to expect them here, all this Land of Ponthieu be-"ing the Right Heritage of the Queen my Mother, which was given her for her Dow-"ry by her Father Philip; thô ſince it hath been unjuſtly taken away by mine Ad-"verſary Philip of Valois: Of whom now I will challenge this Country of Mine, and "God defend the Right. And becauſe he had not the [m] Fourth Part of that Number, which King Philip brought into the Field, he commanded his Marſhals to chooſe out a Plat of Ground ſomething for his Advantage. This was all done accordingly, and at the ſame time the King ſent out his Van-Currours towards Abbeville, to obſerve if they could ſee any Tokens of King Philip's Coming forward that Day. Theſe Men upon their return brought word to the Contrary, and ſo the Engliſh took their Reſt for the remaining part of that Day and the Night following; being firſt All commanded to be ready provided in the Place, which the Marſhals were Meeting out, the next Morning at Sound of Trumpet.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[m] Froiſ. c. 127. Says not an 8th part.

This ſame Fryday the French King ſpent in Abbeville, waiting for all his Forces to come up, and eſpecially for the Earl of Savoy, whom he expected with a 1000 Spears, and had paid him for 3 Months by the Men of Troyes in Champagne. In the mean time he ſent out his two Marſhals to ride and view, how and where the Engliſh were encamped: And theſe coming back at night related, that they were lodged in the Field of Creſſy. Then King Philip made a moſt Royal and magnificent Supper for all his Chief Lords and Captains, and there he effectually exhorted them to lay aſide all private Animoſities, and to be perfect Friends one with another, and valiantly to joyn together, like true Frenchmen againſt the Common Enemy. About Supper-time there arrived at Abbeville the long-expected Earl of Savoy, named Amè or Amadis, with a 1000 Men of Arms, which encreaſed the Security the French were already too prone to entertain.

CHAPTER the THIRD.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward diſpoſes himſelf to receive the Enemy; with the Order and Number of his Forces, and Names of his Chief Commanders: He makes 50 New Knights. II. King Philip marches out of Abbeville againſt the Engliſh. III. Who on ſight of the Enemy put themſelves into a Poſture; with the Manner of their being Embattel'd. IV. King Philip advances his Auriflambe, and King Edward his Burning Dragon. V. The Order of the French Army. VI. The Battle of Creſſy. VII. The Engliſh Captains ſend to King Edward for Succour, with his Anſwer. VIII. The Prince of Wales having overcome ſeveral Bodies of the French, marches forward againſt the Main Force of the Enemy, routs the Marqueſs of Moravia, kills his Father, the Old King of Bohemia, and wins his Banner of the Oſtrich Feathers. IX. King Philip after much Perſonal Valour being wounded in two places quits the Field, and leaves the Victory to the Engliſh. X. The Number of the Slain on both Sides. XI. An occaſional Inquiry after the Antiquity of the Invention of Guns. XII. King Philip retires to the Caſtle of Broye, thence to Amiens, and a while after to Paris. XIII. The Behaviour of the Engliſh after the Victory: Two Parties of the French defeated next Day by the Engliſh. XIV. The Conquerour takes the Spoil of the Field and Care for the Burial of the Dead. XV. King Edward marches from Cressy, and lies down before Calais.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

I. THUS [a] were the English encamped in the Fields of Cressy in Ponthieu, where they found plenty of good Wines and all manner of Provision: Thô if it had been otherwise, the Army should not have wanted; for the King had providently gather'd before-hand a sufficient Store of all things necessary, which followed in Carts among the Carriages. On the Fryday Night King Edward also made a Supper in his Royal Pavilion for all his Chief Barons, Lords and Captains: At which he appeared wonderfull Chearfull and Pleasant, to the great Encouragement of his People. But when they were all dismist to their several Quarters, the King himself retired into his Private Oratory, and came before the Altar, and there prostrated himself to Almighty God and devoutly prayed, "That of his Infinite Goodness "he would vouchsafe to look down on the Justice of his Cause, and remember his un- "feigned Endeavours for a Reconcilement, althô they had all been rendred frustrate by his "Enemies: That if he should be brought to a Battle the next Day, it would please "him of his Great Mercy to grant him the Victory; as his Trust was only in him, and "in the Right which he had given him. Being thus armed with Faith, about Midnight he laid himself upon a Pallet or Mattress to take a little Repose; but he rose again betimes and heard Mass, with his Son the Young Prince, and received Absolution, and the Body and Blood of his Redeemer, as did the Prince also, and most of the Lords and others, who were so disposed.

[a] Froiss. c. 128.

Immediately after Mass was ended, he commanded that all Men should betake themselves to their Arms, and march in their appointed Order to the same place in the Field, which had been chosen by the Marshals, and approved by the King the day before. The Place was on the East-side of the Forest of Cressy, the Town and the River Maye being on their left Hands; and beside this Defence, the King now commanded a Park to be made by the Wood-side in the Reer of his Army, wherein were enclosed all the Carts and Carriages of the Army, in the Middle whereof were all the Horses; for it was the Kings Resolution (to enflame the Courages of his Men by Despair, as well as other Arguments) to fight that day on Foot. This Park had but one Entrance, and that was well defended with Men of Arms and Archers: Then the King divided his Host into three Battalia's. In the First whereof was his Eldest Son, Edward Prince of Wales, now but 15 Years, two Months and 11 Days Old; but yet of Courage and Strength so far beyond his Age, that even then he seem'd neither unworthy that Place nor that Father: With him were joyned the Lord Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, the Lord John Vere Earl of Oxford, the Lord Godfry Harcourt of Normandy, the Lord Ralph Stafford, the Lord John de la Ware, the Lord Thomas Holland, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord Bartholomew Burwash the Elder, and his Son, a valiant Knight of the same Name, with the Lord John Mohun, Son in Law to the Lord Bartholomew aforesaid; the Lord Robert Bourchier, the Lord John Chandos, the Lord Thomas Clifford and Sr. Robert Neville, Second Son to the Lord Ralph Neville of Raby, and several Others, Knights and Esquires, to the Number of 800 Men of Arms, 4000 Archers, and [b] 6000 valiant Welchmen: But the Earl of Warwick and the Lord John Chandos, had a particular Charge from the King to stand firm that day to his Sons Person, and direct and defend Him by their Counsel and Valour. The second Battalia was Headed by the Lord Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, and the Lord William Bohun Earl of Northampton, with whom were the Lord John Willoughby the Elder, the Lord William Roos, the Lord Ralph Basset of Sapcote, the Lord Multon, Sr. Lewis Tufton of Toketon, from whence the Honourable Nicolas Earl of Thanet is derived; and many others to the Number of 800 Men of Arms, 2400 Archers, and 4000 strong Bill-Men. The third and last Battalia was Headed by the King himself, who had in his Company John Lord Moubray, Roger Lord Mortimer, Thomas Lord Dagworth, Sr. Richard Goldesborough, Sr. Richard Damory or Damuor, Sr. Nele Loring, Sr. Hugh Hastings, Sr. John Butterell and Others, to the Number of 700 Men of Arms, 6000 Archers, and 5300 Bill-men; the whole Battalia amounting to 12000 Men; and all Three to 30000 compleat. As for the Names of other Lords and Knights who were present in this Action, I have recovered these, thô here placed out of Order, because no certain Rank is any where assigned; Sr. Peter Grandison Banneret, Robert Lord Morley, the Lord William Felton, the Lord Adam Everingham, Robert Lord Ferrers, the Lord Hugh Meinill, the Lord Maurice Berkley, Thomas Lord Furnival, the Lord William Kerdeston, the Lord Michael Poynings, the [b] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 66. p. 877.

Lord

Lord Robert Vghtred, the Lord Thomas West, the Lord John Engaine Banneret, the Lord John Striveling, the Lord John Montgomery, and Sr. Giles Erdinton of his Retinue, Sr. Fouk [c] Bermingham, Peter Lord Mauley, Sr. William Swinnerton, Sr. Richard [c] Whitacre, Sr. John [f] Murdac, Sr. Gerard [g] Burdel, besides many Others, whose Names it is both difficult to collect, and tedious to recite. Over and above all which, the King to encourage his Men the better to pursue Honour, created this Day no less than [h] 50 New Knights, the Chief whereof were Sr. Guy Brian a young Baron, Sr. Robert Mauley Brother to Peter Lord Mauley, Sr. John Ravensholm, Sr. Peter Brewis, Sr. Thomas Lancaster, Sr. Henry d' Engaine, and Sr. John Beauchamp younger Brother to the Earl of Warwick; to which [i] last was committed that Day the Honour of Bearing the Kings Standard. All things being thus order'd, every Lord and Captain under his own Banner and Pennon, and the Ranks duly settled, the Valorous Young King mounted on a lusty White Hobby, and with a white Wand in his Hand, rode between his two Marshals from Rank to Rank, and from one Battalia into another, "exhorting and encouraging every Man that Day to defend and maintain his Right and Honour. And this He did with [k] so cheerfull a Countenance, and with such sweet and obliging Words, that even the most Faint-hearted of the Army were sufficiently assured thereby. By that time the English were thus prepared, it was Nine a Clock in the Morning, and then the King commanded them all to take their Refreshment of Meat and Drink; which being done, with small Disturbance they all repaired to their Colours again, and then laid themselves in their Order on the dry and warm Grass, with their Bows and Helmets by their side, to be more fresh and vigorous upon the Approach of the Enemy.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[c] Dugd. Warw. p. 658.
[e] Id. p. 750.
[f] Id. p. 434.
[g] Id. p. 623.
[h] Ashmole p. 655.
[i] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 231. Ubi tamen militari cingulo donatum biennio antehæc memorat: Aut verò in hoc errat, aut hæc in Campo Equitum Creatio differt ab aliâ: Hic Ashmolæum sequor.
[k] Froiss. c. 128.

II. That [l] same Day King Philip on the other side, rose early in the Morning, and heard Mass at Abbeville, in the Abbey of St. Peter, where he had lodged; and exactly at Sun-rise began to March out of the City against the English, with more than an [m] Hundred Thousand Men. Abbeville is between three and four Leagues from Cressy; whereof when King Philip had passed about two Leagues, some of his Lords said to him; "Sir, it is now High time to set your Battails in good Order, and let your "Infantry pass on forward, while You range your Cavalry here. This Advice the King follow'd; and moreover sent out four Knights of great Experience, viz. the Lord Moyne of Bastelberg in Bohemia, the Lord of Nogheres, the Lord of Beaujeu, and the Lord of Aubigny, to ride forward and discover the Face of the Enemy. These Lords rode so near, that they took notice of much part of their Order, and Behaviour; and yet the English made no offer to hinder them, but lay still, and let them alone, thô they saw their Business, and knew who it was that sent them. So these four Lords return'd to their Master, who presently demanded of them, what tidings? They look'd about upon One another, as being every Man loath to speak; since they had no good News to declare. Then the King Commanded the Lord Moyne of Bastelberg to tell him what discovery they had made, and freely to utter his opinion. Now this Moyne Lord of Bastelberg in Bohemia, was an Ancient Gentleman, a Native of that Country, who in his Youth had been an Esquire to John of Luxemburgh, the Valiant Old King of that Realm; and had behav'd himself in all his Masters Wars, with so much Gallantry, that he gain'd the Reputation of being One of the Bravest and most Expert Knights in the World: Thô now Age had rendred him more fit for Counsel, than Action. This Man thus Answer'd the King; "Sir, since it is your Pleasure, I shall speak under Correction "of my Fellows, if they should chance to think otherwise: Sir, We have ridden "forth, and at our Leisure view'd the Countenance of Your Enemies; and know for "certain, they are ready ranged in three Fair Battalia's, as resolved to wait Your coming; being in all by Estimation little more, or less, than 30000 Men. Sir, as for my "part, bateing Your Majesties Displeasure, I would Advise, that for this Day You go "no further; for before Your Reer is fully come up, and all Your Forces ranged in good "Order of Battle, it will be late. Not to say, that Your Footmen are weary with this "long March in their Armour, and their Ranks much disorder'd; whereas the Enemy is Fresh and Lusty, and ready to receive You. Thô by to morrow Morning, as "their Vigour will be more languid and pall'd, so Your now-tired Troops will then be "more Vigorous. And hereby also Your Majesty may with more Deliberation, and "greater Exactness both Order Your Men, and view the whole Posture of the Enemy; as well, as consider after what Manner to assail them: For doubtless, Sir, they "will not flinch from You.

[l] Froiss. c. 129.
[m] Froiss. ibid. & Mezeray p. 26.

This Counsel the King Commanded to be put in Execution; but the Evil Genius of France would not suffer that Command to take any Effect: Althô the Kings two Marshals rode forth, One to the Front, and the Other toward the Reer, saying to all the Captains and Enſigns, "Stand and tarry here in this place in the Name of God "and St. Dennis. They that were foremoſt, ſtood ſtill according to Command; but the Hindmoſt would hear nothing of Obedience, or Order, but with Words of great Bravery rode forward, ſaying, "they would make no ſtop, till they were as forward as "the Foremoſt. So that by their preſſing on, the Firſt were again forced to March, to make room for them that thus followed; by which means, neither the King, nor his Marſhals, could make them ſtand, till they came in ſight of the Engliſh. And then the Front recoyled back very diſorderly, to the great Wonder of thoſe behind; who thought the Firſt Troops were now engaged with the Enemy: And then they might have had Leiſure, and room enough to have gone forward, but they were content to make an Halt. Yet ſome went with Courage enough; and many of the Common Souldiers, of whom all the Ways between Abbeville and Creſſy, were full, when they perceived the Enemy was near them, drew their Swords, and cry'd "down with "'um, down with 'um; let us ſlay them every Mothers Son. There was no Man preſent could imagine, or gueſs at the Reaſon of all this Diſorder that happen'd among the French; but only for that they were ſuch a great Number, and deſpis'd the ſmall Power of their Enemies. This account Sr. John Froiſard [n] learn'd not only from ſeveral Engliſh Gentlemen, who were preſent, and ſaw all this, but alſo from certain Knights, belonging to the Lord John of Hainalt, who was all that Day near the Perſon of King Philip, and proved the Occaſion of ſaving him from being either ſlain or taken.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[n] Froiſ. c. 129. & fol. 66.

III. When the [o] Engliſh, who lay ſtill on the ground in three Battalia's ſaw the Approach of the Frenchmen, they ſprang up lightly from the Earth upon their Feet, and order'd themſelves fair and leiſurely. In the firſt Battail, which was govern'd by the Young Prince of Wales, his Chief Aſſiſtants being the Earl of Warwick, and the Lord John Chandos, the Archers ſtood in Manner of an [p] Herſe, about 200 in Front, and but 40 in Depth; which is undoubtedly the beſt [q] way of embattelling Archers; eſpecially, when the Enemy is very numerous, as at this time: For by the Breadth of the Front, the extenſion of the Enemies Front is matched; and by reaſon of the Thinneſs in Flank, the Arrows do more certain Execution, being more likely to reach home. In the bottom of this Fatal Herſe ſtood the Prince of Wales on Foot, among his Men of Arms, in a cloſe ſquare Battail: On whoſe left Wing were the Earls of Arundel and Northampton, with a ſtrong Brigade of above 7000 Choice Men of Arms, Bill-men and Archers. And on their Left Hand ran a Ditch, new caſt up, toward the Town and the River, to prevent being ſurrounded: Which being like an Half-Moon, with One Horn reach'd the Park, behind the Princes ſquare Battail, and with the Other touch'd the Left-ſide of their Front, their Right-ſide being cover'd with the Princes Brigade. And afar off, on the Right-ſide of the Park, where the Carriages were, ſtood the Kings firm Battail of 12000 Men, near an Hill, whereon there was a Wind-mill, as a Forlorn, if need ſhould be.

[o] Froiſ. c. 130.

[p] Holinſhead p. 933.

[q] Vid. Clement Edmunds notes on Cæſ. Comment. l. 7. c. 15.

Old John [r] of Luxemburgh, King of Bohemia, who in his Days had been a Great Souldier, and having in his Wars in Italy formerly loſt one Eye, was now by reaſon of his great Age reputed little better than Blind; having heard from the Lord Moyne this account of the good Order of the Engliſh Army, reply'd, as a Man of much Experience; "Then I ſee, the Engliſh are reſolv'd to win all, or die.

[r] Walſing. hiſt. p. 157.

IV. 'Tis [s] reported, that King Philip, as fully ſecure of the Victory, and reſolving to make an end of the War at One Blow, had by erecting his Banner of Oriflambe, which was the Great and Holy Standard of France; ſignified thereby, that all the Engliſh ſhould be put to the Sword on pain of Death, and none taken to Mercy, except the Perſons of King Edward, and of his Son the Prince of Wales, only: And that on the other Hand, King Edward underſtanding of this cruel Determination of his Adverſary, cauſed alſo his Burning-Dragon to be raiſed up, which ſignified as little Mercy to be ſhew'd to the Frenchmen. And this preſents us with a ſufficient Reaſon, for King Edwards ſtanding ſtill all the time of the Battle; for on this account, he may well be ſuppoſed to alter his Firſt Reſolution of fighting himſelf; as ſeeing then, that without a Powerfull Reſerve, if Fortune ſhould be adverſe, all would be utterly loſt. And therefore, now ſending his Eldeſt Son, as his Deareſt and moſt valuable Pledge into the Field, with Good and Expert Captains about him, he himſelf tarried on the Hill, which he fortified, either thence to relieve his Men, if they ſhould be worſted, or to purſue the Victory, if they ſucceeded. And this Opinion ſeems highly probable; if We conſider, that this Banner, being by the Frenchmen held ſacred, as having come down from Heaven, was originally, only uſed in Wars, made againſt the Infi-

[s] Sr. Tho. de la More, apud Stow p. 242.

Infidels; however, afterward it was uſed againſt Chriſtians alſo, till at laſt it was wholly loſt in a Battle againſt the Flemings; and likewiſe, that according to the Rigour ſignified by the Burning-Dragon of England, not one Frenchman was taken Priſoner at this time, thô ſo many Thouſands were ſlain; which Calamity had happen'd in like Manner to the Engliſh, if the loſs had fell on their ſide. This Standard is [t] ſaid to have been of Red Silk, Adorned and beaten with very broad and fair Lillies of Gold; and bordered about with Gold and Vermilion. Thô Villani [u] doth not mention this Enſign to be taken down, or uſed in theſe Wars, till the next Year; when King Philip reſolved ſeverely to Revenge his Loſſes, and Diſhonour upon the King of England. However, We rather encline to believe, that at this time King Philip brought with him from St. Dennis, this Hallowed Banner into the Field, as well upon the foremention'd accounts; as becauſe without this Suppoſition, 'tis hard to give a Reaſon, why King Edward ſhould leave his Eldeſt Son to deal with ſo numerous an Enemy; and that ſo many being ſlain on the French Part, We yet hear not of ſo much as One taken Priſoner: Except, that this might be the Occaſion, which is alſo Reported, that King Edward ſeeing, how far the Enemy exceeded him in Number, and fearing his Forces would be too much diſtracted, if they were allowed to take Priſoners, gave a [x] ſevere Charge that Morning; that no Man ſhould be taken to Ranſom, till the Victory was Compleat.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[t] Gaguin.
[u] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 86. p. 894.
[x] Froiſ. c. 130. fol. 65. a.

V. King Philip had divided his Army into [y] Nine Squadrons, which made alſo three Great Battails, thô the French Lords coming up one after another, there was much changing and confuſion among them. The Van was firſt committed to the King of Bohemia, and Charles Earl of Alencon, King Philips Brother, the One's Sagacity and Experience, being prudently joyn'd with the Others Youth and fiery heat to temper it: With them was the Marqueſs of Moravia, Charles of Luxemburgh, Son to the King of Bohemia, and afterwards Emperour of Germany; Peter of Clermont Duke of Bourbon, Lewis Earl of Flanders, Ralph Duke of Lorrain, James the only Son of Prince Humbert, Dauphin of Viennois, Henry, ſirnamed the Liberal, Earl of Vaudemont, Guy Earl of Blois, and others, to the Number of [z] 3000 Men of Arms, 6000 Croſsbows of Genoua, with other Italians, under the Command of Sr. Carolo Grimaldi, and Sr. Antonio Doria, in all about 20000 Men. But afterwards it was encreaſed, when John the King of Bohemia adviſed; [a] that all thoſe Genoueſe Croſsbows, who were under the Leading of Amè Earl of Genoua, ſhould be joyned to the reſt of their Countrymen in the Front, as a Match for the Engliſh Archers; and ſo they were in all 15000 Croſsbows, and 29000 Men were contained in this Firſt Battail.

[y] Stow p. 242. & Froiſ. c. 130.
[z] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 66. p. 876.
[a] Du Serres, &c.

The Second Battail was headed by King Philip himſelf, having with him (thô ſome deny it) James [b] King of the Baleares, now call'd Majorica and Minorica; but I agree not with thoſe, who ſay that the Kings of Scotland and Navarre, were here alſo; for 'tis evident, that King David was now in his own Country, and Charles King of Navarre was at home, being a Minor, and under his Mothers Tuition, as Mezeray well obſerves. But there were in this Battalia with King Philip, Prince Albert Elector Palatine of the Empire, Otho Duke of Auſtria, the Biſhop of Liege, John Lord Beaumont of Hainalt, and others, to the Number of ſix Thouſand Men of Arms, and fourty Thouſand Foot: And hither was the King of Bohemia removed afterwards, at King Philips deſire.

[b] M.S. Biblioth. Vatican. ſign. n. 2040. in Clem. VI. Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 66. p. 879. Odor. Rain. ad hunc an. §. 41 Æneas Sylvius Hiſt. Bohem. l. 32 Knighton, Walſingham, Stow, Speed & Joh. Aventin. Annal. Boiorum l. 7. p. 629. Una omnes teſtantur Regem Balearicarum in Creſſiacâ hâc Pugnâ occubuiſſe.

The Third and Laſt Battail was Lead by Amè Earl of Savoy, a Valiant and Noble Lord, ſirnamed le Vert, who [c] afterwards became the Soveraign of a Knightly Order, called the Snares of Love, which in time was changed to that of the Annunciada; with him were joyn'd the Biſhop of Noyon, the Earl of St. Paul, the Earl of Sancerre, and other Noble Gentlemen, to the Number of about 5000 Lances, and 20000 Foot.

[c] Favine le Pariſien Theatre of Honor l. 8. c. 5. p. 310. Ferne's Blazon of Gentry p. 124.

VI. And now when this Numerous Army was with much ado order'd in the beſt manner that might be, by that time they ſtood in the open field ready embattel'd againſt the Enemies, it was about Three in the Afternoon: King Philip, when firſt in the Head of his Squadrons he beheld the Face of the Engliſh, his [d] Blood changed, and he ſaid aloud to his Marſhals, "Make the Genouëſe there go on before, and let them "begin the Battle in the Name of God and St. Dennis. Now it is to be remembred as we ſaid before, that in all there were 15000 Croſsbows of Genoua, rightly fitted for the War: But they were ſo weary with going on foot that day 3 long Leagues, armed and with their Bows, that they ſaid to their Conſtable, how they were not able to do any great Service at that time, for they had then more need of a little Reſt than of freſh Labour. But yet they followed their Commanders, and ſo were removed [d] Froiſ. c. 130. fol. 64. a.

to

An. Dom. 1346. Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

to the Front of all the Battails; the mean while their words being told to the Earl of Alencon, he ſaid, "A Man has wonderfull advantage in hiring ſuch a Company of Raſ-"cals, who then begin to faint and flinch when there is moſt need. At that very In-ſtant, [c] before the Armies engaged, there fell ſuddainly a ſmart Shower of Rain, accompanied with loud Thunders, and a ſhort Eclipſe of the Sun; before which Storm there flew over the Hoſt an infinite Number of Ravens, and other Birds of Prey crying and cawing, which the Old King of Bohemia hearing of, ſaid to thoſe about him, "How that was indeed a Prodigy and an evil Token; for it ſignified many Carcaſſes "would fall. But immediately the Air began to clear again, and the burning Sun appearing out of a Cloud at the Engliſhmen's Backs, darted his Rays full in the Frenchmen's Faces, and made a ſpacious [f] Rainbow. At that very time the Genouëſe [g] began to approach, giving after their Manner a great Leap and Shouting horribly, to amaze their Enemies, who yet ſtood ſtill with their Bows ready, and their Arrows nock'd. Then the Genouëſe took a ſecond Leap, and ſhouted as before, but ſtill the Engliſh ſtirred not; laſtly, the Genouëſe after a third Leap, accompanied with the like Noiſe, being now within Shot, ſent forth all together their Quarrels againſt the Engliſh: But they all fell ſhort, becauſe their Strings had received Wet in the late Rain. Then at laſt the Engliſh Archers, whoſe Bows were kept cover'd in their Caſes during the Shower, ſtept forward one Pace, and altogether let fly their home-drawn Arrows among the Genouëſe, which fell as thick as Hail upon them; wherefore when they felt theſe ſtinging Scorpions, and ſaw them piercing the Heads, Arms and Bodies of their Fellows; and that the Engliſh were ready to ſend an other deadly Flight among them, many of them caſt down their Bows, and others cut their Strings and turned their Backs in much Diſorder. King Philip ſeeing them fly thus, cry'd out aloud ſaying, "Slay theſe Raſcals, for they will hinder us all by their Cowardiſe. And then the Lord Charles of Alencon, no leſs fierce than his Brother, cry'd out like a Deſperate Man, [h] "Come on my Friends, come on, and let us boldly Charge the Engliſh, ma-"king our Way over the bellies of theſe Genouëſe, who do but hinder us. Theſe Wo.ds were followed with Actions agreeable thereto; ſo that there aroſe a wonderfull Confuſion between the Horſe, contending to go forward, and the Foot who ſought to retire; the Engliſh Archers at the ſame time ſending their thick Flights of Arrows where the Confuſion was greateſt. Then the Cry of the Genouëſe and others aroſe unto the Stars, being overrun and trodden down by their own Horſe, as well as ſtung in their backs by the Engliſh Archers, who liberally beſtow'd whole Clouds of Shot upon them. So that many of the Men of Arms alſo fell down Horſe and Man among the Genouëſe, where they were ſo far from being able to riſe again, that they were an occaſion to Others of falling over them. And immediately certain [i] Rough Fellows that belonged to the Engliſh Army, ran in among them, and with Long Knives cut the Throats of thoſe that lay thus entangled on the ground, whether Earls, Lords, Knights or Eſquires; for none that Day were taken to Mercy. The mean while the Earl of Alencon and the Earl of Flanders, the Earl of Blois, the Duke of Lorrain, and James Dauphin of Vienna having at laſt got clear of the poor Genouëſe, coaſted wide about with their Troops, and came, though not without much Loſs, on the Right Side of the Engliſh Archers, where they fell to Handy-ſtrokes with the Prince's Battail right fiercely.

[c] Villani p. 876. Knighton p.2587. Mezeray p.27. Froiſ. Speed, Holinſh. and Walſingh. hiſt. p.157. Seres, &c.

[f] Du Serres, &c.

[g] Froiſ. ibid. c. 130. &c.

[h] Du Serres, &c.

[i] Froiſ. ibid.

VII. King Philip ſaw their Banners, and would willingly have come on to their Aſſiſtance, but if he had coaſted after their manner, all his Battails had been diſorder'd; and he thought it impoſſible yet to force a way thrô that great Hedge of Archers. So that after much Valour ſhew'd in vain, the Prince of Wales prevailed againſt this Battail of the French, and there all their Men of Arms were beaten down to the Ground, and cut in pieces by the obſtinate Proweſs of the Engliſh, and Welchmen with the Prince. Scarce was this done, when three Freſh Squadrons of French and Germane Gentlemen ruſhing forward with great fury, forced the Archers Battail to open, and ſo came full upon the Prince with ſuch Violence, and ſuch a Number of Men of Arms, that the Young Prince was very hard put to it: But then the Archers joyning their Ranks again, and ſtepping ſeveral Paces forward, the Earls of Arundel and Northampton ſent out a ſtrong Brigade of Men of Arms to help the Prince, who falling in at their Reer and on their Flank, the Enemy was almoſt encloſed; while in the Front the Couragious Prince and his Men laid about them moſt furiouſly with Spear and Shield. When firſt theſe Men broke thrô the Archers, the Earl of Warwick doubting the worſt, and that the whole French Army follow'd them at the Heels, diſpatched a Knight away to King Edward, who ſaw all the manner of the Fight from the Windmill, deſiring him

him to move forward and succour his Son. "Sir, said the Knight, the Earl of War- AN. DOM.
"wick, the Earl of Oxford, Sr. John Chandos and Sr. Reginald Cobham are so fiercely 1346.
"fought withall, and so hard put to it by the French, that they are in much danger; An. Regni
"wherefore they desire that You would please to set forward to their Aid: For they are Angliæ
"now disputing with the main Strength of the Enemy; so that if any more Troops should XX.
"break through upon them, both They and the Prince your Son would go nigh to Franciæ
"miscarry. "Well said the King, is my Son Dead, or Wounded, or Fell'd to the VII.
"Ground? For I see the French Standards drop, and conclude no otherwise, but that "things are yet in good Case. "No Sir, replied the Knight, Thanks be to God, our "Prince is yet well, but he begins to want your Assistance. "Go you back said the "King, and bid them that sent you, take care to trouble me no further, while my "Son is alive: But let him take pains to win his own Spurs, and to deserve the Ho"nour of Knighthood, which I so lately confer'd upon Him. For I am resolved, by "the Grace of God, that the Reputation of this Glorious Day shall fall to his Portion,
"and to those that are with Him. This Answer being brought back to the Prince's Captains, they were wonderfully encouraged thereby, being displeased with themselves, that ever they should send so mean a Message to the King. But by this time the three Squadrons were utterly broken, beaten down and slain by the Prince and his brave Companions.

That Morning King Philip had given a lusty black Courser to the Lord John of Hainalt, who appointed his Standard-Bearer Sr. John Fussels to ride thereon: This mettlesome Horse in the Heat of the Battle, at the same time that the Archers were broken, taking the Bridle in his Teeth, carried his Master by force thrô the English Van, between the Prince's Battail, and the Earl of Arundels on the left Hand; and as Sr. John thought to return, he fell Horse and Man into the great Ditch which the English had made, and there had perished, had it not been for his faithfull Esquire, who having followed him thrô the Archers, saw now this Mischance of his Masters, thô he was in no other Danger but what he might receive from his Horse: For the Englishmen would never stirr that day out of their Ranks to take any Prisoner whatsoever. Wherefore the Esquire securely alighted and relieved his Master from under the Horse; but they went not back the same way they came, but coasted far about, and so at last came again in safety to the Lord John of Hainalt.

VIII. And now the Prince and his Men being throughly chafed and enflamed with Courage, began to March forward, the Archers being order'd to fall into a Wing on each Side; and the Earls of Arundel and Northampton joyning the Prince. The Frenchmen met them with equal Courage, being refreshed with the Thoughts, that now their Deaths should not be sent them at a Distance; but that they might contend hand to hand for the Mastery.

And first the Marquess Charles Elect Emperour, resisted the Prince with great Courage, but his Banner was beaten to the ground, his Men slain miserably about him, and himself wounded in [k] Three places of his Body; wherefore thô not without much Difficulty, he turned his Horse and rode out of the Field, having cast away his Coat-Armour, that he might not be known. The mean while his Father John King of Bohemia, who was Son to the Noble Emperour, Henry of Luxemburgh, althô he was near blind with Age, when he understood how the Day was like to go, asked of his Captains, what was become of the Lord Charles his Son; "They told him, they knew "not, but that they supposed him somewhere in the Heat of Action. Then the good Old King, resolving by no means to Disgrace his former Victories, and Cancell the Glory of his Youth by a degenerous Old Age, said unto them, "Gentlemen, you are my "Men, my Companions and Friends in this Expedition: I only now desire this last "piece of Service from You, that You would bring me forward so near to these Englishmen, that I may deal among them One good Stroak with my Sword. They all said they would obey him to the Death; and lest by any Extremity they should be separated from him, they all with one Consent tied the Reins of their Horses one to another, and so attended their Royal Master into Battle. There this Valiant Old Heroe had his Desire, and came boldly up to the Prince of Wales, and gave more than one, or four or five good Stroaks, and fought couragiously, as also did all his Lords and Others about him; but they engaged themselves so far, that there they were all slain, and the next Day found dead about the Body of their King, and their Horses bridles tied together.

[k] Villani p. 878 Mezeray p. 27.

Then were the Arms of that Noble King (being the Ostrich Feathers, with the Motto ICH DIEN, signifying, I SERVE) taken and won [l] by the Prince of

[l] Sandford's Geneal. Hist. p. 182

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

of Wales; in whoſe Memory they have ever ſince been called the Princes Arms, being alſo from that time worn by his Succeſſors, Princes of Wales, Eldeſt Sons to the Kings of England.

With him alſo fell the Unhappy King of Majorica, named James, by the Hands of that Incomparable Martialiſt, William Bohun Earl of Northampton; if We may believe the moſt [m] Creditable Authors: Thô ſome ſay, that he was afterwards ſlain by his Adverſary the King of Aragon, in Battle; and others, that he was by him ſtarved in Priſon.

[m] Adam Murimouth, Henric. Knighton, Giov. Villani, Tho. Walſingh. & alii ſuprà citati Authores.

Of the Death of which two Kings [n] One ſays thus; "On the Feaſt of St. Ruffus "the Battle of Creſſy was fought, between the French and Engliſh: Hence is that "Day ſtill accounted Black, Diſmal, and Unlucky; which took away the Lives of "two Kings by the Sword of the Enemy. The Hiſtorian was a Man in his Days of great Piety, Learning, and Judgement, and of ſo High Eſteem, that he became Pope of Rome, by the Name of Pius II. And the two Kings, He there means, were this John of Bohemia, and James of Majorica; whom alſo [o] Giovani Villani, an Italian, who died two Years after this Fight, averres to have fallen in this field: Thô Mezeray [p] denies it.

[n] Æneas Sylvius Hiſt. Bohem. c. 32

[o] Giov. Villani l. 12 c. 66. p. 879. & Adam Murimouth, &c.

[p] Mezeray p. 27.

IX. All [q] this while King Philip of France was not forgetfull to perform the part of a moſt Reſolute and Noble Captain; for at laſt he entred the hotteſt of the Battle, with ſome Choice Troops of his moſt Valiant Friends and Subjects about him, and being mingled with the Engliſh Men of Arms, he contended ſo long in his own Perſon, doing [r] Marvels in Arms, till having one Horſe ſlain under him with Arrows, he was again diſmounted, being [s] wounded both in the Neck and Thigh; and had certainly there been ſlain, or taken Priſoner, but that the Lord John of Hainalt quickly remounted him the Third time, and obliged him to quit the Field, ſaying, "Sir, 'tis "now too late to expect any Recovery: For Gods ſake ride away, and don't will- "fully fling Your ſelf into Deſtruction. What You have loſt at this time, may be re- "paired at another, if You do not make the Loſs irreparable, by adding Your ſelf to it. And with theſe Words, taking the Kings Horſe by the Bridle, he lead him out of the Field in a manner by Force. Thus did the Noble Lord of Beaumont in Hainalt, repay to his Brother in Law, King Philip, that Horſe, which the King had preſented him in the Morning; whereby he Dutifully compelled him to reſerve himſelf to a better Fortune, and to ſave that Life, which elſe in Deſpair he had flung away. And yet, I find, that the Honour of this piece of Service done thus to King Philip, is by [t] others attributed to Don Juan Hernando d' Heredia, a Native of Aragon, Prior of Catalogna, and Caſtillian d' Empoſta, Knight of the Rhodes, and Thirty Years after, Great Maſter of the ſaid Noble Order.

[q] Giov. Villani ibid. p. 877. di ſua perſona fece Maraviglie in Arme, &c.

[r] Walſingh. Hypod. p. 119. Knighton p. 2588. n. 10.

[s] A. Mund's Chronicle p. 184.

Upon the King of France's Departure, the Royal Standard of France was beaten down to the ground, (the Standard [u] Bearer having been ſlain before King Philips face) and had, no doubt, at laſt fell into the Hands of the Engliſh; if it had not been for a certain French Knight, who alighting from his Horſe immediately, adventur'd his Life to ſave it; and while the Contention laſted hot about it, having ript it off from the ſhaft with his Sword, wrapt it in folds about his own Body, and ſo rode out of the Field. From this time there was little, or no Reſiſtance made, but by the Earl of Flanders, the Earl of Auxerre, the Earl of St. Paul, and ſome Germans, who notwithſtanding were all at laſt ſlain, and their Men utterly diſcomfited.

[u] Adam Murimouth.

Before the Fight the Lord Godfry of Harcourt having underſtood for certain, that the Earl his Brother was in the Field on the French Part, [x] endeavour'd all he could to ſave him; and for his Sake there were particular Orders given to all the Captains, and Officers to that purpoſe. But for all this, He alſo among others fell in the Fury of the Battle, together with his Nephew, the Valiant Young Earl of Aumale, who had married a Siſter of the Lord Robert of Artois. This was ſo great a trouble to the Brotherly Mind of the Lord Godfry, that as many [y] French Writers ſay, reflecting afterwards upon this Ruine of his Family, and Deſolation of his Country (which thô he had not abſolutely intended, yet by his Revolt he gave Countenance thereto) he went at laſt bare-footed and bare-headed to King Philip, with a Napkin about his Neck, acknowledging his Offence with Tears, and moſt penitently begging pardon for the ſame.: Which King Philip out of great Compaſſion is ſaid to have granted, letting fall ſuch Words as theſe; "That it was not to be attributed to him as a Fault, but rather to "the Evil Genius of France, who ſtill made uſe of ſome of its own Children to fo- "ment its Miſeries. But however agreeable this Story may ſeem, I cannot allow it for currant; becauſe hereafter We ſhall find, that this Lord Godfry did not only from this time time live in a good Correſpondence with King Edward, but at laſt alſo laid down his Life in his Quarrel. AN. DOM. 1346.

[x] Froiſ. c. 130.

[y] Du Cheſne &c.

X. This Battle indured from [z] before Four of the Clock in the Afternoon, till Dark Night, and if We reckon the ſeveral ſnatches, that ſome French Troops made by fits, till [a] two the next Morning. On the French Part were ſlain two Kings, John King of Bohemia, and James King of Majorica; Charles Earl of Alenſon, King Philips Brother, Guy Earl of Blois, Lewis Earl of Flanders, Ralph Duke of Lorraine, Nephew to the King of France, James Son of Humbert, the Old Dauphine of Vienna, Henry Earl of Vaudemont, Sirnamed the Liberal, the Earl of Harcourt and his Nephew, the Earl of Aumale, the Earl of St. Paul, the Earl of Auxerre, the Earl of Sancerre, and others of the Chief Nobility of France: The Earl of Salemmi a German Lord, and the Lord Moyne of Baſtelberg, both of the King of Bohemia's Retinue, with ſeven other Lords of Germany, and Seigniore * Carolo Grimaldi, and Antonio Doria, of Genoua: Beſides all whom there fell 24 Bannerets, 1200 Knights. 1500 Gentlemen, and Men of Arms, and Eſquires on Horſeback 4000, and of the Commons of France, at leaſt 30000. AN. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

On the Engliſh Part, I cannot meet with any Particulars, who were ſlain; excepting [b] that Knighton ſays, "There fell one Eſquire before the Fight, and three Knights "in Battle, God Almighty preſerved all the reſt. And ſurely, ſince neither French, nor Engliſh, nor any other Writer, are more particular in this Point, and it is moſt [c] certain, that not one of the Engliſh Nobility fell that Day, it is to be look'd upon, as a Remarkable Inſtance of Divine Favour to King Edwards Arms.

XI. One [d] Author only, and He a very late One, preſumes on his own Authority to Averre, "that King Edward brought into this Battle Four or Five pieces of Cannon, "which did no ſmall Execution; but ſcatter'd an Infinite Terrour and Confuſion among "the Frenchmen; for this, ſays He, was the Firſt time, that ever thoſe thundring Engines "were ſeen in the Wars of Europe. Of which Deadly Machines, both becauſe they may be menaged by Perſons of no Force or Courage, and alſo cannot be reſiſted, or eluded by any Natural Power or Conduct, We may juſtly ſay, as [e] Archidamus the Son of Ageſilaus, ſaid of a certain Engine, brought out of Sicily, "O Hercules, now is the Valour of Man-"kind at an End!

But as my Deſign is not preſently to admit every thing, thô back'd with never ſo great Authority of Perſon, if otherwiſe the Matter it ſelf is void of truth or probability: So neither ſhall I conceal what I have found, as to the Antiquity of this Wonderfull Invention of Guns; whatever Uſe the Reader may make thereof againſt my ſelf: For in ſuch a Caſe the Love of truth ought to overballance all other Reſpects. And thô the firſt Publique Uſe of Guns, that We read of, hath been generally held to be about the Year of our Lord 1380, as Magius, or 1400, as Ramus, in a Battle betwixt the Venetians and Genoueſe, fought at Clodia-Foſſa; in which the Venetians ſo galled their Enemies, that thô they ſaw Wounds and Death fly among them, yet they knew not how it came, or how to avoid it; as Witneſſeth Platina in the Life of Urban the VI. And thô Laurentius Valla, in a Book, which, as he ſays himſelf, he wrote in the Year 1438, affirms, that the [f] Gun grew in Uſe, not long before his time; yet my [g] Author ſays, he hath ſeen the Copy of a Record, that Great Ordnance were brought by the French to the Battery of a Caſtle or Fort, called Outwick, near Calais, and then in the Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh; whereof One William Weſton was Captain, who in the Firſt of Richard the Second, being queſtion'd in Parliament for yielding up the Place, doth in his excuſe alledge; that the Enemy brought to the Battery thereof Nine pieces of Great Cannon, whereby the Walls and Houſes of the ſaid Caſtle were in divers places rent in ſunder, and ſorely batter'd: And in another place, he calls the ſaid Pieces, moſt Huge, Grievous, and Admirable Ordnance: And this his Anſwer [h] Sr. Robert Cotton ſays, if it was true, as it was not diſproved, was very Reaſonable. Notwithſtanding he was for the ſame Surrender adjudged to Death, and ſent back to the Tower, from whence he came; becauſe without Commiſſion he yielded up the Place, whereas he took upon him the Defence of the ſame. And this Surrender happen'd in the laſt Year of King Edward the Third, Predeceſſor to the ſaid King Richard the Second. And [i] Petrarch, who died above three Years before King Edward the Third, ſays of theſe Guns, "This Peſtilent Device was lately ſo rare, that it was look'd on "with great Aſtoniſhment: Now, as Mens Minds are very apt to learn the Worſt, it "is as Common, as any other ſort of Arms. Nay, more than ſo, we are credibly informed, that a Commiſſion is to be ſeen for making of Salt-Peter in Edward the Thirds time; and another Record of Ordnance uſed in his Days, ſome Twenty Years before his

[z] Mezeray ad hunc an.
[a] Æn. Sylv. hiſt. Bohem. c. 32. & Knighton p. 2630. n. 10. & Giov. Villani, &c. Froiſ. & Sleidan's Epitome of Froiſ. p. 193. Mezeray, Du Cheſne, &c.
* Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 66. p. 879.
[b] Knighton p. 2588. n. 30. & Adam Murimouth.
[c] Ut patet ex Dugd. 2 Voll. de Baronagio
[d] Mezeray ad hunc an. p. 26.
[e] Plutarch's Apopthegms.
[f] Nuper inventa eſt Machina, quam Bombardam vocant.
[g] Dr. Hakewill's Apology of the Power and Providence of God, &c. l. 3. c. 3. p. 322.
[h] M. S. Rot. Parl. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Exact Abridgement. An°. 1 Rich. 2. n. 38. &c.
[i] Fran. Petrarch de Remediis utriuſque Fortunæ, l. 1. Dial. 99. p. 84. Erat hæc Peſtis nuper rara; ut cum ingenti Miraculo cerneretur: Nunc, ut rerum peſſimarum dociles ſunt animi, ita communis eſt, ut unum quodlibet genus armorum.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX Franciæ VII.

his Death. Nay, We can go Higher yet, and refer to that part of the Record of the [k] 14 Year of this Kings Reign, six Years before the Battle of Cressy, in which is mention made of Thirty two Tuns of Powder.

And thô We are able to trace the Original of Guns thus High, yet surely it doth not appear, by any other Author except Mezeray, that King Edward brought any such thing into the Field at this Battle: The first time, that Old Writers say he used them, was at the Siege of Calais: where, thô he might be allowed to bring such Machines against Walls, with more Generosity, than Men: Yet We shall shew hereafter, that he only intended to reduce that Place by Famine, and not to win them by Assault or Battery. Nor can We find, that during at least the greater part of his Reign, any such Engines on either Part were brought into the Field, or planted against any Castle, or Fortress; which doubtless would have been, had they been well known at that time, in these Parts, or had either of those Princes, been minded to make use of such inhuman Executioners. No! Hitherto Men fought like Men; and thô those Devillish Engines, I grant, were invented something about, perhaps before this time; yet either for a while they were not known, or at least not made use of. But if these Instruments were so Wonderfull to that Age, how much more Admirable is the later Invention of our Days; of Guns, that are not actuated by Sulpher, or any Combustible Matter, but only by Wind. Of which a late * Author says thus, "There is in Basile a Gun-"smith, that maketh Wind-Guns, and he shewed me One, that as it received at once "Air for 10 shot, so it had this Peculiar to it, which he pretends for his own Invention, "That he can discharge all the Air, which may be parcelled out in 10 shot, at once, to "give an home blow. These are terrible Instruments indeed; and it seems the Interest of Mankind to forbid them quite; since they can be employed to assasine Persons so dextrously, that neither Noise, nor Fire, will discover from what Hand the shot cometh: But to return.

[k] M.S. Rot. Parl. p. 34. §. 40. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 24. §. 40. 14 Edw. 3. vid l. 1. c. 16. §. 1. p. 179.

* Dr. Burnet's Letters. p. 265. Letter from Nimigen 20 May 1686.

XII. King Philip of France retired, as We have shewn, out of the Battle, under favour of the Night: Having not above [l] sixty Persons in his Company, of whom, only Five were Barons, John Lord of Beaumont in Hainalt, the Lord Charles Monmorency, the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord of Aubigny, and the Lord of Monfort l' Amaury; besides the Archbishop of Rheimes, the Bishop of Amiens, and the Chancellor of France's Son, all under the Standard of the Young Prince James, Son of Humbert, Dauphin of Vienna, who was himself slain in the Battle. The French Nation so well at that time allowed of this Flight of King Philips, that as the Roman Senate approved of Terentius Varro, who, escaping from the Battle of Cannæ, did not yet despair of the Common-Wealth, as his Collegue Æmylius had done; by way of Commendation it hath been called to this Day, [m] la Beau Retracte. Thus slightly now attended, this Unhappy Prince, rode out of the Field, till he came to the Castle of Broye on the Authie, about two Leagues Northward from the Place of Battle. The Castle was now shut up, for it was by this time dark, wherefore he called out for the Captain, in haste; who coming to the Walls, demanded, who it was, that expected to be let in there at Dark Night? The King reply'd, "Open your Gates quickly: For I am the "Fortune of France. Perhaps secretly thereby taxing those Flatterers, who had sirnamed him le Bien-Fortunè, or the Fortunate King, which Title he holds to this Day; thô, as Mezeray observes, at this time he was the Unfortunate. The Captain understanding by his Voice, that it was the King, made haste, and open'd the Gate, and let down the Bridge, where he was Dutifully received; but not without many sad Cries, and condoling Lamentations of his sorrowfull Subjects, who like poor frighted Children came flocking about the Distressed Father of their Country. The Unhappy Prince could not long endure so pittifull a Spectacle, and perhaps neither did he think himself secure so near the Enemy: Wherefore having drank, and taken some refreshment, he departed thence about Midnight, and by the help of his Guides, which knew the Country, came to Amiens the next Morning; where having tarried a few Days, he went to Paris. But during his stay at Amiens, instead of looking up to the Hand of God, and Humbling himself under his Judgements, the Passionate [n] King began to rail against several of his Captains; but especially he was so Highly incensed at the Lord Gondemar du Fay, that if he could have got him in his Fury, it had cost him his Head; for he said, and believed, "that he did not do his Devoir truly in Defending the Passage at Blanchetteaque, where the English went over the Somme. Nor did the King only say thus, but many of his Council also were of the Mind, that he ought to die, saying, that he was a Traytor, and the Chief Occasion of that Great Loss at Cressy. But then John Lord of Beaumont began wisely to excuse him, and to qualifie qualifie the Kings unjuſt Diſpleaſure, by putting in theſe few words only, "How could "it lye in Gondemar's Power to Reſiſt the whole Puiſſance of the King of England; "when a Royal Army it ſelf, and all the Flower of the Realm of France could not "prevail againſt him?" This apt ſaying pacified the Kings Diſpleaſure, and ſoon after he return'd to Paris to conſider of his Weighty Affairs in ſo ſad a juncture. AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[l] Froiss. c. 130. Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 66. p. 877.

[m] Walsingh. Hypod. Neustr. p. 119. Beau olim Masc. & Fœm. & Bel, tunc Masc. ut Philip le Bel. Nunc le Beau, & la Belle.

[n] Froiss. c. 134.

XIII. All that Saturday, being the Day of Battle, the Engliſh never broke their Ranks, for taking of any Priſoners whatſoever; but knowing how Numerous the Enemy was, and that there were two or three Freſh Armies near thoſe Parts, they never offer'd to follow the Chace, but ſtood ready upon their Defence: And if [o] One ſays True, they had need to do ſo; for the French rallied upon them ſeveral times that Night, thô they were ſtill repulſed with Loſs. Certainly this Day King Edward ſhewed himſelf a moſt Accompliſh'd Captain, and all the Night too the greater Part of the Army, eſpecially all the Freſh Men who had not fought, kept the Field, ſtanding to their Arms: But I can no ways believe, that the Frenchmen after ſo abſolute a Diſcomfiture, the Flight of their King, and the Death of ſo many of their Prime Leaders, could have the Courage to aſſault their Enemies: Eſpecially in the Night, when all things are doubtfull even to a Conquerour. Yet indeed the Earl of St. Paul had drawn off ſeveral entire Troops, and had done more, if in his laſt Attempt he had not been ſlain; and more than Half the French Army eſcaped away, thô in ſmall ſcatter'd Parties, that ſingly were no way formidable, and ſome whereof by the errour of the Night fell among the Engliſh; where they found no better Uſage than they would have done in Battle.

[o] Knighton p. 2588.

Now [p] Edward the Young Prince of Wales, whom from this time the French began to call Le Neoir, or the [q] Black-Prince, when he heard no more of his Enemies (for it was now ſo dark he could make no further Diſcovery) began to repute the Victory his own, and that all the French Hoſt was totally diſcomfited. Then he gave order for huge Fires to be made, and Links, Torches and Flambeaus to be lighted up all about: At which time the King his Father, being come down from the little Hill, where he had ſtood with his Helmet on his Head, which never came off, till now, all the time of the Battle, drew near in the Head of all his Men, and ran up to the Young Prince, and embraced him in his Arms, and kiſſed him and ſaid, "My Fair Son, God "Almighty give you Grace to perſevere as you have begun: Now are you my Good "Son, and have acquitted your ſelf right Nobly, You are well worthy of a large King-"dom: The Prince reply'd only by humbly enclining himſelf to the Earth, honouring the King his Father. That Night [r] the whole Army return'd their publique Thanks to God for their good Succeſs, and made no manner of Boaſting; for it was the expreſs Command of the King, that none ſhould inſult, or make any Brags in Songs or otherwiſe, but all humbly to give Thanks to God Almighty: And [s] ſo the High Maſs of the Holy Spirit was ſolemnly ſung, and the Victory acknowledged to the Author thereof. Moreover the next Day for the ſake of the Dead, the Pious King * cauſed the Place of Battle to be Conſecrated, for the decent Sepulture both of his Enemies and Friends; and that the Wounded, being removed from among the Dead, ſhould be dreſſed; to the meaner ſort of whom he afterward gave Money, and ſent them away. That Morning being a Sunday, [t] there was ſuch a Miſt, that a Man could hardly ſee the breadth of an Acre from him; but however the King of England and his Marſhals ſent out [u] 500 Spears, and 2000 Archers on Horſeback to ſcour the Fields, and to ſee whether any Frenchmen were again gather'd together. Now many Inhabitants of Abbeville and St. Requier in Ponthieu, with the Commons of Rouën and Beauvais had early that Morning, (being the Day before joyned together) come into the Field, not knowing of the late Diſcomfiture. Some ſay that the Engliſh had reared French Colours, which they had taken in the Fight, whereby thoſe Frenchmen being deceived, came up to joyn them as if they had been their Friends. The Engliſh immediately made them know their Errour, and ſet upon them ſo luſtily, that within a little while they put them to Flight, and chaſed them, and ſlew in the Ways, and among the Hedges and Buſhes more than 7000 Men; nor had one of them eſcaped if the Day had been clear. They had ſcarce wip'd their Swords and recover'd their Order, when they had an other Occaſion to beſtir themſelves: For now they met with a more formidable Number of their Enemies, who were conducted by two Noble Leaders, the Archbiſhop of Rouën and the Grand Prior of France; they alſo being ignorant of the Overthrow given to their Friends the Day before: For they had heard, how King Philip intended not to fight till the Sunday, and therefore came thither now to his Aſſiſtance. Upon theſe (the Day beginning now to clear) the Engliſhmen under the Leading of the Earls of Arundel,

[p] Froiſ. c. 131.

[q] In the Records of 2 Ric. 2. n. 12. he is called the Black Prince. vid. M.S. Rot. Parl. ad an. prædict. p. 171. Sr Rob. Cotton p. 168.

[r] Froiſ. c. 131.

[s] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 66. p. 878.

* Id. ibid.

[t] Froiſ. ibid.

[u] Id. & Mezeray, &c.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

Arundel, [x] Northampton and Suffolk, ſet with a Courage, which their laſt acquired Victory had doubled; and fought ſo obſtinately, that after a Stout Reſiſtance they gain'd a Compleat Conqueſt, having ſlain the two Leaders, with 2000 of their beſt Men upon the Spot, and purſuing the Chace for 3 Leagues together. Beſide theſe two Succeſſes, they met with ſeveral Frenchmen, who had ſtrayed in the Dark night, and not knowing, where the King or any of his Captains were, had lain about in the Fields: But their Reſpit was not long, for now they were all put to the Sword, as many as were found, and ſent to bear them Company, who were ſlain the Day before: Whereby it was thought, that of the Commons and Footmen of the Cities and Good Towns of France, there fell now four times as many as were ſlain on the Saturday in the great Battle.

[x] Vid. Michael Northburgh's Letter l. 2. c. 4. §. 5.

XIV. That ſame [y] Sunday about Noon, as the King came from Hearing Divine Service, the Captains of this Brigade return'd and ſhew'd the King what they had ſeen and done, and how they had ſucceeded; and aſſured him, that there was no more Appearance of any Enemy in the Field. Then the King order'd the Lord Reginald Cobham, and Sr. Richard Stafford Brother to the Lord Ralph Stafford, with three Heralds in their Company, to go and ſearch the Field, and view the Number and Quality of the Slain: For in thoſe Days every Great Man wore a Surcoat of his Arms over his Armour, to diſtinguiſh him according to his Quality. Theſe viſited in Order the Bodies of all them that were ſlain, and when they had taken a full and exact Account of every Parcel; certain Men, who were thereto appointed of the King, ſpoil'd their Bodies, taking their Money and Rings, and what elſe was moſt valuable, but with ſo much Decency, that they left their Apparel on to cover their Nakedneſs: All which Booty the King cauſed to be diſtributed among his Souldiers by equal Portions. Theſe Lords with the Heralds returned from viſiting the Dead, and brought along with them all the Spoil of the Field juſt as the King was going to Supper; and after Supper they reported to the King a juſt Account of what they had found, namely, that there lay Dead in the Field 11 Great Princes, 80 Bannerets, 1200 Knights, and more than 30000 of the Common Souldiers. The Contemplation of this Succeſs made a [z] pious Hiſtorian of thoſe Days break out after this manner, "O Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God "of Hoſts, how great is thy Power in Heaven and Earth, and eſpecially in Battles? "Since ſometimes, nay very often, he brings to paſs, that a ſmall People and Power doth "vanquiſh Mighty Armies; thereby to ſet forth his own Power, and to pull down the "Proud and Arrogant, and to puniſh the Sins of Kings, Lords and People. And particularly in this Diſcomfiture he ſhew'd his Power evidently, for there were Thrice as "many Frenchmen as Engliſh: But yet this was not, ſays he, without juſt Cauſe, that "ſuch Miſchief ſhould happen to the King of France. Since among his other Offences, "that we may not inſtance in the Wrong done to the King of England, and other his "Lords, in Uſurping their Inheritance and Lordſhips; but Ten years before being ſworn "to Pope John to undertake the Croiſade, and promiſing within two Years to go beyond the Seas and to regain the Holy Land, he took the Tenths and Subſidies of all his "Realm; and yet made War againſt Chriſtian Princes unjuſtly: On occaſion whereof, "there died and were taken Priſoners by the Saracens beyond the Seas, of Armenians "and other Chriſtians above an 100000, who in Confidence of his Aſſiſtance, had begun the War againſt the Saracens in Syria. Thus far Giovanni Villani.

[y] Froiſ. c. 132.

[z] Giov. Villani p. 879.

XV. The King of England kept the Field all Sunday-Night alſo, and on the Monday Morning he prepared to March thence; but [a] firſt by Proclamation granted a Truce to all the Towns thereabouts for Three Days, that ſo the Country People might be encouraged to come forth and ſearch the Fields of Creſſy, and to bury their Dead. But as for the Bodies of the Kings and Great Princes, he cauſed them to be taken up decently, and conveyed along with him in ſolemn Pomp to Monſtrevil, were they were all depoſited in Holy Ground in the Great Abby: The King [b] Himſelf and his Chief Lords wearing Blacks at their Funerals, eſpecially for the Sake of John the Famous Old King of Bohemia, whoſe Death he took heavily, and proſecuted with Lamentations: After which he ſent his Body with much Honour to the Marqueſs his Son, then at the Abby of Riſcampo, whence afterwards it was honourably conveyed to Luxemburgh by his Son aforeſaid.

[a] Froiſ. c. 132.

[b] Giov. Villan. l. 12. c. 66. p. 878.

While the King lay thus at Monſtrevil, his Marſhals made an Excurſion towards Heſdin, and burnt Campagne and Beauraine; but they let the Caſtle alone, becauſe it required ſome time to win it, and that Night they lodged by the River of Canche near Heſdin towards Blangy.

[c] Froiſ. & Knighton p. 2588. & Du Cheſne p. 665.

The next Day the whole Army began to March forward [c] towards Boulogne, and by the the way took St. Josse, the Town of Estaples, Neufchastel, St. Estienne, and burnt and wasted all the Country for about 8 Leagues; as also they did to the Suburbs of Boulogne. After this the King, with the Prince his Son, went and encamped by Wissan, on the Sea-side, about 3 Leagues from Calais: And having tarried here one Day to refresh his Army, on the [d] Thursday being the last of August (others say the [e] 7 of September) he came and lay down before the strong Town of Calais; which had been of old a great Nuisance both to Him and his Kingdom.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[d] Du Chesne &c.

[e] Knighton p. 2588.

CHAPTER the FOURTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Description, Situation and Strength of Calais: Which King Edward blocks up by Sea and Land: The strength of his Navy. II. The Calisians not yielding upon his Summons he lays a formal Siege; the Plenty of Provision continually in his Camp. III. The Earl of Warwick takes Terouenne; the Flemings at the same time besiege St. Omers. IV. The Captain of Calais thrusts out 1700 poor and impotent People, whom King Edward in pity relieves. V. The Copies of two Letters written by one of the King of England's Chaplains, and containing the Summ of all this Expedition from the Winning of Caen to the Siege of Calais. VI. John Duke of Normandy makes another Attempt upon Aiguillon, but to his Loss. VII. King Philip sends his peremptory Command to his Son to rise from before Aiguillon, and also urges the King of Scotland to invade England on that Side, so to divert King Edward from the Siege of Calais. VIII. The true Manner of the Duke of Normandy's Leaving the Siege of Aiguillon. IX. He is cut off at the Reer by the Lord Walter Manny, who agrees with a Prisoner of Quality to let him go free, so that he will procure him a safe Conduct to ride thrô France to Calais with 20 Men only. X. The Prisoner brings him the Duke of Normandy's Conduct, and is himself acquitted: Sr. Walter Manny riding in Confidence thereof towards Calais, is by King Philips Order secured: But the Duke of Normandy changes his Fathers Bloody Intentions against him, and saves his Life, &c. XI. The Earl of Lancaster upon the Duke of Normandy's Departure takes the Field, and wins Towns and Castles at his Pleasure in Xaintogne, Rochellois and Poictou. XII. An Instance of the Princely Munificence of the Earl of Lancaster. XIII. He wins the City of Poictiers, and leaving it desolate, returns by St. Jean D' Angely to Bourdeaux. XIV. An Army of Poictevins utterly discomfited by the English Garrison of Lusignan.

I. THE City [a] of Calais, thô of no considerable Extent, is a famous Market-Town, Rich, and strongly Fortified, being scituate on the Marches of Artois five Leagues Northward of Boulogne, and three Westward of Gravelines; and but little more than fourteen from the neareſt Coast of England or Dover Castle, which it directly confronts: And the Sea between is by the English called the Strait of Calais, and by the French, La Manche. It is furnished with a strong Castle and a spacious Haven, where a considerable Navy may take safe Harbour; and is also enclosed about with a Double Wall and a Double Ditch, besides that on the West-side from Risban to Cologne; it is fenced with [b] an Arm of the Sea in a Semicircular manner. This Town and Castle are reported to have been first built by Julius Cæsar the Famous Roman Emperour, after he had brought all France to do Homage to his Eagles: As he is also said to have built the Castle of Chepstow in Monmouthshire in Venodocia or South-Wales; and that of Dover in Kent, when he was about the Conquest of Brittain, now called England.

[a] Stow p. 243. Froiss. c. 133. vid. Ferrarium in titulo Caletum, &c.

[b] Marish grounds, which are only passable by Newland Bridge.

Wherefore thô it was of incredible Strength, as well for its advantagious Scituation, as those wonderfull Accessions of Art, which made it almost Impregnable by any human Power; yet because it was a most convenient Landing-place for any out of England to set Footing in France, and had also by its Piracies, exercised on the English Seas, done many great Displeasures to King Edward and his People, he resolved to lay Siege unto the Place, knowing that having already given such a Blow to France, if he could not not be able to reduce them by Force, he might yet overcome them by Famine, which enters thrô the ſtrongeſt Fortifications.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

All along as the King marched hither by Land, his Fleet being return'd out of England, took the ſame way by Sea, under the Command of William Clinton Earl of Huntington, and then Lord High [c] Admiral of England, together with the Lord John Mongomery Vice-Admiral, which Two at the very Inſtant of King Edward's Inveſting the Town of Calais by Land, came and block'd it up alſo by Sea, with a Mighty Navy, conſiſting in all of [d] 738 Ships, wherein were no leſs than 14956 Mariners, together with Souldiers, and Proviſions of all ſorts accordingly.

[c] Weever's Fun. Mon. p. 259
[d] Hacluit's Voyages 1 Vol. p. 119. &c.
[e] Froiſ. ibid.

II. Now the [e] King knew, that the ſtrength of the Place, and the Courage of the Garriſon, were likely enough to give him ſome trouble; but conſidering the Opportunities he had, while he lay here, of receiving Aſſiſtance either from England or Flanders, he reſolved to ſtarve them, if they would not otherwiſe accept his Mercy. Firſt therefore by his Herald he Summons the Captain to yield up unto him, as Rightfull King of France, that his Caſtle and Town of Calais; otherwiſe, that he would put them all to the Sword for their Obſtinacy. The Captain Anſwer'd, "He knew but "One King of France, who had ſent him thither to keep the Place for his behoof; "and him only was he reſolved to obey, being ready either to live or die in his Ser- "vice: Thô upon Occaſion he doubted not, but to have ſufficient Aſſiſtance from him. Upon this peremptory Anſwer of the Captain, King Edward began to entrench himſelf ſtrongly about the City, ſetting his own Tent directly againſt the Chief Gates, at which he intended to enter, then he placed Baſtions between the Town and the River, and ſet out Regular Streets, and reared up decent Buildings of ſtrong Timber between the Trenches, which he cover'd with Thatch, Reed, Broom, and Skins: Thus he encompaſſed the whole Town of Calais, from Risban on the Northweſt ſide to Courgaine, on the Northeaſt, all along by Sangate, at Port and Fort de Nieulay, commonly by the Engliſh call'd Newland-Bridge, down by Hammes, Cologne and Marke: So that his Camp look'd like a ſpacious City, and was uſually by Strangers, that came thither to Market, called New-Calais. For this Prince's Reputation for Juſtice was ſo Great, that to his Markets (which he held in his Camp twice every Week, viz. on Tueſdays and Saturdays, for Fleſh, Fiſh, Bread, Wine, and Ale, with Cloth and all other Neceſſaries) there came not only his Friends and Allies from England, Flanders, and Aquitain; but even many of King Philips Subjects and Confederates convey'd thither their Cattle, and other Commodities to be ſold. Beſides which, the Marſhals of the Hoſt would ſcour the Country daily, and rode often toward Guiſnes and Terouenne, and to the Gates of Ardres and St. Omers, and ſometimes to Boulogne, and mightily refreſhed the Army with Prey, which they brought thither in great abundance.

[f] Knighton p. 2588.

III. One time eſpecially, the [f] Earl of Warwick went forth with a Detachment of Men of Arms, as far as Terouenne, where he heard a Great Fair was then kept: Here they found the Biſhop of Terouenne with 10000 Souldiers, ready to Defend the Fair; but this ſtrength was not ſufficient, for they were all Worſted by the Engliſh, the Biſhop himſelf being grievouſly Wounded, and hardly eſcaping with Life; all the Merchandiſe and Riches of the Fair taken, and carried away in Carts, and upon Horſes to the Camp before Calais, to the Infinite Loſs of the French, and the Comfort and Satisfaction of their Enemies. But as to this Action, [g] another Reports, that the Biſhop himſelf, not daring to expect the Engliſh, fled away to St. Omers, leaving the Defence of Terouenne to a Valiant Captain, Sr. Arnold D' Andreghan; who is ſaid to have made a good Reſiſtance thô in vain: For the Engliſh enter'd the Place by fine Force, ſlew all his Souldiers, and took him Priſoner: And having Sacked the City, ſet it on Fire. But as for my part, I rather encline to believe the firſt Account; becauſe We ſhall find the Lord Arnold D' Andreghan to be now in Calais; and the Biſhop could not come with any hope of Protection to St. Omers; for that was the ſame time actually Beſieged by King Edwards Friends and Allies of Flanders, Brabant, and Hainalt, who [h] ſeeing the Great Fortune of the King of England, not only ſent [i] 38 Veſſels well Mann'd to encreaſe his Fleet before Calais, but alſo raiſed an Army by Land, werewith they laid Siege to St. Omers, and other Places; as We ſhall ſhew hereafter. And theſe Flemings, [k] when they underſtood, what the Engliſh had done at Terouenne, ſent out a Party of their own thither, who began a new Spoil and Slaughter, of thoſe Perſons and things, which had eſcaped the Engliſh: Particularly, they fired the Canons Houſes, and other Religious Places, which in Devotion the Earl of Warwick had ſpared.

[g] Holinſhead Eng. Chron. p. 937.
[h] Knighton p. 2588. n. 60.
[i] Hackluit's Voyages 1 Vol. p. 119.
[k] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 937.

IV. Now

IV. Now there was at this time Captain of Calais, a Renowned Knight of Burgundy, named [1] John de Vienne, afterwards Marshal of France, and with him the Valiant Lord Arnold D' Andreghan, Sr. John Surrey, Sr. Barton Belborne, Sr. Godfry de Lament, Sr. Pepin de Vermand, and divers other Knights and Esquires, were there in Garrison; all Brave and Resolute Men, full of Courage and Loyalty to the King their Master. When Sr. John de Vienne perceived, that King Edward intended to lye long there, he thought to rid the Town of as many useless Mouths as he could; and so on a Wednesday, being the 13 of September, he forced out of the Town more than 1700 of the pooreſt, and least necessary People, Old Men, Women, and Children, and shut the Gates upon them: Who being demanded, wherefore they came out of the Town, Answer'd with great Lamentation; that it was, because they had nothing to live on. Then King Edward, who was so fierce in Battle, shew'd a truly Royal Disposition, by considering the sad Condition of these Forlorn Wretches: For he not only would not force them back again into the Town, whereby they might help to consume the Victuals, but he gave them all a Dinner, and two-pence a piece, and leave to pass thrô the Army without the least Molestation: Whereby he so wrought upon the hearts of these poor Creatures, that many of them prayed to God for his Prosperity.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[1] Froiſ. c. 133.

V. Of all this Years Expedition, from the time that King Edward wan the City of Caen in Normandy, even to this time; One of the Kings Chaplains, who was present and attended him all along, wrote two Letters; which for their Authority, and further Confirmation of what We have said, We here think good to subjoyn.

The First Letter of Michael Northborough, a Dominican Fryer, and Chaplain, and Confessor to King Edward the Third.

"[m] Benedicere Debemus Deum Cœli, &c. We have great Cause to Bless and "Magnifie the God of Heaven, and Worthily to Confess his Holy Name; who hath "so wrought his Mercies for Us. After the Conflict at Caen, where many were put "to the Sword, and the City taken, and sack'd even to the bare Walls; the City of "Bayeux immediately yielded of its own accord; fearing least their Councils had been "discover'd. Thence our Lord, the King, directed his Progress towards Rouën; and "being at the City of Lisieux, there came unto him from the Pope, two Cardinals, "to perswade him to admit of Peace. These Cardinals being Graciously Received by "the King, had this Answer: How the King being very desirous of Peace, had used "all Reasonable Ways and Methods to cultivate it, and therefore had made many Fair "Overtures and Conditions, to the no small Prejudice of his own Cause: And even yet "was ready to admit of any Reasonable Offer, if it might be secured unto him. With "this Answer the Cardinals being dismiss'd, went to the French King, the Kings Adversary, to Treat and Sound him in like Manner; and upon their Return to King "Edward, offer'd unto him in the French Kings Name, the whole Dukedom of "Aquitaine, in as Ample Manner, and as Full Assurance, as ever the King his "Father had it before him: Besides further hopes of Obtaining more, if a Treaty of Peace might take Place. But forasmuch, as that could not satisfie the Kings "Mind, and the Cardinals had not found the French King so tractable and inclin'd to the "study of Peace, as they expected, they return'd [to Avignon] leaving the Matter, as "they found it. And so the King Marching forward in his intended journey, subdued all the "Country, and the great Towns, without any Resistance of the Inhabitants; who all fled "and ran away before us; God Almighty strack such a terrour into them, as if they had lost "their hearts: So that in this Expedition, as the King had taken many Towns and Villages, he also subdued several strong Castles, and fortify'd Places, with little Labour. "His Enemy being then at Rouën, had Raised a Mighty Army; yet notwithstanding his "Forces were so Numerous, he still kept on the other side of the River Seyne, breaking down all the Bridges, that We might not come over to him. And thô the Country was continually harassed, spoiled, sacked, and consumed with fire, for more than 20 "Miles in circuit, yet the French King, thô sometimes distant scarce a Mile from us, either "would not, or else durst not (for he might have easily passed over the River) make any "Resistance for the Defence of his Country and People. And so our King proceeding forward came to Poissy, where the French King had likewise broken down the Bridge; "and keeping on the other side, would rest in no certain Place. Dat. apud Pusiacum Festo "Assumptionis B. Mariæ Virginis, &c.

[m] Fox Acts and Mon. p. 504. ex Rob. Avesbury, &c.

The other Letter of the said Michael Northborough begins where this ends, and proceeds even to the Siege of Calais, in this manner.[n]

"Salutations premised, we give you to understand, that our Sovereign Lord the King "came [n] Rob. Avesbury, Fox Acts and Mon. p. 504. Holinshead Eng. Chron. p. 930.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

"came to the Town of Poissy on the Vigil of the Assumption of our Lady, where "was a certain Bridge over the Water of Seyne broken down by the Enemy: But the "King tarried there so long, till the Bridge was made again. And whilst the Bridge "was in Repairing, there came thither a great Number of Men of Arms and other "Souldiers to hinder the same. But the Earl of Northampton went out against them, "and slew of them more than a Thousand; the rest fled away, Thanks be to God. "And at another time our Men passed the Water (althô with much Difficulty) and "slew a great Number of the Common Souldies of France, about the City of Paris, "and Country adjoyning, being part of the French Kings Army, well and throughly "appointed: So that our People had soon made other good Bridges in spight of our "Enemies (God be thanked) without any great Loss or Dammage on our Part. On "the Morrow after the Assumption of our Lady, the King passed the Water of Seyne, "and marched toward Pont-Oyse, which is a Town of great Defence, and strongly im-"mured, being also furnished with a marvellous strong Castle, which our Enemies kept: "And when our Van-guard was passed the Town, the Reer made an Assault thereto, "and took the same, where more than 300 Men of Arms on the Enemies Part were "slain. And the next Day following, the Earl of Suffolk, and Sr. Hugh Spencer march-"ed forth against the Commons of the Country, who were assembled together and "well-armed; and in fine, slew of them more than [o] 1200, and besides others took "60 Gentlemen Prisoners. After that the King marched toward Grandvillers, and "while he was there encamped, his Van-guard was descried by the King of Bohemia's "Men of Arms: Whereupon certain of our Men issued forth in great haste, and be-"gan to joyn Battle with them, but were enforced to retire; notwithstanding (thanks "be to God) the Earl of Northampton issued out, and rescued the Horsemen with o-"ther Souldiers, so that few or none of them were either taken or slain, saving only "Thomas Talbot, but had again the Enemy in Chace, till within two Leagues of Ami-"ens; of whom we took 8 and slew 12 of their best Men of Arms, the rest being well "horsed got to the Town of Amiens. After this the King of England marched towards "Ponthieu upon the [p] Feast of St. Bartholomew, and came unto the Water of Somme, "where the French had posted 500 Men of Arms, and 3000 Footmen, with design to keep "and defend that Passage against us; but Thanks be to God, the next Morning the "King of England and his Host entred the same Water of Somme, where never Man "passed before, without the loss of any of our Men: And after that encounter'd with "the Enemy, and slew of them more than 2000, the rest fled toward Abbeville; but in "the Chace many Knights, Esquires, and Men of Arms were taken. The same Day "Sr. Hugh Spencer took the Town of Crotoy, where He and his Men slew 400 Men "of Arms, and kept the Town, wherein they found good store of Provision. That "same Night the King of England encamped in the Forest of Cressy, bordering upon "the same Water: For that the French Kings Host came on the other side of the "Town near unto our Passage, but declining to take the Water of us, he marched back "to Abbeville. And upon the Saturday the King being still encamped in the said Forest, "our Van-currours descried the French King, who marched toward us in Four Great "Battails: And having by this means, as it pleased God, understanding of our Ene-"mies a little before Even-song, We set our Battails in Array, and presently the Fight "began, which was sore and cruel, and endured long: For our Enemies behaved them-"selves right Nobly. But Thanks be to God the Victory fell on our Side, and the "King our Adversary was discomfited, with all his Host and put to Flight. Where al-"so was slain the King of Bohemia, the Duke of Lorrain, the Earl of Alençon, the "Earl of Flanders, the Earl of Blois, the Earl of Harcourt with his two Sons, the Earl "of Aumale, the Earl of Nevers and his Brother, the Lord of Thonon, the Archbi-"shop of Nismes, the Archbishop of Sennes, the Grand Prior of France, the Lord of "Marle, the Lord of Guise, the Lord of St. Venant, the Lord of Rosemburgh, with six "Earls of Almain, and divers other Earls, Barons, Knights and Esquires, whose Names "are unknown: But Philip of Valois himself with another Marquess, who was called "Lord Elector of the Romans, escaped from the Battle. The Number of the Men of "Arms which were found dead in the Field, besides the Common Souldiers and Foot-"men, came to 1542: And all that Night the King with his Host abode armed in "the Field where the Battle was fought. On the next Morning before the Sun-rise, "there marched towards us another huge Host of Frenchmen, mighty and strong: But "the Earl of Northampton and the Earl of [q] Suffolk went out against them in three Bat-"talions, and after a long and terrible Fight discomfited them likewise, by Gods great "Help and Grace (for otherwise it could not have been done) where they took of Knights "and

[o] 1200 hîc lego, non ut Fox, &c. 200, ex Froiss. Ashmole, Martin & aliis, ita corrigendo: vid. l.2.c.2. §.10. p.348.

[p] A. Lit. Dom. 24 Aug. Thurs.

[q] Ita lego pro illorum Norfolk; nam nullus his diebus erat Comes Norfolciæ.

"and Esquires a good Number, and slew above 2000, following the Chace three "Leagues from the place where the Battle was fought. The same Night also the King "encamped still in the Forest of Cressy, and on the Morrow marched towards Bou- "logne, and by the way took the Town of Estaples, and from thence he marched to- "ward Calais, where he intendeth to plant his Siege and lay Battery to the same. AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

"Wherefore our Sovereign Lord the King, willeth and commandeth you in all that "ever you may, to send unto the said Siege Victuals convenient: For from the time of "our departing from Caen, we have travelled thrô the Country in great peril and hazard of "our People, but yet always had Plenty of Victuals; Thanks be to God for it. But now "as the Case stands, we partly stand in need of your Help to be refreshed with Victu- "als: Thus fare you well. Dated at the Siege before the Town of Calais 14 day of "September.

VI. And now for a while we shall leave King Edward at the Siege of Calais, and look what became of the Siege of Aiguillon in Agenois, the News whereof had lately incited the King of England to make this Expedition. All this while [r] the Duke of Normandy lay before the strong Castle of Aiguillon, not now so much in hopes to win the Place (for, not only the English held out still with their usual Bravery; but he also himself was held short by the Earl of Darby) as because he had rashly made a solemn Vow never to depart thence till he had the Fortress at his Devotion. Now a few Days before the Battle of Cressy was fought, Duke John hearing, that King Edward was marching through France, resolved to give one more general Assault, if by any means he might by Carrying the Place, both save his Oath, and also be at liberty to go and assist his Father. It was then about the middle of August, and the Frenchmen being irritated with their long stay here, became more resolved to do their Utmost, in order to end so tedious a Siege with Honour: Nor were encouragements wanting from the Duke, nor provocations from the Enemy. But for all that, althô in a manner the whole Army was engaged in a general Assault, carried on with the utmost vigour for the space of an whole Day, yet all was in vain, and their Losses were doubled, but their Advantages no whit better'd. Among many others, there fell that day the young Lord Philip of Burgundy (Eldest Son to Eudo the IV. Duke of Burgundy) who was Earl of Artois and Boulogne, and Cousin-German to the Duke of Normandy. This Gallant Gentleman was in the Flower of his Youth, and but newly come thither: But being desirous at this time to signalize himself, when the Skirmish was begun, he set Spurs to his Courser, and came onward to the Assault. But the mettlesome Horse taking the Curb between his Teeth, ran away with his Master, and chanced to stumble in a Ditch, where they fell both Horse and Man: The young Lord being so rudely handled, that he died within a few days after, leaving behind him [s] one Infant Son and a Daughter.

[r] Froiss. c. 134.

[s] *Favine le Parisien l.*4. *c.*3. *p.*7.

VII. Now King Philip was returned to Paris, where he busied himself in Thoughts nothing unworthy the Grandeur of such a Monarch; nor did all this Adversity abate his Courage, or extort one Low thought from him: He resolves to try all means to uphold his Sinking Honour, and take a severe Vengeance of his Enemies for the Loss he had received. First therefore he sends a peremptory Command to his Son John, who lay still before Aiguillon with a very considerable Army, immediately to rise up; and all Excuses laid aside, to come away to aid his Country nearer Home against the Enemy, who had already drank deep draughts of her best Blood, and now lay gnawing at her very Bowels. At the same time he seriously bestirs himself to raise another Mighty Army, wherewith he design'd to go and drive away King Edward from before Calais: Which he intended to succour in Person very early the next Campagne. And besides this, in hopes to divert the War from his own Doors into England, or at least to repay the Losses of France with the like in England; he presently after the Battle of Cressy, sent his special Messengers to his Old Friend and Ally, David Bruce King of Scotland, "Not only desiring him earnestly to remember former Obligations, and their late strict "Alliance, but encouraging him at such a time, [t] when all the strength of England was "drain'd out in the parts of Gascogne, Bretagne, and before Calais; to invade the "Northern Borders of his and their Inveterate Enemys the English, and to revenge the "manifold Injuries they had Both received; earnestly requesting him not so much "to stand upon a slight Truce, which King Edward had only made for his own Advan- "tage, as to value and respect those sacred Tyes of mutual Amity and Entercourses, "that have been not only for many Generations inviolably maintain'd between both "their Ancestors; but also in especial manner had been cultivated and confirmed be- "tween them two. And besides all these Arguments, he sent him a good round Summ of Mony, and 15000 Crosbows of Genoua to his Assistance, thô not as some say, under the Command of Antonio Doria and Carolo Grimaldi, for they were both slain in Cressy-Field, as we have shewn from the Testimony of Giovanni Villani, who was himself an Italian. And truly it might be wondred, that any of the Genouese should now care to serve King Philip any more after that great Affront at Cressy; but that it is to be remembred, how these People were in those Days Mercenaries to the Crown of France, as of late the Swissers have been; and so might well be now appeased with gracious Words, especially attended with Gold, which always bears a Great Sway not only among Souldiers of Fortune, but also with the major Part of Mankind.

[t] Knighton p. 2589. *n.*40.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

The Effects of this Message we shall shew by and by, when we have first related how the Siege was broken up from before Aiguillon.

VIII. And as for John Duke of Normandy, when he had received his Fathers peremtory Command, he became infinitely displeas'd, as well at the unhappy News of King Edwards Victorious Progress, as because he saw his own Honour so apparently touched, in that he had received such Opposition before so inconsiderable a Fortress. Indeed he had met with many Checks and Rebuffs during this Siege, not only from the Besieged themselves, who maintain'd the Place with invincible Courage, as we have particularly shew'd; but also from the most Noble Earl of Darby, who held him so short with his flying Troops, that scoured about the Country for that purpose, having certain strong Garrisons for their Retreat, that he could never get in Provisions fast enough to supply the wants of his Army; and what he got was not many times without great Labour, thô fetch'd in by Considerable Bodies. Wherefore that he suffer'd some Difficulty is very easily granted, but that he was thereby obliged secretly to forsake his Army, and escape away by stealth, I cannot by any means allow, thô [u] some of our Writers have too heedlesly ventur'd to say as much: And that his Headless Army thereupon flying away after him in much Confusion, they were between the People of the Country and the Earl of Darby, almost all reduced to nothing.

[u] Knighton p. 2589. n. 30. &c.

I have all along professed to have a zeal for Truth, and must not therefore here allow of those improbable Relations of some of our Countrymen: For it is certain, that Prince John was a Man of truly Royal Courage and Magnanimity; and the Army he lead very formidable for the Fame of its Captains and Officers, as well as its own Numbers. And we are sure, not only that the Earl of Darby was unable to keep the Field against him; but that King Edward, who also well knew as much, chiefly at first undertook this Expedition, as was generally reputed, with a design to raise that Siege: Thô as we have shewn he was diverted into Normandy, as well by the Necessity of the Weather, as afterwards by New-Counsels. And also we shall presently see this Duke in the Head of a considerable Army, watching King Edwards Motions, which could not have been, had he so unworthily deserted these Forces and betray'd them to Ruine. Wherefore we shall embrace the more probable Account, which [x] Froisard gives in this manner: That when Duke John received this expres Command from his Father, that he should forthwith break up his Siege from before Aiguillon, and with all Expedition return into France, to defend his Heritage against the English, he call'd his Chief Lords and Captains about him to a Council of War, to know what Course he had best to take in that Juncture: For as he said, he had solemnly sworn, never to depart thence till he had won the Castle. The Lords all agreed with one Consent, "That since his Father commanded him, he must obey, notwithstanding his Oath, which "must be implied but Conditional, since being both a Son and a Subject, he was not "therein at his own Dispose: For his Duty to his King and Father had laid a greater "and more early Obligation upon him.

[x] Froisc. 134.

IX. According to this Advice, the next Morning early he prepared to March back with his Host toward Paris, having [y] sent unto the Pope to Avignon, requesting to be absolved of his Oath, which he had made not to part thence, till he had the Castle; whereupon he receiv'd the Popes Absolution. It is said by [z] some, that Ralph Lord Stafford was at this time Captain of Aiguillon; but it appears, that althô indeed, upon the Death of Oliver Lord Ingham, he was by the King made Seneschal of Gascogne, yet early this Year he Resign'd that Office into the Kings Hands, and was actually in the Battle of Cressy, as We have declared; which Battle preceded the raising of this Siege: As appears by the Confession even of those, [a] who otherwise say the Contrary, though imprudently; for yet they allow the Battle of Cressy to have been fought on the 26 of August, and acknowledge this Siege was not raised, till the Feast of the Decollation of St. John Baptist, which is known to be not till the 29 of August; althô [y] Giov. Villani, l. 12. c. 60. p. 870.

[z] Stow p. 240. & ex eo Dugd. & Ashmole.

[a] Ashmole p. 689, &c.

